Auvray, Jean, a French ecclesiastical writer, was born at Montfort-l'Amaury at the commencement of the 17th century. He was prior of St. Odon de Bossets, and died July 19, 1661. He wrote, La Vie de Jeune Absolu, dite de St. Sauveur, Religieuse de Fontevraud (Paris, 1640):—L'Enfance de Jésus et sa Famille, honorée en la Vie de Sainte Marguerite du Saint Sacrement (ibid. 1654):—Pratique de Piété, etc. (ibid. 1651). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Auxbœuff, PIERRE, a French preacher and theologian of the University of Paris, lived at the commencement of the 15th century. The emissaries of the cardinal of Savoy having insulted the procession of the university which, on July 14, 1404, went to demand the recovery of Charles VI, Auxbœuff maintained, in an eloquent address, that the cardinal should repair the injury done. This address is found in MS. at the National Library. Auxbœuff, on account of his merit, became confessor of Isabella of Bavaria, wife of Charles VI, and gained a great reputation by the sermons which he delivered in different churches of Paris. These were translated into Latin and published at Paris in 1521. They are also found in MS. at the National Library. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Auxentius is the name of two early Christians.

1. Saint, bishop of Mopsuestia, in Cilicia, was originally a soldier under the emperor Licinius. He refused to offer sacrifice to Bacchus, was consequently compelled to renounce his military profession, and afterwards, i. e. about 321, became bishop of Mopsuestia. In A.D. 360 he received Aetius on the occasion of his banishment. He gained a reputation for virtue and sanctity, and died a holy death. See Baillet, Dec. 18.

2. Saint and martyr, suffered with St. Eustratius in the Diocletian persecution in Armenia Minor when St. Blasius was bishop of Sebastia.

Auxerre, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Autissiodorensis), was held about the year 578, under the bishop Auna-carius, with seven abbots and thirty-four priests of his diocese. Forty-five canons were enacted, which, however, appear to have been made solely to enforce the execution of those of the Council of Mâcon in the preceding year.

9. Forbids dances, singing of women, and feasting within churches.

10. Forbids two masses to be said at the same altar in one day.

12. Forbids to give the holy eucharist or the kiss to the dead.

13. Forbids the deacon to wear a pall or veil (velum) over his shoulders.

14. Forbids burials in the baptistery.

15. Forbids to bury one corpse upon another.

16. Forbids work on Sunday.

19. Forbids priests, deacons, and subdeacons, after having broken their fast, ever to be present in church during mass.

26. Forbids a woman to receive the eucharist with her hand bare.

40. Forbids a priest to dance or sing at feasts.

See Labbé, Concil. v, 956.

Auxilius, a French theologian, concerning whom nothing is known but his works, and that he lived about 894. He wrote De Ordinationibus Formosi Papæ, seu Contra Intestinam Discordiam R. Ecclesiæ, first published by John Morinus, at the end of his work on ordinations (Paris, 1655; Antwerp, 1694); also contained in Bibl. Patrum, i, 7. Auxilius had been ordained by Formosus, and in this work defends the validity of his ordinations. Mabillon, in his Analecta (ed. Paris, 1723), p. 28, gives another work by this author—viz. a Dialogue on the Matter of Formosus. See Cave, Hist. of Lit. ii, 68; Dupin, Hist. of Eccl. Writers, ii, 128.

Auxilius, bishop of CARTHAGE, lived at the beginning of the 5th century. Chrysostom wrote to him from Cacus, A.D. 406, commending his zeal in promoting the peace of the Church (Ep. cxlix). He was present at the councils held at Carthage in the years 411, 412, 416; that of Ciria in 412, and Milevium in 416. See Mansi, Concilium, ii, 1336, etc.

Auxtheias WISAGIST, in Slavonic mythology, was a god of the Poles and Silesians, among whom it is thought he denoted the supreme ruler of all things.

Av, a mystical Egyptian deity, is represented as cynocephalic, with the solar disk on his head, holding a viper in his left hand and the Ankh cross in his right, while the folds of the serpent Mehen are over his head and around him. He was a form of the deity Khnuphis, and is figured in the Book of the Lower World.

Avadontas are a kind of anchorites among the Brahmins who practice great austerity, abandoning their wives and children and denying themselves all the comforts of life. They renounce all earthly possessions, and clothe themselves only with a piece of linen cloth around the waist. They subsist on the charity of the devout. Many of them are too indolent even to ask for food, but lay themselves down on the bank of some river, where the country people bring them milk and fruits in abundance.

Avalokita (the Manifested) is a Sanscrit title of the Supreme Being as a revealer of himself to man.

Avançon, GUILLAUME D', a French prelate, was born in Dauphiny about 1530. After having been chamberlain of the pope, he was appointed archbishop of Embrun in 1561. He distinguished himself by his zeal against the heretics at the Council of Trent in a discussion with Poissy and certain of the clergy at Blois in 1577 and 1578. The following year, being appointed by Lesdiguières chief of the Huguenots, he was obliged, in order to save his life, to retire to Rome, where he spent several years. Then he became reconciled with Henry IV, who re-established him in his bishopric and made him cardinal. He died at Grenoble in 1600. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Avanzi, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter, was born at Ferrara in 1655, and studied under Costanzo Cattanio. There are four of his pictures in the Church of the Madonna della Pietà at Ferrara. His best work, The Marriage of St. Catharine, is in the Church of San Domenico. Many of his works possessed no merit. He died in 1718.

Avard, ADAM CLARKE, a Wesleyan Methodist minister in Nova Scotia, was born in the island of Guernsey. When he was about six years old (1806) his parents emigrated to Prince Edward Island, and Adam commenced the study of law in Charlottetown. He was converted under the ministry of John Hick, and entered the ministry in 1818; labored at Newport and Wilmot, N. S., and Fredericton, N. B.; saw revivals attend his preaching, and in 1820 was appointed by the British Conference to commence a mission among the Esquimaux of Labrador. But in the midst of extensive usefulness in Fredericton death intervened, March 15, 1821. Humble, yet dignified; zealous, but cautious; social, yet serious, Avard had a pleasing style and a benignant countenance. See Huestis, Memorials of Ministers in East. Brit. America (Halifax, N. S., 1872, 16mo), p. 7; Minutes of the British Conference (8vo ed.), 1821, v, 203.

Avedik was patriarch of the Armenian schismatics at the close of the 18th century. Having obtained the patriarchate by the aid of the mufti, he organized in 1701 a persecution against the Catholics. The French ambassador to Constantinople, Ferriol, demanded and obtained reparation in the name of the inhabitants. In order to make satisfaction, the imprisonment of the patriarch was ordered. He was confined in the prison of Messina, and died in 1703. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Aveillon, JEAN JOSEPH, a French theologian, was born in Paris in 1620. He entered the congregation of the Oratory, and there published the Conférences, which he had prepared at Paris while he was superior of the house. He was intimate with Bossuet. Aveillon died May 29, 1713. He wrote Méditations pour les Séminaires et pour les Gens du Monde. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Aveline, PIERRE, a Parisian designer and engraver, was born in 1710, studied under Jean Baptiste Poilly, and died in 1760. He gained some reputation, but most of his works are insignificant. The following are a few: The Wrath of Neptune:—Diana and Actæon:—The Infant Moses Brought to the Daughter of Pharaoh:—Noah Entering the Ark:—The Rape of Europa:—A Dog with Game.

Avellar, FRANCISCO GOMEZ DE, a Portuguese prelate and statesman, was born Jan. 17, 1739, in the vicinity of Alhandra, where his parents dwelt in humble circumstances. At the age of fourteen he was placed under the care of his uncle, a vicar, and distinguished himself by the rapid progress he made in his studies. He accompanied cardinal Pacca to Rome, where he obtained the favor of Pius VI. He was appointed by Maria I to the bishopric of Algarve, and was consecrated April 26, 1789. He performed well the duties of his office, and conferred large benefits upon the people. During the French invasion, he displayed such great prudence and energy that in 1808, at the proclamation of independence, nearly the entire government of this province was given to him by the regent. He was governor and captain-general of Algarve until his death, which occurred Dec. 15, 1816. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avellino, ONOFRIO, an Italian painter, was born in Naples in 1674. He studied under Solimena, and afterwards went to Rome, where he painted the vault of the Church of San Francesco di Paola, which is considered his best work. In the Church of Santa Maria de Montesanto is an altar-piece by him representing a subject from the life of St. Alberto. He died in Rome in 1741.

Avenarius, Johannes (1) (third of the name), a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Zipsendorf, where his father was the Protestant minister, in the last half of the 17th century. He wrote, Theses de Catechismo (Plauen, 1698):—Præcepta Homiletica (Leipsic, 1686):—Plauisches Handbuch (1698):—Sententiae ac Formulae Latino-Germanicæ (Plauen, 1699).

Avenarius, Johannes (2) (fourth of the name), a Protestant theologian of Germany, son of Matthew Avenarius, was born Nov. 10, 1670, at Steinbach. He was preacher at Berka, then deacon and archdeacon at Schmalkald, then preacher at Gera. He died at Gera, Dec. 11, 1736. Among other works he wrote, Send-schreiben an Gottfried Ludovici, von den Hymnopoëis Hennebergensibus (1705):—Vergnügte Seelenlust frommer und bussfertiger Christen (Leipsic, 1711):—Evangelischer Christenschmuck, oder Erklärung aller sonn-, fest- und apostol.-täglichen Evangelien (Arnstadt, 1718). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avendaño, ALFONSO DE, a Spanish Dominican who died at Valladolid, Oct. 11, 1596, is the author of, Commentarius in Psalmum cxviii (Salamanca, 1584; Venice, 1587):—Commentarius in Evangelium Matthæi (Madrid, 1592, 2 vols. fol.). See Antonio, Bibliotheca Hisp.; Echard, De Scriptoribus Ordinis Dominicanorum. (B. P.)

Aventinus, Sr., was born at Bourges in the 5th century, and brought up in the seminary of St. Lupus, bishop of Troyes. Camelianus, the successor of St. Lupus, made Aventinus oeconomus of his Church; but after a time he left this situation, and retired into a monastery on an island in the river Oze (Oza), where he discharged the duties of abbot until, about 534, St. Fidolus (Fale) was substituted for him, when he departed into a solitude, "prope Verrerias," where he died in the year 537. He is commemorated Feb. 4. See Greg. Turon. De Glor. Confess. p. 949; Baillet, Feb. 4.

Aventinus, St., or CHÂTEAUDUN, was made bishop of Chartres after St. Souleinus, who had been elected against his will, but fled to avoid the dignity conferred upon him. In the subscriptions of the councils of his time Aventinus is sometimes called bishop of Chartres, and sometimes of Châteaudun. He died in 528. See Baillet, Feb. 4.

Aventor. See ADVENTITUS.

Aver, WILLIAM, an English Wesleyan minister, entered the itinerant work in 1790, and died in Penzance, Cornwall, Jan. 25, 1835, aged sixty-seven. He was converted in early life, and conducted his long ministry with assiduity and usefulness. He was an humble and thorough Christian. He wrote a Letter to a Member of the New Connection (Penryn, 1814, 8vo). See Wesleyan Takings, i, 303; Minutes of the British Conference, 1835.

Averari, ANTONIO, an Italian theologian of Milan or Bergamo, lived at the close of the 15th and the beginning of the 16th century. He was one of the famous preachers of his time. He wrote, Ragionamenti sopra le Virtù Teologali (Milan, 1509):—Epitome Artium:—Epistolæ et Carmina (ibid. 1746). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avercorn is reserved rent, as corn, paid to monasteries.

Averett, ALEXANDER, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was born in South Carolina, Jan. 1, 1788. He joined the Church in 1810, and was licensed to preach in 1818. In 1848 he united with the Georgia Conference, and in it labored faithfully until his decease, Aug. 27, 1858. Mr. Averett was a man of sound mind, deep and thorough piety, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, 1858, p. 61.

Averhausen, JOSEPH, a German theologian, was born at Kempten, July 8, 1664. He entered the Order of Jesuits and taught theology at Cologne, and later at Rome. He died July 23, 1734. Among several highly esteemed sermons, we notice a funeral oration on Joseph Clement of Bavaria, Archbishop and Elector of Cologne (Cologne, 1724). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Averill, JAMES, a Congregational minister and chaplain, was born at Griswold, Conn., May 29, 1815. He was the eldest child of his parents, who died on two successive mornings and were buried in the same grave. He was educated at Plainfield Academy, Amherst College (graduating in 1837), and the Yale Divinity School (1840), and was ordained over the Church in Shrewsbury, Mass., in 1841. Ill-health compelled him to resign in 1848, and in 1852 he settled in Plymouth Hollow, Conn. After a pastorate of ten years, he accepted the chaplaincy of the 23d Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, and accompanied his regiment to the South. But his health could not bear the sultry climate, and he died of intermittent fever after a sickness of two weeks, June 11, 1863, at Lafourche, La. He was a staunch advocate of the great philanthropic and moral enterprises of the day. See Conn. Quarterly, 1863, p. 351.

Averoldi, Girolamo, a Capuchin friar and Italian theologian, a native of Brescia, lived at the commencement of the 17th century. In one of his works he maintains that Mohammed was Antichrist. This opinion was considered by the Inquisition, and although he abjured this heresy, he was imprisoned for three years in the dungeons of the Holy Office. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Averoldi, Ippolito, an Italian theologian, a native of Brescia, lived probably in the early half of the 17th century, and was a Capuchin friar. He wrote, Icones nonnullæ ad Pleniorum Abstrusissimæ Literæ Libri Apocalypsis Intelligentiam et Commentariis Elegantissimis Loca Difficiliora Illustratæ (Brescia, 1638). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Averoni, VALENTINO, an Italian theologian, a native of Florence, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He was a monk of the congregation of Vallombrosa. He wrote, Trattato del Governo de' Principi di S. Tomaso d'Aquino, tradotto di Latino (Florence, 1587):—Della Dottrina Cristiana, opera di Dionigio Cartusiano tradotta (ibid. 1577):—Discorsi sopra le Necessarie Conditioni che dove havere la Vergine, Sposa Sacrata a Cristo (ibid. 1591). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Averoult (or Dauroult), ANTOINE, a French Jesuit and theologian, a native of Artois, died in 1614. He wrote, Catechismus Historicus:—Pii Genitus Catholicorum:—Remedia Spiritualia contra Pestem. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Averroës (or Averrhoës), ABU-L-WALID MOHAMMED IBN-AHMED (surnamed el-Hajid), an illustrious Arabian philosopher and physician, was born at Cordova, Spain, in 1120. The name is a corruption of Aben- or Ibn-Roshd. He studied theology, jurisprudence, medicine, and philosophy under the best masters, and was intimate with men who were leaders of scientific thought in Spain in the 12th century. Like his father, he was distinguished for his varied knowledge, and succeeded him in the office of mufti, or chief judge of Andalusia, and subsequently held the same office in Morocco. He stood high in the esteem of successive rulers, especially of Al-Mansûr; but the latter, yielding to those who could not reconcile the philosophy of Averroës with his professed devotion to the Koran, and perhaps also impelled by personal animosity, banished him for several years, but finally restored him to his office. Averroës died at Morocco, Dec. 12, 1198. It is difficult to understand in what his heresy consisted. As told by the Arab historians, it is enveloped in vague and puerile circumstantialities; but according to Ibn-Abi-Oceibia, the real cause was the hatred of the Mohammedan priesthood to the culture of philosophy and the study of the ancients. This is somewhat confirmed by the fact that Averroës did not suffer alone. A general persecution raged; everywhere philosophers, physicians, poets, and others of like pursuits, were in danger; and before the close of the century the light of scientific genius in Southern Spain had gone out. Averroës's writings are numerous, and embrace almost every subject of human knowledge. He is said to have written nearly eighty treatises, most of which pertain to medicine and the kindred sciences; but he is chiefly known in modern times as a commentator on Aristotle and Plato. The first edition of his works was published in a Latin translation at Venice in eleven volumes (1552-60), the commentaries filling eight volumes, while the remaining three contain his refutation of Al-Gazali's work against the Greek philosophy, his great medical work, Kulliyat (incorrectly Colliget), and miscellaneous treatises. His philosophy inclined towards pantheism and materialism. His doctrines were denounced by the University of Paris, after which Leo X issued a bull against them. See Renan, Averroës et l'Averroïsme (Paris, 1852); Müller, Philosophie und Theologie von Averroës (Munich, 1859); Munk, Mélanges, p. 418-458; Stöckl, Phil. des Mittelalters, ii, 67-124; Herz, Averroës, Vater und Sohn: Drei Abhandlungen über die Conjunction des separaten Intellects mit den Menschen, translated into German from the Arabic version of Samuel ibn-Tibbon. (Berlin, 1869).

Averroists is a name for those who hold the opinions of Averroës (q. v.).

Averruncus, in Roman mythology, was a deity who was implored to avert any threatening danger.

Averso, RAFAELE, an Italian monk of the Order of Clerks Regulars Minors, was of San Severo, near Salerno, in Naples. Five times he was elected general of his order, and was offered the bishoprics of Nocera and Nardo, both of which he refused. He died at Rome, June 10, 1657, being sixty-eight years of age. Averso was a man of singular piety, modesty, and learning, and won all hearts by his many admirable qualities. Among his works, which are numerous, are, De Ordinis et Matrimonii Sacramentis Tractatus (Bologna, 1642, 4to):—De Eucharistia Sacramento et Sacrificio, de Penitentia Sacra, et Extrema Unctione Tractatus, etc. (ibid. eod. 4to):—De Fide, Spe, et Charitate Tractatus Theol. (Venice, 1660, 4to).

Avery, Abraham S., a Presbyterian minister, was born at East Lyme, Conn., in 1792. He studied theology with a private minister, and joined Alton Presbytery April 4, 1856; labored some months with Metropolis Church in Massac Co., Ill.; was dismissed to Pataskala Presbytery, O., April 7, 1859; and died at Lawrenceburg, Ind., Sept. 3, 1868. He was thoroughly consecrated to the work of the ministry. See Norton, Hist. of Presb. Church in Illinois.

Avery, Austin Wakefield, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Campton, N. H., Nov. 18, 1838. He became a hopeful Christian in early life, and in the fall of 1856 went to the institution at New Hampton, N. H., with a view to preparing himself for the Christian ministry. He was formally licensed to preach Dec. 14, 1858, and early in 1859 he left New England and went to Paducah, Ky., where his brother was residing and engaged in teaching. Finding him in poor health, he took his place in the schoolroom. For two or three months he supplied the pulpit of the Baptist Church in Paducah, and also held meetings for the colored people. In the fall of 1859 he labored with the Washington Street Church in Dover, N. H. The winter of 1860 was spent in Christian work in various sections of the State of New York, and he was ordained at Parishville, N. Y., March 24 of that year. The following spring he spent in Minnesota, and the remainder of the year was occupied mostly in ministerial service in Parishville and the towns adjoining. Wishing to enjoy better facilities for study, he made arrangements to place himself under the tuition of Rev. Ransom Dunn, pastor of the North Bennet Street Church in Boston. When, however, he reached Boston early in 1861, he found Mr. Dunn in such poor health that he was forced to resign, and Mr. Avery was chosen his successor in the following March. More than once he sought relief during the next two or three years from his pastoral work, but his Church was unwilling to part with him; and it was not until March 13, 1865, that they consented to accept his resignation. A brief pastorate at Haverhill, Mass., closed his labors on earth. His death took place Oct. 7, 1865. See Barrett, Memoirs of Eminent Preachers, p. 283-298. (J. C. S.)

Avery, Charles, a Methodist Protestant minister, was a native of Westchester County, N. Y., born Dec. 10, 1784. He obtained his education chiefly by private study, experienced religion in early life, and served a long career as local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1829 he identified himself with the Methodist Protestants and joined their Ohio Conference. He died at his residence in Allegheny City, Pa., Jan. 17, 1858. Mr. Avery's specialty was philanthropy. He founded the first Methodist Protestant Church in Allegheny City; endowed the Preachers' Aid Society of the Pittsburgh Conference with twenty-five thousand dollars, called the Avery Fund; erected an ample college building in Allegheny City for the benefit of people of color; besides making liberal donations to various institutions, as hospitals, missionary associations, etc. See Bassett, Hist. of the Methodist Protestant Church, p. 386.

Avery, David, a Congregational minister, was born in Norwich (Franklin), Conn., April 5, 1746. He was converted under the preaching of Whitefield; fitted for college in Dr. Wheelock's school at Lebanon; entered the sophomore class, and graduated at Yale in 1769; pursued theology under Dr. Wheelock; preached on Long Island as a licentiate; was a missionary to the Oneida Indians; was installed pastor at Gageborough, now Windsor, Vt., March 25, 1773, where he remained until he entered the army as chaplain, April 14, 1777. He was present when General Burgoyne was taken, when the Hessians were captured at Trenton, and at the battle of Princeton. After having served as chaplain over three years, he became pastor at Bennington, Vt., May 3, 1780, and was dismissed June 17, 1783. Then he settled at Wrentham, Mass., May 25, 1786, where, after some difficulty, he was dismissed April 21, 1794; but he still preached at North Wrentham, where a Church was organized in 1795. Some time previous to 1798 he removed to Mansfield, now Chaplin, Conn., preached in vacant places, and made two missionary tours to Maine and New York. From 1798 to 1801 he preached to a new society in Chaplin. The week he was to have been installed pastor in Middletown, Va., he died at the residence of his daughter in Shepherds-town, Va., in the autumn of 1817. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 697.

Avery, Eleazer James, a Baptist minister, was born at Bozrah, Conn., Jan. 6, 1815, and was a graduate of Brown University in the class of 1845, also of the Newton Theological Institution in the class of 1849. His first pastorate was with the Church in Addison, Me. (1849-51), his ordination taking place in 1850. He was pastor in Pembroke, Me., in 1851-52, when he resigned, and held the position of principal of Worcester Academy (1852-54), then of Lewis Academy (1854-58), of Shelburne Falls Academy (1858-68), and finally of Peddie Institute, Hightstown, N. J., where he died, Sept. 22, 1881. See General Catalogue of Newton Theol. Inst. p. 34; The Watchman, Oct. 20, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Avery, Ephraim, a Congregational minister, the son of the Rev. John Avery of Truro, Mass., was born in 1712. He graduated at Harvard in 1731, and was ordained over the Church in Mortlake, Conn., four years after. This charge Mr. Avery retained until Oct. 20, 1754, when he died. His widow subsequently married General Israel Putnam. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 350.

Avery, Fernald, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in April, 1835. Hopefully converted in 1855, he decided to enter the ministry. With a view to fit himself for his work, he commenced to study at New Hampton in 1859, but on account of his health was obliged to leave the institution. In October, 1860, he had so far recovered as to be able to preach, and was licensed by the Corinth (Vt.) Quarterly Meeting. He took charge of the Church in Williamstown, and in 1841 was ordained as its regular pastor, sustaining this relation for three years and a half. In August, 1864, he again took up his studies at New Hampton, which he prosecuted until the following March. He was once more laid aside by sickness, and lingered until death relieved him of his sufferings. He died at Corinth, Oct. 13, 1866. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1868, p. 87. (J. C. S.)

Avery, John (1), a Congregational minister, preached in England for some time, and came to America in 1634. For a short time he resided in Newbury, Mass., but receiving an invitation to preach at Marblehead, he accepted it in order that he might minister to the poor fishermen. He was on his way thither when the vessel in which he had embarked was shipwrecked, and the whole company, consisting of twenty-three persons, were drowned except two, Mr. Avery being one of the victims, Aug. 14, 1635. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 127.

Avery, John (2), D.D., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, graduated at Yale College in 1813, and was ordained deacon Oct. 22, 1817. In 1820 he was rector of St. Paul's Church, Edenton, N. C., where he remained until December, 1835, when he removed to Greene County, Ala. There he organized a Church called St. John's in the Prairies, and served this Church and the one at Greensborough at the same time. In the Convention of Alabama in 1836, he was chosen president, and he died Jan. 17, 1837, on board the steamboat on which he was returning home from Mobile. He was distinguished for his extensive theological learning and sound judgment. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 754.

Avery, John A., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bradford, Vt., in 1795. He was educated at Middlebury College. In 1824 he was ordained by the Congregational Association of Woodstock, Vt., and labored as home missionary within the bounds of the Plymouth and Bridgewater congregations. For six years he was editor of The Religious Recorder, published in Syracuse, N. Y. He died in Syracuse, April 28, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 88.

Avery, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born at Dedham, Mass., in 1751. He graduated at Harvard College in 1771; was ordained pastor of the Church in Holden, Mass., Dec. 12, 1774; and died March 5, 1824. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 344.

Avery, Park, a Baptist minister who died in 1797, was eminently pious, and an intimate friend and counsellor of the Rev. Silas Burrows. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 107.

Avery, Samuel, a Wesleyan minister in Nova Scotia, was born at Grand-Pré, Horton, N. S. He was educated at the Mount Allison Academy, N. B.; was received into the ministry in 1854; preached at Wilmot and Shelburne; became a supernumerary in 1861; and died of hemorrhage of the lungs, Oct. 13 of that year, in his twenty-ninth year. Devoutness of spirit, tenderness of conscience, and holy resolves characterized him. See Huestis, Memorials of Methodist Ministers in East. Brit. America, p. 11.

Avery, Samuel Waters, a Baptist minister, was born at Jefferson, Me., July 4, 1814. He was fitted for college at Richmond, Me., and was a graduate of Waterville College in the class of 1840. He was engaged in teaching for two years (1841-43) in Richmond, and for a time directed his attention to the study of law. On becoming a hopeful Christian, he went to the Newton Theological Institution in the fall of 1844, graduating in the class of 1847. After supplying for a few months the Church in East Winthrop, he was ordained in Lubec, Me., in May, 1849, and was pastor there two years, at Searsport six years (1851-57), Fayette six years (1858-64), Lisbon Falls three years (1865-68). In April, 1867, he opened a drug-store at Lisbon Falls, but still continued to preach. He was secretary of the Maine Baptist Convention from 1860 to 1867. He died suddenly Oct. 17, 1868. See Necrology of Colby University, p. 12. (J. C. S.)

Aveugle, JEAN (the younger) L', a French priest of the Oratory and theological writer, died in 1672. He distinguished himself as a preacher, and wrote Delicæ Pastorum. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Aviau (du Bois de Sanzay), CHARLES FRANÇOIS D', a French prelate, was born Aug. 7, 1736, at Bois de Sanzay, diocese of Poitiers. He studied at the school of the Jesuits at Flèche, and at the Seminary of St. Sulpice at Paris. He was at first canon and grand-vicar of the diocese of Angers, and was appointed, in 1789, archbishop of Vienne. Refusing to sign the civil constitution of the clergy, he left France in 1792, and retired to Annecy and to Rome. In 1797 he returned in the disguise of a peasant and travelled, preaching in the mountains of Vivarais and of Forez. After the compact, he was called, April 9, 1802, to the archiepiscopal see of Bordeaux. He devoted his time and money to works of beneficence, and died at Bordeaux, July 14, 1826. His posthumous letters were published in the Mémorial Catholique for May and June, 1827; they were upon Ultramontanism and Gallicanism. He also wrote, Quaison Funèbre de Louis XV:—Écrit sur la Prêt à Intérêt du Commerce (Lyons, 1799). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avibus (or Osello), GASPAB AB (or PATAVINUS), an Italian engraver, was born at Padua about 1530, and probably studied under Giorgio Ghisi. His principal work was a large volume, in five parts, containing the full-length portraits of the princes and emperors of the house of Austria, engraved in the style of Sadeler. The following are some of the best of his single prints on sacred subjects: The Espousals of the Virgin Mary;—The Woman Taken in Adultery;—The Scourging of Christ;—Christ Crowned with Thorns;—The Last Supper.

Avignon, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Avenionense). Of these there were several:

I. Held in 1060, by the cardinal Hugo, abbot of Cluny, legate. Achard, who had usurped the see of Arles, was deposed, and Gibelin elected to his place. Lantelme was also elected to the see of Embrun, Hugo to that of Grenoble, and Desiderius to that of Cavaillon. See Labbe, Concil. x, 390.

II. This council was held Sept. 6, 1209, by Hugo, archbishop of Riez, and published twenty-one canons. The first recommends to bishops to preach more frequently in their dioceses; the second relates to the extermination of heresies; and the preface to the acts of the council laments the general prevalence of wickedness. In this council, or in one held the following year, the inhabitants of Toulouse were excommunicated for not driving out the Albigenses, according to order. The count of Toulouse was conditionally excommunicated. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 41.

III. Held May 27, 1279, by Pierre (or, according to some, Bernard) de Languissel, archbishop of Arles. They drew up a decree containing fifteen articles, for the most part setting forth the usurpations and invasions of ecclesiastical property which were made, the violence committed upon the clergy, and the disregard of excommunications. However, they provided no other means of opposing these evils than the passing of fresh censures. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1050.

IV. Held in 1282, by Bertrand Amauri, archbishop of Arles, together with his suffragans. Of the canons published ten only are extant, which, among other things, enjoined the faithful to attend their own parish churches—which in many places were disregarded—and to go there, at least, on every Sunday and holyday. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1174.

V. Held June 18, 1326. Three archbishops, eleven bishops, and the deputies of several others who were absent attended. They drew up a rule containing fifty-nine articles, chiefly relating to the temporalities of the Church and its jurisdiction. They assume, generally, as an incontrovertible maxim that the laity have no authority over persons or property ecclesiastical; a maxim evidently false, if it is to be extended to every possible case. Moreover, they complain bitterly of various abuses proceeding from the hatred which the laity bore towards the clergy; but it does not appear that they took any steps to lessen the grounds of this hatred, unless it were by an accumulation of censures and penalties.

1. Orders that the mass of the Blessed Virgin be celebrated once a week.

3. Grants an indulgence to those who pray to God for the pope.

4. Grants an indulgence of ten days to those who devoutly bow the head at the name of Jesus.

14. Orders the secular powers to forward a captured clerk to his own judge free of expense.

17, 18. Against administering poisonous drugs.

19. Of proceedings against the exempt.

44. Forbids, under pain of excommunication, all abusive conversations in the houses of bishops, or in the presence of their officials.

46. Permits both archbishops and bishops travelling in dioceses not their own to bless the people.

51. Relates to the condition in which benefices ought to be left by those leaving them.

See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1717, 2476.

VI. Held Sept. 3, 1337, by three archbishops and seventeen bishops. They published a decree containing sixty-nine articles, being chiefly a repetition of those drawn up in the preceding council. Among other things, it is enacted that parishioners shall receive the eucharist at Easter only at the hands of their proper curate. By canon five it is ordered that incumbents and all persons in holy orders shall abstain from eating meat on Saturdays in honor of the Virgin, that by so doing they may set a good example to the laity. This injunction to fast on Saturdays had been made three hundred years before, upon occasion of the Trêve de Dieu, but had not yet, it seems, been universally established; the other regulations of the council relate chiefly to the usurpations of Church property and acts of violence committed on the persons of the clergy. See Gall. Christ. i, 322; Labbe, Concil. xi, 1850.

VII. Held Sept. 7, 1457, by the cardinal Pierre de Foix, archbishop of Arles and legate. The chief purpose of this council was to confirm the acts of that of Basle relating to the immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin. It was forbidden, under pain of excommunication, to preach anything contrary to this doctrine or to dispute concerning it in public. All curates were enjoined to make known this decree that no one might plead ignorance. See Labbe, Concil. xiii, 1403.

VIII. Held in 1594, by Francis Marin, archbishop of Avignon. Sixty-four canons were published, relating chiefly to the same subjects treated of in the synods held in various parts of France, etc., after the Council of Trent.

8. Provides for teaching the rudiments of the faith to adults as well as children.

9. Orders sermons on all Sundays, and every day in Lent and Advent.

11-21. Of the sacraments.

14. Orders that the baptismal water be renewed only on Holy Saturday and the eve of Whitsunday, unless need require; and that a silver vessel be used to pour it into the font.

25, 26. Of relics and images.

28. Of behavior in church.

44. Of Lent.

46. Of processions.

56. Of legacies, wills, etc.

57. Of medical men.

60. Against duelling.

62. Of Jews: orders them to keep in their houses on Easter-eve and Easter-day.

See Labbe, Concil. xv, 1434.

Avignonists, a sect of Romanists which arose during the 18th century at Avignon, France, reviving the errors of the Collyridians (q. v.). The originators of the Avignonists were Grabianca, a Polish nobleman, and Pernety, abbé of Bural, a Benedictine to whom is attributed a work entitled The Virtues, Power, Clemency, and Glory of Mary, the Mother of God (1790).

Ávila, Alfonso de, a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Belmont in 1545, and died, according to one authority, at Valladolid, Jan. 12, 1613; according to another, at Malaga, May 21, 1618. He wrote two volumes of Sermons (Antwerp, 1610). An Alfonso Ávila, a Jesuit, perhaps identical with the above mentioned, wrote in Spanish, in 1583, a treatise on St. Bernard the second bishop of Ávila.

Ávila, Estéban de, a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Ávila in 1549, and died at Lima, April 14, 1601. He published, De Censuris Ecclesiasticis Tractatus (Lyons, 1608, 4to):—Compendium Summe, seu Manualis Doctoris Navarii, in Ordinem Alphabeticum Redactum (ibid. 1609; Paris, 1620, 16mo). See Biog. Univ. iii, 121.

Avila, Giuseppe Maria, a Dominican of Rome, was so well skilled in Hebrew that he was chosen by pope Urban VIII in 1640 to preach to the Jews. He was made bishop of Campagna, in Naples, and died in 1656, leaving a Panegyric of St. Thomas Aquinas (Rome, 1634).

Ávila, Hernando de, a Spanish painter and sculptor to Philip II, was a native of Toledo, and after the death of his former master, Francisco Comontes, in 1565, he was appointed painter to the Cathedral of Toledo in his place. In 1568 he finished two altar-pieces for a chapel of that cathedral representing St. John the Baptist and the Adoration of the Kings. In 1576 he designed the principal altar of the nunnery of Santo Domingo el Antiguo at Toledo.

Ávila, Sancho de, a Spanish prelate and theologian, was born at Ávila in 1546. He was successively bishop of Murcia, of Jaen, of Murviedro, and of Placentia. He died Dec. 6, 1625. He wrote, in Spanish, a treatise on the veneration due to the relics of saints (Madrid, 1611):—Sermons (Baeza, 1615):—a Spanish translation of one of the treatises of St. Augustine (Madrid, 1601, 1626). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Aviñón, Bartolomé, of Aragon, a Dominican, was deputed to Rome to obtain the canonization of St. Louis Bertrand. While there, in 1623, he wrote in Spanish a life of that saint, together with An Account of the Process of Canonization, which was at once translated into Italian by J. Cæsar Boltifango, and printed at Rome in 1623 (8vo).

Avis, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Shepherdstown, Va., Jan. 7, 1795. He received the best religious training in early life from a pious, devoted mother, but wandered into folly and sin; was converted years afterwards, and in 1820 entered the itinerant ranks of the Baltimore Conference. In 1821 he was transferred to the Kentucky Conference, three years later returned to the Baltimore Conference, and in 1824 was transferred to the Virginia Conference, in all of which he labored with zeal, fidelity, and great success. He died in 1825. Mr. Avis was a man of unquestionable integrity, great energy, and indefatigable industry. See Methodist Magazine, viii, 366; Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1825, p. 475.

Avistūpor (scarecrow), a name of Priapus, who had temples erected to him as the tutelary deity of vineyards and gardens, which he defended from thieves and destructive birds. His image was usually placed in gardens, holding in his hand a sickle.

Avitable, Pietro, a Neapolitan missionary, was a Theatine of Bisonto in 1607. He was appointed by the Congregation of the Propagandists prefect of the missions in Georgia and the Indies. He died at Goa in 1650. He wrote, De Ecclesiastico Georgia Statu, ad Pontificem Urbanum VIII Historica Relatio (Rome).

Avitus, St., was born about 490 in Périgord. He was of a patrician family, and Bollandus, in his Acta Sanctorum, informs us that in his youth he served in the army of Alaric II, king of the Visigoths, and in the battle of Vouillé against Clovis he was taken prisoner, but his conduct so gained the confidence of his masters that he was liberated. A vision which he had determined him to preach the Gospel, and he accordingly entered the monastery at Bonneval, in the diocese of Poitiers. He went into a desert place and built a chapel and a cell, and dwelt there forty years as a hermit; this gained for him a high reputation for sanctity, and some have attributed to him certain miracles. He died in 570, and his anniversary is celebrated June 17. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avitus (St.), third abbot of Micy, or St. Mesmin, near Orleans, was the son of a laborer of Beausse. He was received into the abbey of Micy, and appeared so meek and simple that many of the monks thought him deficient in intellect. The wish to follow more completely a religious life led him to retire into solitude, whence he was recalled by Maximinus, abbot of Micy, and succeeded him about 520. He gave much valuable advice to Clodimir, the son of Clovis, and warned him that if he killed Sigismund, king of Burgundy, he would not long survive him, which prediction was justified by the event. See Baillet, June 17.

Avitus (St.), abbot of CHÂTEAUDUN. If this Avitus was not the same with the last, which Le Cointe asserts, there were two of the same name, monks of Micy (under the rule of St. Maximinus), whence this Avitus retired with St. Calais to Châteaudun, in the diocese of Chartres, where he built a monastery and ruled it as abbot until his death, in 530. A strong testimony in favor of the opinion that there was but one Avitus is that of Lethaldus, a learned monk of Micy, who states that the abbot Avitus, shortly after his election, left the abbey to go and form another community in the Dunois. See Baillet, June 17; Henschenius, Acts of St. Avitus.

Avogadro, Pietro (called Bresciano), an Italian painter, was born at Brescia, and flourished about the year 1730. He studied under Pompeo Gritti. His chief work is the Martyrdom of Sts. Crispino and Crispiano, in the Church of St. Joseph at Brescia.

Avout, Pieter van der, a Flemish landscape painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1619. The following are some of his principal religious prints: The Virgin Mary and the Infant Jesus:—St. John and St. Anne:—The Virgin and Infant in the Clouds:—The Magdalen Ascending to Heaven:—The Virgin Suckling the Infant.

Avoury (Avooves) is the picture of a patron saint depicted on a square gilt vane of metal, which was attached flag-wise to a staff and carried in funeral processions.

Avranches, Council of (Concilium Avrincantense), was held May 22, 1172, the cardinal legates Theodinus and Albert presiding. Henry II of England, having taken the oath which the pope's legates required of him, and annulled all the unlawful customs which had been established in his time, and done penance, was absolved on account of the assassination of Becket. Among other things, Henry engaged—(1) not to withdraw from the obedience of the pope Alexander III or of his successors so long as they continued to acknowledge him as Catholic king of England; (2.) That he would not hinder appeals to Rome; (3.) He promised, at the coming Christmas, to take the cross for three years, and in the year following to set out for Jerusalem, unless the pope should grant a dispensation, and unless he were obliged to go to Spain to oppose the Saracens. This was rather an assembly than a council. The real Council of Avranches, in this year, was not held until Sept. 27 or 28. The king then renewed his oath, adding to it some expressions of attachment and obedience to Alexander. Twelve canons were then drawn up, enacting, among other matters, that it should not be lawful to appoint infants to benefices with cure of souls; that the incumbents of parishes who could afford it should be compelled to have an assisting priest; that it should not be lawful for a husband or wife to enter upon a monastic life while the other continued in the world. Abstinence and fasting during Advent were recommended to all who could bear it, and especially to the clergy. See Labbe, Concil. x, 1457.

Avrigny, Hyacinthe Robillard d', a French historian, was born at Caen in 1675, and admitted at Paris into the Society of Jesuits Sept. 15, 1691. He took a course in theology, and then was sent to Alençon, where he was employed as procurator of the college. He died probably at Quimper, April 24, 1719. His works are, Mémoires Chronologiques et Dogmatiques, pour Servir à l'Histoire Ecclesiastique depuis 1600 jusqu'en 1716, avec des Reflexions et des Remarques Critiques (1720, 4 vols, 12mo):—Mémoires pour Servir à Histoire Universelle de l'Europe depuis 1600 jusqu'en 1716, etc. (Paris, 1725, 4 vols. 12mo).

Avril, PHILIPPE, a French Jesuit and missionary, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He was sent by his superiors to penetrate into China, and embarked June 13, 1685, at Leghorn upon a ship destined for Alexandria, and traversed Syria, Kurdistan, Armenia, and Persia; but he was arrested by the governor of Astrachan, who obliged him to return by way of Russia and Poland, and on Sept. 30, 1690, he landed at Toulon. He published his adventures under the title Voyage en divers États d'Europe et d'Asie (Paris, 1692). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avrillot, BARBE (more commonly known by the name of Acarie), founder of the Carmelite Order in France, was born in Paris, Feb. 1, 1565. At the age of fifteen she desired to enter a monastery, but her parents, not approving of this, married her to Peter Acarie, master of accounts at Paris, and one of the warmest partisans of the League. At the submission of Paris to Henry IV in 1594, he was obliged to flee, and thus she was deserted and left in straitened circumstances. She bore her trials with courage, and having found an asylum for her children, founded the Carmelite Order, and became directress of one of the houses of reformed Carmelites, and engaged one of her friends, Madame Saint-Beuve, to establish a convent of Ursuline nuns in the same vicinity. Madame Acarie took the veil under the name "Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation." She finished her days in the retirement of the Carmelite house at Pontoise, April 18, 1618, and was canonized by Pius VI in 1791. Several French works, the titles of which are given in Latin, are attributed to her: De Cautelis Adhibendis in Vitæ Statu Deligendo; — De Idonea ad Primam Communionem Preparanda; — De Vita Interiori; — Centum circiter Monita Spiritualia; — Vera Exercitia Omnibus Animabus quæ Vitam ejus consequi desiderant Utilia (Paris, 1622). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Avun, a personage of Etruscan mythology. He is represented on a mirror as a warrior armed with a spear in company with the male Turan.

Awani-Aoton, in Hindû mythology, is an August festival sacred to Siva. The Hindûs of the first three classes assemble, cut their hair, bathe in consecrated waters, and pray God for the forgiveness of the sins which they committed in the year that has passed.

Awani-Mulon, in Hindû mythology, is also an August festival sacred to the worship of Siva, held in memory of a miracle which he performed as a favor to his holy, penitent worshipper Manikawasser.

Awa Se JUNO MIKOTTO, in Japanese mythology, was the sovereign of Japan and half god. With him closed or ended the golden age of the god-men. He was the fifth ruler in the second generation of the oldest emperors of Japan, who were all demigods, and he reigned 836,042 years.

Awcock, JOHN, a Christian, suffered martyrdom in the middle of the 16th century. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 38.

Awethi is a hell of the Siamese which is 656 miles wide. Into this hell Dewahda was cast, the constant persecutor of the founder of Lamaism. He was fastened by iron bars which went through his body in three directions, so that he could not move. His head hangs in a vessel of fire, and his feet burn eternally.

Awichi is a place of future torment among the Buddhists.

Axford, WILLIAM, an English Congregational minister, was born at Westbury, Wilts, in 1824. While a young man he gave himself to evangelistic work, and labored zealously as a home missionary in Liverpool, Prescott, and Wandsworth. He was educated at Cotton End, and settled in the pastorate at Castle Donington, in Leicestershire. After three years he removed to Clayton West, Yorkshire, where he was ordained. In 1865 he removed to Charnmouth and Lyme Regis, and in October of the following year began to devote his entire time to the latter. In the autumn of 1868 he became pastor of Collyhurst-street Chapel, Manchester, and in 1870 of the Church at Peasley Cross, St. Helens. Here he labored for little more than three years, when, in the midst of usefulness, he was smitten down with an illness from which he never recovered. He died Dec. 29, 1878. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 306.

Axinomancy (from axivn, an axe, and maureia, divination) is divination among the ancient Greeks by means of an axe or hatchet. A hatchet was fixed in equipoise upon a round stake, and the individual towards whom it moved was regarded as the guilty person. If suspicion rested upon any persons not present, their names were repeated, and the person at the repetition of whose name the hatchet moved was concluded to be guilty of the crime of which he was suspected. Another mode of practicing the art was by laying an agate-stone on a red-hot hatchet and watching its movements.

Axionicus, one of the "Eastern" school of Valentinians, is coupled with Bardeisan (Ἀρδοσιανός) by Hippolytus (Her. vi, 35). Early in the 3d century, when Tertullian wrote against the Valentinians, Axionicus "alone at Antioch vindicated the memory of Valentinus by completely keeping his rules."

Axley, JAMES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born on New River, Va., in 1776, but shortly afterwards removed with his parents to Livingston County, Ky., where he spent his early years in farming and hunting. He made a profession of religion in 1801 or 1802, and in 1805 his name appears in the Minutes of the Western Conference as on trial. His appointments were: 1805, Red River Circuit; 1806, Hockhocking; 1807, French Broad; 1808, Appalouzas; 1809, Power's Valley; 1810, Holston; 1811, Elk; 1812, presiding elder of Wabash District; 1813-16, Holston District; 1817-18, Green River District; 1819-21, French Broad District; in 1822 he located, settling on a farm near Madisonville, Tenn. He became a very thrifty farmer, and did much successful work as a local preacher. He was afterwards reduced to poverty by endorsing for an acquaintance who failed. He maintained an unspotted character till the close of his life. He died Feb. 22, 1838. Mr. Axley was a highly acceptable and effective preacher, a man of great power over the masses. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 414; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.; Stevens, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, iv, 336, 372, 375, 405, 406, 430, 451.

Axonius, JOACHIM, a theologian, jurist, and poet of Brabant, was preceptor of Philip of Lalain, and travelled in Italy, Spain, Palestine, and Greece. He then retired to Antwerp, where he became an attaché of the council of archdukes. He died Aug. 25, 1605. He wrote, De Libero Hominis Arbitrio; — De Ventorum Natura ex Aristotele aliisque Philosophis; — Maximi Planudis Oratio in Sepulchrum Christi (Dillingen, 1559); — Débat du Corps et de l'Âme, et Jugement de Dieu qui le Termine (a dialogue of the Greek philosopher Gregory Palamas, published at Lyons in Latin and at Paris in Greek), and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Axtell, Anthony Dey, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Geneva, N. Y., March 5, 1834. He was educated at Williams College, Mass., and studied in the Theological Seminary at Auburn, N. Y. He was ordained by Troy Presbytery in 1864, and labored at Olean and at Lansingburgh, N. Y. He had several urgent calls to the pastorate of churches within the bounds of his own presbytery, but his health was rapidly failing. He made a visit to St. Paul, Minn., but he soon became worse, and was advised by his physicians to hasten home. He died Oct. 17, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 270.

Axtell, Daniel C., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Mendham, N. J., in 1800, but removed in his childhood with his father to Geneva, N. Y. He graduated at Hamilton College in 1821, studied theology at Princeton, N. J.; was ordained in 1830, and preached at Auburn, N. Y., until 1836. He died of hemorrhage of the lungs in 1837. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 454.

Axtell, Henry C., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Mendham, N. J., in 1802. He graduated at Hamilton College in 1823; was tutor there in 1825-26; studied theology in Princeton Theological Seminary, N. J., and in 1830 he was ordained as pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Lawrenceville, N. J. In 1835 he accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian Church in Orange, N. J., but in 1838 resigned his charge on account of ill-health, and removed to St. Augustine, Fla. He became a member of the Presbytery of Georgia in 1840. In 1843 he was appointed chaplain at Fort Brooke, Tampa Bay, which post he held until 1849, when he was transferred to New Orleans Barracks. He remained at this post until 1853, when he became disabled from duty, and removed to Philadelphia, where he died, July 15, 1854. He contributed to the Princeton Review in 1831 an article on "Biblical Eloquence and Poetry," and in 1834 "A Memorial of James Brainerd Taylor." See Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review; Index to Princeton Review; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 454.

Axūrus (or Anxurus), in Roman mythology, was the name of the supreme god among the Volscians. He is thought to be one with Vejovis, an Etruscan god of dangerous character. He was represented as a youth and armed.

Ayala, Martin Perez de, a Spanish prelate, was born at Hieste, in the diocese of Carthagená, in 1504. He studied at Alcalá, and entered the military order of St. Jago of the Sword at Salamanca. He accompanied Francis de Mendoza, bishop of Jaén, to Rome, and after his death went to Germany to combat the errors of the Protestants. Charles V sent him to the Council of Trent, and in 1548 nominated him to the bishopric of Guadix, in Granada; thence he was translated to the see of Segovia, and on his return from Trent he was, in 1564, made archbishop of Valentia, which Church he governed till his death, Aug. 5, 1566. His principal work is De Divinis, Apostolicis atque Ecclesiasticis Traditionibus deque Auctoritate ac Vi earum SS. Assertionibus (Cologne and Paris, 1549; Venice, 1551; Paris, 1562).

Ayala, Pedro, a pious Spanish Dominican, was born at Arenas in 1676. He assumed the religious habit at Ávila, whence he proceeded to Alcalá, where he was made professor of theology. By order of his superiors he accepted the see of Ávila, and went on foot to take possession of it, accompanied only by one monk of his order, May 5, 1728. The benefits which he conferred upon his diocese were innumerable; his palace was a kind of monastery where prayer and study were the constant occupations. Clement XII made him his nuncio at the court of Spain, with the title and powers of legate a latere, and for three years he continued to discharge the duties of this difficult but honorable post, and succeeded in reconciling the two courts. The only reward for his services which he claimed was permission to resign his bishopric, which he obtained in 1738. He retired to the poorest convent of his order in Spain—viz. that of St. Rosa, near the village of Montbeltran, where he died, May 20, 1742. He left several pastoral instructions and some treatises on moral theology. His Life was written by a historian of his order.

Ayars, Charles W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 22, 1836. He experienced religion in his eleventh year, received license to preach in his nineteenth year, and in 1856 entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he served with zeal and fidelity until his decease, Nov. 18, 1869. From childhood Mr. Ayars was characterized by an earnest, consistent, and progressive piety. He was a diligent and well-informed student, preacher, and pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 49.

Ayars, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Bridgeton, N. J., Feb. 20, 1805. He was converted when about twenty years old, and in 1829 was admitted into the Philadelphia Conference, wherein he filled the following appointments: Bargaintown, Cape May, Newton, and Essex Circuits; Paterson, New Brunswick; Halsey Street, Newark; Burlington, Long Branch, New Brunswick; Green Street, Trenton; Rahway; Prospect Street, Paterson; Haverstraw, N. Y.; Trinity, Jersey City; Water Street, Elizabeth; was a supernumerary during 1856-60 because of an inflammation of the throat, but engaged as secretary of the American Sunday-school Union in the West. In 1861 he resumed his position in the active ranks, and was stationed first at Nyack, then at St. Paul's, Staten Island. He was presiding elder on the Newark District from 1864 to 1867; on Elizabeth District from 1868 to 1871; was pastor at Montclair and at New Providence. In 1877 his ill-health obliged him to become supernumerary, and he continued to reside at New Providence till his death, Jan. 30, 1880. Mr. Ayars was remarkably successful as an evangelist, and was a faithful and wise administrator of the Discipline. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 35.

Ayars, James B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 21, 1800. He was the subject of early religious impressions, and was converted in 1816; and soon began to exercise himself in every possible Christian enterprise, exhorting, preaching, and visiting. In 1822 he entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he served till his supernumeration, which relation he held during the last nine years of his life. He died March 9, 1873. Mr. Ayars was greatly devoted to the Church. Punctuality, zeal, faithfulness, and ardent piety characterized his life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 145.

Aybar, PEDRO XIMENES, a Spanish painter, lived at Calatayud near the close of the 17th century. He had for his master Francisco Ximenes of Tarragona, whose style he adopted. He executed in 1682 for the collegiate Church of Santa Maria at Calatayud three paintings: The Holy Family;—The Epiphany;—The Nativity. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Aybert, ST., a recluse priest of the Order of St. Benedict in Hainault, was born about 1060 at Espain, in Flanders. He lived for many years with another priest in a secluded cell, where they observed the strictest discipline. He went to Rome on foot, and after his return entered the Abbey of Crespin in Hainault, where he continued twenty-five years. The twenty-five last years of his life he spent in a cell in the midst of a barren desert, and he died on Easter-day, 1140. He is mentioned in the martyrologies on April 7. See Baillet, April 7.

Aydelotte, BENJAMIN P., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1795. His earlier years were spent in the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and though after entering the Presbyterian Church he did not sustain the relation of pastor, yet he supplied several pulpits with great acceptability and usefulness. The greater part of his life was employed in teaching the classics in the schools of Cincinnati. He was possessed of great amiability, and an enlarged benevolence which prompted him to engage in every philanthropic enterprise. He was greatly esteemed by all for his many good qualities. He died in Cincinnati, Sept. 10, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Ayenar, in Hindû mythology, was the son of Siva and of Vishnu, the latter of whom was the mother, having taken the form of the nymph Møyeni. He was worshipped in small temples as protector. Goats and cocks were sacrificed to him, also horses made of clay.

Ayer, Francis C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Cornish, Me., Nov. 1, 1813. He was converted in 1843, received license to exhort in 1846, and in 1849 joined the Maine Conference. He died at Bowdoinham, Me., May 10, 1872. Mr. Ayer was eminently practical, laborious, affable, plain, and pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 73.

Ayer, John S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Freedom, Me., in 1795. He experienced conversion at the age of twelve, and in 1818 joined the Maine Conference. In 1826 he located and engaged in business. In 1867 he re-entered the Conference and was put on the supernumerary list, which relation he sustained until his decease, Jan. 18, 1876. Mr. Ayer was kind, persuasive, fluent, and eminently pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 90.

Ayer, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born at Stonington, Conn., May 19, 1793. He graduated at Brown University in 1823, and having studied theology with Rev. Timothy Tuttle of Ledyard, Conn., he was ordained at North Stonington in 1825, where he was acting pastor until 1837. In that year he was installed pastor at Hanover, where he remained eleven years. In 1851 he became pastor at South Killingly, having labored there two years previously as stated supply, and continued in charge until 1856. The following year found him installed at East Lyme. Subsequently he was acting pastor at Sterling for two years, when he became the regular minister, in 1870. On his eighty-second birthday he resigned, and thus closed a long and useful ministerial career. He died at Somerville, Conn., Dec. 26, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 419; 1877, p. 812.

Ayers, Alexander, a Baptist minister, was born in Cortland County, N. Y., in 1813. He was converted in 1830, and united with the Free Communion Church in Virgil, N. Y. In 1833 he was licensed, and was ordained in 1838 in Chenango County, where he spent most of his time preaching in different churches until the spring of 1853, when he removed to Illinois. A brief illness closed his life at his residence in Sherman, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Nov. 17, 1874. He was a faithful pastor and a man of prayer. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1856, p. 91. (J. C. S.)

Ayesha was the favorite wife of Mohammed, and was born at Medina in 611. She was the daughter of Abu-Bekhr, and was betrothed to the prophet at the age of nine years. The twenty-fourth chapter of the Koran was written by the prophet to silence all those who doubted Ayesha's purity. She survived her husband forty-six years, and took an active part in the contest against Ali, who took her prisoner, but suffered her to go unharmed. Her opinion was sought sometimes on difficult points in the Koran, and had the force of law with many of the Sunnites. She died at Medina about 678. See ALI; KORAN; MOHAMMED.

Aygler, Bernard. See AIGLER, BERNARD.

Aygnan, in the mythology of the South American natives, is the originator of all kinds of diseases and other evils. He is greatly feared, and small things are offered to him, which are thrown into flowing water. The vicious and cowards go to him after death to be tortured by him in the most outrageous manner.

Aygnani, Michael. See ANGRIANI.

Ayliff, John, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born in London. He emigrated to South Africa in 1820; was admitted as a probationer for the ministry in 1827; was the first missionary appointed to the Fingoe tribes; was manager of the large and important Industrial-school at Heald Town; visited England in 1860; was soon disabled by disease, and died at Fauresmith, Orange Free State, May 17, 1862, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Ayliff was faithful to his trust, enduring privation and encountering danger in his earnest and faithful service.

Ayliffe, Richard, an English Congregational minister, was born at Basingstoke, Hants, June 2, 1790. He was converted in his twelfth year, and in his fifteenth was apprenticed to an ironmonger in the town of Buckingham. He joined the Congregational Church in his eighteenth year. At the close of his apprenticeship, he entered Dr. Bogue's academy or seminary at Gosport. "About the termination of his studies, the Lady Barham was desirous of introducing an evangelical ministry into the borough of Stockbridge, Hants. By the advice of his venerated tutor, Mr. Ayliffe, in 1814, undertook the commencement of the work, in which he continued till his death." This was really a mission work, and every kind of opposition was manifest. He had no chapel, and service was conducted in a hired room, often amid much confusion and noise; personal violence was threatened against the young pastor and all who gave heed to his teachings. By his efforts, however, aided by the liberality of the lady already alluded to, a chapel was erected in 1817, and endowed for the Protestant Congregational Dissenters. From 1814 to 1854 he labored here unobtrusively and patiently, sowing the seeds of everlasting life, "warning every man, teaching every man;" and his labors were not without success, for what was, at the commencement of his work, a barren wilderness, showed at the close some resemblance to a garden adorned with fruits and flowers. He was of retiring habits, and his name was very seldom seen or his person known. After forty years of service, he died in peace, March 24, 1854. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1855, p. 2034.

Aylworth, Reuben A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Half Moon, N. Y., April 13, 1792. He was converted in 1810, and was admitted into the New York Conference in 1817; was transferred to the Genesee; located in 1825; admitted into the Erie Conference in 1836; superannuated in 1844; and died at Hampden, O., Sept. 3, 1880. He was slight and weak physically; gentle, affable, winning, a most polished Christian gentleman; faithful and holy. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 243.

Aymar. See ADEMAR.

Aymarás are the earliest known inhabitants of the mountain valleys of South-eastern Peru and North-western Bolivia, now to be found principally in the Peruvian province of Puno and the Bolivian provinces of La Paz and Oruro. Though distinct in language, they physically resemble the Indians of the great Quichuan or Inca family, who were indebted to them for a part of their religious rites and the knowledge of the arts. They worked skillfully in gold and silver, tilled the ground, built splendid edifices ornamented with sculpture and painting, and were somewhat versed in astronomy. Their poetry and religion were spiritualistic, their priests were bound to celibacy, and the dead were held in religious veneration. They have embraced Christianity, and are zealous observers of all the rites of the Roman Catholic faith, introducing, however, some relics of paganism. The Aymarás probably number 200,000 at the present day. In early times they worshipped the sun, and believed the present luminary to be the fifth, and that, after a long period of darkness, it emerged from the sacred island in Lake Titicaca. Their tombs, sometimes large square buildings with a single opening through which the body was introduced, contained twelve bodies placed feet to feet around a cavity, sitting in their clothes. Some of these tombs are small houses of sunburnt bricks; others are square towers of several stories, containing each a body; but whatever be the size, they are always joined in groups, with opening facing the east.

Ayre, Rishworth J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Standish, Me., Nov. 15, 1803. He embraced religion in his fourteenth year, and in 1826 entered the Maine Conference. During the following forty-eight years of his itinerancy, eighteen were effective, nine supernumerary, and twenty-one superannuated. He died Jan. 17, 1874. Mr. Ayre was characterized by sound judgment, fluency, energy, and deep piety. Overwork disabled him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 76.

Ayre, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Petrockstow, Devonshire, in 1800. He was brought up in the Church of England, but afterwards adopted the principles of Congregationalism. He studied with a view to the ministry at Homerton College, but because of ill-health he did not complete his course. Mr. Ayre's first charge was in Northamptonshire; from there he removed to Ullesthorpe, Leicestershire, and then to Long Itchington; from thence to Southam, and finally to Morpeth, where he was pastor for twenty-five years, residing there until his death, April 30, 1877. His services as preacher were in frequent request. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 304.

Ayres, Enos, a Presbyterian minister, was ordained by the New York Presbytery, before May, 1750, as the minister of Blooming Grove, Orange Co. He graduated at Nassau Hall in 1748, and his name stands first on the roll of alumni. He died in 1765. See Webster, Hist. of Presb. Church in America (1857); Alexander, Princeton College in the Eighteenth Century.

Ayres, Hiram M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pennsylvania in 1840. He experienced religion at the age of seventeen; graduated at the Illinois Wesleyan University in 1863, and in the same year united with the Central Illinois Conference. He died Aug. 4, 1870. Mr. Ayres was an earnest, faithful, successful preacher and pastor. His life was a beautiful representation of the highest development of the Christian graces. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 217.

Ayres, Robert G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Stark County, O., in 1837. In 1858 he entered the Southern Illinois Conference, but in 1861 failing health obliged him to retire from active service. He died Aug. 21, 1862. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 211.

Ayres, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1781. He was ordained pastor of the Church at Keynstram, near Bristol, in the year 1813, and remained there forty years. He died Nov. 25, 1853. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1854, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Azabe-Kaberi is, according to the Koran, a punishment of the wicked inflicted in the grave. A frightful monster, with whom they must endure companionship, administers constant floggings until the day of resurrection, when the evil-doers are instantly cast into hell.

Azad, according to the religious doctrine of the Orientals, is the first production or creation of the supreme being, the primary essence of reason, which is entirely light; the second production, the spirit, coming out of the former.

Azadanes and Azades, Christian martyrs, a deacon and a eunuch, were killed in Persia under Sapor II about A.D. 341. The latter was a favorite of the king, and was put to death instantly upon his own mere profession of Christianity, to the king's great grief.

Azambuja, don JOÃO ESTEVES DE, a Portuguese prelate, was born in the 14th century in the small borough from which he took his name. He belonged to an ancient family, and first pursued a course of arms, which he abandoned in order to devote himself to study and to enter the order. The founder of the order of Avis esteemed him highly; so much so that, after he had passed the various degrees of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, he was raised, in 1402, to the archbishopric of Lisbon. In 1409 he was sent to the Council of Pisa, and left Italy in order to visit Jerusalem. On his return to Portugal, already at an advanced age, he was, in 1411, made cardinal priest by Gregory XII with the title of St. Peter ad Vincula. Wishing to be consecrated by the pope himself, he went to Rome, but as he was about to return to Lisbon fell ill at Bourges, where he died, Jan. 23, 1415. His body was borne to the convent of the Dominicans which he had founded in 1392. He wrote Statutes of the Monastery of St. Saviour. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azariah DE ROSSI. See ROSSI.

Azariel BEN-MENACHEM, a Spanish rabbi, was born at Valladolid about 1160. He distinguished himself as a philosopher, Cabalist, Talmudist, and commentator, as his works indicate. He was a pupil of Isaac the Blind, who is regarded as the originator of the Cabala, and he was master of the celebrated R. Moses Nachmanides, who was also a distinguished pillar of Cabalism. Azariel died in 1238. He wrote A Commentary on the Ten Sephiroth by Way of Questions and Answers (פירוש עשר הספירות). This commentary was first known through the Cabalistic works of Meir Ibn-Gabai entitled דרך האמונה, The Path of Faith (Padua, 1563), and זכרת הקדש, The Service of Holiness, also called מראות אלהים, The Vision of God (Mantua, 1545; Venice, 1567; Cracow, 1578). It was published in Gabriel Warschauer's work entitled A Volume of Cabalistic Treatises (ספר לקישים בקבלה) (Warsaw, 1798), and recently at Berlin (1850). A lucid analysis of Azariel's Cabalistic philosophy is given by Jellinek, in his Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kabbalah (Leipzig, 1852), which is translated by Ginsburg in his Kabbalah (p. 95 sq.), and by Dr. Goldammer in the Israélite (Cincinnati, Feb. 7 and 14, 1873). See also Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, vii, 69-75; Jost, Gesch. d. Judenth. u. s. Sekten, iii, 71. (B. P.)

Azazel, in Mohammedan superstition, are powerful spirits standing next to the throne of the Supreme God.

Azeaz, in Oriental tradition, was an idol which Abraham's father, Terah, worshipped. Because Abraham broke this and other idols he was accused by his father, before the prince Nimrod, of blasphemy and of abuse of idols, and thrown into a fiery furnace; but his body was not consumed.

Azekah. Dr. Tristram (Bible Places, p. 44) thinks this is "probably the modern Deir el-Ashek," which the Ordnance Map lays down as Deir el-Ashek, a deserted locality on a slight eminence a mile and a quarter south-west of Wady Surâr, and seven miles north-west of Shuweikeh (Socoh), containing the remains of a church and traces of other ruins; but, aside from the tolerable agreement in name, there is little to commend this identification.

Azem. Of this place Dr. Tristram thinks (Bible Places, p. 28) a trace remains in the name of the Azazimeh Arabs who occupy the region in question. See LIM.

Azevedo, Ignazio de, a Portuguese ecclesiastic, was born at Oporto in 1527 of an illustrious family. He entered the Society of Jesuits as a novice at Coimbra in 1548, and some time after received holy orders and was named rector of the College of St. Antony at Lisbon by St. Ignatius. Dom Bartholomeo dos Martyres, the celebrated archbishop of Braga, called him from his studies at Lisbon to associate him with himself in his diocesan visitations; and in 1560 a Jesuits' college was established at Braga, of which Azevedo was made superior. In 1565 he made profession of the four vows, after which he was employed for three years, with the authority of visitor, in Brazil. He returned to Europe, visited Rome, and in 1570 obtained permission to return to Brazil with a large company of missionaries; but the ship which conveyed him was taken by Soria, the vice-admiral of the queen of Navarre, who murdered the missionary and his thirty-nine companions, July 15, 1570. The Roman Church, by a papal bull dated 1742, honors them as martyrs. In 1745 G. F. de Beauvais, a Jesuit, published a Life of the Venerable Ignatius.

Azevedo, João, a Portuguese theologian, was born at Santarem, Jan. 27, 1665. He studied theology, and entered the Order of the Hermits at St. Augustine. He died at Lisbon, June 16, 1746. He wrote, Tribunal Theologicum et Juridicum contra Subdolos Confessarios in Sacramento Penitentiae ad Venerem Sollicitantes (Lisbon, 1726).

There was another Portuguese theologian of the same name, a canon and inquisitor, who was born at Lisbon about 1625, and died Nov. 19, 1677. He was doctor of civil law, and left several minor works on the subject, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azevedo, Luiz de, a Portuguese missionary, was born in 1573 at Chaves, upon the frontier of Galicia. At the age of sixteen he entered the Order of Jesuits, and was sent to Goa to complete his studies. He was then appointed master of novices and rector at Tana. About 1604 he started for Abyssinia in company with Lorenzo Romano, and there founded a school and converted to Christianity the king of the country, Seltame. He was perfectly acquainted with the different dialects of Abyssinia, particularly the Amharic. He died Feb. 22, 1634. Among other religious works, he made a translation of the New Test. into Amharic, a catechism in the same dialect, and a grammar in Amharic and Latin.

There were two others of the same name as the above—a Spanish monk of the Order of St. Augustine, a native of Medina Campo, who died in 1600, and who published Discursos Morales en las Fiestas de Nuestra Señora (Valladolid, 1600); and a Portuguese Dominican who published a treatise on the education of children. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azevedo, Silvestre de, a Portuguese Dominican, was sent to Malacca, and entered the kingdom of Cambay about 1580, when he softened the heart of the reigning prince and induced him to grant him permission to preach the Gospel. He converted many, and died in 1587. It is said that the king before permitting him to preach required of him a Treatise on the Mysteries of the Faith in the language of Cambay, which he executed in 1585; but the work is unknown in Europe. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azevedo-Coutinho, JOSE JOAQUIM DA CUNHA, a Portuguese bishop, the last inquisitor-general of Portugal and Brazil, was born in the district of Campos dos Goitacazes, Brazil, Sept. 8, 1742. He commenced his studies at Rio de Janeiro, and went to Coimbra to finish them. He entered the order, and was almost immediately intrusted with many important affairs. In 1791 he took part in the great question of political economy, and defended before the government the interests of Brazil. This was the epoch of the publication of his excellent work entitled Ensaio Economico sobre o Comercio de Portugal e suas Colonias. In 1794 he was appointed bishop of Pernambuco, and four years later published at London, Analyse sur la Justice du Commerce du Rachat des Esclaves de la Côte d'Afrique, a response to the motion brought forward in the English Parliament to abolish slavery. He was chosen bishop of Elvas, and in 1818 of Beja, and in the same year received the title of inquisitor-general. He was appointed to represent the interests of the capital before the Cortes, which he did with zeal and ability. This was his last work. He died Sept. 12, 1821. He wrote Memoria sobre a Conquista do Rio de Janeiro por Duque Tronin em 1711, which was first published in 1816 in Mnemosine Lusitana, and again in 1819 in a work published at London by Thompson. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Aziluth, in Cabalistic mythology, is the general name of the ten personal emanations of the Supreme Being, of which the Sephiroth formed the first triad—viz. the Lord of Spirits, Lord of the Eldest One, and the Lord of the Other Powers.

Azizus, in Syrian mythology. At Edessa, in Syria, the god of the sun was worshipped with Monimus (Mercury) and Azizus (Mars) as deities connected with him. By Monimus change of the sun seems to be designated, and by Azizus the sun's strength.

Azrael, according to the Talmud, is the angel of death. Because he did not heed the request of the earth not to carry dust to heaven, out of which human beings might be made who would afterwards be cursed, God gave him the office of angel of death. The Arabians call him Abu-Jahja; the Parsees, Mordad.

Azran, in Oriental tradition, was the daughter of Adam and the bride of Abel. Cain loved her, and therefore slew Abel.

Azre-kah is the name of a sect which arose in the East headed by Nafê ben-Azrach. They refused to acknowledge any superior power on earth, whether temporal or spiritual. They became a powerful body under the reign of the caliphs, declared themselves the sworn enemies of the Omniades, but were at length overpowered and dispersed.

Azȳmus (from ἀζυμος, unleavened), fully, panis azymus, i. e. unleavened bread. The practice of the Latin Church of consecrating with unleavened bread was opposed by that of the Greek Church, which has always maintained the use of leavened bread in the holy mysteries. The chief reasons urged in support of this opinion against the schoolmen are the following:

1. That the holy eucharist was originally consecrated from the oblations of the people, which, past all doubt, consisted of common bread and wine, and what remained was consumed by the priests, widows, and others.
2. Epiphanius notices it as a rite peculiar to the Ebionites that they consecrated with unleavened bread and water only.
3. That the ancients say plainly that the bread used was common bread, "panis ustatus." See Ambrose, De Sacr. iv, 4.
4. The sixth canon of the Council of Toledo, A.D. 693, which condemns the practice of some priests who contented themselves with using common bread ("de panibus suis uibus preparatis . . . auferant") cut into a round form, and orders that the bread used at the altar shall be made on purpose (Labbe, vi, 1327).
5. The tenth canon of Chalchythe, A.D. 785, which directs that "bread be offered by the faithful, and not crusts," "non crusta" (Johnson, Eccles. Canons, vol. 1), where cardinal Bona thinks that the "crusta" implied unleavened bread.
6. The silence of the ancients as to the use of unleavened bread, whereas they do often speak of leavened bread.
7. The silence of Photius, who, when enumerating every possible cause of complaint against the Latins, omits all notice of their use of unleavened bread.
8. The fact that no law on the subject of the use of unleavened bread before the time of Photius is known.

See Bingham, Orig. Eccl. XV, ii, 5; Martène, De Ant. Eccl. Rit. I, iii, 7; Suicer, Theaurus, p. 106; Thomas-sin, Ant. et Nouv. Discip. pt. iii, lib. i, c. 14, No. 3. See AZYMITES; BREAD; ELEMENTS.

Azzi, ORAZIO DEGLI, an Italian theologian, a native of Parma, lived at the close of the 17th and the commencement of the 18th century. He entered the Order of Minorites, in which he was known by the name of Orazio di Parma. He wrote, Pozzo Profondo Scoperto alla Cattolica Greggia (Venice, 1707):—Riflessioni sopra la Genesi (ibid. 1710, 1716):—Esposizioni Letterali e Morali sopra la Scrittura (ibid. 1736-46). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azzoguidi, Antonio Maria, an Italian theologian, son of Valerius Felix, was born at Bologna in 1697. He entered the Order of St. Francis, and published the sermons of St. Anthony of Padua, with notes and preface (Padua, 1757). He died in 1770. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azzoguidi, Pietro, an Italian theologian, canon of San Petronio at Bologna, wrote, in 1475, the Life of St. Catherine of Bologna. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azzolini, Decio (surnamed the younger), an Italian prelate, was born at Fermo, in the States of the Church, in 1623. He became cardinal in 1664, and died at Rome in 1689. He wrote Eminentissimi Cardinalis Azzolini Aphorismi Politici, translated into Latin by Henning (Osnaburg, 1691). We find in Muratori and Crescimbeni poems by Azzolini. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Azzolini (or Mazzolini), Giovanni Bernardino, a Neapolitan painter, flourished about 1510. In Genoa, where he resided, there are several of his works in the different churches. In the Church of San Giuseppe are two pictures by him representing the Annunciation and the Martyrdom of St. Apollonia, which are very much praised by Soprani. He excelled in wax-work. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

B.

Ba (the soul), in Egyptian mythology, was one of the five component parts of the human being. See AKH, KHA, KHABA, etc. It was represented as a human-headed bird, often with a cross in its claws.

Baader, Johann Michael, a German painter, was born in 1736. He studied at Paris in 1759, and in 1788 went to Eichstadt, his native city, to serve as painter to the bishop of that place. He painted pictures of home life and also historical subjects, among others The Daughter of Jephthah. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baader, Tobias, a Bavarian sculptor, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He executed several works for the churches and convents of his native country. Chief among them we notice, Christ on the Cross, with his Mother:—The Virgin with the Infant Jesus:—and a Madonna, designed for the Church of the Hospital of Munich, which sealed the reputation of this artist. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baal of Simeon (1 Chron. iv, 33) is regarded by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work, ii, 334) as the present Umm Baghleh, but this location is far from the probable sites of the associated places. Conder (ibid.) identifies it with Baalah of Simeon (Josh. xv, 29).

Baal Akedah. See ARAMA, ISAAC.

Baal-Berith is a person who, among modern Jews, acts as joint master of ceremonies along with the operator in the rite of circumcision (q. v.). He is to hold the child on his knees while the circumciser is performing the operation. As a preparation for his duty he must wash his whole person.

Baal-hamon. Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 335) that this is the modern Belameh; but this seems to be the site assigned to Ibleam (q. v.). See also BELMEN.

Baal-tamar. Lieut. Conder proposes (Tent Work, ii, 335) for this the present Atara, but the names correspond but slightly.

Baalath (Josh. xix, 44; Josephus, Ant. viii, 6, 1) is regarded by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work, ii, 334) as identical with the present ruins at the village of Belain, seven miles east of Jimzu, and ten west of Beitin, a position to which Tristram accedes (Bible Places, p. 51), although he elsewhere (ibid. p. 198) adopts Van de Velde's location at Deir Balut.

Baalath-beer (Bealoth or Ramath-negeb). "From the incidental notices and the names we gather that it was a watering-place of importance (Beer-Baal) and had artificial tanks; that it was on a commanding height (Ramath); that it was on the frontier, and we might expect traces of fortification to remain. All these conditions are fulfilled in Kurnab, south-west of Dhullam, where alone for many miles water is always found in plenty, and where the ravine is crossed by a strong dam to retain it. The walls of a fortified town are yet clearly to be traced, with extensive ruins, and it is at the head of the most frequented pass into Palestine from the south-east" (Tristram, Bible Places, p. 17).

Baarsdorp (or Baersdorp), MARINUS KORNELIUS, a priest of the Netherlands, son of Cornelius, a physician and diplomatist, lived in the early half of the 16th century. He embraced the ecclesiastical state, made a pilgrimage, and on his return became director of the hospital at Putteryken, founded in 1525. He left all his possessions to this hospital for the maintenance of poor children, who were to be educated and taken care of until the age of nine years. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baau, according to the cosmogony of the Phœnicians, is the original night, the wife of the spirit Kolpia, and by him mother of Æon, the first-born of time, out of whom Genos and Geneia sprang.

Baaz, JOHN, a Swedish theologian who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote, Inventarium Ecclesiæ Sueo-Gothorum (Linköping, 1642):—Harmonia Evangelica. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bab, a word signifying father, and used by the ancient Persian magi to denote fire, which they considered the father and first principle of all things, as taught by Zoroaster (q. v.).

Bab, JOHN, an Armenian theologian, studied theology and history at the monastery of Meirawank in Armenia, and gained great renown for his learning. He died near the close of the 9th century, and left in manuscript, a Commentary on the Four Gospels:—Explanation of the Epistle to the Romans:—Chronology of Ecclesiastical History, a controversy in favor of the Armenian rites. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baba, the same as Papa (q. v.).

Baba, a Turkish impostor who lived in the early half of the 13th century, appeared in the city of Amasia in 1240, and required his disciples to adopt as their profession of faith that there existed one God, and that Baba was his envoy. The Mohammedans attempted to arrest Baba, but he escaped them, and collected an army with which he sustained several engagements against them; but finally, by the aid of the Franks, the Mussulmans drove him out and dispersed his sect. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baba, GABRIEL, an Italian abbot and theologian, was a native of Venice and lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He became secretary of cardinal Bichi, and wrote, Principi e Documenti della Vita Cristiana, Tradotti del Latino del Card. Giov. Bona (Rome, 1676, 1677):—Discorso sopra l'Esaltazione di Papa Alessandro VIII (ibid. 1689). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baba Lalis is a Hindû sect sometimes included among the Vaishnava (q. v.) sects. In reality, however, they adore but one god, dispensing with all forms of worship, and directing their devotions by rules and objects derived from a medley of Vedanta and Sufi tenets.

Babæus was a leading member of the Nestorian Church planted by Barsumas in Persia, who, though originally a layman, and as such married, succeeded Acacius as archbishop or patriarch of Seleucia, after a two years' vacancy of the see, in the year 496. Babæus thus became the head of the Persian Church, in which capacity he summoned a synod by which the Nestorian body was completely organized. Among the canons passed by this synod was one granting permission to bishops or presbyters to marry once. See Assemani, Bibl. Orient. III, ii, 79, 381, 429; Neander, Church History (English translation), iv, 285.

Babbitt, Pierre Teller, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in New York city, Feb. 12, 1811. He graduated at Yale College in 1831; the three years following he devoted to teaching, and then entered the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York city, where he graduated in 1836. He was ordained deacon in the same year, and was advanced to the priesthood in 1837. He officiated for a short time in 1836 in St. Paul's Church, Woodbury, Conn., and thence removed to Boonville, Mo., where he did frontier work as a minister and teacher until 1838, when he accepted the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Erie, Pa. A year or two later he went to Hudson, N. Y., as rector of Christ Church, but contracting the asthma, he was compelled to remove to a milder climate. He went to South Carolina and took charge of the parochial school in Charleston, performing missionary work also. In 1848 he returned to his old parish at Woodbury, but in 1850 removed to North Carolina to take charge of a school near Raleigh. After a brief service there, he went to Tallahassee, Fla., as assistant minister of St. John's Church, but in 1853 came North again, and accepted the rectorship of Grace Church, South Middleton, N. Y. In 1862 he removed to St. Mark's Church, Newark, N. Y., and in October, 1867, became head-master of Doolittle Institute, Wethersfield Springs, N. Y. In 1869 he became rector of the Episcopal Church at Bainbridge, Ga., and continued there till his death, April 1, 1881. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1881.

Babbitt, Amzi B., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in New Jersey. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1816, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1821. He served for a time in the Presbyterian Church in Pequea, Pa., and in the Second Reformed (Dutch) Church of Philadelphia (1834-35), also in the Presbyterian Church at Salisbury, Pa. He died in 1846. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church of America (3d ed.), p. 168.

Babbitt, Carlisle, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Vermont, March 19, 1808. In 1831 he entered the itinerant ranks of the Kentucky Conference. He located and moved to Illinois in 1835, and in 1857 united with the Southern Illinois Conference, in which he labored with anxious zeal and fidelity until his decease, June 26, 1864. Mr. Babbitt was a devoted father and husband and an excellent minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 206.

Babcock, Cyrus Giles, a Baptist minister, graduated at Brown University in 1816, and was licensed to preach in 1817. He was called to the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Bedford, Mass., but he declined the call because of ill-health. He died in March, 1817. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 387.

Babcock, E. C., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of New York, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, was engaged for a number of years as missionary in Greenpoint, N. Y., until about 1856, when he ceased to perform regular ministerial duty. He died about 1859. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1860, p. 93.

Babcock, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Washington County, N. Y., in March, 1800. He experienced religion in his sixteenth year, but lost it again by yielding to worldly fascinations; was reconverted in 1823; received license to preach in 1825, and was admitted into the Pittsburgh Conference. In 1828 his health so failed that he was obliged to become superannuated, and he died Feb. 8, 1829. Mr. Babcock was diligent, pious, and useful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1831, p. 114.

Babcock, Rufus, D.D., an eminent Baptist minister, was born at Colebrook, Conn., Sept. 18, 1798. He graduated at Brown University in the class of 1821, and soon after was appointed tutor in Columbian College, Washington, D. C. During his connection with the college, he pursued his theological studies under the direction of the president, Rev. Dr. Staughton. He was ordained in 1823 as pastor of the Baptist Church in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he remained four years, and then removed to Salem, Mass., to take charge of the First Baptist Church in that place as associate pastor with the Rev. Lucius Boker, D.D., whom he succeeded on his retirement to accept the office of corresponding secretary of the Baptist General Convention. He was chosen president of Waterville College in 1833, and occupied that position for nearly four years, when he returned to the active ministry, and was pastor in Philadelphia and in New Bedford, Mass.; a second time in Poughkeepsie, and in Paterson, N. J., when he retired from the pastorate and performed service in the interests of some of the leading benevolent organizations of his denomination and of the American Sunday-school Union. He died in Salem, Mass., May 4, 1875. Dr. Babcock contributed much with his pen to various magazines and religious newspapers, and published several works, among which were the following: Claims of Educational Societies (1829);—Making Light of Christ (1830);—Memoir of Andrew Fuller (ed.);—Sketches of George Leonard, Abraham Booth, and Isaac Backus (1832);—History of Waterville College (1836);—Tales of Truth for the Young (1837);—Memoir of John Mason Peck (1858);—The Emigrant's Mother (1859). See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 387. (J. C. S.)

Babcock, Samuel B., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Massachusetts, was rector in St. Paul's Parish, Dedham, Mass., for many years, covering nearly the whole of his ministerial life. He died Oct. 25, 1873. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 139.

Babcock, Samuel E., a Methodist Episcopal minister, who in the early days of Methodism entered the itinerancy within the bounds of the Pittsburgh Conference, and did valiant service until his death, in 1864 or 1865. Mr. Babcock was characterized as a preacher by earnestness and pathos, and his efforts were blessed with many extensive revivals. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 28.

Babek was the head of a heretical sect among the Mohammedans which arose in the beginning of the second century of the Hegira. He made an open profession of impiety, and embraced no religion or sect then known in Asia. He was called the founder of the mercy religion. His practices and teachings were gross and licentious to the last degree.

Babel, in the book of Baruch of the Gnostic Justin, is the name of the first of the twelve maternal angels born to Elohim and Edem (Hippolytus, Hæc. xxvi, 151). She is identical with Aphrodite, and is enjoined by her mother to cause adulteries and desertions among men in revenge for the desertion of Edem by Elohim. When Hercules is sent by Elohim to overcome the maternal angels, Babel, now identical with Omphale, beguiles and enfeebles him. She may possibly be the Baalti, or female Baal, of various Shemitic nations; but it is better, on the whole, to take Babel as a form of Bar-belo.

Babenstuber, LUDWIG, a German philosopher, was born at Leiningen, Bavaria, in 1660. In 1682 he joined the Order of the Benedictines, and acted for a number of years as tutor at the Salzburg University. In 1716 he retired to his monastery in Ettal, and died there in 1726. He published, Problemata et Theoremata Philosophica (Salzburg, 1689):—Questiones Philosophicæ (ibid. 1692):—Questiones Metaphysicæ (ibid. 1695):—Regula Morum seu Dictamen Conscientiæ (ibid. 1697):—Tractatus de Jure et Justitiâ (ibid. 1699):—Deus Absconditus in Sacramento Altaris (ibid. 1700):—De Statu Parvulorum sine Baptismo Morientium (ibid. eod.):—Philosophia Thomistica Salisburgensis (Augsburg, 1706, 1724):—Deus Trinus (Salzburg, 1705):—Deus Unus (ibid. 1706):—Peccatum Originale (ibid. 1709), etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baber, JAMES, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Hanover County, Va., July 25, 1794. He was educated at Hampden Sidney College, Va., and spent three years at the Associate Reformed Seminary, N. Y. In 1819 he entered Princeton Theological Seminary, where he spent two years. He was licensed as a minister in 1821, and his ministry extended over a large part of the states of Maryland and Virginia. He died Aug. 19, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1865, p. 73.

Babeur (or Baburen), DIRK, a Dutch painter, was born in 1570. His master was Peter Neefs, and he excelled as a representer of the interior of churches. In the Church of San Pietro in Montorio at Rome may be seen a Descent of Christ into the Tomb executed by him. He died in 1624. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Babi, in Egyptian mythology, was the surname of the evil god Typhon, who murdered the good Osiris.

Babia, in Syrian mythology, was the goddess of childhood, the protecting genius of the newly born children among the inhabitants of Damascus.

Babilos was a heathen deity of the ancient Poles. The discovery of the training of bees was attributed to this deity, whose wooden statue was often found near bee-hives.

Babin, FRANÇOIS, a French theologian, was born at Angers, Dec. 6, 1651. He was canon, grand-vicar, and dean of the Faculty of Theology of Angers, where he died, Dec. 19, 1734. He edited the first eighteen volumes of Conférences du Diocèse d'Angers, a highly esteemed and widely circulated work. His style was precise, clear, and methodical. He was the author of a Journal, or Relation Fidèle de Tout ce qui s'est Passé dans l'Université d'Angers au sujet de la Philosophie de Descartes (1679). See Hocfer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Babolenus (Babolein), Sr., was a French monk, of whose life very little is known. He is supposed to have been born in Burgundy—as was also St. Babolenus, or Bobolenus, abbot of Bobbio—and, like him, was brought up, it is probable, in the monastery of Luxeuil, either under St. Columbanus or his successor, Eustasius. When Blidegesilus, archdeacon of Paris, founded the monastery of Saint-Maur-des-Fosses in 638, he requested that the best monk of the monastery of Luxeuil should be appointed abbot; whereupon St. Walbertus, who had succeeded Eustasius, sent Babolenus. He died in 660 or 670, and his festival is marked in the martyrologies on June 26. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Babon (Bavon, or Bonnon), abbot of Corbie, or Corvey, in Westphalia, lived about the end of the 9th century, and wrote the History of his Times.

Babylas, Sr. In addition to the well-known martyr-bishop of Antioch, another of the same name is said to have been martyred, with eighty-four of his scholars, at Nicomedia, under Maximian, about A.D. 310. Still another is commemorated in Bede's Martyrology on June 11.

Babylone, FRANÇOIS DE, a French engraver, flourished about 1550. He has sometimes been called the "Master of the Caduceus," from the wand which he adopted as a badge. The following are a few of his religious prints: The Virgin Mary and Infant Resting on the Stump of a Tree:—St. Joseph Resting his Head on his Hand. Recent discoveries have shown that the real name of this artist is Jacques de Barbary. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Babylonia. The recent explorations into the monuments of this country have led to many new conclusions respecting the early ethnic relations of the Babylonians. These we give in the résumé of one of the most accepted exponents (Prof. Sayce, in the last edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica), premising, however, that we do not fully acquiesce in some of them, especially the chronology, and that we do not regard the geographical identifications as fully determined.

"Geographically, as well as ethnologically and historically, the whole district enclosed between the two great rivers of Western Asia, the Tigris and Euphrates, forms but one country. The writers of antiquity clearly recognised this fact, speaking of the whole under the general name of Assyria, though Babylonia, as will be seen, would have been a more accurate designation. It naturally falls into two divisions, the northern being more or less mountainous, while the southern is flat and marshy; and the near approach of the two rivers to one another at a spot where the undulating plateau of the north sinks suddenly into the Babylonian alluvium tends still more completely to separate them. In the earliest times of which we have any record, the northern portion was comprehended under the vague title of Gutium (the Goyim of Gen. xiv, 1), which stretched from the Euphrates on the west to the mountains of Media on the east; but it was definitely marked off as Assyria after the rise of that monarchy in the 16th century B.C. Aram-Naharaim, or Mesopotamia, however, though claimed by the Assyrian kings, and from time to time overrun by them, did not form an integral part of the kingdom until the 9th century B.C.; while the region on the left bank of the Tigris, between that river and the Greater Zab, was not only included in Assyria, but contained the chief capitals of the empire. In this respect the monarchy of the Tigris resembled Chaldæa, where some of the most important cities were situated on the Arabian side of the Euphrates. The reason of this preference for the eastern bank of the Tigris was due to its abundant supply of water, whereas the great Mesopotamian plain on the western side had to depend upon the streams which flowed into the Euphrates. This vast flat, the modern El-Jezireh, is about two hundred and fifty miles in length, interrupted only by a single limestone range rising abruptly out of the plain and branching off from the Zagros mountains under the names of Sarazur, Hamrin, and Sinjar. The numerous remains of old habitations show how thickly this level tract must once have been peopled, though now for the most part a wilderness. North of the plateau rises a well-watered and undulating belt of country, into which run low ranges of limestone hills, sometimes arid, sometimes covered with dwarf-oak, and often shutting in between their northern and north-eastern flank and the main mountain line from which they detach themselves rich plains and fertile valleys. Behind them tower the massive ridges of the Niphates and Zagros ranges, where the Tigris and Euphrates take their rise, and which cut off Assyria from Armenia and Kurdistan. . . .

"In contrast with the arid plain of Mesopotamia stretched the rich alluvial plain of Chaldæa, formed by the deposits of the two great rivers by which it was enclosed. The soil was extremely fertile, and teemed with an industrious population. Eastward rose the mountains of Elam, southward were the sea-marshes and the ancient kingdom of Nituk or Diluvum (the modern Bender-Dilvum), while on the west the civilization of Babylonia encroached beyond the banks of the Euphrates upon the territory of the Semitic nomads (or Suti). Here stood Ur (now Mugheir), the earliest capital of the country; and Babylon, with its suburb Borsippa (Blrs Nimrud), as well as the two Sipparas (the Sepharvaim of Scripture, now Mosab), occupied both the Arabian and the Chaldean side of the river. The Araxes, or 'River of Babylon,' was conducted through a deep valley into the heart of Arabia, irrigating the land through which it passed; and to the south of it lay the great inland fresh-water sea of Nejeef, surrounded by red sandstone cliffs of considerable height, forty miles in length and thirty-five in breadth the widest part. Above and below this sea, from Borsippa to Kufa, extend the famous Chaldean marshes where Alexander was nearly lost (Arrian, Exp. Al. vii, 22; Strabo, xvi, 1, 12); but these depend upon the state of the Hindiyah canal, disappearing altogether when it is closed. Between the sea of Nejeef and Ur, but on the left side of the Euphrates, was Erech (now Warka), which with Niphur or Calneh (now Niffer), Surippac (Senkereh?), and Babylon (now Hillah), formed the tetrapolis of Sumir or Shinar. This north-western part of Chaldaea was also called Gan-dumyas or Gun-duni after the accession of the Cassite dynasty. South-eastern Chaldaea, on the other hand, was termed Accad, though the name came also to be applied to the whole of Babylonia. The Caldai, or Chaldeans, are first met with in the 9th century B.C. as a small tribe on the Persian Gulf, whence they slowly moved northwards, until, under Merodach-Baladan, they made themselves masters of Babylon, and henceforth formed so important an element in the population of the country as in later days to give their name to the whole of it. In the inscriptions, however, Chaldaea represents the marshes on the sea-coast, and Feredon was one of their ports. The whole territory was thickly studded with towns, but among all this vast number of great cities, to use the words of Herodotus, Cuthah, or Tigga-ba (now Ibrahim), Chilmad (Calwadah), Is (Hit), and Duraba (Akkerkuf) alone need be mentioned. The cultivation of the country was regulated by canals, the three chief of which carried off the waters of the Euphrates towards the Tigris above Babylon—the 'Royal River,' or Ar-Malch, entering the Tigris a little below Baghdad, the Nahr-Malcha running across to the site of Selencia, and the Nahr-Kutha passing through Ibrahim. The Pallacopas, on the other side of the Euphrates, supplied an immense lake in the neighborhood of Borsippa. So great was the fertility of the soil that, according to Herodotus (i, 193), grain commonly returned two hundredfold to the sower, and occasionally three hundredfold. Pliny, too (H. N. xviii, 17), says that wheat was cut twice and afterwards was good keep for sheep; and Berosus remarked that wheat, barley, sesame, ochrys, palms, apples, and many kinds of shelled fruit grew wild, as wheat still does in the neighborhood of Anah. A Persian poem celebrated the three hundred and sixty uses of the palm (Strabo, xvi, 1, 14); and Ammianus Marcellinus (xxiv, 3) states that from the point reached by Julian's army to the shores of the Persian Gulf was one continuous forest of verdure. . . .

"The primitive population of Babylonia, the builders of its cities, the originators of its culture, and the inventors of its hieroglyphics out of which it gradually developed, belonged to the Turanian or Ural-Altaic family. Their language was highly agglutinative, approaching the modern Mongolian idioms in the simplicity of its grammatical machinery, but otherwise more nearly related to the Ugro-Bulgarian division of the Finnic group; and its speakers were mentally in no way inferior to the Hungarians and Turks of the present day. The country was divided into two halves—the Sumir (Suagir, or Shinar) in the north-west and the Accad in the south-east corresponding most remarkably to the Suomi and Akkara-k, into which the Finnic race believed itself to have been separated in its first mountain home. Like Suomi, Sumir signified '(the people) of the rivers'; and just as Finnic tradition makes Kemi a district of the Suomi, so Came was another name of the Babylonian Sumir. The Accadai, or Accad, were 'the highlanders' who had descended from the mountainous region of Elam on the east, and it was to them that the Assyrians ascribed the origin of Chaldean civilization and writing. They were, at all events, the dominant people in Babylonia at the time to which our earliest contemporaneous records reach back, although the Sumir, or 'people of the home language,' as they are sometimes termed, were named first in the royal titles out of respect to their prior settlement in the country. . . .

"The supremacy of Ur had been disputed by its more ancient rival Erech, but had finally given way before the rise of Nisin, or Karrak, a city whose site is uncertain, and Karrak in its turn was succeeded by Larsa. Elamitish conquest seems to have had something to do with these transferences of the seat of power. In B.C. 2280—the date is fixed by an inscription of Assur-bani-pal's—Cudur-nakhundi, the Elamite, conquered Chaldaea at a time when princes with Semitic names appear to have been already reigning there; and Cudur-mabur not only overran 'the west,' or Palestine, but established a line of monarchs in Babylonia. His son and successor took an Accadian name and extended his sway over the whole country. Twice did the Elamitic tribe of Cassi, or Kosseans, furnish Chaldaea with a succession of kings. At a very early period we find one of these Kossean dynasties claiming homage from Syria, Gutium, and Northern Arabia, and rededicating the images of native Babylonian gods which had been carried away in war with great splendor and expense. The other Cassitic dynasty was founded by Khammuragas, who established his capital at Babylon, which henceforward continued to be the seat of empire in the south. The dynasty is probably to be identified with that called Arabian by Berosus, and it was during its domination that Semitic came gradually to supersede Accadian as the language of the country. Khammuragas himself assumed a Semitic name, and a Semitic inscription of his is now at the Louvre. A large number of canals were constructed during his reign, more especially the famous Nahr-Malcha, and an embankment built along the banks of the Tigris. The king's attention seems to have been turned to the subject of irrigation by a flood which overwhelmed the important city of Mullias. His first conquests were in the north of Babylonia, and from this base of operations he succeeded in overthrowing Naram-Sin (or Rim-Acu?) in the south and making himself master of the whole of Chaldaea. Naram-Sin and a queen had been the last representatives of a dynasty which had attained a high degree of glory both in arms and literature. Naram-Sin and his father, Sargon, had not only subdued the rival princes of Babylonia, but had successfully invaded Syria, Palestine, and even, as it would seem, Egypt. At Agane, a suburb of Sippara, Sargon had founded a library especially famous for its works on astrology and astronomy, copies of which were made in later times for the libraries of Assyria. Indeed, so prominent a place did Sargon take in the early history of Babylonia that his person became surrounded with an atmosphere of myth. Not only was he regarded as a sort of eponymous hero of literature, a Babylonian Solomon, whose title was 'the deviser of law and prosperity'; popular legends told of his mysterious birth—how, like Romulus and Arthur, he knew no father, but was born in secrecy and placed in an ark of reeds and bitumen, and left to the care of the river; how, moreover, this second Moses was carried by the stream to the dwelling of a ferryman, who reared him as his own son until at last the time came that his rank should be discovered, and Sargon, 'the constituted king'—for such is the meaning of his name—took his seat upon the throne of his ancestors. It was while the Cassitic sovereigns were reigning in the south, and probably in consequence of reverses that they had suffered at the hands of the Egyptians, who, under the monarchs of the 18th dynasty, were pushing eastward, that the kingdom of Assyria took its rise. Its princes soon began to treat with their southern neighbors on equal terms; the boundaries of the two kingdoms were settled, and intermarriages between the royal families took place, which led more than once to an interference on the part of the Assyrians in the affairs of Babylonia. Finally, in the 14th century B.C. Tiglath-Adar of Assyria captured Babylon and established a Semitic line of sovereigns there, which continued until the days of the later Assyrian empire. From this time down to the destruction of Nineveh, Assyria remained the leading power of Western Asia. Occasionally, it is true, a king of Babylon succeeded in defeating his aggressive rival and invading Assyria; but the contrary was more usually the case, and the Assyrians grew more and more powerful at the expense of the weaker state, until at last Babylonia was reduced to a mere appanage of Assyria."

The history of the next period—namely, that of Assyrian domination—properly belongs under Assyria (q. v.). On the downfall of Nineveh, Nabopolassar, the viceroy of Babylonia, who had achieved his independence, transferred the seat of government to the southern kingdom. We continue an account of this later Babylonian empire by an additional extract from the same source, embodying the views of the latest investigators, in whose results, however, especially some of their dates, we do not fully concur.

"Nabopolassar was followed in 604 by his son Nebuchadnezzar, whose long reign of forty-three years made Babylon the mistress of the world. The whole East was overrun by the armies of Chaldaea, Egypt was invaded, and the city of the Euphrates left without a rival. Until systematic explorations are carried on in Babylonia, however, our knowledge of the history of Nebuchadnezzar's empire must be confined to the notices of ancient writers, although we possess numerous inscriptions which record the restoration or construction of temples, palaces, and other public buildings during its continuance. One of these bears out the boast of Nebuchadnezzar, mentioned by Berosus, that he had built the wall of Babylon in fifteen days. Evil-Merodach succeeded his father in 561, but he was murdered two years after and the crown seized by his brother-in-law, Nergal-sharezer, who calls himself son of Bel-summa-iscun, 'king of Babylon.' Nergal-sharezer reigned four years, and was succeeded by his son, a mere boy, who was put to death after nine months of sovereignty (B.C. 555). The power now passed from the house of Nabopolassar; Nabu-nahid, who was raised to the throne, being of another family. Nebuchadnezzar's empire already began to show signs of decay, and a new enemy threatened it in the person of Cyrus the Persian. The Lydian monarchy, which had extended its sway over Asia Minor and the Greek islands, had some time before come into hostile collision with the Babylonians, but the famous eclipse foretold by Thales had parted the combatants and brought about peace. Cræsus of Lydia and Nabu-nahid of Babylonia now formed an alliance against the common foe, who had subjected Media to his rule, and preparations were made for checking the Persian advance. The rashness of Cræsus, however, in meeting Cyrus before his allies had joined him brought on his overthrow: Sardis was taken, and the Persian leader occupied the next fourteen years in consolidating his power in the north. This respite was taken by Nabu-nahid in fortifying Babylon, and in constructing those wonderful walls and hydraulic works which Herodotus ascribes to queen Nitocris. At last, however, the attack was made; and after spending a winter in draining the Gnydes, Cyrus appeared in the neighborhood of Babylon. Belshazzar, Nabu-nahid's eldest son, as we learn from an inscription, was left in charge of the city while his father took the field against the invader. But the Jews, who saw in the Persians monotheists and deliverers, formed a considerable element of the army; and Nabu-nahid found himself defeated and compelled to take refuge in Borsippa. By diverting the channel of the Euphrates, the Persians contrived to march along the dry river-bed and enter the city through an unguarded gate. Babylon was taken, and Nabu-nahid shortly afterwards submitted to the conqueror, receiving in return pardon and a residence in Carmania. He probably died before the end of Cyrus's reign; at all events, when Babylon tried to recover its independence during the troubles that followed the death of Cambyses, it was under impostors who claimed to be Nebuchadnezzar, the son of Nabu-nahid."

Bacca, PETER, a Hungarian theologian, lived probably in the last half of the 17th century. He wrote, Defensio Simpliciatatis Ecclesie Christi adversus Decisionem Questionum aliquot Theologicarum, ejusque Vindicie adversus Irenæi Simplicii Philadelphii Epistolam (Franecker, 1653). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baccancelld (or Beccancelld, probably Bapchild, near Sittingbourne, in Kent), where two councils (Concilium Baccancelldense) were held, viz.:

I. In 692, by Wihtred, king of Kent, who renewed and confirmed the privileges of the Church in his kingdom. See Labbe, Concil. vi, 1356.

II. In 796 or 798, by Athelard, archbishop of Canterbury, in which those privileges, etc., were again confirmed. See ibid. vii, 1148.

Baccarini, JACOPO, an Italian painter, was born at Reggio about the year 1630, and studied under Orazio Talmi. He died in the year 1682. Two of his best works are The Repose in Egypt and The Death of St. Alessio, in the Church of San Filippo in Reggio.

Bacchæ (or Bacchantes) were priestesses of the god Bacchus (q. v.). They were also called Mænades (from μαίνομαι, to be mad) in consequence of the frantic ceremonies in which they indulged in their sacred festivals. They wrought themselves up to a high pitch of enthusiasm, when with dishevelled hair and half-naked bodies, their heads crowned with ivy, and a thyrsus, or rod twined with ivy, in their hands, they threw themselves into the most ridiculous postures, celebrating the sacred orgies with the most hideous cries and furious gesticulations.

Bacchanal, the sanctuary or inner temple of the god Bacchus.

Bacchanalia, festivals celebrated in honor of Bacchus (q. v.). By the Greeks they were called Dionysia, in honor of Dionysus (q. v.), their name for Bacchus. Among the Romans the Bacchanalia were carried on in secret and during the night, when the votaries of the god of wine characteristically indulged in all kinds of riot and excess. At first only women were initiated, and the orgies were held during three days in every year; but after a time the period of celebration was changed from the day to the night, and the feasts were held during five nights of every month. Men were now admitted as well as women, and licentiousness of the coarsest kind was practiced. They became the focus of all public and private crimes. In B.C. 186 the senate passed a decree prohibiting such assemblies and authorizing the consuls to investigate and punish all violations of the statute, not only in the city of Rome, but throughout all Italy. Great numbers were apprehended and thrown into prison, while the most criminal were put to death. By this decree the Bacchanalia were finally suppressed. They were afterwards celebrated, however, in a more innocent form; although even then they gave great offence to persons of pure habits. See LIBERALIA.

A Bacchante.

Bacchiarius (or Baccharius) (1) was an ecclesiastical writer of the Latin Church, probably of the fifth century. It appears that he was of Irish descent, a disciple of St. Patrick and contemporary of St. Augustine. His book De Fide, and the letter to Zamarius, De Reparatione Lapsi, were inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bacchiarius (2), an Italian monk and theologian, lived probably in the latter half of the 16th century. He wrote Bacchiarii Monachi Opuscula de Fide et de Reparatione Lapsi, ad Codices Bibliothecæ Ambrosianæ, nec non ad Priores Editiones castigavit, Dissertationibus et Notis aucti Franciscus Florinus, Canonicus Theologus S. Patriarchalis Ecclesiæ Aquilejensis (Rome, 1750). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bacchillus (Bacchylus, or Bacchylides), bishop of Corinth, about the end of the 2d century took a leading part, with Polycrates of Ephesus and Theophylus of Cæsarea, in the Quartodeciman Controversy. In A.D. 196 he held one of the councils convened in various parts of the Christian world to declare that the practice of their churches was in accordance with that of the Roman Church. Eighteen bishops assembled at Corinth under his presidency and pronounced against the Quartodecimans. He also wrote a letter on this point which Jerome commends as a graceful composition, but which seems to have been lost before Jerome's time. See Cave, Historia Literaria, i, 94.

Bacchini, BENEDETTO, an Italian monk and man of letters, was born, Aug. 31, 1651, at Borgo San Do-

nino, in the duchy of Parma. He studied at the Jesuit institution, and entered the Order of St. Benedict in 1668, when he took the prænomen Bernardin. Prepared by his studies, he devoted his attention to preaching. Having become secretary of the abbot of St. Benedict of Ferrara, he accompanied him to Venice, Placentia, Parma, and Padua, and was known among the celebrated literati of the time. In 1688 he devoted himself entirely to the study of literature. In 1688 he became theologian of the duke of Parma, who desired to secure a man of such merit. In 1689 he introduced into the regulations of the Benedictine Order of St. Alexander of Parma certain modifications, which resulted in his being obliged to leave Parma. The duke of Modena appointed him in 1691 counsellor of the Inquisition. After some journeys in the interests of science, he refused the offers of cardinal Aguirre, who wished to retain him at Rome, and was appointed librarian of the duke. In 1704 he was made prior of his order at Modena. He received other ecclesiastical honors, and died at Ferrara, Sept. 1, 1721. He wrote, Orazione nell'Esequie della Ser. Margherita de' Medici, Duchessa di Parma (1670);—De Ecclesiasticæ Hierarchiæ Originibus Dissertatio (Modena, 1708). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bacchis. See BACIS.

Bacchus, Sr., lived in the 3d or 4th century. He was denounced to the emperor Galerius Maximianus, in whose army he served, as a Christian; and when he constantly refused to sacrifice to Jupiter, he was sent to Antiochus, præfect of the East, who had orders to torment him until he renounced the faith or died. After every other species of torture had failed, he was beaten to death with clubs at a little town of Syria called Barbalissa, on the Euphrates. His body was secretly interred, and afterwards translated to Rasaphe, in the diocese of Hierapolis. He was buried with his friend, St. Sergius, and is commemorated Oct. 7. One of the cardinal deacons at Rome derived his title from Sts. Sergius and Bacchus, and a church was built in their honor by Justinian at Constantinople. See Butler, Oct. 7.

Bacchylus. See BACCHILLUS.

Bacci, Carlo, an Italian Benedictine and theologian, was born April 25, 1629. From Florence, where he taught theology, he went to Poland and there founded the Congregation of Cassini. He afterwards returned to Rome, where he died, in 1688. He wrote, De Principiis Universæ Theologiæ Moralis, seu de Activis Humanis (Florence, 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bacci, Giacomo Antonio, rector of the Seminary of Lucca, died about 1760, and wrote Ethicorum Libri V in III Tomos Distributi (Lucca, 1760, 3 vols. 4to). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bacciochi, FERRANTE, an Italian painter, was a monk of Ferrara, of the Order of Filippini, but of uncertain date. One of his best pictures was The Stoning of Stephen, in the Church of San Stefano.

Bach, Johann Sebastian, a German musician, "to whom," in Schumann's words, "music owes almost as great a debt as a religion owes to its founder," belongs to a family whose earliest notices go back to the beginning of the 16th century. The progenitor of the Bach race was Verr, who died in 1619. He is said to have been a baker, and to have moved into Hungary, with many other Evangelicals, for protection from persecution. But under the emperor Rudolf II, the Catholic reaction gave the Jesuits the upperhand, and this caused Veit to return home and settle at Weimar as a baker and miller. The genealogy states that he loved and practiced music. His chief delight was in a "cythringen" (probably a zither), upon which he used to play while his mill was at work. But the real musical ancestor of the family was HANS, the son of Veit, who died in 1626. Of his many children, three sons especially distinguished themselves as musicians—JOHANNES (1604–73, the forefather of the Bachs of Erfurt), HEINRICH (1615–92, the forefather of the Arnstadt Bachs), and CHRISTOPH (1613–61, the grandfather of Johann Sebastian and father of JOHANN AMBROSIOUS, born in 1645 at Erfurt, and died at Eisenach in 1695). At Eisenach our hero was born, March 21, 1685. His father began by teaching him the violin, and after his father's death he began the piano-forte under the direction of his elder brother, Johann Christoph. At the age of fifteen (1700) Johann Sebastian entered the Michaelis School at Lüneburg, where he remained three years. In 1703 he was made organist at Arnstadt in the new church. In 1707 he went to Mühlhausen, in Thuringia, and in the following year to Weimar as court-organist. Here "his fame as the first organist of his time reached its climax, and there also his chief organ compositions were written—productions unsurpassed and unsurpassable." In 1717 Bach was appointed leader at Cöthen by Prince Leopold of Anhalt-Cöthen, and in 1723 cantor at the Thomas School in Leipsic and organist and director of the music in the two chief churches. His position at Leipsic he retained till the end of his life; there he wrote for the services of the Church his great passions and cantatas, and his high-mass in B minor (1738), which exhibit the power of his unique genius in its full glory. He died July 28, 1750. "In Johann Sebastian centres the progressive development of the race of Bach which had been advancing for years; in all the circumstances of life he proved himself to be at once the greatest and the most typical representative of the family. He stood, too, on the top step of the ladder; with him the vital forces of the race exhausted themselves, and further power of development stopped short." Bach wrote unceasingly in every form and branch, and the number of his works is enormous. In 1842 a monument was erected, which perpetuates the features of the great master, in front of the Thomas School, over which he presided, and under the very windows of his study. This monument owes its origin to the enthusiasm of Mendelssohn for the great master. In 1850 the centenary of Bach's death was commemorated, and the "Bach Society" was founded at Leipsic for the publication of his entire works. The literature on Bach is very large. We confine ourselves to the most important. Besides the articles in Herzog's Real-Encyclop., Liebenberger's Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, and Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (Lond. 1880), s. v., see Spitta, Johann Sebastian Bach (Leipsic, 1873–80); Bitter, Johann Sebastian Bach (Dresden, 1880, 2d ed.); Reissmann, Johann Sebastian Bach, sein Leben und seine Werke (Berlin and Leipsic, 1881); Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 614 sq., 637 sq. (B. P.)

Bach, Karl Philip Emmanuel, son of Johann Sebastian, was born at Weimar, March 14, 1714. He was the most gifted musician of this most eminent family next to his father, and is generally designated the Hamburg Bach. He studied at the Thomas School and afterwards at the University of Leipsic, devoting himself to jurisprudence. In 1738 he went to reside in Berlin and was appointed chamber-musician to Frederick the Great. In 1767 he left his position at court and accepted the post of Capellmeister at Hamburg, where he spent the last twenty-one years of his life, and died Sept. 14, 1788. His most ambitious work of a sacred character is The Israelites in the Wilderness, but most of his music was written for the harpsichord.

Bacheller, GILMAN, a Congregational minister, was born at Fayette, Me., Feb. 18, 1795. His early years were spent on the farm and in trade with only a common-school education. Rev. Joseph Underwood of New Sharon, Me., became his theological tutor in 1827, and in 1831 Mr. Bacheller became pastor at Machiasport, Me. He was dismissed in 1849, but continued to reside at that place and to officiate as acting pastor a part of the time until a few weeks before his death. As acting pastor he supplied Jonesborough from 1847 to 1849; Northfield from 1850 to 1853; Whitneyville from 1850 to 1855, and from 1859 to 1861, and again in 1865; also supplied Whiting from 1851 to 1852. He died at Machiasport, Sept. 27, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 419.

Bachelor, ELIJAH, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Sturbridge, Mass., in 1772, of pious parents, who early taught him the fear of the Lord. He experienced religion at the age of sixteen; soon after wandered away into folly and sin; in 1792 was reconverted, and in 1798 entered the travelling connection of the New England Conference. Six years later he located and removed to Homer, N. Y., and four years afterwards resumed the itinerant labors. For five years he continued to preach, then ill-health obliged him to again locate, which relation he held until his decease, Dec. 19, 1821. Mr. Bachelor was a man of the strictest moral and religious integrity. See Methodist Magazine, v, 80.

Bachelot, JEAN ALEXIS AUGUSTIN, a French theologian, was born in 1790 near Mortagne. He first taught classics and theology. About 1826 he was appointed by the pope apostolic præfect to the Sandwich Islands, and also proceeded to Honolulu. Once installed, he raised a contest with the Anglican missionaries and was forced to leave the place. He took refuge upon the shores of California. He intended to go to the islands in the South Pacific Ocean, but died from the fatigue of the voyage in 1838. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bacherius (or Bakere), PETER, a Flemish Roman Catholic preacher, was born at Ghent in 1517. At the age of twenty he became a Dominican, and studied under Peter Soto. He was one of the most celebrated preachers of his day, and died Feb. 12, 1601. He wrote, Misollurgie (Ghent, 1556), against those who despised the mass:—Le Miroir de la Milice Chrétienne:—Homilies on the Epistles for Lent (Douai, 1599, 1604):—Homilies on the Gospels for All the Sundays of the Year (Louvain, 1576):—Querelle Conjugal entre l'Homme et la Femme, etc.

Bachiarus. See BACCHIARIUS.

Bachlene, JAN HENDRIK, a Dutch religious writer, brother of Willem Albert, was born in 1708, and died in 1789. He published some moral and theological works, of which the principal are, Eerste Begingelen der goddelijke Waarheden (1759):—De Leer der Sacramenten, etc. (1771). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bachja BEN-ASHER, a Jewish rabbi who flourished in the 13th century, was a judge at Saragossa. In 1291 he wrote his פירוש על התורה ופירוש על פסוקי התורה, a commentary on the Pentateuch, "grammatical, philosophical, allegorical, and cabalistical," condensing much of former commentators (Pesaro, 1507; Lemberg, 1865, 5 vols.). He also wrote שו"ת, a commentary on Job (Amst. 1768):—פירוש על התורה, a collection of sixty derashas, or sermons (Const. 1515; Warsaw, 1870):—also a curious book on food and meals, entitled Sefer Shulchan Arba (פירוש ארבע), "the book of the square table" (1st ed. Mantua, s. a.; last ed. Wilna, 1818), in which he discusses the time of eating, the mystical signification of food, the moral import of fasting, the manners of the table, the feasts of the ancients, the festivals of the just in the world to come. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 75 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 54; Grätz, Gesch. d.

Juden, vii, 203 sq.; Finn, Sephardim, p. 304; Etheridge, Intro. to Hebrew Literature, p. 262; Jost, Gesch. d. Judenth. u. s. Sekten, iii, 39; Ginsburg, Kabbalah, p. 98. (B. P.)

Bachja BEN-JOSEF. See PAKUDA.

Bachman, JOHN, D.D., LL.D., an American minister and naturalist, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1790. He was licensed to preach in 1813, and became pastor of the German Lutheran Church in Charleston, S. C., in 1815. He died Feb. 25, 1874. He was a collaborator of Audubon in his great work on American ornithology, and the principal author of The Quadrupeds of North America. Among his other publications may be mentioned, Defence of Luther and the Reformation (1853):—Design and Duties of the Christian Ministry (1848):—The Doctrine of the Unity of the Human Race Examined on the Principles of Science (1850):—Characteristics of Genera and Species as Applicable to the Doctrine of the Unity of the Human Race (1854). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bachmann, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a German Protestant doctor of theology, was born July 21, 1799, at Drossen in the Neumark. He studied at Berlin and Halle, and after completing his studies acted for some time as preacher at Lisbon. In 1829 he was appointed preacher of the Luisenstadt Church at Berlin, and in 1845 first preacher of St. Jacob's there. He labored with great blessing in his vast parish, and the government acknowledged his services by appointing him, in 1862, member of consistory, and in 1870 supreme counsellor of consistory. He died July 26, 1876, at Cassel, where he had gone to repair his broken health. Besides Sermons and some catechetical works, he published a monograph on the famous Easter hymn, Jesus meine Zuversicht (Berlin, 1874):—Zur Geschichte der Berliner Gesangbücher (ibid. 1856):—Michael Schirmer nach seinem Leben und Dichten (ibid. 1859). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Literatur, ii, 105, 117; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 60; Zum Gedächtniss des Dr. Bachmann (Berlin, 1876). (B. P.)

Bachor von Echt, REINHARD, a German theologian, was born in 1544. He became burgomaster of Leipsic, where he established himself as a trader; but later he was banished from that place for his Calvinistic doctrines, and was welcomed at Heidelberg, where he died in 1614. He wrote, Catechesis Palatinatus Testimonii Scripturae ac Sententiarum Patrum qui Primis 100 a C. N. Annis in Ecclesia claruerunt Ornata.

His son, bearing the same name, was born at Leipsic in 1575. He was a distinguished jurist and professor at Heidelberg in 1613. Deprived of his employment during the Thirty Years' War, and obliged to withdraw to the Palatinate, he went to Heilbrunn in 1662, and later returned to Heidelberg, where he devoted himself to the study and preparation of his works. According to several writers, he abjured the Catholic faith before his death, and embraced the doctrines of Lutheranism. He wrote Notæ et Animadv. ad Trentleri Disput. (Heidelberg, 1617-19), and several other works. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bachtan, in the mythology of the Arabs, is the stone on which Hagar is said to have been delivered of Ishmael, the son of Abraham, and to which Abraham tied his camel when he went to offer Isaac. The Arabians, who consider themselves direct descendants of Abraham through Ishmael, worship this stone as the same with that in the Kaaba at Mecca.

Bacis (or Bacchis) was (1), in Egyptian mythology, a sacred bull at Hermonthis in Upper Egypt. It was also called Onuphis, and must not be confounded with Apis of Memphis. Large bristly hairs grew on its body, and ran in the opposite direction from that on other animals. (2.) One of the earliest seers of Greece. He lived at Heleon in Boeotia, and the nymphs of the Corycian grotto endowed him with the gift of divination after having taken leave of his friends. Bacis was probably only a designation of a soothsayer; therefore a number of Bacidæ—one especially, an Arcadian, and also some women—were thus named.

Back, FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1801, and died as pastor at Kastellau and superintendent of the diocese of Simmern, Feb. 13, 1879. He is the author of, Die ältesten Kirchen im Lande zwischen Rhein, Mosel, Nahe und Glan bis zum Beginn des dreissigjährigen Krieges: 1. Theil, Die Zeit vor der Reformation; 2. Theil, Die Reformation der Kirche, sowie der Kirche Schicksale und Gestaltung bis zum Jahre 1826 (Bonn, 1859-74). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 61. (B. P.)

Backer (or Bakker), JAKOB VAN (Jacopo da Palermo), a Dutch historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1530. While young he was employed by Palermo, a dealer in pictures, after whom he was sometimes named. Palermo kept Backer employed constantly, and sent his pictures to Paris, where they were very much admired. Backer painted some original historical pictures, three of which are, Adam and Eve, a Charity, and a Crucifixion. He died in 1560.

Backereel, Gilles, a Dutch painter, was a native of Italy and contemporary with Rubens. He competed with Vandyke in an altar-piece in a church at Antwerp. In the cathedral at Bruges is an altar-piece by Gilles Backereel representing St. Charles Borromeo administering the sacrament to a numerous group of persons attacked by the plague. In the Church of the Augustinians at Antwerp is another admirable picture by him of the crucifixion. Some of his works are also at Brussels in the Church of the Franciscans.

Backereel, Willem, a Dutch painter of the 16th century, resided in Italy and painted landscapes. In the Low Countries he adorned the churches with pictures, and gained some eminence as an artist.

Backhouse, Benjamin, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wells, Somersetshire, in 1822. He received his education at the grammar-school of that city, supplemented by private tuition and a five years' course at Springhill College, Birmingham. On leaving college he declined a living in the Church of England and became a Congregational pastor at Rodborough Tabernacle, Gloucestershire. He removed to Bolton in 1848, where he remained but a short time. He was afterwards pastor of the Old Meeting-house, Scarborough, for twelve years. In 1862 Mr. Backhouse took his family to Heidelberg, Germany, with a view to permanent residence. While there he held divine service on Sunday afternoons in St. Peter's Church. In 1865 he took up his residence at Bedford, with a view to secure better educational advantages for his sons. The Bible Society Committee chose Mr. Backhouse in 1870 to be their agent in Australasia. He arrived at Melbourne April 23, 1871, and immediately threw himself into the work, visiting in succession the colonies of Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand; lecturing, preaching, forming new committees, and holding conferences. His work was marked by a great distribution of Bibles in these colonies. He returned to his home in Melbourne in July, 1876, literally worn out, and died there Aug. 30, 1877. Mr. Backhouse was characterized by intense love for his work, unflinching zeal, gentle disposition, and consistent Christian life. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 304.

Backhouse, Edward, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Darlington, May 8, 1808, and at the age of eleven removed with his parents to Sunderland, where he ever afterwards resided. He began his ministerial labors in 1852, and was recorded as a minister in 1854. He died May 22, 1879. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1880, p. 20.

Backhouse, James, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Darlington, England, July 8, 1794. He was recorded as a minister in 1824, and from that date his life may be said to have been one of unceasing service for his Master. Nearly ten years of his life were devoted to a visit, undertaken as a missionary, to the Australian colonies, the Mauritius, and South Africa. As a naturalist and botanist he was eminent. For many years he was connected with a horticultural establishment at York. His journeys to different countries proved valuable in a scientific as well as a religious point of view. He was a convert from the Unitarian faith, and was an earnest and consistent advocate of the cause of temperance. For many years he was connected with the York Friends' Tract Association, and much of his time was spent in writing tracts. He died Jan. 20, 1869. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1870, p. 6.

Backhouse, John, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Darlington, England, in 1784. In 1813 he began to preach, thus yielding to a duty which he had long felt. He was unassuming and simple in all his ministrations. He travelled extensively through England and Scotland, preaching in various places. He died Aug. 17, 1847. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1848, p. 14.

Backhouse, William, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Darlington, England, in 1779. "Integrity and simplicity adorned his Christian walk, and in him the poor and afflicted found a faithful and sympathizing friend." On June 9, 1844, being the day previous to the time appointed for his leaving home as a missionary to Norway, he went to a meeting in usual health, rose to address the assembled company, but before a word was uttered fell lifeless to the floor. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1845, p. 20.

Backmeister. See BACMEISTER.

Backon. See BACON.

Backus, Almond Luce, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1820. He was converted in 1838; was licensed to preach in 1843, and in 1856 entered the Genesee Conference. In 1872 he was transferred to the North-west Indiana Conference, and in 1875 was granted a supernumerary relation, which he held till his death, at Stockwell, Ind., Jan. 10, 1876. Mr. Backus was a man of rare endowments, stalwart in frame, and energetic; forcible in manner, sound in theology. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 367.

Backus, Jay S., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Washington County, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1810. After pursuing a partial course of study at Madison University, he was ordained as pastor of the Church in Groton, N. Y., where he had a successful ministry. He rendered great service during this period to his brethren in the ministry as an evangelist, preaching for them in times of special religious interest. His other pastorates were in Auburn, N. Y., in two churches in the city of New York, and in Syracuse. For some years he was associated with Dr. Pharellus Church as editor of the New York Chronicle, now The Examiner. In 1862 he was chosen secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, a position which with great credit and usefulness he filled for many years. He died at Groton, July 3, 1879. See Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 54. (J. C. S.)

Backus, Samuel, a Congregational minister, was born at Canterbury, Conn., Sept. 16, 1787. He prepared for college at Plainfield Academy, of which he was afterwards preceptor, and studied at Union College (1811) and theology with Drs. Benedict and Yates. He was ordained pastor of the Church in North Woodstock, Conn., in 1815, where he remained till 1830. His next charge was Palmer, Mass., where he labored ten years

He then went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and was employed as a city missionary while strength permitted. Here he died Nov. 27, 1862. Mr. Backus was a grandson of Rev. Isaac Backus, author of History of the Baptists; and he himself published Sermons:—a tract on temperance:—and a little work entitled Prayer-meeting Assistant. See Cong. Quarterly, 1861, p. 353; 1863, p. 56.

Backus, Simon (1), a Congregational minister, was a native of Norwich, Conn. He graduated at Yale College in 1724, and was ordained pastor of the Church at Newington, Conn., Jan. 25, 1727; was a chaplain in the colonial service at Cape Breton, and there he died in 1745, aged about forty-five years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 231.

Backus, Simon (2), a Congregational minister, son of the preceding, graduated at Yale College in 1759; was settled as the first pastor of the Church in Granby, Mass., in October, 1762; resigned his pastoral charge in March, 1784, and died in 1828, at the age of eighty-seven. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 231.

Baumeister, Lucas (1), a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Litneburg, Oct. 18, 1530. He studied at Wittenberg, and was appointed in 1559 court-preacher at Kolding. In 1561 he was called to Rostock as professor of theology and pastor of St. Mary's; received the degree of D.D. in 1564; was appointed in 1592 superintendent of the city of Rostock, and died there July 9, 1608. He is the author of, Vom christlichen Bann, kurtzer und gründlicher Bericht aus Gottes Wort und aus Dr. M. Lutheri Schriften, durch die Diener der Kirche Christi zu Rostock zusammengetragen (Rostock, 1565):—Historia Ecclesiarum Rostock., s. Narratio de Initio et Progressu Lutheranismi in Urbe Rostochio. See Krey, Rostocker Gel. iv, 33, appendix, p. 26; Kirchen- und Gel.-Gesch. ii, 24-73; Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, s. v. (B. P.)

Baumeister, Lucas (2), son of the preceding, was born Nov. 11, 1570, at Rostock. He studied at Strassburg and Wittenberg, and was made professor of theology in 1600. In 1604 he was appointed superintendent at Rostock; in 1605 was made doctor of divinity, and died Oct. 12, 1638. He wrote, Disputationes contra Decreta Concilii Tridentini:—Tractatus de Lege:—Disputationes de SS. Trinitate, etc. He was also the author of a number of German hymns which are still in use in the German Church. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; and especially Tarnovius's Biography of Baumeister (Rostock, 1608); Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 134 sq. (B. P.)

Bacon, Christopher, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in 1623. In his younger life he was a soldier in the king's army. In 1656, while attending a Friends' meeting to which he had gone to ridicule what he might hear and see, he was brought under the power of the Spirit. Subsequently he became a diligent and faithful minister for more than twenty years, visiting in his preaching tours London and many parts of England, also Ireland and Wales; and under his powerful declarations of the truth many were converted. His residence was at Pottery Hill, Somersetshire. He died Oct. 29, 1678. See Piety Promoted, i, 79, 80. (J. C. S.)

Bacon, David, a Congregational minister, was born at Woodstock, Conn., in 1771. During his early years he taught school, and then was under the tuition of Rev. John Sherman and Rev. Levi Hart. Subsequently he became a missionary to the Indians around Lake Erie, and started on foot and alone for the wilderness, as it then was. For a time his headquarters were at Buffalo Creek, now the city of Buffalo, and he preached to the Seneca tribe, but tarried only a short time among them. His next efforts were with the Chippewas (Ojibways). Mr. Bacon's ordination for this work occurred after his return from his first journey to the Indians, in Hartford, Dec. 30, 1800; and he set out with his wife for his chosen field of labor Feb. 11, 1801. Arriving at Detroit, he immediately opened a school, and shortly after his wife organized another—a girls' school; but he did not lose sight of the fact that his mission was especially to the Indians. Although Detroit was at this time the largest and most important city west of Albany, the size of the place was in no-wise remarkable. It was enclosed by cedar pickets about twelve feet high, close together; at each side were strong gates which were closed at night, and no Indians were permitted to come in after sundown or to remain overnight. The schools were popular, but the people were prejudiced against "Yankees," and this militated against Mr. Bacon's usefulness. His next movement was to the Maumee River, where, in endeavoring to ingratiate himself with the Indians, he endured great hardships. Afterwards he visited the tribe at Arbrecroche; and with the Indians at Mackinaw he seemed to be better pleased than with any others of his acquaintance. They were principally Ottawas and Chippewas. He had some difficulty still in mastering their language. Mackinaw was at that time one of the remotest outposts of the fur trade. The Indians strenuously objected to the missionary, but Mr. Bacon maintained his residence there until about Aug. 1, 1804, when he sailed for Detroit; and some time after we find him in Hartford. After continuing for a considerable length of time in the service of the Missionary Society, he returned again to Connecticut. In the summer of 1806 he went to the Western Reserve, O., and established his temporary home at Hudson, O., which was surveyed for settlement in November through the influence of Mr. Bacon. In 1807 he removed to Tallmadge, O., and in January, 1809, assisted in organizing a Church there. In May, 1812, he left Tallmadge for Connecticut, and taught school in Litchfield for a few months. Through the year 1813-14 he preached in a parish now known as the town of Prospect, Conn. The following year he resided in the parish of Westfield, in Middletown, preaching there and in Middlefield. Early in 1815 he removed to Hartford and became interested in the publication of Scott's Family Bible. He was also the publisher of an edition of De Foe's Family Instructor. He died at Hartford, Aug. 27, 1817. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 1, 260, 387, 562.

Bacon, Davis, a Universalist minister, was born at Greenfield, Mass., Aug. 15, 1813. He removed to Fulton County, N. Y., in boyhood; received a liberal education; taught school in Harrison County, Ky., from 1839 to 1842; then returned to New York, and in the following year again went to Harrison County, where he engaged in teaching and preaching for nearly two years. Later he removed to Mount Healthy, O., where, under the auspices of the Miami Association, he preached several years. In 1853 he removed to Pittsburgh, Pa.; spent his latter years travelling and preaching in various places, and died Jan. 10, 1871. Mr. Bacon was a pure, faithful, and energetic pastor. See Universalist Register, 1872, p. 125.

Bacon, Francis, a Catalan, of the Order of Mount Carmel, lectured at Paris in the 15th century, and has left a selection of the choicest passages of the fathers to aid preachers in composing their sermons.

Bacon, Frederick Stanley, a Universalist minister, was born at Middletown, Conn., May 1, 1831. He received a high-school education, graduated at St. Lawrence University in 1865, and was baptized and ordained at Nunda, N. Y., in 1868. He preached successively at Titusville, Pa., Nunda, and finally at Belfast, Me., where he died suddenly of apoplexy, Oct. 14, 1873. Mr. Bacon was a man of culture and character, a good preacher, fine elocutionist, a lover of æsthetics, earnest and faithful. See Universalist Register, 1874, p. 131.

Bacon, George, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Masborough, near Sheffield, in 1798. He was converted at the age of fifteen; entered the ministry in 1816; sustained an injury in November, 1832, which laid the foundation of a painful disease and terminated his life at Haworth, Feb. 24, 1835. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1835.

Bacon, George Blagden, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon, was born in New Haven, Conn., May 23, 1836. His preparatory studies were prosecuted in the Hopkins Grammar-school, New Haven, and afterwards he entered Yale College with the class of 1856. During his collegiate course, he took a voyage for his health, as captain's clerk and purser of the United States ship "Portsmouth," to Siam and China, and was absent from 1853 to 1858. He received from Yale College both degrees, A.B. and A.M., in 1866. From 1858 to 1860 he was a member of the Yale Theological Seminary, and from 1860 to 1861 of Andover Theological Seminary. In the last-mentioned year he was ordained pastor of the Orange Valley Church, N. J., which position he held until his death, Sept. 15, 1876. He was vice-president of the American Missionary Association, a trustee of the American Congregational Union (1864-75), and a director of the American Home Missionary Society from 1872. Besides a large number of Sermons, he published The Land of the White Elephant (a volume on Siam), and other works. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 407.

Bacon, George W., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of New York, became in 1866 assistant minister of the Church of St. John Baptist, New York city, a position in which he remained until his death, which occurred Dec. 25, 1874. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

Bacon, James Monroe, a Congregational minister, was born at Newton, Mass., Jan. 3, 1818. Having completed his preparatory course at Phillips Academy, Andover, in 1838, he turned his attention to the ministry. In 1841 he sailed for Savannah, Ga., thence to Europe, in consequence of impaired health. In December, 1843, he began to study with Rev. Jacob Ide, D.D., of Medway, Mass., and in the following year was licensed to preach. His first pastorate was over the Church at Littleton, Mass., of which he was ordained pastor Oct. 8, 1846, and after three years' labor resigned his charge, on account of broken health, and returned to Newton. He was installed pastor of the Union Evangelical Church and Society of Amesbury and Salisbury, Mass., June 25, 1851, and resigned Oct. 9, 1855. For thirteen years from the summer of 1856 he was pastor of the First Church, Essex, Mass. The second year of this pastorate was marked with a revival of considerable interest. On Nov. 2, 1870, he was installed pastor of the Church in Ashby, Mass., in which office he died, Jan. 3, 1878. See Cong. Quarterly, 1871, p. 347.

Bacon, Joel Smith, D.D., a distinguished Baptist minister, was born in Cayuga County, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1802. Before entering college he was engaged in teaching in Amelia County, Va. He was a graduate of Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., in 1826, with the highest honors of his class. For a short time he was a teacher of classics at Princeton, N. J. He took the course of study at the Newton Theological Institution, graduating in the class of 1831. He entered at once upon the discharge of the duties of the presidency of Georgetown College, Ky., to which office he had been chosen. He remained here for two years and then accepted a call to the pastorate of the Baptist Church in Lynn, Mass. This relation continued two years, at the end of which period he became a professor in what is now Madison University, N. Y., holding the position until 1837. For a few years he was occupied as an agent for Indian missions. The death of Rev. Stephen Chapin, D.D., having made vacant the presidency of Columbian College, Washington, D. C., Dr. Bacon was chosen his successor, and remained in office eleven years (1843-54). Upon resigning the presidency of Columbian College, Dr. Bacon turned his attention to teaching in schools for young ladies. The latter years of his life were spent in the service of the American and Foreign Bible Society in the southern sections of the country. He was respected and beloved by a large circle of friends, and in various and most useful ways served his generation. He died at Richmond, Va., Nov. 10, 1869. (J. C. S.)

Bacon, John (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Canterbury, Conn., and was a graduate of the College of New Jersey in 1765. He was settled as colleague pastor with Rev. John Hunt over the Old South Church in Boston, Sept. 25, 1771; but in consequence of some differences in theological opinions, he was dismissed Feb. 8, 1775, and removed to Stockbridge, Mass. He now entered public life, and filled various offices, to which he was called by his fellow-citizens; among which were those of associate and presiding judge of the Common Pleas, a member of the state Senate—of which also he was at one time the president—and member of Congress. He died Oct. 20, 1820. See Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Bacon, John (2), an eminent English sculptor, was born at Southwark, in Surrey, Nov. 24, 1740. At the age of fourteen he was bound as an apprentice to a china-manufacturer, where he first was employed to paint the ware, but, discovering a taste for modelling, he was soon employed for this purpose, and in less than two years he modelled all the figures for the manufactory. He progressed rapidly, and received nine premiums from the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, etc.—the first in 1758 for a figure of Peace. In 1768 he began to work in marble, and invented an instrument, now in general use by English sculptors, for transferring the form of the model to the marble. In 1776 he received the first gold medal from the Royal Academy, and in 1770 was elected an associate of that institution. He was commissioned to execute a bust of the king for the hall of Christ College, Oxford, which won him the royal patronage. In 1777 he executed the monument to the memory of Guy, the founder of Guy's Hospital, which was considered so admirable that the city of London engaged him to erect a monument to the earl of Chatham. In 1778 he was elected Royal Academician, and completed the beautiful monument to the memory of Mrs. Draper in the cathedral church at Bristol. He had several other principal works in Westminster Abbey and in St. Paul's Cathedral. He died in London, Aug. 7, 1799.

Bacon, John (3), an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1804. He was converted at the age of twenty; began the work in 1829; labored at Ipswich, Horsham, and Keighley; became a supernumerary in 1836 at Salford, and died June 30, 1838. He devoted his utmost energies to the work of the ministry, and many souls were converted under his labors. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1838.

Bacon, Leonard, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Congregational divine, was born Feb. 19, 1802, at Detroit, Mich., where his father, David, was at the time missionary to the Indians. He graduated at Yale College in 1820, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1824, and in March, 1825, he became pastor of the Central, or First, Congregational Church in New Haven, Conn., a relation which continued for the remainder of his long life, although he became only pastor emeritus in September, 1866. At this latter date he was chosen acting professor of revealed theology in Yale College, and in 1871 lecturer in the same institution on ecclesiastical polity and American Church history. He died at New Haven, Dec. 24, 1881.

As a sermonizer Dr. Bacon was able, but not brilliant. But when any subject of contemporary interest engaged his attention and aroused his enthusiasm his sermons were powerful and convincing. Thus, although he was neither a great preacher nor a subtle theologian, he was a man of real force and decided individuality, who not only had much to do with shaping the course of his own denomination, but who also succeeded in directing the currents of public thought on many important questions. He loved an argument, not for the pleasure of displaying his dialectic skill, which was by no means small, but because he was thoroughly in earnest in what he believed, and thought and regarded it as a conscientious duty to argue his case with the heat and vigor of genuine conviction. He was ranked as a conservative in his views of Congregational polity and ecclesiastical government, and he had an antiquarian taste which predisposed him to habits of special research; but he always kept abreast of the time, and was often considerably in advance of it. His views on the slavery question, like all of his opinions, were well defined and vigorously promulgated. He early espoused the colonization scheme, and became the pillar of the society in New England. In his younger days he had considerable ability as a platform speaker, and he used that talent arduously in opposition to the abolitionists and their belief as expounded by William Lloyd Garrison. Dr. Bacon's views on colonization were materially modified about 1850. When the war broke out he took a decided stand for the Union, and met on common ground with the abolitionists. Dr. Bacon was long intimately connected with the government of Yale College, and had a large influence in deciding its general conduct. For many years he was a member of the college corporation. In regard to the college government he was extremely conservative, not favoring any great changes in the curriculum or in the make-up of the corporation. Personally, Dr. Bacon was genial in manner, and had a quiet sort of humor that made his letters and controversial articles interesting to a wider public than a denominational preacher usually commands. Finally, and above all else, he was genuine in life and speech—a true friend to all humanity.

Dr. Bacon devoted much attention to journalism and authorship. From 1826 to 1838 he was one of the editors of the Christian Spectator, a religious magazine published at New Haven. In 1843 he aided in establishing the New-Englander, a bimonthly periodical, with which he was associated at the time of his death. In connection with Drs. Storrs and Thompson he founded the N. Y. Independent, remaining one of its editors until 1863, and, with a brief season of interruption, he continued to contribute to its columns until his death. Among his published works are, Life of Richard Baxter (New Haven, 1831, 1835, 2 vols. 8vo):—Manual for Young Church Members (ibid. 1833, 18mo):—Historical Discourses (ibid. 1839):—Slavery Discussed (N. Y. 1846, 8vo):—Christian Self-culture (1843):—and very many addresses in pamphlet form. See N. Y. Evening Post, Dec. 24, 1881; N. Y. Tribune, Dec. 25, 1881; Drake, Dict. of Am. Biog. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bacon, Sir Nathaniel, an English amateur painter, was born in 1644, and was the brother of the great Sir Francis Bacon. He studied in Italy, but painted in the style of the Flemish school. Several of his best works are to be seen at Culford, in Suffolk. They are portraits of himself and of his mother, and a Cook-maid with Fowls.

Bacon, Phanuel, an English clergyman and writer, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, became rector of Balden, and died in 1783. He published a volume of Humorous Ethics, Ballads, Songs, etc. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bacon, Robert, an eminent English divine, was born about 1168, and studied at Oxford, where he subsequently read divinity lectures. He is thought to have been either the father or the elder brother of Roger Bacon. His death occurred in 1248. He wrote, Glosses on the Holy Scripture:—On the Psalter:—Discourses and Lectures. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bacon, Samuel, was an American missionary. In 1820 he was sent by the government of his country to establish a colony in Africa, and on March 9 of the same year he arrived at Sierra Leone with eighty-eight colored people. They penetrated as far as Campelar, upon the Sherbro River; but on the way he contracted a malady, of which he died, May 3, 1820. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bacon, William, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced his work in 1812; labored uninterruptedly for forty-two years; became a supernumerary in the city of Lincoln, and died June 16, 1860, aged seventy-two. He had the solid qualities that make a good preacher, minister, Christian, and theologian. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1860.

Bacon, William Thompson, a Congregational minister, was born in Woodbury, Conn., Aug. 24, 1812. He entered college at the age of twenty-one, after several years of mercantile life. He graduated at Yale College in 1837. After graduation he studied theology in the Yale Divinity School for three years, and was ordained Dec. 28, 1842, pastor of the Congregational Church in Trumbull, Conn., but resigned on account of ill-health, May 28, 1844. In 1845 and 1846 he edited the New-Englander, a quarterly magazine published in New Haven, and in the latter year joined in establishing the New Haven Morning Journal and Courier, which he edited until 1849. For the next year or two he supplied the pulpit of the Congregational Church in South Britain, a parish in Southbury, Conn.; and in 1853–54 he supplied the old Church in Trumbull. He also conducted a boarding and day school in Woodbury for some years. In 1866 he went to Derby, Conn., and became editor of the Derby Transcript, which he conducted with vigor. He died at Derby, May 18, 1881. His literary tastes were already marked while in college. He was one of the first board of editors of the Yale Literary Magazine. He published three volumes of poems, the last in 1880. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1881.

Bacoti is the high-priestess of the idol-worship in Tonquin. The title descends from one of these female Dalai Lamas to the next. They are said to be perfect soothsayers, and they are held in great respect among the people.

Bacoue, Léon, a French prelate, was born at Casteljalous, in Lower Guienne, in 1608. He abjured the Protestant faith, in which he had been brought up, became a Recollect, and in 1672 was created bishop of Glandève, whence, in 1686, he was translated to Pamiers, where he died, Jan. 13, 1694. He was the only converted Huguenot raised to the episcopate in the reign of Louis XIV. He wrote a Latin poem on the Education of a Prince (Toulouse, 1670), and some other works. See Biographie Universelle, iii, 192.

Bacrevantatzy, David, an Armenian theologian, was born at Bacran, a city of Greater Armenia, in the early half of the 7th century. After having studied philosophy in his native country, he became interpreter in the service of the Greeks of Constantinople. In 647 he was charged by the emperor Constantius with the establishment of harmony between the two peoples. In an assembly held the following year at Thouin, being sent by Constantius, he delivered a remarkable address in favor of peace. He then returned to Constantinople, where he died. He wrote, The Gate of Wisdom:—Sermon on the Conformity in Profession of the Greek Church with that of the Armenians. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bactashites, a sect of Mohammedan monks among the Turks, whose name is derived from their founder, Bactash. They wear white caps of different pieces, with turbans of wool twisted like a rope; their garments are also white.

Bacurdus was a Celtic local deity, whose name was among the inscriptions found in the city of Cologne, but of whom nothing further is known.

Bad, the name of an angel or genius who, according to the tradition of the Magi, presides over the winds. He also superintends every event which happens on the twenty-second of each month in the Persian year.

Badai was the name of a Tartar tribe, of whom nothing more is known save that they worshipped the sun or a piece of red cloth suspended in the air.

Badalini, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian theologian, lived in the early part of the 18th century. He taught philosophy and theology, and devoted himself successfully to preaching. He wrote Fragmentum Theologorum Moralium, seu Casuum Conscientiæ Diversorum Collectio (Sinigaglia, 1730).

Badalocchio, SISTO (surnamed Rosa), an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Parma in 1581. He was of the school of Annibale Caracci, by whom he was highly esteemed for design. His principal engravings are the series known as The Bible of Raphael, which were executed by him in conjunction with Lanfranc. His paintings are few in number, but the best of them are at Parma. He died in 1641 or 1647. See Encycl. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Badcock, Josiah, a Congregational minister, was born in Milton, Mass., in 1752. He graduated at Harvard College in 1772; was ordained pastor of the Church in Andover, N. H., April 30, 1782; was dismissed July 13, 1809, and died Dec. 9, 1831. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 32.

Badcock, Robert G., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in London in 1820. He joined the Methodist Society in 1839; entered the ministry in 1846; became a supernumerary in 1869 on account of illness; resumed the work in two years, and died Sept. 11, 1878. He was faithful, affectionate, earnest, and prayerful. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 16.

Badehorn, SIGISMUND, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 21, 1585, at Grossenhayn. He studied at Leipsic, where he was also appointed professor of Hebrew in 1610. In 1611 he was called as deacon to Torgau, and in 1620 as pastor and superintendent to Grimma, where he died, July 9, 1626. He wrote Armatura Davidica (Leipsic, 1620). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Dietmann, Churchsächsische Priesterschaft, ii, 1071. (B. P.)

Badegisle, a French prelate, was mayor of the palace under Chilperic I, and became by the favor of that king bishop of Mons in 581. He assisted at the second Council of Macon, held in 585, and, with the other bishops, signed the synodal constitutions. This bishop, so unworthy of his office, died in 585. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bademus, ST., was born in the 4th century at Bethlapat, Persia. He embraced the monastic life, and shut himself up in a monastery which he had built near his native town. In the persecution under king Sapor, about A.D. 345, he was cast into prison. He was put to death April 8, 376, although he is commemorated by the Greeks on the following day. See Ruiart, Acta Sincera, p. 604.

Baden, LAURIDS, a Danish theologian, was born in 1616. He became rector of Horsen, his native city, in 1648, and died in 1689. He wrote Himmelsrige, which was published several times, at Copenhagen in 1670 and 1740 especially. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badenius, Andreas, a German theologian, first devoted himself to teaching and then to preaching. He died in 1667. He wrote Wider des mühseligen Lebens schnelle Hinfüchtigkeit lehrt Gott Klugheit zur himmlischen Weisheit, from Ps. xc, xci, xciii (Hamburg, 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badenius, Christian, a German theologian, son of Andreas, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He gave his attention to theological studies and to preaching. He wrote, Johanniticum de Veritate Testimonium (Hamburg, 1710).—Trifolium Hædeticum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badenius, Gottfried Christian, a German theologian, son of Christian, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He died at the age of twenty-nine, and left Δεσφωτος, The Law of God (1710). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badenoth is the name of a bishop attached to a Kentish charter of 765 (Kemble, Cod. Diplom. i, 137; Mon. Angl. i, 166). The name is given in some lists of the bishops of Rochester in the middle of the 9th century, where it is, perhaps, a mistake for Tatnoth. There was no bishop of this name in 765, the bishop of Rochester then being Eardulf. The title is probably a clerical error.

Badeo, REGINALD, a German theologian and Dominican, lived in the early half of the 17th century. In 1644 he became general preacher of his order. He wrote Brevis Instructio Instituendi Rosarium Perpetuum pro Agonizantibus, translated from the Italian of Richard of Altamura (Bamberg, 1641). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bader, CARL, a learned Benedictine, a native of Estel, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He wrote, Saul, Israelitarum Ex-rex (1708).—Samson Philisteorum Flagellum (1709).—Potentia Calamitatum Victrix in Jobo, Hussæo principe (1711). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badeto, ARNAUD, a French theologian, of the Dominican Order, lived in the early half of the 16th century. He was successively doctor of theology, prior at Bordeaux, and in 1531 inquisitor-general at Toulouse. He wrote, Breviarium de Mirabilibus Mundi (Avignon, 1499).—Margarita Vivorum Illustrum (Lyons, 1529).—Margarita Sacra Scripturæ (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badetto, VINCENZO MARIA, an Italian Dominican and ecclesiastical historian who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote Annalium Ordinis Prædicatorum (Rome, 1656); pt. i was published in connection with Mamachi, Polidoro, and Christianopolo. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badewine. See BADUVINI.

Badge, SEPULCHRAL, in ecclesiastical ceremony, is an emblem of the sex or occupation of an interred person; as, for instance, the comb, mirror, or scissors for a woman, as at Iona; shears or a sword for a man.

Badgeley, OLIVER, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Springfield, N. J., April 11, 1807. He experienced conversion in 1823, and in 1832 joined the Philadelphia Conference. He became superannuate in 1837, efficient in 1844, and superannuate again in 1863. He died Oct. 1, 1865. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 38.

Badger, Henry, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Bilston, Oct. 16, 1815. In 1837 he was received by the conference and sent to Sierra Leone, where he labored for fifteen years, during the last five of which he was general superintendent. He was twice colonial chaplain. After laboring on eleven circuits at home, he became supernumerary at Stow-on-the Wold, Gloucester, where he died, Dec. 24, 1877. Mr. Badger had vigor of mind, a high sense of honor, generosity; and his ministry both at home and in the mission field was highly acceptable and useful. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 27.

Badger, Joseph (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born Feb. 28, 1757. He graduated at Yale College in 1785, and on Oct. 24, 1787, was ordained pastor of the Church in Blandford, Mass. He spent much of his life as a missionary under the Connecticut Missionary Society, and died in 1846. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 476.

Badger, Joseph (2), a distinguished minister of the Christian Connection, was born at Gilmanton, N. H., Aug. 16, 1792. When ten years old, he removed with his father to Crompton, Lower Canada; was converted in 1811, and in the following year was immersed by a Baptist minister. About this time he began to exhort and preach with great success. It should be stated, however, that he refused to connect himself with any particular denomination. In 1814 he received ordination, probably from the Free-will Baptists. After laboring in Lower Canada for about two years, he visited New England, where his powerful preaching was followed by a great revival. In 1817 and subsequently he labored in the state of New York. Here he found earnest co-workers, and the numerous churches that sprang up and were organized under their care became associated as the "Christian Connection," that is, those who were determined to reject all sectarian names. In 1825 Mr. Badger travelled through the West, preaching in various places in Ohio and Kentucky; and there he found a denomination of Christians with views exactly corresponding to his own, having already formed conferences in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky, comprising three hundred preachers and fifteen thousand brethren, worshipping one God in one person, having no creed but the Bible, and calling no man master but the Lord Jesus Christ. He also preached a while in Boston, but eventually returned to the state of New York, where for several years he had editorial charge of the Palladium, then the organ of the Christian Connection, which he conducted with judgment and ability. He died May 12, 1852. Mr. Badger was a man of deep piety, untiring energy, great earnestness, commanding eloquence, and was rewarded with much success in the salvation of souls. See The Christian Examiner (Boston, 1854), lviii, 42; Holland, Memoir of Rev. Joseph Badger (N. Y. 1854).

Badger, Milton, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Andover, Conn., May 6, 1800. He graduated at Yale College in 1823, and was immediately appointed principal of an academy in New Canaan, Conn., from which, at the end of the year, he retired to pursue the course at the Andover (Mass.) Theological Seminary. Here he spent two years, and then accepted a tutorship in Yale College, continuing, meanwhile, his studies in the theological department of the college, and completing his course in 1827. The pulpit of the South Church in Andover, Mass., being vacated by the resignation of Rev. Justin Edwards, D.D., Mr. Badger was called, and was duly ordained and installed pastor Jan. 3, 1828. His ministry in this place is characterized as a continuous revival, extending over the seven and a half years of his pastorate. In May, 1835, he was elected to the office of associate secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, in which he distinguished himself by his arduous labor and great sagacity, and in which he continued until the time of his death, which occurred in Madison, Conn., March 1, 1873. See Cong. Quarterly, 1875, p. 1.

Badger, Stephen, a Congregational minister, was born at Charlestown, Mass., in 1726. He graduated at Harvard College in 1747, and spent his life as a missionary among the Indians at Natick, Mass., where he was ordained March 27, 1753. The fifth volume of the Massachusetts Historical Collections contains an article concerning the American Indians, and especially those of Natick, of which he is the author. He died in the last-named place, Aug. 28, 1808. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 302.

Badia, Carlo Francesco, an Italian preacher, was born at Ancona, June 20, 1675. He preached in the principal cities of Italy, and was appointed, in 1730, president of the University of Turin, where he died May 8, 1751. He wrote, Prediche Quaresimali (Turin and Venice, 1749):—Panegirici, Ragionamenti ed Orazioni Diverse (Venice, 1750). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badia, Tommaso, an Italian theologian and prelate, was born at Modena about 1483. He entered the Dominican Order, and was sent by pope Paul III to the Conference at Worms in 1540, where he distinguished himself by his zeal for the Catholic religion. He died at Rome, Sept. 6, 1547. He accomplished a great part of the compilation of the Consilium Delectorum Cardinalium et aliorum Prælatorum de Emendanda Ecclesia, Paulo III jubente, Conscripsum et Exhibitum (Rome, 1538). The letter from Badia to the cardinal Contarini upon the Conference at Worms was printed in the prolegomena of the third part of the Epistolæ Selectæ of cardinal Pole. He also wrote, Quæstiones Physicæ de Anima:—De Immortalitate Animæ:—De Providentiæ Divinæ:—De Pugna Duorum Angelorum Homini Astantium:—Tractatus contra Lutheranos. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Echard, De Scripturibus Ordinibus Dominicanorum; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badiali, ALESSANDRO, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Bologna, and died about 1626, or according to others in 1643. He studied under Flaminio Tarri, and painted several pictures for the churches and public edifices at Bologna. The following are a few of his principal works: The Virgin Mary Seated with the Infant Jesus on her Lap:—A Bishop and Monk Kneeling:—The Holy Family:—and Christ Taken Down from the Cross. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badiat al-Jin, in Persian mythology, "the wildness of the demons." The spirits to whom God intrusted the rulership of the world are called jin. They drew upon themselves his anger, and were banished to the wilderness (badiat). From jin we have Jinistan, "kingdom of the spirits."

Badier, JEAN ÉTIENNE, a French Benedictine and theologian, was born in 1650. Having entered the order, he successfully taught theology and philosophy at the Abbey of St. Denis. He afterwards became prior successively of St. Julien, of Tours, and of Corbie. He died in 1719. He wrote De la Sainteté de l'État Monastique, ou l'on fait voir l'Histoire de l'Abbaye de Marmoutier et de celle de l'Eglise Royale de St. Martin de Tours pour Servir de Réponse à la Vie de St. Martin donnée par M. Gervaise. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badile, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, an Italian historical and portrait painter, was born at Verona in 1480. He is said to have been the first Veronese painter who divested himself entirely of the Gothic manner. His principal pictures are, The Raising of Lazarus, in the Church of San Bernardino, and The Virgin and Infant in the Clouds, with several saints, in Sannazaro. He died in 1560. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badius, Josse (Jodocus), surnamed Ascensius because he was born (in 1462) at Asshe, near Brussels, was a Flemish scholar who taught Greek at Lyons and Paris. He died in 1535. A noted printer, he himself composed some works, among them, Psalterium B. Mariæ, Versibus:—Navicula Stultorum Mulierum, an attack on the vices of women:—Vita Thomæ à Kempis:—Navis Stultifera Collectanea, in Latin verse (1513, rare). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badius, Raph, an Italian theologian, native of Florence, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He was of the Dominican Order, and became master of theology and dean of the faculty. He wrote, Constitutiones et Decreta Universitatis Florentine, Theologorum una cum illius Primæva Origine. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badma Suerken (heart of Badma), in the mythology of the Mongolians, was the god Jiëshik, who grew out of the stem of the Badma, an extraordinarily beautiful red sea-flower.

Bad - Messih (the wind, or breath, of the Messiah) is a term employed by the Persians to denote the miraculous power of the Lord Jesus Christ. They say that by his breath alone he not only raised the dead, but imparted life to inanimate things.

Badoaro, GIOVANNI, an Italian theologian, was patriarch and patriarch of Venice, then cardinal, and in 1706 bishop of Brescia. He died May 17, 1714. He wrote Industrie Spirituali per ben Vivere e Santamente Morire (Venice, 1744). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badow, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French theologian, was a native of Toulouse, and died Sept. 6, 1727, in the midst of his ministry, during the inundation of the Garonne. He wrote Exercices Spirituels, avec un Catéchisme et des Cantiques pour aider les Peuples à Profiter des Missions (Toulouse, 1716). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baduarius (or Paduarius), Bonaventura, an Italian prelate, and general of the Order of St. Augustine, was born at Padua, Jan. 22, 1332. He studied at Paris, where he received the degree of D.D. In 1377 he was elected general of his order, and in 1385 was made cardinal-priest by pope Urban VI, who utilized his talent on several missions. His opposition to Francesco di Carrara of Padua caused his death by assassins at Rome in 1388. He wrote, Méditations de Vita Christi:—Sermones ad Clerum:—Sermomarium in Evangelia Totius Anni:—Commentarius in Libros Sententiarum:—Comment. in Jacobum et Johannem:—Sermones de Tempore et de Sanctis. See Auber, Histoire des Cardinaux; Curtius, Elogia Augustinianorum; Gandolphus, De 200 Scriptoris Augustinianis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baduarius, Bonsemlantes, an Italian theologian, native of Padua, was a brother of cardinal Bonaventura Baduarius, and died, it is said, of poisoning, Oct. 28, 1369. He wrote, Lectura super 1, 2, et 3 Sententiarum:—Questiones Philosophiæ et Theologiæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Badudegn (or Beadotheng), a serving brother of the monastery of Lindisfarne, who, according to Bede, was miraculously healed of the palsy at the tomb of St. Cuthbert. He was alive when Bede wrote (Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv, 31).

Baduhenna, in the mythology of the Frisians, was a goddess in honor of whom the barbarous natives butchered nine hundred captured Romans.

Badulf (Baldulf, Badwlf, or Beadulf), a Saxon bishop, was consecrated to the see of Withern, July 17, 791, at Hearnhaleh, by Eanbald, archbishop of York, and Ethelbert, bishop of Hexham (Chr. Sax. 791; Sim. Dun. 790). In the year 796 he assisted at the consecration of archbishop Eanbald II, and at the coronation of Eardulf, king of Northumbria (id. ad ann.). He was the last bishop of Withern of the Anglo-Saxon succession whose name is preserved (William of Malmesbury, De Gest. Pont. lib. iii).

Badumna was a goddess of hunting and forests among the Frisians and Goths. She was represented with a shield and a bow and arrows; but the representations of her extant undoubtedly belong to a late period, and are therefore not trustworthy.

Baduvini (Beadwin, or Badewine) (1), the first bishop of Elmham in East Anglia, appointed on the division of the bishopric consequent on the illness of bishop Bisi (Bede, Historia Ecclesiæ, iv, 5). The date of his nomination is given by Florence of Worcester as 673. His name as witness is attached to a Mercian charter of 693 (Kemble, Cod. Diplom. xxxvi). He died before 706, in which year Northbert was bishop. (2) A priest who attests the decree of the Council of Clovesho of 716; possibly the person who mediated between Wilfrid and Aldfrid about 704.

Baeck, JOACHIM, a French theologian, was born at Utrecht, Aug. 10, 1562, and died at the same place, Sept. 24, 1619. He wrote a work upon the conscience, in French (Brussels, 1610):—L'Interprète, ou l'Avocat des Vrais Catholiques (Brussels, 1610):—L'Adversaire des Mauvais Catholiques (Bois-le-Duc, 1614):—Le Bon de tous les Hérétiques, des Politiques et des Catholiques Corrompus (Antwerp, 1616). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baedan (Baetan, or Baotan), probably different forms of Baithen is the name of several saints.

(1) SON OF BRECAN, celebrated Nov. 29; but in putting him on this day neither O'Gorman nor Maguire gives a place where he is venerated. He is given among the saints of Derry. At Culdaff there is a custom of plunging diseased cattle into a pool of the river and praying at the same time to St. Bodhan (Stat. Acc. Ire. ii, 611).

(2) OF CLUAIN-TAISCEIRT, now Clontuskert, near Lanesborough, in the barony of South Ballintobber and County Roscommon. His death is put by the Four Masters in 804.

(3) BAEDAN MOR, celebrated Jan. 14, was the son of Lugaidd and Cainer. In Mart. Doneg. he is called "abbot of Inis-mor, A.D. 712." On his father's side, he came of the race of Cathaoh Mor, who is said to have reigned in Ireland, A.D. 120-122.

Baehér (Berus), a Swiss theologian and physician, was born in 1486. He taught belles-lettres at Strasburg, where he studied theology and medicine, and afterwards established himself at Basle. He became rector in 1529 and 1532. His rectorate was the means of restoring peace to the university, which had been divided by various religious questions. He died in 1568. He wrote Commentaire sur l'Apocalypse de Saint Jean. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Baell, in Hindû mythology, is a spirit with three heads that reigns in the eastern section of hell. He teaches the art of making one's self invisible. Sixty-six legions of spirits serve him.

Baeng (Baengius), PETER, a Swedish theologian, was born in 1633 at Helsingborg, in Scania, and studied at Upsala and other universities. In 1655 he was called as professor of theology to Abo, and in 1682 king Charles XI of Sweden appointed him bishop at Viborg. He organized the different churches and schools of his diocese, and died in the year 1696. He wrote, Commentarius in Epistolam ad Hebræos:—Sancti Ansgarii Vita:—Tractatus de Sacramentis:—Catecheta Lutheranus:—Chronologia Sacra. See Pipping, Memoriæ Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Baer, Charles Alfred, a Lutheran minister, was born at Lancaster, Pa., May 28, 1831. After graduation, he engaged in study at home.

in October, 1853, he entered the theological seminary of the Lutheran Church at Gettysburg. He was in due time ordained a minister of that Church, and for the two years prior to his decease was pastor of a Church in Norristown, Pa. His care for the sick and wounded at Gettysburg seriously impaired his health, and he died at Norristown in September, 1863. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1864.

Baer, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Rockingham County, Va., Oct. 9, 1794. He was of noble German origin. His neighborhood had very few religious privileges in his childhood, yet at the age of fifteen he embraced religion, after having spent five years in seeking it. He soon became greatly exercised as to his duty to preach the Gospel, and instinctively shrank from such momentous responsibility, pleading filial duty and limited education. But his father released him from all home obligations, and the Church, considering him worthy, thrust upon him a license to preach. He dared not resist; and having once entered the ministry, he gave himself to all its duties with that characteristic firmness, energy, and consecration which always win, and before his race was run became one of the most admirable in virtue, amiableness, and devotedness; the most honored and able of all his colleagues. In 1814 he entered the Baltimore Conference, and for nearly fifty years was a champion in her itinerant ranks—twenty-eight on circuits and stations, fifteen as presiding elder, and nearly seven as agent of the Maryland Bible Society. His last years were spent as agent of the Baltimore County Bible Society. He died March 11, 1878. The human secret of Mr. Baer's great power in the ministry lay in his wonderful familiarity with the Bible, the logical tendency of his mind, and his singleness of heart toward God. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 12.

Baerle (Barlæus), GASPARD VAN, a Dutch poet, theologian, and historian, was born in Antwerp, Feb. 12, 1584. He studied theology at Leyden, and was elected professor of logic there in 1617. He became an Arminian and wrote in defence of Arminius and the Remonstrants, for which he was at length deprived of his professorship. He next studied medicine, but did not practice, remaining in Leyden giving private instruction till 1631, when he became professor of philosophy and rhetoric at Amsterdam. He died in Amsterdam, Jan. 14, 1648. He was an excellent Latin poet, and contributed to history records of the government of count Maurice of Nassau in Brazil, and of the reception given to Maria de' Medici at Amsterdam in 1638. For a list of his works see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baersdorp. See BAARSDORP.

Baert (Baertius), FRANÇOIS, a Flemish Jesuit, was born in 1651 at Ypres. He visited the libraries of Germany, especially those of Prague and Vienna, in order to search the documents pertaining to ecclesiastical history. He died Oct. 27, 1719. He assisted P. Papebroch in the translation of the Acta Sanctorum, and published a Commentary on the Life of St. Basil the Great. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baetan. See BATHEN.

Baethhallach, bishop of Ath-truim, commemorated Oct. 5, was a brother of Corbmac and successor of St. Patrick, and was descended from Colla Uais, king of Erin. Colgan (Life of St. Corbmac the Younger) calls his father Colman, and his mother Funecta.

Bætylion (or Bætylos) is the name of an anointed stone worshipped among the Greeks, Phrygians, and other nations of the East; and supposed by modern naturalists to be the same with our ceraunia, or thunder-stone. The Bætylos, among the Greeks, is represented as the same with the Abadir among the Romans. The Betylia of the ancient mythologists are considered by some as a kind of animated statues, invented by Cælus, in his war against Saturn. They were greatly venerated by the ancient heathen; many of their idols were no other; and in some parts of Egypt they were planted on both sides of the public roads. Though honored as being the mother of the gods, they were commonly shapeless stones. See STONE-WORSHIP.

Bæx, JOACHIM, a Dutch ecclesiastical writer, was born in 1562 at Utrecht. He was priest of one of the states of the United Provinces. He died in 1619. He wrote in Dutch a great number of polemical works against the Protestants. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bæza, Baldassare, a Roman Catholic divine, originally from Portugal, and eventually court-preacher to the king of Spain, who died March 13, 1638, is the author of Commentaria in Canticum Moysis, Ezechiae, Iesaiæ:—Comment. in Epistolam Jacobi Apostoli. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bæza, Diego de, a Spanish Jesuit, was born in 1582, at Ponferrada, in Galicia. In 1600 he entered the Society of Jesus at Salamanca, and became one of the most famous pulpit orators of Spain. He died at Valladolid, Aug. 15, 1647. He wrote, Comment. Morales in Hist. Evangel. (Paris and Lyons, 4 vols.):—De Christo Figurato in Vet. Testamento (6 vols.):—also a collection of Sermons. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Antonio, Bibl. Hisp.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v., Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bafarull, TOMAS, a Spanish theologian of the Dominican Order, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote Nuevas Indias del Rosario. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baffi, BARTOLOMEO, was an Italian theologian. At the age of thirty-three he entered the Capuchin Order, became professor at Pavia, and assisted at the Council of Trent. He died at Milan between 1577 and 1580. He wrote, Orat. de Religione, ejusque Præfecto Diligendo (Bologna, 1559):—De Nobilitate Urbis Mediolani (ibid. 1562):—Orat. de Admirabili Charitate Divina (Milan, 1569):—Orat. de S. S. Theologiæ Præstantia (Pavia), and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bag was a Persian deity, who is said to have given Bagdad its name. A temple was built for her by the wife of king Cyrus.

Bagais (or Vagais), COUNCIL OF (Concilium Bagajense), was held A.D. 394 in Numidia, at which three hundred and ten bishops, under Primian, the Donatist primate of Carthage, condemned Maximian, the Catholic bishop of that city.

Bagamazda (or Bagabarta) was the supreme deity of Armenia in the time of the ancient Assyrians.

Bagan, a Christian virgin, is commemorated as a martyr with Eugenia on Jan. 22.

Bagavadam (or Bhagavata), in Hindû mythology, is the name of one of the eighteen Purānas, or sacred books. This book is exclusively for the glorification of the preserver, Vishnu.

Bagawa (or Bhagavat) (the most meritorious) is a name of Buddha (q. v.).

Bagby, RICHARD H., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Stevensville, Va., June 16, 1820. He pursued his studies, in part, in the Virginia Baptist Seminary, now Richmond College, and completed them in Columbian College, where he graduated in 1839. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar, but finally decided to enter the ministry, and was ordained in 1842. He accepted a call in 1842 to the Church in Bruington, King and Queen Co., Va., where he remained for twenty-eight years. In 1870 he was elected associate secretary of the State Missionary Society, Va. He rendered efficient service in promoting the interests of his denomination in his native state. He died Oct. 29, 1870. See Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 56. (J. C. S.)

Bagè is a term used to denote the mysterious silence observed by the Zoroastrians as a part of their religion when they wash or eat, after having secretly repeated certain words.

Bager, JOHN, a Lutheran minister, was pastor of the German Lutheran Church in the Old Brewery building on Skinner Street, New York city—a branch from the old Lutheran Trinity Church, in 1749. Efforts were made in 1761 to unite the two congregations, but without success. Mr. Bager's pastorate was prosperous, and the Skinner Street building was abandoned, and a stone church, 34 × 60 feet, was erected at the corner of Frankfort and William Streets—the land in Skinner Street being retained for a burial-ground. This was named Christ Church, but afterwards became generally known as the Old Swamp Church. See Quarterly Rev. of Ev. Luth. Church, vii, 276.

Baggaly, WILLIAM, an English Methodist preacher, was a native of Sheffield, born in 1808. He was left an orphan at the age of eight, but his pious mother took him regularly to the New Connection chapel, where he gave his heart to God in his youth, and his life to the service of God and his Church. He became a local preacher at eighteen, entered the ministry in 1828, and was privileged to exercise that ministry in nineteen of the most prominent circuits of England during more than fifty years. His aptness for business secured for him more official work than any other of his brethren. During four years he superintended the Irish mission. In 1850 and 1865 he was president of Conference. He was a guardian, representative, treasurer, and manager of the Beneficent Fund for twenty-nine years; secretary of the Chapel and Guaranty Funds for ten years; and treasurer of the Auxiliary Fund. He was master of all the departments of the Connection, and author of a Digest of the Minutes, Institutions, Doctrines, and Ordinances of the New Connection—of which two editions were issued. He was a pastor, preacher, a brother, a friend. He ceased not his labors till apoplexy suddenly ended the earthly pilgrimage at Birmingham, Sept. 28, 1879. He was interred at Sheffield Cemetery. See Minutes of the New Connect. Conference, 1880.

Bagge, OSCAR, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died in 1868, is the author of Ein Wort der Verständigung in den kirchlichen Wirren der Gegenwart (Gotha, 1857):—Ein Ostergruss an die Gemeinde in neuen 95 Sätzen wider die grossen und kleinen Schwarmgeister (ibid. 1860):—Die Schwert des Herrn und Gideon. Ein Buch wider den modernen Aferprotestantismus (2 vols. ibid. 1860, 1861):—Das Princip des Mythos im Dienst der christlichen Position. Ein Versuch für Strauss und doch wider Strauss (Leipsic, 1866):—Fermenta Theologica. Zur freien Theologie (ibid. ed.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 61 sq. (B. P.)

Baghero, in Hindû mythology, was the supreme god of the Barjesu in Nepaul. His descent is obscure. In Lalita-Patan he possessed a temple, whose riches were said to surpass those of the famous palace built by Shah Gehan at Delhi. His great festival was called Jatra.

Bagraden (or Bhaghirut), in the mythology of India, was a powerful prince in the family of the children of the sun, the son of Telbien and father of Visuraden. His life, which fell in the first age of the world, was so holy, and his three thousand years of penitence so strict and meritorious, that the deities consented to the falling of the sacred waters of the Ganges, which were yet suspended in the heavens, upon the earth, to give life again to the children of Sagur, sixty thousand of whom had been converted into ashes by one look of the penitent Kabiler.

Bagistan, in Babylonian mythology, was a mountain in Media sacred to Jupiter. Semiramis is said to have had her image, with that of one thousand of her warriors, engraved in the same. It is uncertain where Bagistan is to be found, but it is surmised that it lay between Kermanshah and Hamadan.

Bagley, Francis Herbert, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Boston, Jan. 16, 1840. His studies were interrupted in 1862 by his enlistment in the Forty-fifth Regiment of Massachusetts volunteers. He remained in the service until the close of the war, attaining the rank of captain. After this he renewed his studies, and graduated at Hamilton College in 1870. He immediately entered Union Theological Seminary, and graduated in the class of 1873. He was ordained as an evangelist by the Buffalo Presbytery, May 20, 1873, and was soon after installed pastor of the Reformed Church at Greenburgh. His career was brief. He had unconsciously undermined his health, and he was stricken down by apoplexy. Although his life was spared for a while, yet his constitution was broken, and he never preached again. Three years later, just as he began to speak hopefully of resuming his work, the second shock came suddenly, and he died at Staten Island, N. Y., July 15, 1878. (W. P. S.)

Bagley, Thomas, a Christian martyr, was a vicar of Monenden, and a valiant disciple and adherent of Wycliffe. He was condemned by the bishops for heresy at London, and was burned at Smithfield in 1431. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iii, 600.

Baglioni, Cavaliere Giovanni, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Rome in 1594, and studied under Francesco Marrelli. He was employed in many considerable works at Rome during the pontificates of Clement VIII. and Paul V. His best work is the picture in St. Peter's of that apostle raising Tabitha from the dead. He wrote the lives of the painters, architects, and sculptors who flourished at Rome from Gregory XIII. to Urban VIII. (1572–1642). See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baglioni, Lelio, a Florentine theologian, died March 31, 1620, at Sienna, where he was professor of theology, in the habit of a Servite, which he had assumed in 1591. He wrote, Tractatus de Prædestinatione (Florence, 1577). Several other theological writings remain unpublished. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baglioni, Lucas, an Italian preacher, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He distinguished himself by his preaching in several cities of Italy. He wrote, L'Arte del Predicare (1562). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bagliotto, GIUSEPPE MARIA (called also di Navarra), an Italian theologian of the Capuchin order, lived near the latter half of the 17th century. His principal works are, Descrizione del Seraglio tradotta dal Francese (Milan, 1687):—Le Delizie Serafiche in Descrizione del Sacro Monte di Orta (ibid. 1686). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bagmastî was a famous Armenian goddess, the consort deity of Haldi. She was worshipped at Mirzazin in Ararat. Her temple, together with that of Haldi, was plundered and burned by Sargon II, king of Assyria, who carried away her statue.

Bagnati, SIMONE, a Neapolitan Jesuit, was born Oct. 28, 1651. He entered a monastery in 1666, went to Italy, and there became celebrated as a preacher. He died Oct. 19, 1727. He wrote, Panegirici Sacri e Sermoni (Venice, 1701-2):—Il Venerdi Santificato, cioè la Passione di Gesù Cristo (Naples, 1709):—Apparato Eucaristico, cioè Meditazioni di Apparecchio alla Comunione (ibid. 1710), and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bagni, BIAGIO, an Italian theologian who flourished about 1610 as canon regular of the Congregation of San Salvatore, near Terracina, was general of that congregation, and wrote, Cæremonia Observanda a Recitantibus Officium Divinum et a Celebrantibus Missas Majores (Rome, 1610):—De Oratationum Spiritualium Exercitio (ibid. 1613):—De Præcipuis S. R. Ecclesiæ Dignitatibus (Bologna, 1625-49), and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bagnolensians (Bagnoli, or Bajoli) (Bagnolais, or Bolais), so called from the town of Bagnols, in Languedoc, were, Manichæans of the 8th century who rejected the Old Test. and part of the New. They declared that God could do nothing of himself; that he did not create the soul of man when he created the body; that the world is eternal, etc. These heretics were also called Concordis, or Cuzocois. In the 13th century there was a sect of the Cathari called by the same name.

Bagoe, a nymph who instructed the Tuscans to divine by thunder. It is pretended that she was the sibyl Erythræa, or Erophyle.

Bagot, Jean, a French Jesuit, who was born at Rennes in 1580, and died as professor of philosophy and theology at Paris, Aug. 22, 1664, is the author of, Dissertatio de Penitentiâ:—Libertatis et Gratia Defensio contra Jansenium:—Defensio Juris Episcopalis et Libertatis, qua Fideles gaudent in Missis et Confessionibus de Præcepto:—Dissertatio de Veritate unius Religionis Christianæ. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bagot, Richard, a prelate of the Church of England, was born in 1782. He was the third son of the first lord Bagot; was educated at Rugby School, thence went to Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1804 became fellow of All-Souls' College. He was consecrated bishop of Oxford in 1829, and was transferred to the bishopric of Bath and Wells in 1845. He died at Brighton, England, May 15, 1854. He was not distinguished intellectually, but was courteous and noble-hearted. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1854, p. 465.

Bagshaw, Christopher, an English theologian, studied logic, philosophy, and theology, and passed successively from Protestantism to Catholicism, without especially attaching himself to either religion. He died at Paris in 1525. He wrote, Declaratio Motuum inter Jesuitas et Sacerdotes Seminariorum in Anglia (Rouen, 1601). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bagshaw, Edward, an English clergyman, son of the lawyer of the same name who became famous for his opposition to royalty, was born in 1629, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. He took holy orders in 1659, and became second master of Westminster School, when the famous Dr. Busby was headmaster. Since the two could not agree, Bagshaw was displaced, and was for some time chaplain to Arthur, earl of Anglesey. He published numerous controversial works, directed against Baxter, L'Estrange, Morley, bishop of Worcester, and others. For some attack upon the government, in his later years, he was subjected to twenty-two weeks' imprisonment in Newgate. He died Dec. 28, 1671. See Wood, Athenæ Oxonienses; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Rose, New Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bagshaw, Henry, an English clergyman, brother of Edward Bagshaw the younger, was born in 1632. He was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, and subsequently held a prebend in the Church of Durham. He died at Houghton, Dec. 30, 1709, leaving a few published sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Rose, New Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bahaman is the name of an angel who, according to the Persian magi, presided over oxen, sheep, and all other tame animals.

Bahed is the name of a fast in the Ethiopic calendar, observed on Ter 10 = Jan. 5.

Bahil, MATTHIAS, a Hungarian theologian, who lived near the latter half of the 18th century, translated the work of Cyprian upon the origin and progressive march of the papacy in Bohemia, for which he was persecuted. Being obliged to leave Hungary, he went to Bieg, where he published his history and trials under the title Traurige Abbildung der Protestanten in Ungarn (1747). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bahman, in Persian mythology, was, after Ormuzd, the first created of the seven Amshaspands, chief and protector of the rest, the king of light and genius of good-will. Every second day of every month, and the entire second month of winter, are sacred to him. When Ahriman and Ormuzd shall combat for the possession of the world, Bahman, besides Mah, Gosh, and Ram, will be arrayed against the evil dæmons Ashmoph, Akuman, and Tarnad.

Bahmangeh, in Persian mythology, is the great festival which is celebrated in honor of Bahman (q. v.) with great pomp on the second day of the second month of winter.

Bahn, Christian August, a German theologian and miscellaneous writer, was born May 28, 1703. He studied at Wittenberg, became preacher, then chaplain of a regiment of riflemen, which he accompanied to Poland. On his return he was made archdeacon of Frankenstein, and later pastor at Sachsenburg. He died Oct. 7, 1755. He wrote, Schediasma de Alpha et Omega Græcorum (Meissen, 1731), and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bahn, Hieronymus, a German theologian, native of Hamburg, died in 1744. He wrote, Höchstverderbliche Auferziehung der Kinder bey den Pietisten:—Johann Arndius Anti-Pietista (1712). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bahn, Nikolaus, a German theologian, was born in 1664. He studied at Jena, and became pastor at Doobra and elsewhere. He died in 1704. He wrote, Das unschuldig vergossene Blut (1699):—Das neue Lied:—Die von Gott kommenden grausamen Sturmwinde, welche in 1715 viel tausende Bäume in den südlichen Wäldern, etc. (1714), and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bahnmaier, JONATHAN FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian, was born July 12, 1774, at Oberstenfeld, near Marbach, in Württemberg, where his father was minister. He studied theology at Tübingen, and assisted his father in his ministry until his death, in 1803. In 1805 he travelled on the Continent, and in 1806 was appointed to the Church at Marbach. In 1810 he removed to Ludwigsburg, and from 1815 to 1819 he was professor of theology at the University of Tübingen. Being unreasonably deprived of this position, he was appointed dean of Kirchheim, and in that office he died, Aug. 18, 1841. He wrote, De Miraculis N. Test. Meletemata (Tübingen, 1797), besides a number of sermons and ascetical works which he published; he also wrote some very fine hymns, one of which, Walte, walte, nah und fern, has been translated into English (Lyra Germ. ii, 89), "Spread, oh spread, thou mighty Word." See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Literatur, i, 392; ii, 101, 130, 143, 159, 233, 326; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 81 sq.; Miller, Singers and Songs of the Church, p. 354. (B. P.)

Bahnßen, BENEDICT, a Dutch theologian, was a native of Eiderstedt, in Holstein, and lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He first engaged in the occupation of book-keeper at Amsterdam. He published several Mystic works under his own name, of which the true authors were Joachim Belkuis, Julius Superbius, and Gottfried Fürchenichts. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bähr, Carl Wilhelm Christian, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born June 25, 1801, at Heidelberg. He studied at Heidelberg and Berlin from 1818 to 1822; was in 1824 appointed deacon at Pforzheim, and in 1829 pastor at Eichstetten. Here he wrote his Commentar zum Kolosserbrief (Basle, 1833), and his Symbolik des mosaischen Cultus (2 vols. Heidelberg, 1837-39; 2d ed. 1874). Thus he became known to the literary public, especially by the last work, and the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred on him. In 1838 he became a member of the Oberkirchenrath in Carlsruhe, and took an active part in the ecclesiastical affairs of the duchy of Baden till he retired, March 1, 1861. After his retirement from public affairs he wrote the commentary on the books of Kings for Lange's Bibelwerk. He died May 15, 1874, at Offenburg. Of his other publications we mention, Der Salomonische Tempel mit Berücksichtigung seines Verhältnisses zur heiligen Architektur (Carlsruhe, 1848):—Der protestantische Gottesdienst vom Standpunkte der Gemeinde aus betrachtet (Heidelberg, 1850):—Begründung einer Gottesdienst-Ordnung für die evangel. Kirche (Carlsruhe, 1856):—Das badische Kirchenbuch, etc. (ibid. 1859). See Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 62. (B. P.)

Bähr, Christian August, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 25, 1795, at Atterwasch, in Lower Lusatia. He studied at Leipsic; was in 1821 appointed pastor at Oppach, in Upper Lusatia; accepted a call in 1834 to Zittau; and died April 23, 1846. He is the author of hymns, which were published in 1846: Sechszwanzig geistliche Lieder (Zittau). See Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 255 sq.; Tobias, in the preface to Bähr's hymns; Pilger aus Sachsen, 1846; Sächsische Kirchenzeitung, 1841, No. 31, 36; 1846, No. 8. (B. P.)

Bahrdt, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born June 11, 1713, at Lübben, in Lower Lusatia. He studied at Leipsic, and was in 1739 appointed deacon at Bischofswerda, in Lusatia. In 1741 he was called as pastor to Schönfeld, near Dresden; and in 1745 as court preacher and superintendent at Dobrülugk. In 1747 he was called to Leipsic as catechist and preacher of St. Peter's; in 1748 he received the degree of doctor of divinity, and in 1755 he was appointed professor of theology. He died Nov. 6, 1775, as pastor primarius of St. Thomas's. He wrote, Abhandlung von der Sterblichkeit und dem leiblichen Tode des menschlichen Geschlechts wider den Democritus Redivivus und alle andere Socinianische Schwätzer (Budissin, 1738):—Diss. I et II de Ministerio Novi Testamenti, non Litteræ sed Spiritus, ad 2 Cor. iii, 6 (Leipsic, 1749):—Progr. de Sapientissimo Legis et Evangelii Nezu (1749):—Progr. sistens Vindicias Dicti Classici Actor. xv, 11 (1750):—Progr. de Probabilitate Hermeneutica, Certitudini Fidei non Adversa (1751):—Diss. I-XII Apologiae Aug. Conf. Art. i-iii (1751 sq.):—Diss. de Applicatione Homiletica (ibid. 1752):—Progr. de Libertinismo, Pace Religiosa nequaquam Stabilita (1755):—Diss. de Miraculis Spuriis Veræ Ecclesiæ, Notis, ad 2 Thess. ii, 9, 10 (eod.):—De Potestate Ecclesiæ (eod.):—Diss. de Dispensione Divina ab Obligatione Legis in et viii Decalogi (1759):—Progr. de Messie Characteribus, ejusque Religionis Veritate, ex Evangelio Pauperibus Nunciato, ex Matt. xi, 5 (1764):—Paraphrastische Erklärung des Buches Hiob (1764-65):—Progr. de Beneficio Reformationis nimis hodie Neglecto (1767):—De Romana Ecclesiæ Irreconciliabili (1767). Besides, he published quite a number of sermons and other ascetical works. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 25 sq. (B. P.)

Bähring, BERNHARD, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died in 1876, is the author of Thomas von Kempen, der Prediger der Nachfolge Christi (Berlin, 1849):—Leben Johann Wessels (2d ed. 1852):—Gerhard Groot und Florentius, die Stifter der Bruderschaft vom gemeinsamen Leben (Hamburg, 1849):—Johannes Tauler und die Gottesfreunde (ibid. 1853):—Geschichte der vereinigten Kirche der Pfalz in den ersten dreissig Jahren ihres Bestehens, von 1818 bis 1848 (Frankfort, 1850):—Die Enthüllung des Luther-Denkmal zu Worms (Darmstadt, 1868):—Bunsen's Bibelwerk nach seiner Bedeutung für die Gegenwart beleuchtet (2d ed. Leipsic, 1870):—Die Naturwissenschaft, die Bibel und die christliche Gemeinde in ihrem Verhältnis zur Menschenerziehung (Cassel, 1874):—Die Reform des christlichen Religionsunterrichts (Berlin, 1872):—Erster Unterricht von Gott (Langensalza, 1873):—Ueber religiöse Erziehung (Cassel, 1873). (B. P.)

Bahurim. Lieut. Conder accepts the Targum's identification of this place with Almon or Alemeth (now Almêt), which he thinks is sufficiently near to the "top of the hill;" while the existence of numerous rock-cut cisterns, with narrow mouths, illustrates the incident of the concealment of Jonathan and Ahimaaz (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund." January, 1881, p. 45)—a very slender ground for the conclusion, as such cisterns abound in nearly every ancient locality in Palestine.

Bai was the name of a special Egyptian priesthood, which was attached to the worship of the god Apis. It was held by hereditary descent. Its duties and ceremonies are as yet unknown, but were probably sacrificial, as it is hieroglyphically expressed by a knife.

Baian is said to have been the son of Simeon, king of the Bulgarians, who was so great a magician as to be able to transform himself into a wolf, or any other ferocious beast, whenever he wished to go out among his people to test their fidelity. He also had the power of rendering himself invisible by the aid of powerful demons.

Baias, in the religious legends of India, is one of the great philosophers, the son of Porosor, and of his wife, Sotti Obotti. The time in which he lived is not known, but of his wisdom the Vedas give evidence, which he collected, arranged, and divided into chapters and books.

Baiban, in India mythology, is the shining, ethereal wagon of heaven, on which the souls of the good are carried into Paradise near the mountain Meru.

Baibey, LEWIS, an English bishop and theologian, died in 1652. He wrote Præcis Pietatis, a work which had, in 1732, ninety editions. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baier, Johann David, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, younger brother of Johann Wilhelm, was born at Jena, Dec. 30, 1681. In his native city, where he also studied, he received, in 1702, the magister degree. In 1706 he commenced his lectures in the philosophical faculty; but was called, in 1710, as deacon of St. Peter and Paul, at Weimar, and in 1716 as superintendent at Dornburg and Birgeln. In 1729 he succeeded his brother at Altorf, having at the same time received the degree of doctor of divinity. He died Sept. 11, 1752. He wrote, Disputatio de Erroribus Politicis Constantino Magno Imputatis (Jenæ, 1705):—Disp. de Phœnicibus, eorumque Studiis et Inventis (ibid. 1709):—Zijnna de Pietate Quæstiosa ad Tit. iii, 5, 6 (Altorf, 1732):—Probl. Theol. utrum Johannes Baptistæ fuerit Thaumaturgus (ibid. 1734):—Spec. Philol.-theol. quo Literalis Sensus Eccles. xvii, 1, 6, de Agricultura Vindicatur (ibid. 1737):—Disp. de Nithineis, Levitarum

Famulis (ibid. 1745). See Will, Nürnberger Gelehrten-Lexikon; Göttens, Gelehrtes Europa, pt. ii; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baier, Johann Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, oldest son of the writer of the same name, was born at Jena, June 12, 1675. He studied at his native place and at Halle; was in 1703 appointed adjunctus to the philosophical faculty at Jena, and in 1709 professor of theology and preacher at Altorf. He received the doctorate of divinity in 1710; and died May 24, 1729. He wrote, *De Excideio Sodoma:—De Quæstione an Tempore Transitus Israelitarum fuerit Ordinarius Fluxus et Refluxus Maris:—De Odore Vestium Esavi:—De Systemate Mundi Jobæ:—De Behemot et Leviathan Elephante et Baluæ:—De Variantium Læctionum Novi Testamenti Usu et Abusu:—De λόγῳ ἐμφύρῳ:—De Verbis Christi πάντες ὅσοι πρὸ ἐμοῦ:—Analysis et Vindicatio Illustr. Script. S. Dكتور. See Zeltner, Vita Theologorum Altorfianorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)*

Bail, Johann Samuel, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 27, 1760, at Grünberg, in Silesia; and died, as first pastor and superintendent, at Glogau, Oct. 27, 1760. He published, Ueber die Religiosität unsers Zeitalters (Leipsic, 1803):—Neues Archiv für Prediger (Liegnitz, 1808–12, 3 vols.):—Archiv für die Pastoralwissenschaft (1819–21, 3 vols.):—Casual-Reden (Glogau, 1801, 2d ed.):—Unterhaltungen für nachdenkende Christen (Hanover, 1817–19, 3 vols.):—Entwurf eines kurzen und fasslichen catechetischen Unterrichts in der Lehre Jesu, etc. (11th ed. 1841). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i. 486; ii. 38, 65, 163, 173, 205, 318, 337, 359, 362, 374; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i. 63. (B. P.)

Bail, Louis, a French theologian, a native of Abbeville, was doctor of the Sorbonne (1628), rector of Montmartre, and sub-penitentiary of Paris, where he died in 1669. He wrote, Summa Conciliorum (1659):—De Triplici Examine Ordinandorum Confessorum et Penitentium (1651):—Theologia Affectiva (1672):—De Beneficio Crucis (1653). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bailey (Lat. ballium), a name given to the courts or wards of a castle formed by the spaces between the circuits of walls or defences which surrounded the keep: sometimes there were two or three of these courts between the outer wall and the keep, divided from each other by embattled walls. The name is frequently retained long after the castle itself has disappeared; as the Old Bailey in London, St. Peter's-in-the-Bailey in Oxford.

Bailey, Dudley P., a Baptist minister, was born in Yarmouth, Me., about 1810, and was a graduate of Bowdoin College in the class of 1829. Having received a license from the Church in Yarmouth, he began his ministry in Greene, Me., in 1833, of which Church he was ordained pastor in 1835, where he remained one year, and then removed to Wayne, Me., where his ministry continued for two years (1836–38). Resigning at Wayne, he went to Cornville, Me., where he was pastor from 1839 to 1843. In 1844 he became pastor of the Church in St. Albans, Me., where he remained many years. His death occurred about the year 1875. See Millet, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 433. (J. C. S.)

Bailey, Giles, a Universalist minister, was born in Acworth, N. H., May 7, 1815. He received a liberal education; began teaching school at the age of seventeen; took private instruction in theology; was licensed to preach in 1839, and ordained in 1840. He labored successively two years in Winthrop, seven years in Brunswick, three years in Oldtown, three in Dexter, Me.; two in Claremont, N. H.; eight in Gardiner, two in Belfast, Me.; and then removed to Reading, Pa., where, after nine years of faithful labor, he closed his life, May 14, 1878. Mr. Bailey was an able, energetic, instructive, and interesting preacher, often thrilling his hearers with his impressive powers. He was a frequent and valuable contributor to his denominational papers, and was for some time editor of the Universalist, and three years editor of the Register. See Universalist Register, 1879, p. 92.

Bailey, Haman, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Tennessee, but the date is unrecorded. He received a careful religious training; experienced conversion at a very early age, and in 1840 united with the Alabama Conference, and labored with unprecedented usefulness and acceptability until his decease, Jan. 11, 1845. Mr. Bailey was a thorough Bible student, a diligent preacher, a laborious pastor, and a devout Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 594.

Bailey, J., a Scotch Baptist minister, was born in 1785. That he was a minister of ability and established reputation appears from the circumstance that he was called to be pastor of the Scotch Baptist Church in Nottingham, in Park Street. His death took place at Lenton, June 7, 1840. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1841, p. 31. (J. C. S.)

Bailey, James W., a Universalist minister, was born in New Hampshire about 1814. He spent his youth in Claremont working upon The Impartialist, a Universalist paper, and preparing for the ministry. The date of his entrance into the ministry is not recorded. He had various stations in New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, and died at Lima, N. Y., in May, 1864. Mr. Bailey was a practical Christian; was modest and cheerful, ardent and earnest. See Universalist Register, 1865, p. 32.

Bailey, John M., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in August, 1764. When a little more than twenty years of age, he became a Christian under the preaching of Rev. Benjamin Randall. Not long afterwards he began to preach, and continued to serve his Master through a very long term of years. He retained his mental faculties till the close of his long and useful life, and died in Woolwich, Me., Oct. 5, 1857. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1859, p. 86. (J. C. S.)

Bailey, Luther, a Unitarian minister, was born in Canton, Mass., and was a graduate of Brown University in the class of 1808. He pursued his theological studies with Rev. Dr. Richmond, of Dorchester, Mass. Before settling as a pastor he was engaged in teaching in Wrentham and Bradford, Mass., and for three years had charge of the Bristol Academy, Taunton, Mass. He was ordained pastor of the Church in East Medway, Mass., in November, 1816, where he remained twenty-seven years. On retiring from the pastorate, he continued to reside in East Medway. Although solicited to take charge of other churches, he declined, but acted as a supply of destitute churches until the close of life. He lived in the period of the Unitarian controversy in Massachusetts, and became a moderate Socinian, classing himself, however, in most of his religious sentiments with evangelical Christians. He published a few occasional sermons. His death occurred at East Medway, Dec. 19, 1861. (J. C. S.)

Bailey, Phineas, a Congregational minister, was born in Landaff, N. H., Nov. 6, 1787. He was in the watchmaker's trade when, in 1818, he commenced the study of theology with a view to the ministry. He was licensed in 1823, preached for a short time at Richmond and Waterbury, Vt., and was ordained pastor of the churches at East and West Berkshire in 1824. After a pastorate of nearly ten years, he removed to Beekmantown, N. Y., and in 1841 to Hebron, N. Y., returning four years after to East Berkshire. His next charge was Albany, Vt. (1852–57), where he died, Dec. 14, 1861. Mr. Bailey's ministry was very successful. Energy was his distinguishing characteristic; his mind was vigorous, his sermons original and clear, his theology was ultra-Calvinistic, and his morality rigidly Puritanical. See Cong. Quarterly, 1862, p. 217.

Bailey, Robert, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born in the County of Fermanagh. He was converted while young; called to the ministry in 1800; labored successfully for thirty-three years, fifteen of them as a missionary, and died suddenly of cholera, Oct. 18, 1832, aged sixty years. He was zealous and persevering. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1833.

Bailey, Rufus C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1799. He was converted at the age of twenty-three, and entered the Maine Conference in 1826. In 1842 he became superannuated, and in 1858 resumed his labors, which he continued till stricken down in 1865 by paralysis, of which he died, Oct. 24, 1866. Many conversions attest Mr. Bailey's fidelity and Christian zeal. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1867, p. 133.

Bailey, Rufus William, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Yarmouth, Me., April 13, 1793. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1813; taught in two academies; commenced the study of law with Daniel Webster; and entered Andover Theological Seminary, completing his studies under Rev. Francis Brown, D.D., president of Dartmouth. His first charge was Norwich, Conn., where he was ordained in 1819. He was at the same time professor of moral science in the Military School. In 1823 he succeeded president Humphrey of Amherst College at Pittsfield, Mass. His health failing, by medical advice he sought a warmer climate. The remainder of his life was spent in the South in teaching and literary pursuits. He also travelled six years in Virginia as agent of the Colonization Society. In 1854 he was elected professor of languages in Austin College, Huntsville, Texas, and in 1858 president, in which office he continued till his death, April 25, 1863. Mr. Bailey was the author of a volume on slavery entitled The Issue (N. Y. 1837, 12mo):—eight sermons entitled Domestic Duties; or, The Family on Earth a Nursery for Heaven (Philadelphia, 1838):—Daughters at School:—The Beginnings of Evil (Am. Tract Soc.):—Primary Grammar and Manual of English Grammar, two works which have been extensively introduced into Southern schools. See Cong. Quarterly, 1863, p. 350.

Bailey, Silas, D.D., LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Sterling, Mass., June 12, 1809, and was a graduate of Brown University in the class of 1834. After leaving college, he had charge of the Worcester (Mass.) Academy for five years. In December, 1839, he was settled as pastor of the Baptist Church in East Thompson, Conn., and afterwards for a time in Westborough, Mass. While residing in the latter place, he was appointed to a professorship in Granville College, O., of which institution he was afterwards the president. In 1852 he was elected president of Franklin College, Ind., holding the office for eleven years, at the end of which time he became pastor of the Baptist Church in Lafayette, Ind. Resigning his pastorate in this place, he became a professor in the Kalamazoo (Mich.) Theological Seminary, and for some time acted as president of Kalamazoo College. He returned to Lafayette in 1869 with impaired health, to recruit which he made an extended tour to Europe and the East in 1873. On his way home he died in Paris, June 30, 1874. (J. C. S.)

Bailey, William (1), an English Baptist minister, was born at Bourton, Gloucestershire, May 18, 1771. After having worked at a trade for some time, he removed to Gosport, where he was converted under the ministry of Rev. David Bogue. Subsequently he took up his residence in London, where he was baptized Oct. 9, 1796. His first membership was with an Independent Church in Windsor, to which place he had removed. He joined a Baptist Church in Datchet in 1811, and soon after was appointed a deacon, and was licensed to preach. The pastor being laid aside, he supplied the pulpit for four years, and at length was ordained. He now relinquished his business and devoted himself solely to his ministerial work. His pastorate with the Church at Datchet continued from August, 1819, to the close of 1843, when, on account of the infirmities of age, he resigned. His death took place June 30, 1844. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1845, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Bailey, William (2), an English Baptist minister, was born at Woodhouse Eaves, Leicestershire, Aug. 8, 1823. He was educated in the General Baptist College, Leicester, for the missionary work, and was set apart to that service May 13, 1845. He set out for Calcutta shortly afterwards, and arrived there Oct. 2 of the same year. He resided for some time at Cuttack, Khundit-tur, and Piplee, but for the greater portion of his missionary career he was located at Berhampoor, Ganjam. He twice returned to England on furlough, in 1855 and in 1866; and was compelled by failing health to abandon the work entirely in 1873, landing in England on May 15 of that year. He died at Leicester, Sept. 8, 1880. He was a contributor to the Sunday at Home and Boys' Own Paper, and published The Life of Erur; or, The Dayspring in Southern Orissa, and Light in the Jungles. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1881, p. 321.

Bailey, William Metherall, an English Methodist preacher, was a native of Cornwall, being born at Thorne, Jacobstow, May 21, 1795. He was vivacious and blithesome in youth, and when converted, about the age of twenty, he was as lively and active in the service of God. He joined Mr. O'Bryan, and began to itinerate in 1818, and for fifty-two years he did the work of an evangelist in many of the Bible Christian circuits. He was a simple, earnest, self-denying, faithful pastor and preacher, and many souls were the fruit of his ministry. He closed a long and useful life at Shanklin, Isle of Wight, March 2, 1873. See Minutes of the Conference, 1873.

Bailey, Winthrop (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Northborough, Mass., in 1784. He graduated at Harvard College in 1807; was tutor in Bowdoin College in 1810–11; was ordained at Brunswick, Me., May 15, 1811; was dismissed in April, 1814; was installed at Pelham, Mass.; was afterwards dismissed and installed at Greenfield, Mass., in Oct. 1825; and died March 16, 1835. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 617.

Bailey, Winthrop (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Berlin, Mass., June 3, 1817. After receiving a common-school education, he entered the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., where he graduated in 1847. He was licensed by the Long Island Presbytery in 1847, and was installed the same year as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Oyster Bay, Long Island, N. Y. He died April 30, 1865. See Wilson, Hist. Presb. Almanac, 1866, p. 91.

Baillès, Jacques Marie Joseph, a French prelate, was born at Toulouse, March 31, 1798. Being ordained priest in 1822, he performed successively the functions of secretary-general of the bishop of Verdun, of vicar-general, and of superior of the Seminary of Bayonne and vicar-general of Toulouse. He was appointed bishop of Luçon by the royal ordinance of Aug. 15, 1845, and took possession of his see, Jan. 11, 1846. In 1849 M. Lanjuinais, then minister of public instruction and public worship, having sent an Israelitish professor of philosophy to the College of Napoleon—Vendée, the bishop of Luçon ordered the prohibition of the chapel of the lyceum, and the authority of the latter was maintained in that city, where Catholicism had so strong a hold. A conflict of ecclesiastical jurisdiction occurred between Baillès and the archbishop of Bordeaux concerning the conduct of a rector of the diocese of Luçon, in which the judgment of the bishop of Luçon prevailed. He published, on this occasion, a work entitled Des Sentences Episcopales. He died at Rome, Nov. 9, 1873. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baillio, DAVID, a Dutch painter, was born at Leyden in 1584. His principal works were portraits and interior views of temples and churches. He died in 1638.

Baillu (or Balliu, also Baleau), Bernard, a Dutch engraver, was born about 1625. One of his best works is Christ between St. d'Alcanta and St. Mary Magdalene. His plates are executed entirely with the graver.

Baillu (or Bailliu), Pierre de, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about the year 1614. He studied the works of the great masters in Italy. Returning to Antwerp about the year 1635, he engraved several works of celebrated Flemish masters—John Backer (Dutch painter), John Byler, Honoré Urphée, and others. The following are the principal: The Crucifixion:—The Reconciliation of Jacob and Esau:—Christ Praying in the Garden:—Christ Bound to the Pillar.

Bailon, PASCAL, a Spanish monk and theologian, who died at Villareal in 1592, wrote, Principales Mystérios de la Vida de Christo, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baily, JOHN, a Congregational minister, was born near Blackburn, in Lancashire, England, Feb. 24, 1644. After studying under the celebrated Dr. Thomas Harrison, he commenced his ministry in Chester, England, at the age of twenty-two; but after a short time, on account of his Congregational principles, he was imprisoned in Lancashire jail. When he was released, he travelled through Ireland, preaching so constantly as to injure his constitution. About fourteen years he spent in Limerick, where he enjoyed a happy and useful ministry. While here he was offered, in case he should conform to the Established Church, a duke's chaplaincy, with a deanery and a bishopric whenever a vacancy should occur; but he rejected the offer. Notwithstanding his irreproachable character, he was again thrown into prison. During his imprisonment, his Church, divided into seven companies, were accustomed to visit him every day, each company in turn, until it was prohibited. No release would be granted unless he promised to leave the country. In 1684, accordingly, he came to New England, accompanied by Thomas, a younger brother, who was also a minister. At first he resided in Boston. In August, 1685, the Church at Watertown corresponded with him concerning a settlement in that place. The next year he was formally called, and Oct. 6 he was constituted their pastor. In November, 1687, his brother Thomas removed to Watertown as his assistant. In 1692 John removed to Boston, although the reasons of his removal are unknown: mental depression, in consequence of his brother's death, probably formed a part of them. In July, 1693, he was invited to assist Mr. Allen, pastor of the First Church in Boston, as public teacher, and here he remained until the close of his life, which occurred Dec. 12, 1697. A volume of his discourses was printed in Boston in 1689. Cotton Mather describes him as a man of eminent holiness, and of remarkably tender conscience. His preaching was of a spiritual cast, and he was unquestionably an able man. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 201.

Bain, George A., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born near Baltimore, Md. July 6, 1798. He was left an orphan when about nine years of age; experienced conversion in 1818; and in 1820 received license to preach, and was admitted into the Baltimore Conference, and immediately transferred to the Virginia Conference. He died May 27, 1850.

Mr. Bain's acquirements were thorough, Biblical, and Methodist. His piety was deep and fervent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1850, p. 282.

Bain, Hope, a Universalist minister, was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, May 30, 1795. He removed soon after, with his parents, to the West Indies; later, to Baltimore, Md.; served in the war of 1812, in a Baltimore company of volunteers; was a member of the Presbyterian Church for several years; and became agent of the American Sunday-school Union for the Mississippi Valley in 1830. He embraced Universalism in 1847, and was ordained a preacher of that faith in 1848, at Norfolk, Va. In 1851 he moved to North Carolina, wherein before the Rebellion he preached in twenty counties, and afterwards in six. He died at his home in Goldsborough, N. C., Oct. 5, 1876. See Universalist Register, 1877, p. 116.

Bain, James, an Irish Congregational minister, was a native of Dundee, Scotland, but removed to Belfast, Ireland, while yet a young man, and decided to consecrate himself to the ministry. He was educated at the Belfast College, and spent the two years succeeding the completion of his studies (1837-38) in evangelistic work in the County Antrim, preaching at two principal stations, Straid and Ballycraigg. In 1839 he was ordained over the Church at Straid, which he succeeded in building up to a large extent by earnest labors. A new chapel was built in 1858, and afterwards enlarged, the whole being completed in 1861. His pastorate continued in this Church for more than forty years, with eminent success in all its departments. His health failed in 1878, and he was compelled to resign his charge in 1880. He removed to Londonderry the following year, and died July 17, 1881, having been in the ministry forty-two years. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 284.

Bain, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in the Highlands of Scotland, Jan. 3, 1804. He emigrated to the United States in 1823; soon after became a local preacher; and in 1835 entered the Pittsburgh Conference, in which he labored vigorously and with faithfulness until his death, in 1872. Mr. Bain was learned, pious, and affable. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 86.

Bain, William Ira, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Norfolk, Va., Oct. 30, 1844. His early advantages were limited. He was a remarkably well-read young man, and being bright, in possession of a good memory and an irrepressible perseverance, he trained himself to be a good thinker and fine preacher. He was converted in 1867, immediately joined the M. E. Church, and was shortly afterwards licensed to preach. In 1870 he was admitted to the Virginia Conference, and ordained deacon in 1871. He served Hillsborough Circuit as junior preacher. He was preacher in charge at Manassas three years, after which he served similar terms at Princess Anne and Fairmount respectively. His last appointment was Pocomoke City, Md., where, after a few weeks' labor, he died, on May 13, 1880. Success attended his work. As a preacher, he was studious, prayerful, and laborious. His sermons were clear, logical, and spiritual. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881.

Bainbridge, THOMAS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Appleby, England, Oct. 26, 1792. He received a careful religious training from his pious mother; did not experience conversion, however, until his twenty-fourth year; became a local preacher three years later; soon afterwards emigrated to the United States; and in 1833 united with the New York Conference. He espoused the antislavery and temperance causes with great zeal. He became superannuated in 1853, and died March 10, 1862. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 73.

Baine, JOSEPH, an English Baptist minister, was born in Downshire, Scotland, about 1755. Early in life he removed to England, and about the year 1800 was called to the pastorate of a Church at Portsmouth, Hampshire. After remaining here for a time, he took charge, for a brief period, of a Church in Davenport, in the same county, and then removed to Harlow, where he was pastor for twenty-seven years. While minister in this place, he rendered efficient service to his denomination by raising funds for the erection of chapels in Cornwall. He died Feb. 3, 1830. He was "a good minister of Jesus Christ;" the style of his preaching being plain, experimental, and affectionate. He is represented as having a liberal, catholic spirit. See Haynes, Baptist Cyclopædia, i, 77. (J. C. S.)

Bainerd, NEHEMIAH, a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Haddam, Conn. He graduated at Yale College in 1732; was ordained pastor of the Second Congregational Church in Glastenbury, Conn., in April, 1740; and died Nov. 9, 1842. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 149.

Baines, Thomas Duckle, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Doncaster, Yorkshire, in 1803. When young he indulged a naturally gay and pleasure-loving disposition, at the same time regularly attending the parish church. At the age of twenty-seven he heard a Methodist preacher, was converted, declined proposals for education for the ministry of the Establishment, was received by the Wesleyan Conference, and sent as a supply to Grimsby in 1833. At the conference of 1864 he was appointed to Wisbeach, and on Sunday, Jan. 28, 1866, while riding from one appointment to another, he was killed by a fall from his horse. Baines was painstaking, cheerful, and generous. His style of preaching was argumentative, and he possessed considerable theological knowledge. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1866, p. 19.

Baines, William, one of Wesley's early helpers, was for some time master of Kingswood School, near Bristol. He afterwards procured ordination from the friendly bishop of Bath and Wells, and for several years preached in churches near Bristol. Mr. Wesley invited him to London to assist as curate in his chapels there. For some time he continued in connection with Wesley's work. He seems to have been much agitated by the political contests which stirred the English mind during the time of the American Revolution. He died Dec. 27, 1777. His talents were not great, but he was a sensible and pious man. His name does not appear in Hill's "list of ministers who have died in the work." See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Bainham, JAMES, an English martyr, was a son of Master Bainham, a knight of Gloucestershire. He was a good Greek and Latin scholar, and a very pious man. He was taken and whipped at the tree, and afterwards sent to the Tower to be racked. After he had thus been tortured, he was brought before the bishop of London and examined, Dec. 15, 1531. Again he was brought before the bishop, Feb. 1, 1532. This examination proved unsatisfactory, and he was again confined in the prison until Feb. 8. Then the sentence of condemnation was given against him, and he was taken to Newgate and burned in Smithfield, April 30, 1532. While in prison he was very cruelly handled: for two weeks he lay in the bishop's coal-house in the stocks, with irons upon his legs; then he was carried to the lord chancellor's house, and there chained to a post for two nights; thence he was carried to Fulton, where he was cruelly handled for a week; then to the Tower, where he lay a fortnight, scourged with whips to make him revoke his opinions. From here he was carried to Barking, previous to his martyrdom. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 697.

Baini, GIUSEPPE, an Italian musical critic and composer of church music, was born at Rome in 1775. He took priest's orders, and was instructed by his uncle, Lorenzo Baini, and by Jannaconi. He served for several years as one of the bass singers in the choir of the pontifical chapel, and in 1814 became musical director. He died at Rome in 1844. His compositions were very favorable specimens of the severe ecclesiastical style. His Miserere was long performed in the services of the Sistine Chapel during Passion week. His Life of Palestrina (1828) ranks very high as a work on musical history and criticism. See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bainians, in the religion of India, are priests of the Mariatale, belonging to the pariah caste. Their name was given them from the instrument (baini) with which they accompany their singing, begging before the temple of their goddess.

Bainmadu is an idol of India, worshipped in a pagoda on the banks of the Ganges. It is held in so great veneration that as soon as the pagoda is opened the Indian priests, or Brahmins, fall flat on their faces, and some, with large fans, keep away the flies from the object of their devotion.

Baion (Βάϊον), or Bais (Βαίς), a Greek term for a palm-branch. See PALM-TREE.

Bairam. See BEIRAM.

Baird, Thomas D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Guilford, County of Down, Ireland, Dec. 26, 1773. His early education was guarded by religious parents. In 1812 he was licensed to preach by the South Carolina Presbytery, and accepted a call to the Broadanay congregation, which was in Pendleton District. He held several responsible positions in the Church, all of which he discharged faithfully. He died in January, 1839. He was the author of The Science of Praise. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 480.

Baird, Thomas F., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Antrim, Ohio, Sept. 14, 1824. He was educated at Madison College, Antrim, and studied theology in Allegheny Seminary, Pa. He was licensed by Muskingum Presbytery, and ordained by Big Spring Presbytery in 1861 as pastor of Clanford Church, Pa. Here he labored until June 14, 1865, when he died. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 257.

Baird, William S., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at New Liberty, Pa., Nov. 4, 1815. He experienced religion in early life; graduated at Allegheny College in 1841; and in 1842 entered the Baltimore Conference. Between 1860 and 1866 he had charge of the Wesleyan Female Institute at Staunton, Va. During the following years he was presiding elder of Winchester. In March, 1872, he took charge of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, in connection with which he died, Aug. 13, 1874. Mr. Baird was meek and quiet in spirit, frank and genial in disposition, a devoted parent, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1875, p. 136; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Baithen, a name of many forms, and frequent occurrence in Irish hagiologies. See also BAEDAN. Several appear as mere names, or with a simple designation; but others have a history, more or less distinct, such as

(1.) Son of ALLA, of Cluain-de-an, in Down, commemorated Oct. 6, is believed to have flourished at the close of the 6th century, as he is mentioned in company with three other Baithens, who were connected with St. Columba, or lived about the same time. He is perhaps the Baithen commemorated at Tech-Baithin, in Artech. See Colgan, Acta SS. p. 369; Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. Ire. ii, 413.

(2.) Baitan (or Boetan) OF CLUAIN-AN-DOBHATE, situated in the present King's County. Aengus and Marianus, in the Festologies, commemorate him Dec. 1. Little is known of him; the Mart. Doneg. (p. 335) identifying him with Mobai (Dec. 13) of Cluain-fionnabhair, while Colgan (Acta SS. p. 598, c. 3, App.) mentions "Beodan, who is also Mobeus, son of Sinell, etc., abbot of Cluain-dobhair (Dec. 13)."

(3.) Boetan (or Baotan), abbot of CLUAIN-MICNOIS (A.D. 663, March 1), was descended from an ancient Connaught family, and succeeded Aedlugh, 651, as abbot of Clonmacnoise, now called also "The Seven Churches."

(4.) Son of CUANA, and given in Mart. Doneg. as bishop of Teach-Baoithin. Both Colgan (Acta SS. p. 370) and Lanigan (Eccles. Hist. Ire. p. 413) assign him to Tech-Baithin, Westmeath; Feb. 19. He flourished about 640, as he was a disciple of Columba, and a contemporary of St. Mochoemuc, who died March 13, 655. He was revered in many churches named after him, Tech-Baithin, "house of Baithen," and is identified with the bishop Baitanus, addressed, among others, in the letter on the proper time of Easter and on the Pelagian heresy by pope John IV, A.D. 640. See Colgan, Acta SS. p. 17; Bede, Hist. Eccl. ii, 19; Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. Ire. ii, 413.

(5.) Son of FINNACH, commemorated May 22, was the son of Conall Clarnach, and had his church at Inis-baithin, now "within the townland of Inishboheen (or Inishboyne), parish of Dunganstown, barony of Arklow, County Wicklow." Colgan thinks he was a disciple of St. Ciaran (q. v.), and thus to have flourished about A.D. 550. The exact date of his death is unknown. See O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 374.

(6.) Abbot of IONA, June 9, was the son of Brendan, pupil, cousin, and successor of St. Columba at Iona. He was one of the twelve companions of St. Columba who came with him from Ireland, and was closely associated with that saint till his death. He is also known as Comin; and of him was related the curious story of three empty chairs being shown to him in heaven, for St. Ciaran, St. Columba, and himself. He ruled four years in Iona after Columba's death, and died June 6, 600. "His principal church was Teach-Baithaen, now Taughboyne, barony of Raphoe, County Donegal." See O'Curry, Lect. on Manners and Cust. Anc. Ire.; Bolland, Acta SS. (Jun.) ii, 235.

(7.) Son of Maonan of LANNLEIRE (June 18). Mart. Tallaght gives "Farodain ocus Baithin," and Mart. Doneg. has also this saint along with his brother Furadhran, abbot of Lannliere, now the old church of Lyn, County Westmeath. See O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 342.

(8.) Baetan of MONU (March 23) was, according to Colgan (Acta SS. p. 728), abbot of Kilboedain, son of Eugenius, and one of the six brothers of St. Corbmac. He followed his elder brothers, Corbmac and Diernit, into the scene of their missionary labors in the north of Ireland. Afterwards he took up his abode and built his church at Kilboedain, under the patronage of the three noble families of Cinel-Decil, Clann-Scoba, and Silmiridhin. He, perhaps, returned to his native province of Munster, and died abbot of Moin. He is supposed to have lived about the beginning of the 6th century. See Colgan, Acta SS. p. 728; Kelly, Cal. Ir. Saints, p. 103.

(9.) Baithonus, Bathanus, or Bothanus, a Scotch-Irish bishop (Dec. 25, 639), and especially connected with SHETLAND and THULE. The register of the priory of St. Andrews, giving the taxation of the churches in the archdeaconry of the Lothians, assigns one mark to the "Ecclesia Sti. Boythani." The parish of Gifford, or Yester, in East Lothian, was anciently called St. Bothans, and that of Bowden is also supposed to take its name from this saint. It is, however, difficult to identify him with certainty.

Baius (or De Bay), JACQUES, a Roman Catholic divine of Belgium (nephew of Michel), who died as professor of theology at Louvain, Oct. 5, 1614, is the author of Institutio Christianæ Religionis Lib. IV.—De Venerabili Eucharistiæ Sacramento et Sacrificio Missæ

Lib. III. See Andrew Bibliotheca Belgica; Bayle, Dictionnaire Historique et Critique, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Swertii Athenæ Belgicæ; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baiwe, in the mythology of Lapland, is the sun, of feminine sex, worshipped by the Lapps. The moon is thought to be her husband. She is the mother of all animals, and the protectress of the reindeer. Female calves of reindeer were offered to her. The bones of such animals were laid upon the table as her symbol.

Baize, NOËL PHILIPPE, a French clergyman, was born at Paris, Oct. 28, 1672. He was director of the house of St. Charles, and edited the catalogue of the library of this house. He died in his native city, Jan. 4, 1746. He wrote a eulogy of P. le Semelier, published in the Mercur of July, 1725, and other articles found in the supplement to Moréri, as well as an abridged history of the Christian sects for the Gallia Christiana. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bajardo, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian painter, was born at Genoa about 1620. He executed several fine pieces for the churches and public edifices of Genoa, particularly for the cloister of Sant' Agostino, and for the portico of San Pietro. Soprani says he died in 1657.

Bajas, in the mythology of India, is the third incarnation of Brahma in the third periodic age. His mother was Ghandari, who gave birth to him four hours after the embrace of a Rishi. Immediately after birth he went into a wood. His father, having received a revelation of his whereabouts, sought him, and made him a prophet. As such he is called Muny. He is the author of the Mahabhārata, Bhagarata, and other poems, which he wrote under the name of Vīṣa. His son, Sukadewa, excelled the father in purity and virtue, so that the heavenly Apsaras, six hundred millions of beautiful ethereal maidens, were not at all concerned at bathing in his presence; but they quickly dressed when his father appeared.

Bajulus. (1.) A conventual officer whose duty it was to receive and distribute the legacies and money given for divine service and obits. Bishops and abbots also had domestic servants so called. (2.) Persons who carried the cross, candles, etc., in processions.

Bakacs, THOMAS, an Hungarian bishop, was born at Erdöd in 1450, and studied at Vienna, Bologna, and Ferrara. For a time he acted as secretary to cardinal Hippolyt von Este, and thus became known to king Matthias Corvinus, who employed him in the same capacity, and placed the archives of the government under his care. In 1849 he was appointed bishop of Raab, and under Wladislaw II he received the bishopric of Erlau in 1494, and three years later he was made archbishop of Gran. Pope Alexander VI made him cardinal in 1500, and pope Julius II patriarch of Constantinople in 1507. He died June 11, 1521. Bakacs served his church and country faithfully, and his merits were especially appreciated by the Roman see. See Danks, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bakantiboi. See VACANTIV.

Bake, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born at Bishop Monkton, near Ripon, Nov. 26, 1800. His early educational advantages were very meagre. He joined the Methodists at the age of fifteen, and soon after became a local preacher. He had strong desires for the stated ministry, and, on his marrying, joined the Congregationalists, began to preach for them, and in 1835 was ordained to the pastorate at Wetherby. In 1842 Mr. Bake entered the town mission work in Leeds, where he preached three years; and then preached successively two years at Wakefield, ten years for the combined churches of Cowick and Polling-ton, six years at Malpas, in Cheshire, and six years at Wellington. In 1869 he retired to Stone, where he died, April, 1876. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 342.

Bake, Reinhard, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 4, 1587. In 1616 he was appointed deacon and in 1617 pastor of the Cathedral Church at Magdeburg. When Tilly (well known in the history of the 'Thirty Years' War) had the cathedral church opened, in which, according to some, one thousand, according to others four thousand, people had taken refuge—this happened on May 12—Bake met him with the following slightly changed verses (see Virgil, Æn. ii, 324):

"Venit summa dies et ineluctabile fatum
Magd'burgol! Fuimus Troes, fuit Ilium et ingens
Gloria Parthenopes!"

All efforts of the Jesuits who followed Tilly to convert Bake to their faith were in vain. In Tilly's secretary Bake found a friend, and thus succeeded in fleeing to Grimma, where he was made pastor and superintendent. In 1640 he returned, as first cathedral preacher, to Magdeburg, where he died, Feb. 19, 1657. See Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, s. v. (B. P.)

Baker, Abijah Richardson, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Franklin, Mass., Aug. 30, 1805. He was prepared for college in Medway and Bradford, Mass., and graduated at Amherst in 1830, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1835. From 1836 to 1837 he was a teacher in Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.; and was ordained in 1838 as pastor of the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Medford, continuing in that position until 1848. The following year he was agent of the Massachusetts Sabbath-school Society. In 1851 he was installed in Central Church, Lynn, Mass., remaining until 1854, when he became acting-pastor of the West Needham Church. He left in 1861, and in 1864 was acting-pastor of E Street Church, South Boston, where he continued until 1866, when he removed to Dorchester, Mass., without charge. Here he died, April 30, 1876. In addition to a number of sermons, he was the author of a School History of the United States; and was the editor of six volumes of The Mother's Assistant, and of as many volumes of Happy Home. His wife was widely known by her writings, under the nom de plume of "Madeline Leslie." See Congregational Quarterly, 1877, p. 408, 569.

Baker, Albert, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in the city of Baltimore, Sept. 15, 1820. He experienced religion in 1835; and in 1839 entered the Baltimore Conference, wherein he served the Church until his death, Oct. 19, 1842. Mr. Baker was a vigorous, devoted, and very promising young man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 353.

Baker, B. P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Wayne County, O., May 2, 1832. He emigrated to Indiana with his parents in 1835; experienced religion at the age of fourteen; received license to preach in 1866, and was admitted into the North Indiana Conference, wherein he labored faithfully until his death in October, 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 37.

Baker, Charles, an English Congregational minister, was born at Petersfield, Hampshire, in 1705. He was converted at the age of nineteen through the prayers and influence of his sister, and joined the Independent Church. In 1844 he accepted a call from the Church at Hurstbourne Tarrant, Hants. Thence he removed to Wilton, Wiltshire, and in 1862 retired to Hurstbourne, where he died, Dec. 28, 1866. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 250.

Baker, C. V., an English Baptist minister, was born at Sainthill, Kentisbere, Devon, July 28, 1817. He was converted and baptized Sept. 2, 1838, when he began immediately to preach in the neighborhood of his home with great success. He was educated for the ministry at the Baptist Academy, Taunton, from which he went out in 1842, and was soon settled at Redruth, in Cornwall. He soon, however, removed to Grampound, in the same county. In 1845 he removed to Bradninch, Devonshire, as co-pastor, and in 1846 became sole pastor of that Church. He was engaged during the last fifteen years of his life as agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society, and continued pastor of his Church until his death, July 13, 1874. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1875, p. 272.

Baker, David Augustin, an ascetic writer and convert to the Romish Church, was born at Abergavenny, in England, Dec. 9, 1575. He studied at Oxford and London, joined the Benedictines at Padua in 1605, and received holy orders at Rheims. In 1624 he was sent to Cambray as spiritual father of the newly founded monastery of English Benedictines. In 1633 he went to Douay, and in 1638 as missionary to England, where he died, Aug. 9, 1641. He was the means of bringing many to the Church of Rome. His ascetical writings were published in extracts under the title Sancta Sophia (Douay, 1657). His life was written by Norbert Sweeney, and translated into German by Troxler (Einsiedeln, 1873). See Mittermüller, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baker, Elijah, a Baptist minister, was born in Lunenburg County, Va., in 1742. He made a profession of his faith in 1769, and became a member of the Church at Meherrin, in his native county. Soon after he began to preach, and was ordained pastor of the Church in Malone, Mecklenburg County, Va., where he remained a year, and then devoted himself to the work of an evangelist; and, as the result of his labors, several churches were established on the eastern shore of Virginia. For three years, 1773-76, he confined his labors chiefly to the counties of Henrico, New Kent, etc., and finally located on the eastern shore, being the first Baptist minister who preached in that section of the state. He became pastor of the Northampton Church in 1778. Subsequently he was imprisoned in Accomac jail, and an unsuccessful attempt was made to get rid of him by sending him out of the county. Finally, he was permitted to perform his ministerial duties unmolested. He died Nov. 6, 1798. Says Dr. Lemon, in whose house he died, "I found the Israelite indeed, the humble Christian, the preacher of the Gospel in the simplicity of it, and the triumphant saint in his last moments." His death was remarkably peaceful, and he seemed rather translated than to suffer pain in his dissolution. See Haynes, Baptist Cyclopædia, i, 71, 72; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 846. (J. C. S.)

Baker, Eri, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Berne, N. Y., about 1833. He experienced conversion in 1856, received license to preach soon after, and in 1866 entered the Troy Conference. In 1871 failing health obliged him to desist from active service, and he died Feb. 18, 1872. Mr. Baker's ministerial career was eminently effective, owing to his Christian zeal and devotedness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 43.

Baker, Francis M., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Virginia, was rector of the Church in Botetourt, Va., in 1853, to which charge was added, the following year, special work in Pattonsburg, Va. In 1858 he was chosen rector of Grace Church, Richmond, Va., where he continued to reside after his active ministry had ceased. In 1878 he was appointed secretary and general agent of the Diocesan Missionary Society, still residing in Richmond. He died April 24, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Baker, George, an English clergyman, was collated archdeacon of Totness March 26, 1740, and died Jan. 8, 1772, aged eighty-six. He published a sermon on the Respect Due to a Church of God (1773). See Le Neve, Faeti, i, 404; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Baker, George W., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Litchfield, Me., Oct. 22, 1803. At the age of nineteen he removed with his father's family to Marion, O., where, with the exception of one or two brief intervals, he ever afterwards resided. In 1827 he united with the Church in Marion, and soon after was impressed that he was called of God to preach the Gospel. His discouragement arising from a want of preparation for the work was very great; but he persevered, and at length was licensed to preach, resolving, however, that he would decline regular ordination. This resolution he found himself unable to keep when he saw what a blessing followed his labors. During nearly all his ministry, he had the special pastoral care of one or more churches. His preference, however, was for itinerant revival work, to which he devoted himself with great zeal and earnestness for a half-century. He died at Marion, Oct. 11, 1881. "He was endowed with fine and strong powers of mind; was vigorous and strong in thought; had a good knowledge of human nature; had genius and consequent originality in illustration; was a diligent student of the Bible, deeply pious and spiritual; had a large and unusually vigorous body and constitution; was earnest and magnetic, and had great power in winning souls to Christ." Under his ministry it is estimated that not less than three thousand persons became professed Christians, the larger part of them being baptized by himself. Of these, over twenty-five entered the ministry. See Morning Star, Nov. 23, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Baker, Greenberry R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., May 1, 1825. He received a careful religious education; was converted in early life; moved to California in 1856; was licensed to preach in 1858, and in 1862 entered the California Conference. Two years later he was appointed agent of the University of the Pacific, which position he held till his decease, Oct. 28, 1869. Mr. Baker's preaching abilities were more than ordinary, and, coupled with his extraordinary zeal and fidelity, made him eminently successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 212.

Baker, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born at Bicester in 1828. He was converted in his sixteenth year, entered Hackney College in his eighteenth year, and after a three years' course was ordained pastor at Summertown, near Oxford. In 1854 Mr. Baker removed to Lewisham, where he labored beyond his ability until 1867, when he was compelled to resign the pastorate. In 1869 he retired to Bicester, the home of his boyhood, and there died, June 4, 1871. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1872, p. 305.

Baker, James (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born of Nonconformist parents in London in 1789. He was converted under the instrumentality of the Methodists, was called into the ministry in 1814, became a supernumerary in 1844, residing in London, and died March 9, 1853. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1853.

Baker, James (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Barnstable in April, 1816. While still a youth, he united with the Church. He soon began to preach in surrounding villages, and, after being a tutor for many years, entered the Western College in order to fit himself for the ministry. His first charge was Crediton, which he entered in 1848, and soon added the neighboring village of Sandford, where a handsome and commodious chapel was opened for divine service Oct. 8, 1848. His labors were attended with great success. In October, 1852, his health declined, and he died Dec. 3, 1853. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1854, p. 217 sq.

Baker, James E., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a native of North Carolina. In 1850 he emigrated to Missouri, and in 1857 experienced religion, and united with the Baptist Church. In 1859 he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, soon after was licensed to exhort, and in 1860 was admitted into the Missouri Conference. He was twice driven from his field of labor by the Confederates. He died Dec. 31, 1863. Mr. Baker was an honest, faithful, diligent minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 7.

Baker, James Sears, a Congregational minister, was born in Marcellus, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1822. He graduated at the Geneva Medical College in 1843, and practiced medicine in Sully and in Collamer—two years in the former and three in the latter place; after which he removed to Marcellus, where he practiced as a dental surgeon from 1851 to 1865. Having been ordained in 1865, he was installed pastor in the following year at Madison, N. Y. In 1867 he was acting pastor at Otisco, holding this position until Dec. 1, 1872. From 1873 until the date of his death he was acting pastor of the Congregational and Presbyterian churches in Onondaga Valley. He died at Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 420.

Baker, Joan, an English martyr, was from London, and suffered martyrdom in the 16th century. The chief objection against her was that she would not only not reverence the crucifix herself, but had also persuaded a friend of hers lying at the point of death not to put any confidence in it. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 175.

Baker, Joel, a Congregational minister, was a native of Conway, Mass. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1792; was ordained pastor of the Second Church in Granville, Mass., June 23, 1797; and died in September, 1832, aged sixty-six years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 245.

Baker, John (1), a Protestant martyr, was an Englishman by birth, and dwelt in Cadiz, Spain. He was apprehended and burned in Seville, Nov. 2, 1558, for his faithful adherence to the truth. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 516.

Baker, John (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Bideford, Devonshire, in 1793. He was brought to Christ at the age of seventeen; entered the itinerancy in 1818; went to Western Africa as a missionary the same year; labored at Sierra Leone and St. Mary's (1819-20) until repeated attacks of fever compelled him to leave with a broken constitution. He also labored at St. Vincent, W. I., in 1822, and in England from 1823. His last illness seized him while in the pulpit, and he died at Brighton, Nov. 17, 1845. He had a vigorous understanding, and his discourses were original and replete with evangelical truth. He was ardently attached to the whole economy of his Church, and supported it with firmness and integrity. He retained his missionary ardor to the last. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1846.

Baker, John (3), a Congregational minister, was born at Edgecomb, Me., May 30, 1811. In 1831 he graduated at Bowdoin College, was converted and took charge of Monmouth Academy. His theological training was acquired at Andover and Bangor. He commenced his ministry at Monson, Me., in 1835, where he was ordained. In 1839 he removed to the town of Kennebunkport, supplying the two churches there for fourteen years. His next charge was Wilton; after preaching here four years, he left to visit his family connections in Edgecomb, never, as it proved, to return. He was stricken with fever and erysipelas while at his early home, which proved fatal Oct. 27, 1859. Kind, patient, cheerful, Mr. Baker was "a brother beloved." See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 237.

Baker, John (4), a Baptist minister, was born in Stonington, Conn., Sept. 26, 1805. In November, 1822, he united with the Church, and not long after was licensed to preach. For some time he combined the labors of teacher and preacher, making himself especially useful in assisting evangelists in revival meetings. He was ordained in April, 1831, and pursued his theological studies at Hamilton, N. Y. Having completed his studies, he devoted himself exclusively to the work of an evangelist, never settling as a permanent pastor. His labors were confined chiefly to places in Connecticut and Rhode Island, and were followed by remarkable revivals. His home was in East Greenwich, R. I., where he resided from 1842. While engaged in prayer in the Church on Block Island, he had a stroke of paralysis, Jan. 5, 1867, from which he never recovered. He returned to his home in East Greenwich, where he lingered a little more than two years, dying Jan. 16, 1869. As an illustration of the kind and amount of labor he performed, we are told that from December, 1865, to October, 1866, he travelled 2935 miles, mostly on foot, made 737 visits, attended 256 meetings, preached more than 100 sermons, and baptized 140 persons. See R. I. Biog. Cyclop. p. 331. (J. C. S.)

Baker, John Christopher, D.D., a Lutheran clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., May 7, 1792. In consequence of the death of his father in 1793, he was taken into the family of his maternal grandparents, where he remained until ten years of age. In 1802 his guardian, Godfrey Haga, placed him at Nazareth Hall, a Moravian Seminary, where he prosecuted his studies for five years. In 1807 he was confirmed as a member of Zion's Church, Philadelphia, and soon after devoted himself to the study of theology at Lebanon, Pa. Having completed his theological course, he returned to Philadelphia and preached his first sermon in one of the German churches. In 1811 he was regularly examined by the Synod of Pennsylvania, with which body he was connected until his death. A call was immediately extended to him to act as assistant minister to the German Lutheran congregation of Philadelphia, which he accepted. The next year he became pastor of the Church in Germantown, Pa., which parish embraced the congregations at Whitemarsh and Barren Hill, besides various preaching-places in the diocese. Almost at the very commencement of his career the English language was introduced into the service of the sanctuary. In 1818 a large new church was erected in his parish, which included Rising Sun, Nicetown, Chestnut Hill, Barren Hill, Manayunk, Roxborough, Frankfort, as well as Germantown. With this charge he remained fifteen years. In January, 1828, he succeeded Rev. Dr. Endress as pastor of the Church in Lancaster, Pa., where he labored for twenty-five years. The Sunday-school, which was then a comparatively new institution, was introduced by him into this church. For many years he was president of the Board of Trustees of Franklin College, and was also a director of the public schools. His health becoming impaired by his manifold duties, he resigned his charge Jan. 30, 1853, and removed to Philadelphia, where he assumed charge of a small mission church in the northern part of the city. His last sermon was preached May 8, 1859, and on the 26th of the same month he died in Philadelphia. As a preacher he was plain, practical, and edifying. His natural endowments were excellent. Astronomy was a favorite study. He was a leading member of his synod, and was an indefatigable worker. See Evangelical Review, xi, 202.

Baker, Joseph, a Universalist minister, was born at Concord, N. H. He worked in a woolen-mill until the age of thirty-four; had but few literary advantages; embraced Universalism, and began about 1836 to preach that faith at Swainton Falls and Alburgh, Vt. In 1839 he removed to Jeffersonville; in 1843 to St. Albans, Vt.; in 1851 to Janesville, Wis.; in 1859 to Oskaloosa, Ia. He was afterwards editor of the Free Press at Janesville. He died of apoplexy, Feb. 20, 1873. Mr. Baker was noted for integrity and purity of character. See Universalist Register, 1874, p. 117.

Baker, Osmon Cleander, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born at Marlow, N. H., July 30, 1812. His father, Dr. Isaac Baker, was noted for his intelligence and integrity. His mother was a woman of unusual excellence. Both were devoted Christians. At the age of fifteen he entered Wilbraham Academy; experienced conversion while there; received license at the age of seventeen; entered Wesleyan University in 1830; was compelled to withdraw at the close of three years of successful study on account of failing health; became a teacher in Newbury Seminary, Vt., in 1834, its principal in 1839; and in 1844 was appointed pastor of the Church in Rochester, N. H., by the New Hampshire and Vermont Conference. The year following he was appointed to Manchester, N. H., the next year became presiding elder of Dover District, and one year later accepted a professorship in the Biblical Institute at Concord, in which city he resided during the remainder of his life. In 1852 he was elected bishop, and performed with exemplary diligence and success the various duties of that office until stricken down by paralysis in 1866. He partially recovered, and served two years longer. Finally a second stroke of paralysis caused his death, Dec. 20, 1871. In his home bishop Baker was eminently happy, and beautifully exhibited the excellences of his character—punctuality, devotedness, and uniform piety. He possessed a ready apprehension, sound judgment, retentive memory, moderate imagination, a calm temperament, deep religious convictions, and an all-controlling conscientiousness. He was never ostentatious, impetuous, or eccentric. As a teacher he was laborious, learned, lucid; as a preacher eloquent only in unction; as a bishop sagacious, solicitous, and strictly honest. His work on the Discipline exhibits his unwavering Methodist characteristics. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 140; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Baker, Peter F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1790. He experienced conversion early in life, and entered the Genesee Conference in 1814. He gave early evidence of superior talents, but adversity soon beclouded them. In 1817 he was prostrated by inflammation of the lungs, which terminated in a lingering consumption causing his death, April 23, 1829. As a preacher, Mr. Baker's original turn of mind and powers of eloquence were much admired. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1831, p. 120.

Baker, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore, Sept. 13, 1793. He removed to East Tennessee with his father when about five years old; soon after was left an orphan; was noted for his uprightness of life; moved to Ohio at the age of seventeen; experienced conversion about that time; received license to preach in 1815, and in 1816 entered the Ohio Conference, in which he labored zealously until his death, Sept. 25, 1823. Mr. Baker was pious, diligent, acceptable, and useful. See Methodist Magazine, viii, 166; Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1825, p. 474.

Baker, Sarah, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was the widow of George Baker, of Ashkam Fields, near York. She appeared as a minister about 1814. She spoke with great simplicity, but her words were edifying and instructive. Her labors were confined to the district in which she resided. She died June 11, 1866. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1851, p. 2; 1867, p. 10.

Baker, Thomas (1), an English clergyman and learned antiquary, was born at Crook in 1656. He was educated at the free school at Durham and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in 1679. He was ordained priest by bishop Barlow in 1686, and became chaplain to Crewe, bishop of Durham, who gave him in 1687 the rectory of Long Newton. He incurred the displeasure of his bishop by refusing to read James II's Declaration of Indulgence, and was disgraced for the refusal. Baker declined to take the oaths to William III, and resigned Long Newton, Aug. 1, 1690, after which he retired to St. John's College, in which he was protected till Jan. 20, 1716 or 1717, and was then, with twenty-one others, deprived of his fellowship. He continued to reside in the college until his death, July 2, 1740. The only works he published were, Reflections on Learning, showing the Insufficiency thereof in its Several Particulars, in order to Evince the Usefulness and Necessity of Revelation (1709-10), and the preface to bishop Fisher's Funeral Sermon for Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby (1708). His Life has been written by Robert Masters (1784) and by Horace Walpole (in the 4th ed. of his works). See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.) s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Baker, Thomas (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Winterringham in 1802. He was converted when eight years of age, and was proposed as a candidate for the ministry in 1829. He preached on the Bedford, St. Albans, Canterbury, Rye, Swansea, and other circuits. He died of apoplexy, Dec. 3, 1848. He was a man of prayer; his preaching was practical and profitable, and he was devoted to his work. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1849.

Baker, Thomas (3), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Monongalia County, Va., Dec. 6, 1808. He experienced conversion in 1828; received license to preach in 1832; and in 1833 was admitted into the Pittsburgh Conference, and in its active ranks served the Church until his death, April 4, 1845. Mr. Baker was a man of great meekness and deep piety. He was a plain, practical, instructive preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 620.

Baker, William (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Peasmarsh, Sussex, Sept. 15, 1785. He received his first appointment in 1808; became a supernumerary in 1857; spent the remainder of his life in Gloucester, and died June 7, 1877. He was an indefatigable laborer of unsullied reputation. See Minutes of British Conference, 1877, p. 39.

Baker, William (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Connecticut, Oct. 9, 1801. In 1831 he entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he labored, bringing many to Christ, until his death, Sept. 30, 1841. Mr. Baker possessed good preaching abilities and the highest order of piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1842, p. 309.

Baker, William A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., June 14, 1821. He removed to Ohio in early life; there experienced conversion; received license to preach in 1847; and in 1849 joined the North Ohio Conference. In January, 1862, he was appointed chaplain of the Forty-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Militia, and was in the bloody battle of Shiloh. Immediately after the battle he was detailed by the regiment to carry home the money the soldiers wished to send their friends. Soon after his arrival he was prostrated by sickness, and finally an attack of diphtheria ended his life, Aug. 25, 1862. In social life Mr. Baker was diffident and taciturn, but in the pulpit fearless and bold. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 148.

Baker, William Richard, an English Congregational minister, was born at Waltham Abbey, Sept. 3, 1798. He was a lively, precocious, and generous lad. After having attended school successively at Colchester, Ashburton, and Witham, and spending some time as a sailor, visiting foreign ports, he received an appointment in the Prize Office, Greenwich Hospital. About this time he was converted, and soon after entered Wymondley Academy to prepare for the ministry. On leaving college in 1821 he settled at Ramsey, in the Isle of Man, and after a lapse of five years removed to Shepton Mallet. While here he became a "total abstainer" from all alcoholic liquors, and was so zealous and successful in advocacy of the cause that he was chosen secretary of the British and Foreign Temperance Society. In 1836 Mr. Baker removed to London, where for five years he was chiefly engaged in publishing and other secular labor. He next removed to St. John's Wood; thence, after ten years, he went to Anerley, and subsequently to Banstead Downs, Surrey, where he died, Sept. 28, 1861. Mr. Baker published two important volumes on temperance, entitled The Curse of Britain and The Idl-ity of Britain; also a volume on theology, entitled Man in his Relation to the Holy Ghost, Revealed Truth, and Divine Grace, not strictly Congregational in some of its views. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 220.

Bakewell, John (1), an early Methodist preacher and poet, was born in 1721. In 1749 he began to preach, and from that time to the end of his long life he was one of the most useful and honored of all Wesley's lay helpers. He was on intimate terms with John and Charles Wesley, Toplady, Madan, and other good men. He was present at the ordination of Fletcher in 1757. He resided successively in Derbyshire, London, Bedford, Kent, and Staffordshire. The first class met in his house, and there the Rev. Thomas Rutherford died. It was in his house also, at Westminster, that in 1772 another Methodist itinerant, Thomas Olivers (q. v.), wrote the immortal hymn "The God of Abraham praise." Bakewell died at Lewisham, near London, March 19, 1819, and James Creighton left his house for the last time to read the service over the body of his dear friend. The hymn "Hail, thou once despised Jesus!" will keep Bakewell's name green forever. It first appeared in A Collection of Hymns addressed to the Holy, Holy, Holy, Triune God, in the Person of Jesus Christ, our Mediator and Advocate (1757). It is also found in Madan's Collection (1760), and in Toplady's Psalms and Hymns (1776). Bakewell wrote other hymns of excellence, which Mr. Stevenson thinks are a legacy to the Church, and should be published. See Stelfox, in West. Meth. Magazine, 1863; Stevenson, City Road Chapel (Lond. and N. Y., 1872, 8vo), p. 461; id. The Methodist Hymn-book and its Associations (Lond. 1874, 12mo), p. 318; Belcher, Hist. Sketches of Hymns, p. 79.

Bakewell, John (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Cheadle, Staffordshire, Sept. 6, 1802. He was converted when about twenty years of age, and, on removing to Leicester, joined the Rev. Robert Hall's Church. Mr. Bakewell studied a short time at the Baptist College of Bristol, and in 1826 entered the ministry of the Methodist New Connection in the Hanley Circuit. In 1841 he was made editor of the magazines of the Connection. In 1849, feeling unequal to the itinerant life, he gave up his position as minister of that body. Mr. Bakewell then went to Notting Hill, joined the Congregational Church, and, though he never took any regular pastoral charge, preached often as supply until his death, Oct. 25, 1863. Mr. Bakewell was retiring in disposition, benevolent, and eminently pious. His appeals were earnest and sometimes tearful. He was a man of prayer. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1864, p. 199.

Bakewell, Thomas Lancaster, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born in 1816. He was converted when young, and entered the ministry in 1837. His faithfulness, diligence, and piety promised much, had not typhus fever cut short his life, Sept. 18, 1838. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1839.

Bakshi (teacher), in Mongolian mythology, was an honorary title of the oldest Mongolian priests, the Gelongs. They taught spiritual schools, were greatly honored, and grew rich by the gifts of the people.

Balaamites. See NICOLAITANS.

Balacho, in Hindii mythology. The philosopher Shigemuni had sent out five hundred of his disciples to convert the world. The evil spirits, fearing that it would be snatched from their grasp, took the form of charming Peris, lovely maidens, and thus misled the disciples of the philosopher. The latter, in order to bring the disciples back, changed himself into a monstrous horse, Balacho, on which they could all be carried. Unfortunately, many of them still longed for their loved ones; and suddenly, having disappeared from the back of the horse, they fell a prey to the evil demons. The Lama priests, who are familiar with this fable, eat no horse-flesh, which is a general food in Thibet and Tartary.

Balæus, a Syrian author who wrote several hymns, one of which was On the Death of the High-priest Aaron. According to Gregory Barhebræus, Balæus lived about the same time as St. Ephrem. He must not be confounded with Belæus, an Egyptian monk; nor with a disciple of St. Ephrem, whom that father, in his Testament, accuses of apostasy from the faith. See Ceillier, Hist. des Ant. Eccl. x, 464.

Bala-Naels (sea-men), in the mythology of the Caribbeans, are the Europeans. They are regarded as creations of evil spirits of the sea.

Balance as a Christian symbol. In this relation it appears sometimes upon Christian tombs. A sepulchral stone from the Cemetery of St. Cyriac displays this instrument in conjunction with a crown; it may also be seen upon a marble slab taken from a cemetery of the Via Latina, accompanied by a house, a fish, by a doubtful object which has been taken wrongly for a candelabrum, and by a mummy set up in a niche. A monument of the same nature represents a balance with a weight. Another example is found in the Church of St. Cecilia at Rome.

Balance with Weight. (From the Catacombs.)

Some antiquaries have supposed that the balance is symbolical of judgment or justice. It is true that it is found, doubtless with this signification, on coins of Gordian, Diocletian, and other emperors of pagan Rome. The mediæval artists, again, have frequently made use of this idea; for instance, in the tympanum of the great doorway of Notre Dame in Paris, and in that of the cathedral of Autun, where it may be considered as a translation in sculpture of the words of the Apocalypse (xxii, 12). But in the first two instances which we have mentioned—almost the only examples transmitted to us by Christian antiquity properly so called—it is important to observe that mention is made of the contract entered into between the purchasers of the tombs and the fossores ("grave-diggers") Montanus and Calevius. It is therefore more natural to suppose that the balance symbolizes purchase and sale.

Sometimes upon tombs the balance is simply indicative of a trade; as, for example, on the slab of a Roman money-changer found in the Cemetery of St. Priscilla. Bronze balances were found in a Frankish sepulchre of the Merovingian period, where in all probability they indicated the tomb of a monetary officer, or fiscal agent, or accountant of some kind. This is rendered almost certain by the fact that a balance in the Faussett collection was found in the same tomb with a "touch-stone" for the trial of metals. Another was found in an ancient tomb in Kent.

Balanus (Ballvin, or Ballonus), a Christian saint celebrated on Sept. 3, is said by Colgan to have been brother of St. Gerald, and one of the four sons of Cusperius, king of England. Balanus and his brothers accompanied Colman, bishop of Lindisfarne, to Iona, and retired with him into Connaught, in Ireland. Balanus took up his residence at Techsaxon, parish of Ath-na-riogh. He flourished at the close of the 7th and the beginning of the 8th century. See Colgan, Life of St. Gerald; Grub, Eccl. History of Scotland, i, 88-97.

Balapatren, in the mythology of India, was an avatar of Vishnu. He lived as a penitent, not knowing himself that he was the god Vishnu. He sought to lead men to follow the good, and destroyed the giants—for instance, Vrutarassuram—whom he slew with his ploughshare. Others call him Bala-Rama (q. v.).

Balaram, one of the two images which are placed on either side of the Hindû idol Jaggernaut (q. v.), in the temple which stands on the sea-coast of Orissa. On each side of the great idol is an image, one part of which is painted white and the other yellow. The first is said to be Shubudra, the sister of Jaggernaut, and the other that of Balaram, his brother. The image of Balaram, painted white, is set up in a few temples alone. At the worship of Jaggernaut, and also at that of Krishna, a short service is performed in the name of Balaram.

Bala-Rama (or Balabhadra). Rama, in the mythology of India, was the son of Vasudeva and of the shepherdess Rogani, and step-brother of Krishna. Some make him an incarnation of the world-snake Adisseshen; others call him an incarnation of Vishnu, in which case he is one with Balapatras. He was a friend of Krishna, but also of Duryodan, chief of the Kurus; therefore he sought to hinder the war between the two. As he slew a Brahmin, he was obliged to begin a long pilgrimage as a mode of penance. In the meantime the war began between his friends, in which he, however, took no part after his return. In the downfall of the entire family of the Gadawer, he saw the end of himself and Krishna, and withdrew into seclusion, where the human form left him, and he was carried alive into Paradise.

Balasfi, THOMAS, a Hungarian theologian, lived at the commencement of the 17th century. He was born of a noble family, and was first rector, then bishop of Presburg. He wrote a work against Protestantism, Tsepregi Oskola, Mellyben a Lutheranus es Kolvinista (Posonii, 1616). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balassi, MARIO, an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1604; and studied first under Jacopo Ligozzi, and afterwards with Roseli. He copied Raphael's Transfiguration for Taddeo Barberini, who placed it in the Church of the Conception at Rome. He painted for several other churches in Rome. He died in 1667.

Baläus, a Syriac hymn-writer of the sixth century, has but recently become known to the public through Overbeck's edition of his hymns in S. Ephraemi Syri, Rabule, Balæiatorumque Opera Selecta (Oxford, 1865, p. 257-336). They were translated into German, with an introduction and notes, by G. Bickell, in the Kemptner Bibliothek der Kirchenväter, 1872, No. 67-108. See Bickell, Conspectus rei Syrorum Literariæ (Monast. 1871), p. 46, and his art. in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Balbi, GIOVANNI (called De Janua, or Jannensis, from his birthplace), was a Genoese monk of the Order of Brother Preachers, and lived near the close of the 13th century. He must not be confounded with another Genoese, his contemporary, of the Dominican Order—that is to say, with James (Giacomo), called De Voragine, the author of the Golden Legend. Balbi composed, about 1286, a kind of universal dictionary or encyclopædia, which treated of theology, natural history, orthography, prosody, etymology, jurisprudence, etc. This was entitled the Catholicon. Schöffer and Johann Faust published this in 1450, and it was several times republished. The author also wrote Dialogus de Questionibus Animæ ad Spiritum, and Opus Paschale: the latter work he prepared after having entered the Dominican Order. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Balbina is the name of two so-called Christian saints. (1.) Virgin, martyr at Rome, A.D. 130; commemorated March 31. (2.) Another whose natale is set down in Bede's Martyrology on Oct. 6.

Balbinus, ALOYSIUS BOLES LAUS, a Bohemian Jesuit, who was born at Königgrätz in 1611, and died in 1689, as professor of rhetoric at Prague, is the author of Examen Melissæum, seu Epigrammatum, Libri VI (Vienna, 1670):—Miscellanea Historica Regni Bohemæ (Prague, 1679):—De Parochiis et Sacerdotiis Bohemæ (ibid. 1683):—De Archiepiscopis Bohemæ (ibid. 1689). In MS. he left Historia Collegiorum Societatis Jesu. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 837; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Balboa, MIGUEL CAVELLO, a Spanish missionary, lived in the 16th century. He at first served in the wars of France, then embraced the ecclesiastical profession and went to America in 1566. He established himself at Santa Fé de Bogota, where one named Juan de Orozco acquainted him with numerous documents relating to American antiquities; this was without doubt the commencement of his work of research. Having come to Quito in 1576, he occupied himself with the historical antiquities of Peru, and was encouraged in this work by Don Pedro de Pena, bishop of the ancient capital. In 1586 his book, which he had entitled Miscellanea Austral, was finished and dedicated to Dom Fernando Torres of Portugal, count of Villar, viceroy of Peru. This was published under the title of Histoire de Pérou (Paris, 1840). It formed part of the valuable collection published by M. H. Ternaux-Compans. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balbuena, BERNARDO DE, bishop and poet of Spain, was born at Valdepenas in 1568. He accompanied his family to Mexico, and had scarcely attained his seventeenth year when he became remarkable for his poetic talent. After a time he returned to his native country, but he spent the remainder of his life at Jamaica, where he exercised the functions of judge, or at Porto Rico, where he became bishop. He was there in 1625, when the Dutch pillaged it, and lost a large library. He died at Porto Rico in 1627. He wrote Siglo de Oro en las Selvas de Eriphile (Madrid, 1608 and 1821). Another poem, entitled Grandeza Mexicana, was published (ibid. 1604). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balch, Hezekiah, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Hartford County, Md., in 1741. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1762, and was licensed to preach by the Newcastle Presbytery in 1768. He died in April, 1810. He was widely known in the Presbyterian Church as a preacher. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 309.

Balch, Hezekiah James, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Deer Creek in 1746. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1766; was licensed by the Donegal Presbytery in 1767; and was ordained by the same Presbytery in 1770. He spent his life laboring in the Southern States. He died in the summer of 1775. He was a man of fine personal appearance and an accomplished scholar. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 417.

Balch, Lewis P. W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Michigan, was rector, in 1853, of a church in Westchester, Pa. In 1854 he removed to Baltimore and officiated there for several years; in 1860 he began to officiate at the Church of the Holy Cross, Middletown, R. I.; in 1862 he was a professor in the Vermont Episcopal Institute, Burlington, Vt.; in 1864, was rector of Emmanuel Church, Newport, R. I.; in 1871, was rector of the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, Md.; in the following year removed to Plymouth, N. H.; and in 1873 went to London, Ontario. He died June 4, 1875, aged sixty-one years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

Balch, Stephen Bloomer, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Hartford County, Md., April 5, 1747. He was educated at the College of New Jersey, where he graduated in 1774. He was licensed to preach by the Donegal Presbytery in 1779, and spent several months in travelling as a missionary in the South. He died Sept. 7, 1833. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 408.

Balch, Thomas, a Congregational minister, was a native of Charlestown, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1733; was ordained pastor of the Church in Dedham, Mass., June 30, 1736; and died Jan. 8, 1774. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 15.

Balch, Thomas Bloomer, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Georgetown, D. C., Feb. 28, 1793, and was the son of Rev. Stephen B. Balch. He was prepared for college in the school in Georgetown, taught by the Rev. David Wiley. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1813. He then went to Leesburgh, Va., to visit a brother, and while there united with the Presbyterian Church, then under the pastoral care of the Rev. John Mines, with whom he afterwards studied theology for a year. In the fall of 1814 he entered Princeton Seminary, where he remained about two years and a half. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Baltimore, Oct. 31, 1816; and was afterwards ordained by the same Presbytery, Dec. 11, 1817, as an evangelist. From the spring of 1817 to the fall of 1819 he preached as assistant to his father, who was then pastor of the Church at Georgetown, D. C. July 19, 1820, he was installed as pastor of the churches of Snow Hill, Rehoboth, and Pitt's Creek, Md., where he spent nearly ten years in happy and useful labor. In 1824, by the action of the Synod of Philadelphia, he and his churches were included in the resuscitated Presbytery of Lewes. He continued to labor in Maryland as pastor of the three churches above named until 1829, after which he lived four years in Fairfax County, Va., preaching as he had opportunity. Then he removed to Prince William County, Va., and supplied for two years the Churches of Warrenton and Greenwich. April 28, 1836, he was received from Lewes Presbytery into Winchester Presbytery. For one year he was agent for the American Colonization Society, and traversed the state for that cause. For nine months he supplied the Church at Fredericksburg, Va.; then Nokesville Church four years, and Greenwich Church, Prince William Co., two years. He died Feb. 14, 1878, at the last-named place, which had been his residence for many years. Dr. Balch never was settled as pastor after he left Maryland, but preached in many places and did a large amount of miscellaneous work. He had a strongly literary taste, wrote much on many subjects, and published several volumes. At the time of his death he had been writing Letters of an Octogenarian, which were published in The Central Presbyterian of Richmond, Va. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 8. (W. P. S.)

Balch, William, a Congregational minister, was born in Beverly, Mass., in 1704; and was a graduate of Harvard College in the class of 1724. In 1728 he was ordained as the pastor of the Second Church in Bradford, Mass., where he remained until his death, Jan. 12, 1792. He published several discourses, among which was the Convention sermon of 1760. See Mass. Hist. Col. iv, 145; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Balchristy-People, a small party of strict Independents, formed in the village of Balchristy, in Scotland, by Mr. Smith, who, with Mr. Ferrier, both regular clergymen of the Scottish Church, left the Establishment about the time that the Glassites first appeared. From the statistical accounts published by Sir J. Sinclair, it would appear there is still a church of this name in the town of Perth.

Balcony is a name introduced into architecture by the Venetians and Genoese. It was originally a palcus, or advanced tower over a gate-house, intended to carry the machicolations. In the 15th century it was built as an ornament in front of private houses. At St. Bartholomew's, Smithfield, there is a glazed balcony; in the south-nave aisle of Westminster is one of timber—and both communicated with the superior's lodge. At Durham the old anchorage or porch in the north choir aisle was used by the prior to hear high-mass; it was reached by steps; and on the south side of the choir of St. Alban's a similar raised platform was discovered, which was probably used for the same purpose. At Westminster processions could be conveniently viewed from the projecting oriel.

Bald, ANDERS, a Swedish preacher, was born in 1679. He studied at Upsal, and became in 1747 pastor of the Church of St. Catherine at Stockholm. He died in 1751. He wrote, Dissertatio de Fatis Religionis in Scandia (Upsal, 1705):—Passiones Predikunigar (Stockholm, 1758):—Forklaring öfver Evangel. (ibid. 1761):—Betr. öfver Söndags Epistlarne (ibid. 1768). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldachin (Ital. baldacchino, from baldacca, cloth of Babylon or Bagdad) is a small dome which overshadows a high-altar, and is usually carried on four columns. It was formerly called the ciborium. The word in Italian and German is used as a synonym of the French crown and English canopy—an ornamental projection which covers the tops of stalls, doorways, niches, and windows. The canopy carried over the sovereign in processions was called a ceele, from cælum. Baldachin also designates the canopy which Italian bishops have a right to erect over their chairs in church. Another name for the baldachin was munera. See ALTAR. The ciborium was originally the receptacle of the host, dove or tower shaped, and suspended over the altar; but as luxury increased, under the name of tabernacle it extended itself into an architectural erection above the altar, like a canopy supported by four columns, forming four arches, over which were hung rich curtains reaching to the ground, and only drawn aside at certain periods of the mass. In the centre hung the vessel containing the host. Latterly, curtains were abolished, and the form became changed into that now called the baldachin. Justinian's ciborium at St. Sophia was of silver gilt, with a canopy of silver, topped by an orb of massive gold. It supported the altar-curtains, and was crowned with a cross, which subsequently was placed upon the altar itself. When there was no canopy of this kind, a covering of precious stuff or plain linen, such as was ordered by the Council of Cologne in 1280, adorned the altar. The baldachin was ornamented with tapers on festivals, and composed of marble, wood, stone, bronze, or precious metals. It was sometimes erected over tombs. Chrysostom says the silver shrines of Diana resembled small ciboria. In 567 the second Council of Tours ordered that the eucharist should be reserved, not in a little receptacle, like images, but under the cross which crowned the ciborium. Wren designed a baldachin for the altar of St.

Altar under a Baldachin.

Paul's. In St. Mark's Cathedral at Venice is a beautiful specimen, and another at Lugo; that of Toledo is of blue velvet. The baldachin at Gerona (1320-48) is of wood covered with plates of metal, and stands upon four shafts, supporting a flat quadripartite vault covered with small figures. At Brilley and Michael Church there are canopies of wood over the altar. See CIBORIUM.

Baldamus, JACOB CONRAD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1694 at Meitzendorf, near Magdeburg. He studied at Halle, and became his father's substitute at his native place. In 1765 he was appointed deacon at Mansfeld and assessor of the consistory at Eisleben, advanced in 1746 as general-superintendent, and died Feb. 5, 1755. He wrote, Dissertatio de Veritate Religionis Christianæ Judæorum Obrejectionibus Confirmata (Halle, 1718):—Meditatio Theologica de Arbore Scientiæ Boni et Mali, quod ab Eventu quem Deus Prævidit, Dictu sit, et quod Testetur, a Deo Præcautum atque Prævisum esse, ne Homo Peccaret (Magdeburg, 1732). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Baldechilda, Sr. See BATHILDA.

Baldegundis, a Christian saint, whose deposition at Poitiers is set down in the Hieronymian Calendar Feb. 11.

Baldelli, Niccolò, an Italian Jesuit, was born in 1589 at Cortona. For twenty years he occupied the chair of philosophy and theology at Rome, and died at his native place in 1655. Of his Disputationes ex Morali Theologia, five books were published at Lyons in 1637; four other books were published in 1644. See Mazzuchelli, ii, 1, 102; Steber, in Wetzzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Balderic. See BALDRICUS.

Baldericus (or Baudry), Sr., the brother of St. Beuve, built and founded the monastery of Montfaucon, in the diocese of Rheims, for monks. In 627 he also founded a nunnery in the neighborhood of Rheims, over which his sister presided. He died about 673, and was buried at Montfaucon.

Another of the same name, bishop of Noyon and Tournai, died in 1113. Baluze has given four of his epistles in the fifth volume of his Miscellanea.

Baldi. See BERNARD OF PAVIA.

Baldi, Accurzio, an Italian sculptor, born at Sansonino, in Tuscany, lived in 1584. He carved several angels in the Church of Santa Maria della Scala in Sienna. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldi, Antonio, an Italian designer and engraver, was born at La Cava, in the kingdom of Naples, about 1692, and studied first under Solimena, and then with Magliar. The following are some of his principal works: The Emperor Charles VI.—Don Carlos, King of the Two Sicilies.—The Communion of St. Mary of Egypt.—St. Gregory with the Subjects of Miracles.

Baldi, Bernardino, an Italian painter of the end of the 16th century, kept a well-frequented academy at Bologna, and left a large number of pictures in the churches of that city. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldi, Gerardo, an Italian theologian, native of Florence, taught logic and theology at Pisa, became counsellor of the Inquisition, then dean at Florence. He died Oct. 17, 1660. He wrote, Rerum Actualitas in Ordine ad Motum; Physica Disquisitio (Florence, 1642-44).—Dialecticæ Institutiones.—and Noxæ Opinandi Rutiones. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldi, Innocenzo, an Italian theologian, was born at Bologna in 1544. He was made doctor of theology in his native place, and taught in several Carmelite convents. He died in 1608. He wrote, among other works, Oratio de Laudibus Civitatis Parmæ (Parma, 1587). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldi, Lazzaro, an Italian painter, was born at Pistoia, in Tuscany, in 1623. He entered the school of Pietro da Cortona, and painted several pictures for the churches and public edifices of Rome. There is a fine work by him in the pontifical palace at Monte Cavallo representing David and Goliath; and in the Church of St. Luke an altar-piece of the Martyrdom of St. Lazzaro. He died in 1703.

Baldini, Pietro Paolo, an Italian painter, was born at Rome, and was a disciple of Pietro da Cortona. There are admirable pieces of work by him in the public edifices at Rome. His most commendable work is an altar-piece representing The Crucifixion in the Church of Sant' Eustachio.

Baldini, Tiburzio, a Bolognese painter, flourished about 1611. Averoldi says he executed some paintings for the churches and convents at Brescia, the best of which were The Marriage of the Virgin with St. Joseph and The Murder of the Innocents, in the Chiesa delle Grazie. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldock (Baldocke, Baldok, or Baudake), Ralph de, an English prelate, was educated at Merton College, Oxford. He became archdeacon of Middlesex in 1276, and dean of St. Paul's, London, in 1294. He also received the prebends of Holborn, Islington, and Newington. He was elected bishop of London Feb. 23, 1304, and the temporalities of his see were accorded to him June 1 of that year; but an appeal having been made to the pope against his election and confirmation, he was not consecrated until Jan. 30, 1306. He died at Stepney, July 24, 1313. He contributed two hundred marks towards building the Chapel of St. Mary on the east side of St. Paul's. He founded also a chantry of two priests in the same church near the altar of St. Erkenwald. He wrote Historia Anglica (not extant), and a Collection of the Statutes and Constitutions of the Church of St. Paul. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Baldock, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born at Wadhurst, Sussex, March 3, 1802. He was converted at the age of eighteen, and began soon after to preach in the surrounding villages. He entered upon the pastorate at Wivelsfield in April, 1841, where he continued to labor with eminent success until his death, Sept. 26, 1873. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1875, p. 274.

Baldov, JOHANN, a professor of Hebrew at Leipsic and Helmstädt, who died in 1662, is the author of, Medulla Grammat. Hebr. Buxtorffio-Erpenio-Trostiana in Succinctas Tabulas, Perspicuos Canones et Paucas Observe. Contracta (Leipsic, 1636; 4th ed. 1664).—Oratio de Linguae Hebr. Pronunciatione, etc. (ibid. 1638).—Specimen Coronidis ad Medullam Gramm. sive Dilucidarii Biblici quoad Rem Gramm. ex Lib. I Mosis Caput I Resolutum (Sleusing, 1639).—Elementale Hebr. (ibid. eod.). See Koenig, Bibliotheca Vetus et Nova; Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, s. v. (B. P.)

Baldovinetti, ALESSIO, a distinguished Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1442. He took to painting against his father's desire, and studied with such diligence that he surpassed all his contemporaries in minuteness of detail. His principal extant works are a Nativity in the Church of the Annunziati; an Altar-piece, No. 24, in the gallery of the Uffizi; and another, No. 2, in the gallery of ancient pictures in the Academy of Arts at Florence. The great work of his life was a series of frescos from the Old Test. in the chapel of the Gianfigliazzi family in the Church of Santa Trinità, containing many interesting contemporary portraits; but these were destroyed about 1760. He also designed a likeness of Dante for the Cathedral of Florence in 1465. See Vasari, Lives of the Most Eminent Painters, Sculptors, and Architects (ed. Lemonnier), iv, 101-107; Crowe and Cavalcaselle, History of Painting in Italy, ii, 372-381.

Baldred, Sr., was a Scotchman and disciple of St. Mungo, or Kentigern, of Glasgow. He inhabited a cell at Tynningham, in Haddingtonshire, and is said to have been eminent for his virtues and gift of miracles. For some years he inhabited a solitary island in the sea called Bass. According to Simeon of Durham, he died in 606-7. He taught the faith in the three parochial churches of Aldham, Tynningham, and Prestounne, which had been subjected to him by St. Mungo. After his death each of the three churches demanded his body; and when the people could not agree, being advised to pray God for a sign, it is said that on the morrow they found three bodies laid out each with the same pomp, and each congregation carried off one to its own church. The Church of St. Baldred of Tynningham had the right of sanctuary. At Preston Kirk some places adjoining the church still bear his name, — Baldred's Well and Baldred's Whill, an eddy in the river. See Colgan, Acta SS. p. 687, 694; Bede, Ecll. Hist. Pref. p. xxi, xxii; Forbes, Kal. of Scott. Saints, p. 273, 274.

Baldrey, J., an English engraver, lived about 1790, and executed some portraits and other subjects, in the chalk style, among which the best are, The Finding of Moses. — Dianna and her Nymphs. — The Benevolent Physician.

Baldric (Baldry, or Baudrey) is (1) a bell-rope; (2) the leathern strap for suspending the clapper from the staple in the crown of a bell.

Baldricus (Baldericus, or Baudrius Aurelianensis, Burgulensis, Dolensis), a French Benedictine, was a native of Meun-sur-Loire, educated at Angers, and afterwards abbot of Bourgueil, about 1047. He attended the Council of Clermont in 1095, and in 1108 was made archbishop of Dol, in Bretagne. He died at a great age, Jan. 7, 1131. He wrote Historia Hierosolymitana, in four books, in which he narrates the deeds of the Western Christians in the East from the year 1095 to the death of king Godfrey, in 1100. This history is given in the Gesta Dei per Francos, i, 81. Baldricus also wrote a Life of Hugo, Archbishop of Rouen, which is contained in the Neustria Pia of Du Moustier, p. 282. The first-named work is to be depended on, but the last is said to be full of fictions. His Account of the Monastery of Feschamp is also given by Du Moustier, p. 227; and Surius and Bollandus (Feb. 26) have preserved his Life of S. Robert d'Arbrissel, the Founder of the Order of Fontevrault. Bollandus gives (Feb. 14) Translatio itidem et Miracula Capitis S. Valentini Martyris. His Gesta Pontificum Dolensium, from St. Samson to his own time, and his book De Visitatione Infirmorum, are still in MS. His epistle De Bonis Monasterii S. Florentii is in the Spicilegium of D'Achery, iii, 459; and he is said to have written a Latin poem on the Conquest of England by William of Normandy. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 194; Biog. Univ. iii, 267; Thurot, Revue Historique, 1876, i, 372 sq.; Peters, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baldrige, SAMUEL, a Presbyterian minister, was born in North Carolina, March 21, 1780. He studied in a school of Samuel Doak, afterwards chartered as Washington College. Oct. 5, 1807, he was licensed at Salem Church, Tenn., and was appointed to supply within the bounds of the Presbytery until the next stated meeting. Oct. 11, 1808, he was ordained pastor of the united churches of Rock Spring and Glade Spring. In 1809 he was appointed commissioner from the Presbytery of Abingdon to the General Assembly. In 1810, at his request, he was dismissed to the Presbytery of Washington, Synod of Kentucky. He settled at Lawrenceburg, Ind. It was missionary ground, and there were no means of support, and for this purpose he opened a school, academical in its grade. He was appointed to supply steadily at Lawrenceburg and Whitewater, and thus he continued for two years teaching, and preaching in private houses. In this time he organized several churches. Sept. 12, 1812, he was appointed to spend two weeks in the vacancies above Dayton. During his residence at Lawrenceburg he studied medicine, that he might support himself in the missionary work. In 1814 he was appointed as stated supply of Washington for one half of his time, and of London for one fourth. In 1815 he supplied London and Treacle's Creek. In the same year the Presbytery appointed him to labor ten days on Paint Creek, Deer Creek, Big and Little Darby, and the headwaters of the Miami. April 8, 1818, he was dismissed to the Presbytery of Lancaster. The next spring he received a call to the churches of Chandlerville, New Cumberland, and New Concord. This relation continued until April, 1823, when he was released from the first two, but continued at New Concord until 1824. He then removed to Jeromeville, in the bounds of the Presbytery of Richland, and took charge of the congregation; he also gave one third of his time to Parryville and the same to Rehoboth. In 1828 he was dismissed to Wabash Presbytery, and then, in division, was set off in Crawfordsville Presbytery. In 1832 he was dismissed to the Presbytery of Vincennes. He then took charge of Honey Creek and New Hope churches. He preached at Kalida, O., and at Dillsborough, Ind. He died Feb. 29, 1860. See Norton, Hist. of the Presbyterian Church in Illinois.

Balduin OF PADERBORN (known as Balduinus Parochus), a curate of that city who lived about 1418, composed a Universal History from the earliest times to his own day. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balduin, archbishop of TRIER, 1308–1354, was born in 1285 of a noble family. At the age of thirteen he went to Paris to complete his studies there. In 1304, on account of the war between France and Flanders, he was obliged to leave the school. About this time he joined as provost the metropolitan chapter at Trier. After the death of archbishop Gerhard II, of Mayence (1305), the bishop of Basle, Peter Aichspalt, used his influence with pope Clement V in behalf of Balduin; but, instead of the latter, Aichspalt himself was obliged to occupy the see of St. Boniface. Having returned to Paris, Balduin spent two more years there in preparing for the ministry. Being engaged with his theological and canonistic studies, he learned that archbishop Diether, of Trier, had died Nov. 23, 1307, and that he was to succeed him. Balduin, not having the canonical age—being only twenty-two years old—was dispensed by pope Clement, who consecrated him on March 11. On June 2, 1308, he took possession of his cathedral. King Albrecht having been murdered by his nephew, the duke John, Balduin's brother, count Henry of Luxembourg, was elected, whom the archbishop assisted everywhere. After having served his church and country faithfully, Balduin died Jan. 21, 1354. He edited, in 1344, Ordinarius Horarum et Missarum. See Wyttenbach, Gesta Trevirorum; Brower et Masenii, Antiq. et Annal. Trev.; Sörz, Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Trier; Lorenzi, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Balduin, François, a famous French jurist, was born at Arras, Jan. 1, 1520, and died Oct. 24, 1574, at Paris. For a time he was tutor of Charles of Bourbon. In 1564 William of Orange called him to the Netherlands, to bring about a harmony of existing religious differences. His publication of Cassander's De Officio Pii et Publice Tranquillitatis Vere Amantis Viri in hoc Religionis Dissidio (Basileæ, 1561) entangled him in a controversy with Calvin. He published also, Minucii Felicis Octavius, in quo agitur Veterum Christianorum Causa, Restitutus (Heidelberg, 1560), in which he shows that the authorship belongs to Minucius Felix and not to Arnobius:—Discours sur le Fait de la Réforme (Paris, 1564):—S. Optati libri sex de Schismate Donatistarum cum Balduini Prefatione (ibid. 1563); in the preface he tries to show the identity of the Calvinistic schisma with that of the Donatists:—Historia Carthaginiensis Collationis olim habitæ inter Catholicos et Donatistas (ibid. 1566) (reprinted by Migne, P. P. Cat. xi, 1439 sq.). See Riiss, Concertien, ii, 176; Nicéron, Mémoires, xxviii; Kaulen, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Balduin, Friedrich, a Lutheran doctor and professor of theology in Germany, was born at Dresden, Nov. 17, 1575. He studied at Wittenberg, and attended, in 1601, the Conference at Ratisbon. In 1602 he was appointed deacon at Freiburg, in 1603 superintendent at Oelsnitz, and in 1604 professor of theology at Wittenberg, taking, at the same time, the degree of doctor of theology. In 1607 he was appointed superintendent at Wittenberg, and in the same year assessor of the consistory. He died March 1, 1627. He wrote, Comment. in Prophet. Hag., Zachar., et Malachiam (published in Schmidii Comment. in Prophet. Minores [Leipsic, 1698]):—Comment. in Omnes Epistolas Paulinas (Frankfort, 1644 a. o.):—De Communionis sub utraque Specie (Wittenberg, 1610):—Tractatus de Casibus Conscientiæ (ibid. 1628):—Comment. ad Edicta Veterum Principum Romanorum de Christianis (Halle, 1627):—Hist. Carthaginens. Collationis, seu Disputationis de Ecclesia olim Habitæ inter Catholicos et Donatistas, etc. See Witte, Memoriæ Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. (index). (B. P.)

Balduini (Rithovius), MARTIN, first bishop of Ypres, was born at Kampen, in Brabant. In 1562 he attended the Council of Trent; and in 1570 presided in a synod held at Mechlin, in the absence of cardinal Granvelle. In 1577 he held a synod at Ypres, and published the constitutions agreed on. His death occurred at St. Omer, 1583. He left a Commentary on the Master of the Sentences, and a work entitled Manuale Pastorum.

Baldulf. See BADULF.

Baldung, HANS (or Gruen), a German painter and engraver, was born about 1495, at Gmünd, in Suabia. There are a number of his paintings in the cathedral at Freiburg. The following are a few of his principal paintings: Adam and Eve in Paradise, Eve Plucking the Apple:—The Fall of Adam:—Christ and the Twelve Apostles:—Bacchus Drunk, near a Tun:—An Incantation. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Baldur, in Norse mythology, was the son of Odin and Frigga, highly honored as the most beautiful and benevolent of the Asas. His beauty was so extraordinary that there was a continual flame of fire about him, and his face shone with the brightness of the sun. He was full of eloquence, and so just that a decision made by him could not be changed. Besides all this, he was valiant and fearless; but at times frightful dreams would make him uneasy, therefore his mother adjured all things in the world not to harm him. This had been done at the advice of Odin, who had gone to the infernal regions to ask the Nornes about the dreams, and the latter had said that Baldur's destruction had been decided upon, but Odin thought to counteract it by the above advice. However, even the deities fall a prey to fate, and thus Baldur could no more escape fate than Odin himself. Frigga had exacted an oath of all plants save the young twig misletoe, which seemed too weak and insignificant to the goddess to subject it to such a strong oath. Loke (q. v.) had learned this secret from the queen, and at his bidding the twig grew. When, therefore, Baldur, knowing that he was invulnerable, gave a festival to the Asas, at which they shot at him and threw stones and lances without causing any injury, Loke went among them and placed the twig in the hand of the blind Hödur, the brother of Baldur, directed his arm to the place where Baldur stood, and the latter fell to the ground. In order to show the young god the greatest respect, it was decided to burn his body on his beautiful ship, the Ringhorn. But before the deities took this step, their sorrow was increased by the death of the lovely Nanna, Baldur's wife, who died of anguish for her husband. Two funeral piles were made on the ship, therefore, and it was decided to move it, and set fire to it from all sides. But it could not be moved from the spot. In this difficulty the Asas sent for the giantess Hyrokian, who was a great sorceress. She came riding on a fierce wolf. She drew near to the ship and gave it so powerful a push that it floated far out into the sea, and the planks, by the friction, caught fire. Thor thereupon became so exasperated that he would have crushed the giantess with his hammer, Miölnir, if the other Asas had not stepped between; but as his awakened anger would not subside without the shedding of blood, it was necessary to make a sacrifice. This was the dwarf Litur, who came in his way when lighting the funeral piles. He took him, therefore, and threw him into the fire. All the Asas, many Jotes, Rhimtusses, and dwarfs were present at the solemnities. They each sacrificed something costly by throwing it into the flames. Odin also threw a costly golden ring into the fire, but it was found afterwards uninjured, and Baldur had given it the attribute that, on every ninth night, eight equally beautiful golden rings would drop from it; wherefrom it received the name Drupner (dropper). Subsequent to the funeral, Frigga said that he who desired her special favor should go to Hela (the goddess of death) and offer her a ransom for the return of her son to the world. Hermode, Baldur's brother, offered to undertake the task, and for this purpose he received his father's eight-footed horse Sleipner, on which he rode for nine days and nights through deep, dark vales and caves, until he came to the river of hell, and crossed the bridge. He was informed that in order to find Baldur he must keep to the right on the street of the dead. He did so, and came to the hedge which encircles hell. He girded his horse tighter, took a start, leaped over, and there found his brother on a stately throne in the dwelling of Hela. He asked the latter to permit his younger brother to return with him to the upper world. Hela said she did not wish a ransom, but if all things were sorry for him she would let him return; if, however, there was one living or dead creature that did not sorrow for him, he must remain. Hermode returned with rich presents and poor comfort; but the heralds sent out returned with the cheering news that even the stones wept for him. The fast of the heralds, however, found in a certain cave an old woman who positively refused to grieve for Baldur. The mischievous Loke was said to live there in this form, and thus he not only caused Baldur's death, but also prevented his resurrection. Therefore the young god must remain in Helheim until the end of the world, when he will come forth to build Gimle (heaven) with his brother.

Baldwin, Abraham, a Congregational minister, was born at Goshen, Conn., May 1, 1792. He graduated at Yale College in 1820. In June, 1822, he was licensed as a candidate for the ministry by the North Association of Litchfield County, and in the same year was accepted by the Domestic Missionary Society as an evangelist. In this work he was most successful, and in January, 1824, he was ordained as an evangelist by the Northwestern Association of Vermont at Essex, Chittenden Co. Mr. Baldwin, hearing of the spiritual destitution of the French population in Lower Canada, resolved to give himself to the work of doing them good. But upon this service he was not permitted to enter. Shortly after reaching Montreal he was seized with illness, which in a few weeks terminated his valuable life, July 12, 1826. He was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost, and through his instrumentality "much people was added unto the Lord." See Christian Spectator, Sept. 1827, p. 449.

Baldur and Hödur.

Baldwin, Benjamin, a Baptist minister, was born in or near Sandisfield, Mass., in 1758. In early life he became a member of the Second Church in Sandisfield, by which Church he was licensed, and was ordained its pastor June 9, 1790. This was his only pastorate, and continued without interruption for twenty years, his death, which was caused by an apoplectic fit, taking place July 24, 1810. "He left behind him the character of an able, faithful, and successful preacher of the Gospel; beloved by his own flock, respected by all who knew him, and greatly lamented in his death." See Rev. J. Torrey Smith's Centennial Discourse. (J. C. S.)

Baldwin, Burr, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Weston, Fairfield Co., Conn., Jan. 19, 1779. He entered Yale College in 1805, and graduated in 1809. After finishing his theological course, he taught in an academy for a number of years, and was licensed to preach by the Litchfield Association in 1816. From 1821 to 1823 he served as a missionary in Northern New Jersey. His work was characterized by a powerful revival, in which upwards of two hundred souls were converted. At the close of the year he was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, Pa. He was instrumental in the erection of the First Presbyterian Church of that place. A revival followed his labors and many were converted. Leaving Montrose, he was installed pastor of the Church of North Hartford, Conn., and subsequently supplied the Church at Ashfield. Revivals attended his labors in all places. He was in many respects a remarkable man. During the war of the Rebellion, he served as post-chaplain at Beverly, W. Va., and at the age of seventy-six served as a missionary in South-eastern New York, whence he returned to Montrose, where he died, Jan. 23, 1880. See Presbyterian Banner, Jan. 30, 1880; (N. Y.) Evangelist. (W. P. S.)

Baldwin, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New Lebanon, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1821. He received an early Christian training; professed religion at the age of fifteen; was licensed to preach in 1843, and recommended to the Black River Conference. He died March 12, 1879. Mr. Baldwin was a diligent student, an original thinker, a man of positive and outspoken convictions, and was instrumental in bringing many to Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 60.

Baldwin, Charles R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Stockbridge, Mass., March 17, 1803. He received an excellent early education; emigrated to Virginia in young manhood, and became a successful lawyer; experienced conversion in 1833, united with the Presbyterians, and a few months later withdrew and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Shortly afterwards he received license to exhort, and in 1834 united with the Ohio Conference. In 1838, in addition to his pulpit labors, he was induced to take charge of the Methodist Seminary at Parkersburg. He died in 1841. Mr. Baldwin was a devoted Christian, a warm and sympathetic preacher, an affectionate and generous parent, and a firm and constant friend. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1841, p. 148.

Baldwin, David, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Feb. 4, 1780. He studied under bishop Jarvis, and was ordained deacon in 1807, and priest in 1809. His first cure was the parish of Christ Church, Guilford, together with the parishes in Branford and North Guilford; subsequently he officiated in North Branford and Killingworth until disabled by bodily infirmities. He died at Guilford, Conn., Aug. 2, 1862. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 149.

Baldwin, Edwin, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Georgia in 1828. He emigrated to Mobile, Ala., in early life; served as volunteer in the Mexican War; studied and taught elocution for some time after the war; experienced conversion in 1850; immediately began preaching, and in 1854 was admitted into the Alabama Conference, in which he served till his decease, Jan. 9, 1866. Mr. Baldwin made himself an orator and a scholar by his own exertions. There was a soldierly manner in his preaching that made him very popular and powerful. He was brave, yet meek; stern, yet loving. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 39.

Baldwin, Eli, D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Hackensack, N. J., in 1794. He graduated at the University College of Medicine in 1817, and at the New Brunswick Seminary in 1820. He was then ordained as a missionary to Georgetown, D. C., 1822-24; was missionary agent in New Jersey and Pennsylvania during 1824-25, and in Houston Street, New York city, 1825-39, when he died. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 170.

Baldwin, George, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Cleobury-Mortimer, Shropshire, about 1763. He labored diligently and successfully as a local preacher. In 1786 he was appointed to travel in Glamorganshire, and continued in the work for twenty-four years. He died at Burslem during the session of the Conference in London, July 30, 1810. "He lived and died as a Christian minister should." See Wesleyan Meth. Magazine, 1811, p. 321; Minutes of the British Conference, 1811; Smith, Hist. of Wesleyan Methodism, ii, 503.

Baldwin, Jeremiah, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Stafford, Vt., in 1798, and while a child removed to Bethany, N. Y. His early life was one of hardship and self-denial. While keeping a public-house in Ellington, he was converted in 1832, and at once began to hold meetings and exhort others to become Christians. He was licensed in 1833, and for many years preached in Ellington and the surrounding towns. He was ordained in 1840. Being diffident about receiving anything for his ministerial services, it is said that not so much as ten dollars were paid to him during all his term of service for preaching. He removed to Hillsdale, Mich., in 1861, where he resided during nearly all the remainder of his life. At that time Rev. Dr. E. B. Fairfield, his son-in-law, was president of Hillsdale College. Mr. Baldwin died in Byron, Shiawassee Co., Mich., March 8, 1878. See Morning Star, May 22, 1878. (J. C. S.)

Baldwin, John (1), a Methodist Episcopal minister, entered the itinerancy, according to Sprague's Annals in 1782, and according to the General Minutes in 1784, and was appointed to Yadkin. His after-appointments were: 1785, Wilmington; 1786, Guilford; 1787, New Hope; 1788, Salisbury; 1789, Holston; 1790, Cententry; 1791, Amelia; 1792, Brunswick; 1793, Sussex; in 1794 he was book-steward at Banks; in 1795 book-steward at Bedford; in 1796-97 book-steward for the western part of Virginia. The latter part of his life is wrapped in obscurity. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1784-97; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 162.

Baldwin, John (2), a Congregational minister, was born in Crawfordsville, Ind., April 15, 1843. After spending two terms in Wabash College, he was ordained, about 1873, in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Soon after he changed his ecclesiastical relation, and in 1879 became acting pastor of the First Congregational Church in Leavenworth, Kan., where he died, May 10, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 17.

Baldwin, Moses, a Presbyterian minister, was a graduate of Princeton in 1757, and after graduating studied theology. He was admitted to a master's degree at Dartmouth in 1791, and was licensed by Suffolk Presbytery. On June 17, 1761, he was ordained and settled over a Congregational Church in Palmer, Mass. He remained as pastor of this Church until June 19, 1811, when he resigned. He died in 1813. He was faithful and diligent in discharging the duties of his office. His preaching was very impressive. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Baldwin, Samuel, a Congregational minister, was born in Sudbury, Mass., and graduated at Harvard College in 1752; was ordained at Hanover, Dec. 1, 1756, and died in 1784. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 286.

Baldwin, Samuel Davies, D.D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Worthington, O., Nov. 24, 1818. He graduated with high honor at Woodward College, Cincinnati, O.; experienced conversion while a student at college, and in 1842 entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1848 he was transferred to the Tennessee Conference, and continued one of its most active and efficient workers until his decease, Oct. 8, 1866. Thousands of conversions testified to his ministerial qualifications. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 57.

Baldwin, Theron, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Goshen, Conn., July 21, 1801. While a school-teacher, he was converted and united with the Church, and a year later, when he was twenty-one years old, he began preparation for college under the tuition of his pastor, Rev. Joseph Harvey, D.D. In a little more than a year he entered Yale College, and duly graduated in 1827, when he immediately began study in the theological department. He was especially conspicuous in the organization of a society among the students for the evangelization of the Mississippi valley and points beyond. All arrangements were completed in the spring of 1829, and efforts were at once begun to procure the funds for the contemplated seminary in Illinois, which was a part of the scheme of the organization. In a few months the requisite sum (ten thousand dollars) was pledged to the cause. Mr. Baldwin and Rev. J. M. Sturtevant were ordained at Woodbury, Conn., Aug. 27, 1829, and set apart for the work in Illinois, for which state they immediately departed; and Illinois College was founded at Jacksonville by these two men. Mr. Baldwin at the same time began preaching at Vandalia, and subsequently organized the first Illinois Sunday-school Union at Jacksonville, of which he was appointed secretary. In 1831 the trustees of Illinois College selected him as agent to solicit funds for the institution in the East; and two years after he returned to Illinois, and entered the service of the American Home Missionary Society as an agent for reaching the emigrants moving westward. Meantime, Capt. Benjamin Godfrey was proposing to found the Monticello Female Academy and was urging Mr. Baldwin to become its principal. Accepting the position, he dissolved his connection with the American Home Missionary Society in 1837, and for the rest of his life was directly identified with education in the new states, and was not inaptly called a "missionary educator." He died at Orange, N. J., April 10, 1870. See Cong. Quarterly, 1875, p. 213.

Baldwin, Thomas, a Congregational minister, was born in Cavendish, Vt., Sept. 30, 1797. He was for twelve years a farmer in Plymouth, Vt. He studied theology with Rev. W. C. Burnap of Chester, and Rev. Justin Parsons of Weston. He was ordained June 15, 1836, at Peru, Vt., and resigned in 1845, but continued to fill the pulpit until July 10, 1849, when, after a pastorate of thirteen years, he removed to Plymouth, where he was acting pastor until September, 1851. In 1852 he went to San Antonio, Tex., but in May, 1853, again returned to Plymouth, where he remained as acting pastor until January, 1858. He then successively was acting pastor at Lowell, Vt., from 1858 to 1861; then again at Plymouth from 1862 to 1873, and South Wardsborough in 1874. He was without charge at Plymouth until 1875, when he went to live with his son. He died in Clarksburg, West Va., May 26, 1878. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 37. (W. P. S.)

Baldwin, Truman, a Presbyterian minister, was born at East Granville, Mass., Sept. 27, 1780. He fitted for college in his native town, and graduated at New Haven in 1802. He then studied theology for three years. The Hampshire South Association licensed him in 1804, and, full of the missionary spirit, he went to a vacant field in Vermont, and then, in 1807, undertook a pastorate at Charlotte in that state. His seven years there were highly prosperous. In 1815 he accepted the invitation to the recently organized Church at Pompey East Hollow, N. Y. Here he labored thirteen years, and then, in 1829, took charge at Cicero. During his residence in both of these places, he did much mission work, established several churches, and helped four candidates for the ministry to enter college. Ill-health caused him to suspend his activity for a time. He resumed labor at East Aurora for one year and at Darien Centre for another year, and then accepted a call to Somerset, Niagara Co., where he spent four years. Unable to continue the pastoral work, he opened a classical school at Middlefort, and promoted religion in the community so that a flourishing Presbyterian Church sprang up. He died at Cicero, N. Y., July 27, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 272; Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 456.

Baldwin (or Baldwyn), William, an English schoolmaster and divine of the 16th century, was born in the West of England, and spent several years at Oxford in the study of logic and philosophy. He is said to have followed printing in order to promote the Reformation. Among his various literary labors, he was one of the editors of the Mirror for Magistrates. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Baldwin, William H., a Universalist minister, was born about 1802. He embraced Universalism early in life; engaged in mercantile pursuits in early manhood; studied and practiced law; and subsequently obtained a fellowship of the Ballou Association, under whose auspices he preached till the close of his life at Blanchester, O., Nov. 19, 1852. Mr. Baldwin was an upright man, a warm friend, an active citizen and patriot, and a faithful Christian. See Universalist Register, 1864, p. 19.

Balentine, HAMILTON, a Presbyterian minister, was born January, 1817, at Churchtown, Lancaster Co., Pa. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Feb. 2, 1848, and ordained as an evangelist by the same presbytery, May 29, 1848. He prepared for college at Lawrenceville, N. J. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1845, and in the same year entered Princeton Seminary, and graduated in 1848. Having devoted his life to the foreign missionary work, and an urgent call having come for help to the Indian missions, he went to Kowetah, a station among the Creek Indians, and devoted himself to this work. Next year he was appointed to assist in giving instruction at Spencer Academy, among the Choctaws. In 1852 he opened a school for females among the Chickasaws. He also had charge of the boarding-school, and labored as an evangelist in the surrounding country. He died Feb. 21, 1876. See Necrolog. Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1878, p. 55.

Balestra, ANTONIO, an Italian painter, was born at Verona in 1666, and studied three years under Antonio Belucci. In 1694 he gained the prize of the Academy of St. Luke, and was employed to paint several pictures for the churches and palaces of Rome. Balestra established a school in Venice, and his example and lectures promoted the fame of that school. In the Church of Santa Maria Mater Domini at Venice is one of his best works, representing the Nativity; and in the Church of Sant' Ignazio at Bologna is a picture by him of the Virgin and Infant, with St. Ignatius and St. Stanislaus. His other works are, Two Soldiers—one standing, the other sitting:—The Virgin Mary in the Clouds with St. John:—The Three Angels with Abraham.

Bal-Esvara, in the mythology of India, was the surname of Siva, under which the Siva cultus spread far to the west. The fruitful portion of the god, the Linga, has been distributed among thirty-one parts of the earth; the largest part, called Bal-Linga, was given to the shore of the Kamudvati (Euphrates). This myth is designed to express that the Linga of Bal (Baal) was born again as Bal-Esvara. He ruled, worshipped by all, under the name of Lil-Esvara (the joy imparting), in Nineveh (as king Ninus). His wife, Paravadi, had divorced herself from him because of his unfaithfulness, and had fled to the North-land, where she was worshipped as fire-queen, enclosed in a Sami-tree, as Samirama (Semiramis). Bal-Esvara found her in Askalastan (Askalon). They united again and lived on the shore of Hradanieta (Tigris). Others relate that they inhabited certain wild districts, in the form of doves, under the names of Kapot-Eswara and Kapot-Esi.

Balfour, John, a Scottish clergyman, was elected to the see of Brechin in 1470, and assisted in the consecration of bishop Livingston of Dunkeld. John was also bishop in 1501. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 164.

Balfour, Robert, D.D., a Scotch divine, was born in Edinburgh about 1747, and was educated in that city. After being licensed to preach, he was presented to the parish of Lecroft, where he officiated for about five years; and in 1779 he was removed to the Outer High-Church, in the city of Glasgow, which charge he held till his death, Feb. 13, 1818. Dr. Balfour was a man of sterling piety, of kind disposition, and of much power in the pulpit. During a long life he maintained an unblemished reputation, and discharged his duties as a Christian minister with rare fidelity. See The Christian Herald (New York), 1818, p. 634.

Bali, in Hindû mythology, was a mighty ruler of India who reigned in the second periodic age; and, as he was a great philosopher and disciple of Sakra, he carried the name of Mahabali Sakrawati. He was descended from the family of the Erunia, was a grandson of Pragaladen, and was held identical with Baali. The latter was a favorite of Brahma, and, with his assistance, he conquered the whole earth. He would even have besieged heaven if Vishnu had not come to the assistance of the god of the sun, Indra. Bali acknowledged his nothingness and frailty, became humble and pious, and begged Vishnu, clasping his knees, to be allowed to remain continually in his presence. The god granted his petition, and made him ruler of the infernal regions (named Balisatma, after him), where Bali has his perpetual abode. During the cold season Brahma is with him; during the hot season, in which all things would die, Vishnu is his protection. The preserver and destroyer, Siva, remains at his side when the rain overflows all things. His great festival is celebrated in September, at which time of the year spring begins in Malabar. Among the ruins of Mawalipuram and in the river Mavaliganga his name is believed to be found; and it is thought that Bali was a half-historic person, and that he was a great conqueror.

Related to Bali, or possibly identical with him, is Baali, king of the Affen, an incarnation of the god Indra, the sun.

Balinese Version of the Scriptures. Balinese is a language spoken in the island of Bali, which lies to the east of Java; being about seventy miles long, and containing a population of about three quarters of a million. It is but recently that the people of Bali received a part of the Gospel in their vernacular, viz. the Gospel of St. Mark; the translation of which was undertaken by the Rev. R. Van Eck, of the Utrecht Missionary Society, in 1875, and printed in 1877. (B. P.)

Balinghem, ANTOINE DE, a French Jesuit and educator, was born at St. Omer in 1571, and died at Rysel, Jan. 24, 1630. He wrote, Loci Communes S. Scripturæ (2 vols. fol.):—Summarium Vitæ S. Franc. Xaverii:—Series Canonizationis S. Ignatii:—De Sanguine Christi, nostræ Redemptionis Pretio:—Meditationes in Hymnum Veni Creator Spiritus, etc. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Swertii Athenæ Belgicæ; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Balisatma, in Hindû mythology, is the empire of Bali, or the world below; otherwise called Padulam.

Balkh, the ancient Bactra or Zariaspa, was formerly a great city; but is now, for the most part, a mass of ruins, situated on the right bank of the Adiriah or Balkh river, in a large and fertile plain eighteen hundred feet above the sea. The ruins, which occupy a space of about twenty miles in circuit, consist chiefly of fallen mosques and decayed buildings of sunburnt bricks. The antiquity and greatness of the place are recognised by the native populations, who speak of it as the Mother of Cities. Its foundation is mythically ascribed to Kaiomurs, the Persian Romulus; and it is at least certain that, at a very early date, it was the rival of Ecbatana, Nineveh, and Babylon. For a long time the city and country were the central seat of the Zoroastrian religion, the founder of which is said to have died within its walls. It was the seat of the principal Persian pyræum, or fire temple, and the residence of the archimagus, or chief priest. In the 7th century there were in the city and vicinity about a hundred Buddhist convents, with three thousand devotees; and there were also a large number of stupas and other religious monuments. In the 10th century Balkh is described as built of clay, with ramparts and six gates, and extending half a parasang (about two miles). There were several important commercial routes from the city, stretching as far east as India and China. See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.

Balkis, in Oriental mythology, was the name of the queen of Sheba, according to the traditions of the Arabs. She was the daughter of Hadad, the twenty-first king of Yemen. Through the bird Hudhud, Solomon and the queen wrote each other most loving letters, until Balkis began a journey—which the imagination of the Orientals describes as the most magnificent ever seen by gods and men—and came to Solomon, whereupon they were married.

Ball, in Hindû mythology, is a spirit with three heads, reigning in the east of hell. He teaches the science of making one's self invisible. Sixty-six legions of spirits are his servants.

Ball, Charles B., a Congregational minister, was born in Lee, Mass., in 1826. Graduating at Williams College in 1846, he entered upon the practice of law in Springfield, Mass. He afterwards studied theology at East Windsor, Conn., and was ordained at Wilton in 1858, where he only preached a year, dying Jan. 27, 1859. See Congregational Quarterly, 1859, p. 225.

Ball, Dyer, M.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at West Boylston, Mass., June 3, 1796. He was educated at Yale College; studied theology at New Haven Seminary, and subsequently at Andover, Mass.

In 1831 he was licensed by a Congregational council, and became pastor of a Congregational Church. In 1833 he was sent to Florida as agent for the Home Missionary Society. In 1837 he graduated at the Medical College of Charleston, S. C., and in 1838 was sent as a missionary to China, where his great life-work was performed. He died March 27, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 121.

Ball, Eli, a Baptist minister, was born in Marlborough, Vt., Nov. 2, 1786, and united with a church in Boston in 1805. Having pursued a course of theological study under private instruction, he preached for several years in Harwich, Mass.; Wilmington and Lansingburg, N. Y.; and Middletown, Conn. He removed South in 1823, and was successively pastor in Lynchburg, Va., and of a church in Henrico County, in which latter place he remained seven or eight years. He performed much service for several of the organizations of his denomination in Virginia and Georgia; was for a short time a professor in Richmond College and editor of the Richmond Herald. In 1848 he visited Africa, for the purpose of gaining information regarding the Liberatorian mission. As he was preparing to make another visit, he died in Richmond, July 21, 1853. See Baptist Encyclop. p. 64, 65. (J. C. S.)

Ball, Eliphalet, a Presbyterian minister, graduated at Yale. In 1763 he was assigned by the synod to the Presbytery of Dutchess County. He was dismissed from his charge at Bedford in December, 1768, and in 1772 resumed it and remained till 1784. Having spent four years at Amity, in Woodbridge, Conn., he removed with a part of the Bedford Congregation, in 1788, to Saratoga County. The settlement is known as Balls-ton. He died in 1797. See Webster, List. of the Presb. Church in Amer. 1857.

Ball, Heman, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at West Springfield, Mass., in 1764. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1791; studied theology under Dr. Lathrop of West Springfield, and was ordained pastor of the Church in Rutland, Vt., Feb. 1, 1797. He died Dec. 17, 1821. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 537.

Ball, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Fairfax County, Va., Sept. 1, 1812. He received an early religious training, experienced conversion at the age of fifteen, and in 1837 was admitted into the Baltimore Conference, in which he labored faithfully until his decease, Feb. 15, 1846. Mr. Ball was a young man of great promise, being strong in body and mind, and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1846, p. 8.

Ball, Mason, a Baptist minister, was born in West Boylston, Mass., Sept. 20, 1798, and was a graduate of Union College in the class of 1828. During the years 1830-31, he acted as an agent of the American Baptist Missionary Union, and in 1832-33 supplied churches in New Bedford, Middleborough, and Bellingham, Mass. He was ordained in his native place, Sept. 26, 1833, and preached at Amherst, Mass., from the time of his ordination until Oct. 20, 1836. On closing his engagement with the Church in Amherst, he became pastor of the Church in Princeton, Mass., where he remained until March, 1841, and then removed to Amherst, N. H., where he was pastor three years, 1841-44. He then accepted a call to Southborough, Mass., and subsequently returned to Amherst, Mass., both these pastorates covering a period of about six years (1844-50). His last pastorate was in Wilmington, Vt., continuing from Sept. 7, 1851, to Aug. 7, 1853. He removed to Amherst, Mass., in 1853, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1874. (J. C. S.)

Ball, Reuben, a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about the year 1780. He was ordained and became pastor of the Church in Hartford, Me., in 1811.

Here he remained not far from a year, and then was called to the pastorate of the Church in Bridgton, Me., where his ministry continued for fourteen years (1812-26). He died in Greene, Me., in 1827, "much lamented by the people over whom he had presided so long and with so much ability and piety." See Millett, Hist. of the Baptists in Maine, p. 435. (J. C. S.)

Ball, Thomas, a Puritan divine, was born in Shropshire, England, in 1590, and was educated at King's College, Cambridge. He died in 1659. He published a Life of Dr. John Preston, and Pastorum Propugnaculum (London, 1656). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Ball, William (1), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Bridgewater, Somersetshire, Jan. 1, 1801. Though he had an abiding conviction from childhood of his duty to preach the Gospel, he did not submit to this call until the year 1846. From a child he was a diligent student, and showed extraordinary readiness in composition of all kinds, poetry as well as prose. He had a great love for solitude, and seldom appeared to his own family or friends except at meal-times. He died June 30, 1878. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1879, p. 8.

Ball, William (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was brought into the work in 1815, and died July 18, 1824. "He was a young man of much personal worth and ministerial promise." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1824.

Ball, William Spencer, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Oct. 16, 1815, of pious parents. He was converted when about seventeen, and shortly afterwards began to preach in Banbury. In 1843 Mr. Ball began a two years' course at Cotton End, after which he preached two years at Cadman, Hampshire; four years at Stainland, Yorkshire; and four years at Newton-le-Willows, where he died, Feb. 6, 1861. Mr. Ball was unassuming in manner, clear in judgment, deep, earnest, and unaffected in piety. He reached men's hearts by the force of his Christian character; and, although his preaching had in it nothing dazzling, his ministry was eminently successful. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 221.

Balla, Filiberto, an Italian Jesuit, was born Feb. 2, 1703, near Asti. He taught philosophy and theology at Cremona, then at Turin. He died about 1770. He wrote, Notizie Storiche di San Savina, Vescovo e Martire (Turin, 1750).—Risposta alle Lettere Teologico-morali scritte dal P. N. N., sotto Nome d'Eusebio Eramiste, etc. (Modena, 1754). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ballantine, Henry, a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions to Ahmednuggur, India, was born in Schodack, N. Y., in 1813. He graduated at the University of Ohio and at Andover, Mass.; was ordained at Columbus, O., in 1835, and in May of that year sailed from Boston for Western India, where he labored among the Mahrattas with great fidelity and success until his death, which occurred at sea when four and a half days from Liverpool, while on his way back to the United States, Nov. 9, 1865. See Appletons' Annual Cyclop. 1865, p. 655.

Ballantine, William G., a Congregational minister, was born in Westfield, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1771; studied divinity with Rev. Dr. Parsons of Amherst; was ordained pastor of the Church in Washington, Mass., in 1774, and died Nov. 20, 1820. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 43.

Ballard, Edward, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Maine, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, was engaged for several years, until about 1856, as a teacher in Cheshire, Conn. In 1858 he became rector of St. Paul's Church, Brunswick, Me., and held this pastorate at the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 14, 1870, at the age of sixty-four. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1871, p. 118.

Ballard, Josiah, a Congregational minister, was born in Petersborough, N. H., April 14, 1806. He was fitted for college at Monson Academy, taught the classics in Westfield Academy for a year and a half, and studied theology privately. In 1836 he was ordained in Chesterfield, N. H., and settled over a Congregational Church in Nelson, N. H. In 1841 he removed to Sudbury, Mass., where he remained as pastor eleven years. In 1852 he was installed over a Church in New Ipswich, N. H., and in 1855 he became a stated supply of the Church at Plympton, Mass. He was finally installed over the Church in Carlisle, Mass., Sept. 15, 1859, at which place he died, Dec. 12, 1863. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1864.

Ballard, Thomas, an Irish Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born at Borris-O'Kane, County Tipperary, in 1796. He was converted in his fourteenth year under the labors of Gideon Ouseley, and was appointed to a circuit in 1818. He prosecuted his labors with unwearied diligence for forty-six years, when he became a supernumerary. He died at Holywood, County Down, March 10, 1875. Mr. Ballard was genial, kind, tender-hearted; immovable in matters of principle, yet reluctant to wound the feelings of any. He ably defended Methodism when it was assailed. A sympathetic and faithful pastor, Mr. Ballard was truly a pious man, and one who feared God above many. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 33.

Ballarini, IPPOLITO, an Italian theologian, was a native of Novara. He first entered the Benedictine Order, then that of the Camaldules. In 1545 he became abbot of St. Michael of Murano at Venice, and general of his order in 1556. He died in 1558. He wrote, Tractatus de Diligendis Inimicis, with no indication of place or date; an Italian translation of this by Morosini is found (Venice, 1555):—Tractatus super Orationem Dominicam. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balleganach, FERQUHARD DE, a Scottish prelate, was bishop of Caithness before 1309. He is said to have been a strenuous defender of the liberties of the Church, and to have died in 1328. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 212.

Ballenstedt, JOHANN GEORG JUSTUS, a German theologian, was born in 1756 at Schöningen. He was pastor at Pabstorf, in Prussia. He wrote Die Urwelt, a work widely known throughout Germany, and which contains important information concerning geology. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ballerini, ANTONIO, a Jesuit and famous writer, was born at Bologna Oct. 10, 1805. He pursued his studies at his native place, and completed them at Rome, where he had joined his order Oct. 13, 1826, as subdeacon. He received holy orders in 1839, and having completed his last year of probation, he was in 1844 appointed professor of church history at the Gregorian university. To this period belongs his De Scripturis Ecclesiasticis, qui in Erroris Semissclassaris discrimen Vocantur. In 1856 he was appointed to the chair of moral theology, which he occupied until his death, Nov. 27, 1881. He published, Principi della Scuola Rosminiana, Esposti in Lettere Familiari da un Prete Bolognese (Milan, 1850):—Sylloge Monumentorum ad Mystrium Conceptionis Immaculate Virginis Deparæ Illustrandum (2 vols. Rome, 1854, 1856):—De Morali Systemate Sancti Alphonsi Mariæ de Ligorio (ibid. 1864):—Compendium Theologiæ Moralis Annotationibus A. Ballerini Locupletatum (ibid. 1866):—a revised edition of Gury's book, 2d ed. 1869; Jus et Officium Episcoporum in Ferendo Suffragio pro Infallibilitate Romani Pontificis (ibid. 1869). (B. P.)

Ballet, FRANÇOIS, a French theologian of Paris, XI.—11

lived in the early half of the 18th century (1702–62). He was rector of Gif and preacher to the queen. He wrote, among other works, Histoire des Temples des Païens, des Juifs et des Chrétiens (Paris, 1760):—Panegyriques des Saints (ibid. 1758):—Vie de la Sœur Françoise Bony, Fille de Charité (ibid. 1761). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ballew, James R., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Buncomb County, N. C., Nov. 29, 1836. He was converted in early life; received license to exhort in 1859; in 1860 was licensed to preach and admitted into the Holston Conference, and served in its active ranks till his death, Nov. 8, 1864. Mr. Ballew was a young man of much promise. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 63.

Ballew, John C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Burke County, N. C., but the date is unrecorded. He embraced religion in 1800, and in 1803 entered the Virginia Conference. In 1813 he located, but again resumed the active work of the ministry in 1814, and continued faithful until old-age compelled him to retire, in 1827. He died in Livingston County, Mo., Jan. 15, 1848. Mr. Ballew was well versed in the Bible and an excellent man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1849, p. 231.

Ballegr (the bright-eyed), in Norse mythology, was the surname of Odin, because he had bright, fiery eyes.

Ball-flower

Ball-flower.

is an ornament resembling a ball placed in a globular flower, the three petals of which form a cup round it. This ornament is usually found inserted in a hollow moulding, and is generally characteristic of the Decorated style of the 14th century; but it sometimes occurs, though rarely, in buildings of the 13th century, or Early English style, as in the west front of Salisbury Cathedral, where it is mixed with the tooth ornament. It is, however, rarely found in that style, and is an indication that the work is late. It is the prevailing ornament at Hereford Cathedral, in the south aisle of the nave of Gloucester Cathedral, and the west end of Grantham Church; in all these instances in pure Decorated work. A flower resembling this, except that it has four petals, is occasionally found in very late Norman work, but it is used with other flowers and ornaments, and not repeated in long suits as in the Decorated style. A similar ornament is of frequent occurrence in the 12th century in the west of France. See NICHE; RIB; WINDOW, etc.

Example of Ball-flower on the Spire of Salisbury Cathedral (cir. 1300).

Ballingall, THOMAS, a minister of the British Wesleyan Methodist Connection, was born in Edinburgh in 1786. At the age of nineteen he heard Methodist preaching, obtained pardon through faith, and by the study of Wesley's writings was induced to abandon the Calvinistic creed, in which he had been brought up. In 1812 he was accepted for the Methodist ministry. In 1853 he retired from the itinerancy, and settled at Kentish-Town, London, where he died, March 10, 1868. He was diligent in study, laborious in circuit duty, 1786. At the age of nineteen he heard Methodist preaching, obtained pardon through faith, and by the study of Wesley's writings was induced to abandon the Calvinistic creed, in which he had been brought up. In 1812 he was accepted for the Methodist ministry. In 1853 he retired from the itinerancy, and settled at Kentish-Town, London, where he died, March 10, 1868. He was diligent in study, laborious in circuit duty, strict and faithful in administration. His sermons were exact and orderly in method, and accurate in language. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1868, p. 22.

Ballizein (βαλλίζειν). The Council of Laodicea (can. 53) says, "Christians ought not at marriages βαλλίζειν ἢ ὀρχεῖσθαι—to use wanton balls or dancings—but dine or sup gravely, as becometh Christians." Some by the word βαλλίζειν understand playing on cymbals and dancing to them; but the word denotes something more, viz. tossing the hands in a wanton and lascivious manner; and in that sense there was good reason to forbid it. The third Council of Toledo forbids it under the name of ballimathie (q. v.), which they interpret to be wanton dances joined with lascivious songs. The Council of Agde (can. 39) forbids the clergy to be present at such marriages where obscene love-songs were sung or obscene motions of the body were used in dancing. The like canons occur in the Council of Lerida. See Bingham, Christ. Antiq. bk. xvi, ch. xi, § 15; bk. xxii, ch. v, § 8. See DANCING.

Ballon, LOUISE BLANCHE THÉRÈSE PERRUCARD DE, a French nun, founder of the Reformed Bernardines, was born in 1691 at the château of Vancie in Savoy. While very young she entered the convent of St. Catherine-sur-Anne, and undertook the reform under the direction of St. Francis of Sales. She introduced this new discipline at Saint-Jean-de-Maurienne, at Grenoble, at Seyssel, at Vienna, at Lyons, and in other monasteries. Her constitutions were approved at Rome in 1631. She died Dec. 14, 1668. Her religious works were published by P. Grossi of the Oratory (Paris, 1700). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ballonus. See BALANUS.

Ballou, HOSEA, D.D., Jr., a Universalist minister, grand-nephew of Hosea Ballou, Sr., the Universalist patriarch, was born at Halifax, Vt., Oct. 18, 1796. In 1815 he became pastor at Stafford, Conn., and subsequently at Roxbury and Medford, Mass. In 1853 he became president of Tufts College, Somerville, Mass., and entered upon his duties in 1855. In 1822 he became one of the editors of the Universalist Magazine (now The Trumpet), and in 1832 assisted his uncle in establishing the Universalist Expositor (subsequently the Universalist Quarterly). He published, The Ancient History of Universalism (1829):—an edition of Sismondi's History of the Crusades (1833):—and a Collection of Psalms and Hymns for the Use of Universalist Societies and Families (1837). He died at Somerville, May 27, 1861.

Ballvin. See BALANUS.

Balme, HENRI DE (not de Palma), a learned French Franciscan, native of Palma (Isère), died Feb. 23, 1439. He wrote a book on mystic theology, commencing with this saying, "Vie Sion lugent," which is attributed to St. Bonaventura, and is still to be found among his smaller works. This book formerly existed, under the title De Triplici Via ad Sapientiam, among the MSS. of the Library of St. Victor of Paris. At the Pauline Library at Leipsic there are other mystic treatises bearing his name, which by their titles—De Imitatione Christi, De Compunctione, De Interna Consolatione—bear a resemblance to the works of Thomas à Kempis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balmer, ROBERT, D.D., a Scottish divine, was born in 1787. He became professor of systematic theology to the United Secession Church, and died in 1844. He published Academical Lectures and Pulpit Discourses (Edinburgh, 1845). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Balmes, ABRAHAM BEN-MEIR (ben-Abraham ben-Moses ben-Chiskija) DE, a Jewish physician, philosopher, and grammarian of Italy, was born at Lecci. He practiced medicine at Padua, and became professor of philosophy in the university there, both Jews and Christians attending his lectures. He died in 1521 or 1523. Being a linguist and man of letters, he translated the works of Averroes from the Arabic into Latin, which translations are printed in the edition of Averroes's Opera (Venice, 1542). At the request of the celebrated printer D. Bomberg, he wrote a very valuable and often-quoted Hebrew grammar, מִקְנֵה אֲבִיר, in which he frequently opposed David Kimchi, and which was the Ewald among the Hebrew students. It was edited with a Latin translation and a treatise on the accents by Calo Calonymus (ibid. 1523). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 82; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 51; Kalisch, Hebrew Grammar, ii, 34; Da Costa, Israel and the Gentiles, p. 485; Etheridge, Intro. to Heb. Lit. p. 451; Basnage, Histoire des Juifs (Taylor's transl.), p. 724; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, ix, 235; Jost, Gesch. d. Judenth. u. s. Sekten, iii, 119; Dessauer, Gesch. d. Israeliten, p. 434. (B. P.)

Balmung, in Norse fable, was the name of the sword carried by the strong-horned Siegfried.

Balmyre, NICOLAS DE, a Scottish clergyman, was clerk in the monastery of Arbroath, and afterwards parson of Calder. In 1301 he was made chancellor of Scotland at Candlemas, and in 1307 was removed to the see of Dunblane. He probably died in 1319 or 1320. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 174.

Balnaves, HENRY, a Scottish Protestant, was born at Kirkcaldy, in Fife, in the reign of James V, probably in 1520, and educated at the University of St. Andrews. He completed his studies on the Continent, and on his return to Scotland entered the family of the earl of Arran, but was dismissed in 1542 for embracing the Protestant religion. In 1546 he was implicated in the murder of cardinal Beaton; and having taken refuge in the Castle of St. Andrews, which was afterwards compelled to surrender to the French, he was taken with the garrison to France. While confined at Rouen he wrote his work entitled Confession of Faith, but it was not published until 1584. He returned to Scotland about 1559, and, having joined the Congregation, was appointed one of the commissioners to treat with the duke of Norfolk on the part of queen Elizabeth. In 1563 he was made one of the lords of session, and was appointed by the General Assembly, with other learned men, to revise the Book of Discipline. He died at Edinburgh in 1579.

Balot. See AOURA.

Balridge, SAMUEL, M.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Guilford, N. C. He was licensed by Abingdon Presbytery in 1802, and labored with much success within its bounds. He died Feb. 29, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 76.

Balsamo, GIUSTINIANO, an Italian theologian, was a native of Messina. He became canon and chorister of the cathedral of his native city, then commissary of the Inquisition in Sicily. He died in 1670. He wrote Discorso sopra Favorita Lettera della S. Vergine (Messina, 1646). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balsamo, IGNACIO (I), a Jesuit, native of Messina, died in that place in 1659. He wrote, Lettera di Nostra Signora alla Città di Messina; Canzone (Messina, 1653):—Martirio de' Santi Placido e Compagni; Canzone e Rime (ibid. eod.).

He must not be confounded with Lorenzo Balsamo, a Sicilian poet, native of Palermo, and the author of the Canzoni Sacre and the Octaves, published in the Muse Siciliane (Palermo, 1653). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balsamo (or Balsamone), Ignacio (2), an Italian Jesuit, was born in Pouillé in 1543. He served the interests of his order for thirty-five years, and his superiors employed him in many important missions. He died Oct. 2, 1618. He wrote in Italian Instruction upon Religious Perfection and upon the True Method of Praying and Meditating (Cologne, 1611). This work was translated into Latin. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balsamus, a mythological name among the Spanish Priscillianists according to Jerome (Barbelo). It is evidently Baal-Samin, the "Lord of heaven," a well-known divinity of the Phœnicians, Carthaginians, Mesopotamians, etc. See Chwolsohn, Ssabier, ii, 158 sq.

Balsemus (Baussence), Sr. (1), a martyr, is the patron saint of Ramern, in Champagne. He died in the year 407, and his festival is kept Aug. 16.

Balsemus, Sr. (2), a hermit, and nephew of St. Basolus, whose cell he occupied after his departure, and whose self-denying life he followed. He died on Aug. 15. See Baillet, Vies des Saints.

Balshaw, ROBERT, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Altrincham, Jan. 7, 1828. He entered the ministry in 1852, and died in the fulness of his strength at Kilburn, London, Nov. 21, 1877. Constitutionally prone to despondency, his spirits wore a tinge of sadness on account of the wickedness of men. He was unusually gifted in prayer, and many were converted through his labors. He was a good man; pure in heart, of quick spiritual sensibilities, of large and loving sympathies, devout, reverent, prayerful. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 24.

Balter, SUEN, a Swedish theologian, was born in 1713. He studied at Upsala, where he received his degree, and later became provost of the Cathedral of Wexiö. He died Nov. 19, 1760. He wrote, among other works, Vår Frälsares Jesu Christi Historia (Wexiö and Stockholm, 1755-60). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Balthasar, Augustin (1), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Anklam, in Pomerania, Sept. 23, 1632. He studied at Wittenberg, and died Nov. 20, 1688, as doctor and professor of theology at Greifswalde, where he also presided at the consistory as general superintendent of Pomerania. He wrote, De Prisca Hæresi Nicolaitarum:—De Justificatione Hominis Peccatoris coram Deo:—Disputationes de Aquis Supracælestibus. See Pipping, Memoriæ Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Balthasar, Augustin von (2), a famous jurist of Germany, was born May 20, 1701, at Greifswalde, where he also studied and attained the highest academical degrees. He died June 20, 1786, as doctor and professor of law and director of the consistory. He wrote, Disputatio de Pena Adulteri ex Jure Divino et Humano (Greifswalde, 1719):—De Deo Mali Absoluto (ibid. 1737):—De Jure Principis circa Baptismum (ibid. 1742):—An et quatenus Nativitas Christi, Restauratæ Humanæ Salutis Medium, Ratione Investigari Possit? (ibid. 1745):—De Divis Gentium Tutelaribus (eod.):—Historia Universi Juris, tam Divini quam Humani, in Tabula (1753):—Jus Ecclesiasticum Pastorale (1760-63):—besides a number of works referring to civil law. See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 16. (B. P.)

Balthasar, Jacob Heinrich von, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 2, 1690, at Greifswalde, where he also died, Jan. 2, 1763, as doctor and professor of theology and general superintendent of Pomerania. He wrote, Sammlung einiger zur pomerschen Kirchen-Historie gehörigen Schriften (Greifswalde, 1723):—Censura Confessionis Fidei Anno 1724 Berolini Editæ (ibid.):—Demonstratio Veritatis et Divinæ Originis Librorum Novi Test. ex Clementis Romani Testimoniis (ibid. 1724):—Theses Theologicæ ad Ductum Epitomes Formulæ Concordiæ (ibid. 1726):—Historia Creationis Mosaicæ Capite 1 Gen. Exposita (ibid. 1749):—Disp. I-IV, de Doctrina Polycarpi de Scriptura S., de Deo Triuno, de Filio Dei, atque Ecclesia (ibid. 1781, 1738):—Die Lehre von der Menschwerdung Jesu Christi (ibid. 1732):—Disp. de Articulis Fidei (ibid. 1740):—Historie des Torgischen Buches (ibid. 1741):—Disp. de Electione Absoluta in Art. xi Formulæ Concordiæ non Adserta (ibid. 1743):—Disp. de Peccato Protoplastorum Primo (ibid. 1754):—Disp. de Fide Infantum Præsumta (ibid.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 330, 807. (B. P.)

Balthere (1), a famous anchorite who lived at Tynningham, in East Lothian. He died March 6, 756 (Sim. Dun. Chron. ad 756, Hist. Dun. ii, 2). Alcuin commemorates his sanctity and his victory over evil spirits (De Pontiff. et Sanctis Ebor. ver. 1318-1386). His church at Tynningham was destroyed by the Danes in 941, (Sim. Dun. ad ann.); it possessed extensive estates, which afterwards belonged to the patrimony of St. Cuthbert. Mabillon states that his name occurs in the Benedictine calendars on Nov. 27, and that his relics were removed to Durham in the 11th century (Acta SS. Ord. S. Bened. Sec. iii, pt. 2, p. 509), and refers to an article on the subject in the Bollandist Acts, March 6 (see Forbes [bishop], Kalendar of Scottish Saints, s. v. "St. Baldred"). (2) A priest who gave eight "manse" to Evesham soon after its foundation (Chron. Evesham. ed. Macray, p. 18).

Baltzer, Adolf, a German Protestant theologian, was born May 16, 1817, at Berlin, where he studied theology, which he continued at Halle. In 1845 he came to the United States, and commenced his labors in the state of Missouri. In 1849 he was called as pastor of St. Paul's to St. Louis, but in the following year went to St. Charles, where he labored for eight years, when he was appointed professor of the German Theological Seminary at Femme Osage, Mo., which was founded by the German Evangelical Synod of the West. In 1866 he succeeded the Rev. Mr. Wall as president of the synod and occupied that position until his death, Jan. 28, 1877. Baltzer was a man of great energy and gubernatorial ability, and to these qualities the Evangelical Synod of North America, as it is now called, owes in part its growth. (B. P.)

Baltzer, Johann Baptist, one of the most prominent Roman Catholic theologians of Germany in the 19th century, was born July 16, 1803, at Andernach on the Rhine. He studied at Bonn under Hermes, graduating in 1827; was ordained as priest in 1829 at Cologne, made doctor of divinity in 1830, and appointed ordinary professor of dogmatics at Breslau in 1831. In 1843 he became a member of consistory, in 1846 canon, and in 1861 honorary doctor of philosophy of the Breslau faculty. His interest in the Hermesian, and afterwards in the Güntherian, controversy [see HERMES; GÜNTHER] was the cause of his being suspended in 1860 by the prince-bishop of Breslau; but he was afterwards reinstated by the government. He died Oct. 1, 1871, at Bonn. He wrote, Litterarum Sacrarum Doctrinæ de Conditione Morali, in qua Primi Homines ante Lapsum et post eundem Vicerint (Breslau, 1831):—Uebersetzung auf den Grundcharakter des hermesianischen Systems (Bonn, 1832):—Ueber die Entstehung der in neuerer Zeit im Protestantismus und im Katholicismus hervorgetretenen Gegensätze, etc. (ibid. 1833):—De Modo Propagationis Animarum in Genere Humano (ibid. eod.):—Beiträge zur Vermittelung eines richtigen Urtheils über Katholicismus und Protestantismus (Breslau, 1839, 1840):—Das christliche Seligkeits-Dogma, nach katholischem und protestanti- schem Bekenntnisse (2d ed. Mentz, 1844):—Theologische Briefe (1st series, ibid. eod.):—Neue theologische Briefe (1st and 2d series, Breslau, 1853):—Die biblische Schöpfungsgeschichte, insbesondere die darin enthaltene Kosmogonie und Geogonie in ihrer Uebereinstimmung mit den Naturwissenschaften (Leipsic, 1867). See Literarischer Handweiser für das kathol. Deutschland, No. 42, col. 55; No. 43, col. 105; No. 110, col. 525; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 67; Franz, Johannes Baptista Baltzer (Breslau, 1873); Metzger, Johannes Baptista Baltzer's Leben, Wirken, und wissenschaftliche Bedeutung auf Grund seines Nachlasses und seiner Schriften dargestellt (Bonn, 1877), reviewed in Schürer's Theolog. Literaturzeitung, 1879, col. 228. (B. P.)

Balue, JOHN DE LA, a French cardinal, principal minister of Louis XI, was born about 1421 at Verdun. His father, a miller according to one authority, a shoemaker or tailor according to others, was made lord of the burgh of Angle, in Poitou, where Balue appears to have spent his early years. Having entered the priesthood, he attached himself to Jean Juvénal des Ursins, bishop of Poitiers. At the death of this prelate, Balue, being executor of the will, appropriated to himself what belonged to others. He sought to hide this from Louis XI, who made him his secretary and chaplain, in 1464 counsellor clerk in the Parliament of Paris, and in 1465 bishop of Evreux. Louis XI, attacked by the formidable league called "Du Bien Public," was defended by Balue and Charles of Melun. For these services Balue received in 1467 the bishopric of Angers, and in the same year was made cardinal. But at last he was arrested, and confessed his crimes. The pope attempted to interfere; but the king, determined to punish him, imprisoned him at Loches in one of the iron cages which Balue himself had invented. Here he remained eleven years, until Sextus IV procured his liberation (1480), when he retired to Rome. In 1484 the pope sent him as legate a latere to France, where he conducted himself in a bold and impudent manner before the king. On his return to Italy he was made bishop of Albano, then of Prenesta, by Innocent VIII, successor of Sextus IV. He was, moreover, provided with rich benefices, and received the title of "Protecteur de l'Ordre de Malte." He died at Ancona in October, 1491. According to one, he was a man of gross ignorance; according to another, a man of gentle spirit and great learning. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baluster (corruptly banister and ballaster) is a small pillar usually made circular, and swelling in the middle or towards the bottom (entasis), commonly used in a balustrade. A wide baluster-shaft occurs in the Romanesque styles of the 11th and 12th centuries in England and elsewhere. These have evidently been turned in a lathe in many instances, and it has been observed that in Yorkshire they bear a great resemblance to the spokes of a cart-wheel at the present day, also turned in a lathe in the same manner. From that period it was disused till the revival of Classical architecture in Italy.

Balustrade is a range of small balusters supporting a coping or cornice, and forming a parapet or enclosure.

Balustrum, a name sometimes applied to the channel-rails, or cancelli (q. v.)

Balzo, CARLO DI, an Italian theologian, lived at Naples near the close of the 16th and the commencement of the 17th century. He wrote, De Modo Interrogandi Dæmonem ab Exorcista:—Praxis Confessoriorum:—Tractatus de Judicio Universali:—Selecta Casuum Conscientiæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baluster of St. Albans.

Bambaginoli, GRAZIOLO, an Italian theologian, was born at Bologna. He was an ardent papist at the period in which the papal power began to decline, and was, with his father, banished in 1334. In his exile he wrote a moral poem entitled Trattata delle Virtù Morali, dedicated to Robert, king of Naples. A commentary upon the Divina Commedia of Dante is attributed to him. He died before 1348. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bambam, HARTWIG, a German Lutheran theologian, studied at Wittenberg, and became deacon of St. Peter's at Hamburg. He died in 1742. He wrote, Apparatus Enthymematico-exegeticus:—Pietistisches Catechismus:—Merckwürdige Historien in den Religions-Streitigkeiten mit den Reformirten. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bamberger, JOHANN PETER, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Magdeburg in 1722. For a number of years he preached at the Reformed Church in Berlin, and at Trinity Church there. In 1780 he was appointed court and garrison preacher at Potsdam, and died Sept. 4, 1804. Besides his own Sermons, he published translations from the English, and thus introduced Hoadly, Lowth, Benson, Anderson, Farmer, Entik, Watson, Knox, Gerard, and others to the German public. He also published the British Theological Magazine (1769-74, 4 vols.), and a Collection of Biographical and Literary Anecdotes formed the basis of his Sammlung biographischer und literarischer Anekdoten von den berühmtesten grossbritanischen Gelehrten des XVIII. Jahrhunderts (1786-87, 2 vols.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 41 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 9, 147, 393, 463, 571; ii, 86. (B. P.)

Bamberger, SELIGMANN BAER, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born at Wiesenbronn, near Kitzingen, in the year 1807. At the age of fourteen he went to Fürth to attend the Talmudical lectures there. In 1840 he was appointed to the rabbinate at Würzburg, where he became the centre of orthodox Judaism. In 1864 he founded a seminary for Jewish teachers, and had, besides, a school in which he lectured on Talmudical topics. He died Oct. 13, 1878. Bamberger exerted a great influence in the congregations belonging to his superintendency. He also published some works pertaining to Jewish ritualism, which are mentioned in Lippe's אספ המזכיר, or Bibliographisches Lexikon der gesammten jüdischen Literatur der Gegenwart (Vienna, 1879), s. v. (B. P.)

Bambini, GIACOMO, an Italian painter, was born at Ferrara about 1560, and was a scholar of Domenico Mona. He painted historical subjects, chiefly for the convents and churches of Ferrara, the principal of which are the three altar-pieces in the cathedral representing The Annunciation, The Flight into Egypt, and The Conversion of St. Paul. He died in 1622.

Bamboo. This plant is regarded as sacred among the Japanese, who entertain the idea that it has a supernatural influence over their destiny. The bamboo is deposited in the armory of the emperor of Japan as an emblem of his sacred majesty.

Bamboo-bridge. The inhabitants of the island of Formosa believe that the souls of wicked men are tormented after death by being cast headlong into a bottomless pit full of mire and dirt; and that the souls of the virtuous pass safely over it upon a narrow bamboo-bridge, which leads directly to Paradise. But when the souls of the wicked attempt to pass over it, they fall over on one side into the abyss below. See AL-SIRAT.

Bamford, GEORGE W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Vermillion County, Ind., March 23, 1824. He experienced religion in 1845, received license to preach in 1851, and in 1854 was admitted into the Iowa Conference, in which he worked diligently until his decease, April 18, 1871. Mr. Bamford was blameless in life and successful in his ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 239.

Bamford, Stephen, a Methodist preacher in the British provinces, was born near Nottingham, England, in 1770. When a youth he enlisted in the 29th Regiment of Foot, was with the duke of York in Holland in 1793, and assisted in quelling the great rebellion in Ireland in 1798. He was converted while there, and soon became a zealous local preacher. In 1804 he came with his regiment to Halifax, N. S. In 1806 he entered the ministry, and for twenty-eight years travelled and preached with great success in the maritime provinces. In 1810 he was ordained by bishop Asbury; in 1836 he attended the Wesleyan Conference in Birmingham, England, and on returning assumed a supernumerary relation in St. John, N. B. He subsequently removed to Digby, N. S., where he died, Aug. 14, 1848. Bamford's preaching was unique in ingenuity of thought, aptness in illustration, and religious quaintness; powerful in its sweetness, unction, and pathetic appeal. He was greatly beloved for his many excellences of character, and his labors did much to establish Methodism in the provinces. See Burt, in (Lond.) Wesl. Meth. Mag. Sept. 1851, art. i; Huestis, Memorials of Wesleyan Preachers in Eastern British America (Halifax, 1872), p. 13; Minutes of the British Wesleyan Conference (of which Bamford was reckoned a missionary), 1849 (8vo ed.), p. 179; Cooney, Autobiography of a Wesleyan Missionary (Montreal, 1856), p. 241, 249-251; Smith [T. W.], Hist. of Methodism in Eastern British America (Halifax, 1877), i, 400.

Bamler, KASPAR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany who lived in the early half of the 17th century, was pastor at Zwickau and Schneeberg. He wrote, Predigten über den dritten Psalm (Leipsic, 1599):—Acht Predigten über den Propheten Jonas (ibid. 1600). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bampfild (or Bampfylde), FRANCIS, an English Baptist minister, was born at Portimon, Devonshire, about the year 1610, being descended from an ancient and honorable family. His parents having consecrated him to the work of the Christian ministry, he was sent, at the age of sixteen, to Wadham College, Oxford, where he took the degree of A.M. in 1638. Soon after leaving the university, he received orders in the Established Church, and was appointed to a living in Dorsetshire. Here he performed most faithfully his duties as a minister, spending a small annuity of his own in works of Christian charity among his parishioners. On the breaking-out of the civil war in England, he was an open, avowed loyalist as well as a zealous conformist. Such was the zeal he displayed that he was appointed a prebendary in the Cathedral of Exeter, entering upon the duties of his office May 15, 1647. He was not blind, however, to the fact that a great reform needed to be effected in the Church of England; and, as a conscientious minister, he set himself to do what he could to bring it about. The trouble and persecution which he encountered resulted in his enlisting himself on the side of the Parliament. In 1655 he became a minister of the parish in Sherborne. The passage of the Uniformity Act, with the conditions of which he was altogether dissatisfied, was the occasion of his resigning his position. He now was exposed to the persecuting spirit of the times, which assailed him with great virulence. For eight years he was imprisoned in Dorchester jail. In his confinement he preached almost every day, and his labors were signally blessed to his fellow-prisoners. Being discharged in 1675, he resumed his preaching, and was again imprisoned for a few months. It was about this time that he became an avowed Baptist. For several years he preached in London, where he experienced all kinds of annoyance in his work. At length he was committed to Newgate, and, after undergoing many indignities, he died in consequence of the hardships to which he had been subjected, Feb. 15, 1684. His biographer says that "he was a man of great learning and judgment, and one of the most celebrated preachers in the West of England. After he became a Baptist he lost much of his reputation among his former friends, but preserved his integrity to the last." Among his published writings were the following: Judgment for Observation of the Jewish Sabbath, with Mr. Ben's Answer (Lond. 1672):—All in One; All Useful Sciences and Profitable Arts, in One Book of Jehovah Elohim (ibid. 1677, 2 pts.):—Historical Declaration of the Life of Shim Asher (ibid. 1681, fol.):—Grammatical Opening of Some Hebrew Words in the Bible (1684). See Haynes, Baptist Cyclop. i, 50, 54; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (J. C. S.)

Bampton, JOHN, an English Carmelite, lived about 1341. He was a subtle scholastic, and wrote Lectura Scholastica in Theologia, etc.

Bana (the word), the name given in common conversation to the sacred writings of the Buddhists; the books in which the writings are contained are called Bana-Pot, and the structure in which the truth is preached or explained is called the Bana-Maduwa. The praises of the Bana are a favorite subject with the native authors; and the language in which they express themselves is of the strongest and most laudatory description. The sacred books are literally worshipped, and benefits are expected to result from this adoration as from the worship of an intelligent being. The books are usually wrapped in cloth, and are often placed upon a rude altar near the roadside, that those who pass by may place money upon them and obtain merit.

Banban. In Irish hagiology there are several Banbans given. (1.) Two of these are probably the same person, Banban the Wise, attached to separate days, May 1 and 9. Colgan (Tr. Thaum. p. 176) is of the opinion that the Bamabanum to whom St. Patrick committed the Domnach Mor, or large basilica in Magh-Sleacht, was Banban the Wise. He also supposes him to have been a son of Richella, sister of St. Patrick. In Tr. Thaum. he is called presbyter, but at May 1 the Mart. Tallaght calls him bishop. (2.) Bishop of Leithglinn, commemorated Nov. 26; the abbot of Claeenadh (Clane, County Kildare), who died A.D. 777. (3.) Another bishop, put by Mart. Doneg., etc., on Dec. 3.

Bancel, LOUIS, a French theologian of the Dominican Order, was of Valence, in Dauphiny, and first occupied the chair of theology of St. Thomas, founded in 1654, in the University of Avignon, by D. de Marinis. He acquitted himself well in the performance of these functions, and was several times elected dean of the doctors in theology of Avignon. He died Dec. 22, 1685. He wrote, Moralis D. Thomæ Doctoris Angelici, Ordinis Prædicatorum ex Omnibus ipsius Operibus, exacte Deprompta, with additions;—in particular, Opusculum de Castitate (Avignon, Offray):—Brevis Universæ Theologiæ tam Moralis quam Scholasticæ Cursus in Gratiani Studentium editus juxta Inconsulta Tutissimæque Doctoris Angelici D. Thomæ Dogmata:—Traité de la Chasteté, in 3 pts.:—Traité de la Vérité de la seule Religion Catholique et Romaine. These last two works are found in MS. in the convent of the order at Avignon. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Banchi, SERAFINO, an Italian Dominican, was born at Florence near the middle of the 16th century. A protégé of Catherine de' Medici, he went to France while very young, and this was his adopted country. In 1593 he denounced the project of Barrière of assassinating Henry IV, and refused the archbishopric of Angoulême. He died in Paris in 1622. He wrote Apologie contre les Jugements Téméraires de ceux qui ont pensé servir la Religion en faisant assassiner le Roi de France (Paris, 1596). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Banchin, an Augustine monk of London, who lived in the early part of the 14th century, assisted in the Council at London against Wycliffe in 1332, and wrote, Contra Positiones Wicliffi:—Determinaciones Varie, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Banck, Nicolaus von, a German theologian who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, was of the Dominican Order, and performed various functions, among others those of rector of the general studies at Grätz. He wrote, Solenniores Assertiones Theologicae ex Universa Summa D. Thomae Depromptæ (Salzburg, 1687). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Banck, Peter van der, a Flemish engraver, was born at Paris in 1549, and acquired eminence under Francis de Poilly. In 1674 he visited England, and engraved many portraits of distinguished persons intimately connected with English history. He died in 1697. The following are some of his principal religious prints: The Virgin and Infant with Elizabeth and St. John and Christ Praying on the Mountain.

Bancroft, DAVID, a Congregational minister, was born in Rindge, N. H., Feb. 10, 1809. The first sixteen years of his life were passed at home, his father removing to Grafton, Vt., in 1811. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to an uncle in Worcester, Mass., to learn the mason's trade. A short time after he was engaged as a clerk in a dry-goods house in Cambridgeport, Mass., where he was converted under the preaching of Dr. Beecher. Two years after, he fitted for college, and in 1835 graduated at Amherst. In 1838 he graduated at the Theological Institute of Connecticut, and began labor at once at Willington, Conn., where in 1839 he was ordained to a pastorate which lasted nearly twenty years. From Willington he went to Prescott, Mass., June 3, 1858, where he died, March 11, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 63.

Band (figuratively used). Government and laws are bands that restrain from sin and draw into the path of righteousness (Psa. ii, 3; Jer. v, 5). Slavery, distress, fears, and perplexity are called bands because they restrain liberty, and create irritation (Lev. xxvii, 13; Ezek. xxxiv, 27; Psa. xxviii, 22). Sinful customs or meretricious allurements are bands; they enslave, weaken, degrade, and embitter the soul; they are fetters that at first may seem soft as silk, but are found at last to be stronger than iron (Isa. lviii, 6; Eccles. vii, 26). The wicked often "have no bands in their death;" that is, they frequently die without any peculiar distress, fear, or perplexity, such as might be expected to stamp their real character and condition on the verge of their future woe (Psa. lxxiii, 4; Eccles. vii, 15; ix, 2). Faith and love are bands which unite and fasten every believer to Christ, and to the whole body of his holy people (Col. ii, 19). The authority, arguments, instances, and influence of divine love, because they draw and engage us to follow the Lord in a way suited to our rational nature, are generally supposed to be intended in Hos. xi, 4 by "the bands of a man."

Band, in architecture, is a flat face or fascia, a square moulding, or a continuous tablet or series of ornaments, etc., encircling a building or continued along a wall. Bands of panelling on the outer surface of the wall are very usual in rich work of the Perpendicular style, especially on the lower part of a tower, and sometimes higher up between the stories also, as in the rich Somersetshire towers, and in Northamptonshire and Oxfordshire, and, indeed, wherever rich churches of this style are found. This kind of ornament is, however, used in the earlier styles also, though less frequently. See also a good illustration from Yelvertoft Church under PERPENDICULAR STYLE.

Band of Panelling, Cranford St. John's (cir. 1420).

Band is also a name for the moulding or suite of mouldings which encircles the pillars and small shafts in Gothic architecture, the use of which was most prevalent in the Early English style. Bands of this description are not unfrequently met with in very late Norman work, but they show that it is verging towards the succeeding style; they are also occasionally to be found in early Decorated work. When the shafts are long they are often encircled by several bands at equal distances apart between the cap and base. See TABLET.

Band of a Shaft, Whitby Abbey (cir. 1250).

Bandage, NUNS', is the linen band which nuns wear over their foreheads to signify that they have closed their eyes to all worldly objects. See NUN.

Bandaya (Sanscr. a person entitled to reverence), the name given to the priests of Nepal. They are divided in that country into four orders: bhikshu, or mendicants; srawaka, or readers; chaulaka, or scantily robed; and arhaute or arhata, adepts.

Bandel, JOSEPH ANTON VON, a German theologian, was chamberlain of the two princes, Louis and Frederick of Würtemberg, and died June 7, 1771. He wrote numerous works of controversy stamped with a certain violence, among which we cite, Katholisches Kriegsgericht über den Glaubens-Deserteur (1752):—Consilium utriusque Medici ad Justinum Fabronium, de Statu Ecclesiæ et Potestate Papæ ægerime Fabricantem (1764). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bandelli, MATTEO, an Italian theologian, was born at Brescia in the 13th century. He entered the Dominican Order, and was sent in 1298 by Boniface VIII as prefect and governor of the Church of Constantinople. He wrote, Luoghi Comuni di Tutta la Santa Scrittura. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bandello, VITTORIO DI, an Italian Dominican, was born in 1435 at Castel Nuovo. He studied at Bologna, became professor of theology, and in 1501 general of his order. He was one of the most violent adversaries of the immaculate conception of the Virgin, and treated the Franciscans who defended the doctrine as impious, ignorant heretics, until Sixtus IV, by his bill of 1483, favored the belief of the Franciscans. Bandello died at Atomonte, Calabria, Aug. 27, 1506. He wrote, Libellus Recollectorius de Veritate Conceptionis B. Mariæ Virginis (Milan, 1749), a work refuted by a friar named Luigi della Torre:—Tractatus de Singulari Puritate et Prærogativa Conceptionis Salvatoris (Bologna, 1481). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bandemundus, a monk of the monastery of Eluo (St. Amand), in Hainaut, about 680, was a disciple of the sainted bishop of Maestricht, St. Amand (died 679), and wrote his life, which is to be found in Surin, and also in Bollandus under Feb. 6, as well as Mabillon, Hist. Ord. Benedict. ii, 709 (Cave, Hist. Lit. i, 597).

Bandiera, DOMINICHINO, an Italian theologian, a native of Modena, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He became apostolic protonotary and professor of ethics at the Sapienza of Rome. He wrote, De Hominis Activa Vita, seu Moralís Disciplinæ Compendium (Rome, 1630).—Super Adagio Veteri, Veritas Odium Parit, Problema Ethicum ad Libr. IV Moral. Aristotelis (ibid. 1631). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bandt, RICHARD OTTO, an English Methodist preacher, was born in Germany, Jan. 5, 1847. He emigrated to Australia in his youth, was educated at a Jesuit college, but attended the Bible Christian ministry, and was converted, and laid himself out for service in the Church and among the railway men at Burra. In 1869 he joined the itinerant ministry, and gave promise of much usefulness, being able to preach in English, French, and German; but his career was cut short by death in 1872. See Minutes of the Bible Christian Conference, 1873.

Banduri, ANSELMO, an Italian Benedictine of the Society of Meleda (Malta), was born at Ragusa, in Dalmatia, in 1671. He went to France in 1702 in order to perfect himself in the sciences. The grand-duke of Tuscany provided for all his wants. The Academy of Inscriptions received him among its members in 1715, and nine years after the duke of Orleans chose him for his librarian. He died at Paris, Jan. 14, 1743. The scholar De la Barre is supposed to have shared the composition of the works of Banduri, one of which is entitled Imperium Orientale, etc. (Paris, 1712), and another, Numismata Imperat. Rom., etc. (ibid. 1718). These two works are the most complete of any which exist upon the medals of the Lower Empire of Rome and Constantinople. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bane, Claudius de, a French theologian, was first brought before the public in the religious reformation. He embraced Catholicism, and then became counsellor of the presidial of Nîmes, whose functions he performed for more than forty years. He died in 1658. He wrote L'Écriture Abandonnée par les Ministres de la Religion Prétendue Réformée, a posthumous work published in 1658. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bane, John, an English Baptist minister, was born at Acle, near Great Yarmouth, Norfolk. In his youth he followed the sea, and was taken a prisoner of war by the French and confined at Arras for upwards of five years. While in prison he became a Christian. After his liberation in 1814, he returned to England, and subsequently entered the ministry, and was settled at Aylsham, Norfolk. Here he remained for twenty-nine years, and then removed to Downham, in the same shire, and was pastor eight years. His last settlement was at Malton, Yorkshire, where he died, Aug. 29, 1855. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1856, p. 44. (J. C. S.)

Banes, DOMINGO, a Spanish theologian, was born at Valladolid in 1527. He studied at Salamanca, entered the Order of the Preaching Friars, and taught theology at Avila, at Alcalá de Henares, at Valladolid, and at Salamanca. He died at Medina del Campo, Nov. 1, 1604. He wrote, De Generatione et Corruptione, sive in Aristotelis eodem Libros Commentaria et Quaestiones (Salamanca, 1585; Cologne, 1614).—Relectio de Merito et Augmento Charitatis (Salamanca, 1590).—In Aristotelis Dialecticam:—Institutiones Minoris Dialecticæ, hoc est Summularum (Cologne, 1618).—Commentaria Scholastica in Primam Partem Summæ S. Thomæ, nec non in Secundam, etc. (Salamanca, 1584–94; Venice, 1602; Douay, 1614–16). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Banfield, JAMES, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Devonport in 1812. He entered the ministry in 1839, labored two years in England and thirty-six in the West Indies, much esteemed and beloved, and died in St. Martin's, July 31, 1876. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1876, p. 85.

Bang, Johann Otto, a Danish theologian, was born Sept. 9, 1712, at Hillerød. He was professor at the University of Copenhagen, and died about 1780. He wrote, Disputatio Logica de esse Animæ Judicii (Copenhagen, 1734).—De Tutissima Explicatione Matth. (ibid. 1738).—Introductio in Ep. Judæ (ibid. 1752). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bang, Niel, a Danish theologian and historian, was born Aug. 3, 1614. He became bishop in 1663, and died in 1676. He wrote Oratio de Historia Græciæ (1638). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bangen, JOHANN HEINRICH, a Roman Catholic theologian and jurist of Germany, was born at Rheda in 1823; was made a priest in 1849; in 1856 was appointed ecclesiastical counsellor and defensor matrimonii et promotor fiscalis, and in 1862 cathedral dean. He died Oct. 31, 1865, at Tivoli, near Rome. He wrote, Die römische Curie, ihre gegenwärtige Zusammensetzung und ihr Geschäftsgang (Münster, 1854).—Instructio Practica de Sponsalibus et Matrimonio (ibid. 1858–60). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 68; Literarischer Handweiser für das katholische Deutschland, 1866, col. 80. (B. P.)

Banghart, GEORGE, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Bridgeville, N. J., March 10, 1782. He experienced religion in his youth, received license to preach in 1810, and in 1812 entered the Philadelphia Conference. In 1837 he became a member of the newly formed New Jersey Conference, and in 1856, on the division of the conference, he fell into the Newark Conference, in whose active ranks he served till about 1861, when he became superannuated. He died Feb. 9, 1870. As a preacher, Mr. Banghart was earnest and pathetic; as a pastor, laborious and sympathetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 70.

Bangius, THOMAS, a Lutheran theologian of Denmark, was born at Flembo, Feb. 18, 1600. He studied at Copenhagen, where in 1631 he was appointed professor of Hebrew. In 1653 he was made doctor of theology, and died Oct. 27, 1661. He wrote, Observationes Philologicæ:—Exercitationes Octo Literariæ Antiquitatis:—Exercitatio Glottologica de Ortu Linguarum:—Exegesis et Vindicatio quorundam Dictorum S. Scripturæ:—De Nephilim Gigantibus:—Hermes et Pan Hebraicus, quo Virum Absoluti Hebr. Lexicographi Exemplar Proponitur (Hafn. 1641). See Witte, Memoria Theologorum; Vindling, Academia Hafniensis; Bartholini, De Scriptoribus Danis; Bayle, Dictionnaire Historique et Critique; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibl. Handbuch, s. v. (B. P.)

Bangor Use, in ecclesiastical phraseology, is (1) Ancient rites, according to the use of the Church of Bangor; (2.) A form for celebrating holy communion, substantially agreeing with the ancient Sarum Missal, but yet having several liturgical peculiarities of its own, commonly used in the diocese of Bangor and some parts of Wales prior to the Reformation. MS. office-books containing this rite appear to have been all destroyed; only fragments of the same, and those imperfect, exist. None were printed. A rare vellum copy, small folio, of a Bangor pontifical is preserved in the cathedral library there.

Bangs, Heman, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Fairfield, Conn., in April, 1790. He professed conversion at the age of ten, but having no encouragement, soon went back into sin and folly; was reconverted at the age of eighteen; soon after received license to preach, and in 1815 entered the New York Conference. He was fifty-four consecutive years in the active ministry—thirty-three in the pastorate, three as agent of Wesleyan University, and eighteen as presiding elder. Almost his entire life was spent in and about New York city and New Haven. He died Nov. 2, 1869. Mr. Bangs excelled as a preacher. He was eminently original and practical. His sermons were always new and short. He had no superior as a pastor; was sociable, sympathizing, and solicitous. His presence was a perpetual sunshine in his home. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 104; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Bangs, John D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Kortright, N. Y., May 7, 1813. He received a careful religious training; was converted at the age of fourteen; soon began exhorting his fellow-citizens to embrace religion; received license to preach in 1835, and in 1836 united with the New York Conference. He died July 21, 1838. Mr. Bangs was a diligent, able, pious minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1839, p. 671.

Bangs, William H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, and nephew of Dr. Nathan and Heman Bangs, was born in 1806. He was converted at fifteen, preached without license while yet a probationer, and was appointed class-leader at seventeen. After a few years of activity in business pursuits, he joined the New York Conference in 1837, and was ordained deacon in 1841. His successive appointments were Bedford, Cortland, Westport, New Milford, Weston, and Westport circuits, Middlebury, Newtown and East Village, Mount Vernon and East Chester, Patchogue, Greenport, Glen Cove, Bridgehampton, Cutchogue and Mattituck, North New York, Mianus and Pound Ridge, and Upper New Rochelle. He died suddenly at Ocean Grove, N. J., Oct. 5, 1880. During thirty-nine years of active work, he preached more than 11,000 sermons and received 3000 converts into the Church. He never took a week's vacation during the thirty-nine years; forty-one conference roll-calls never noted an absence, and during the whole period of two thousand and twenty-eight Sundays he only lost eighteen from all causes. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881.

Banians, a religious sect in the empire of the Mogul. The word is sometimes used in a general and extended sense to denote the idolaters of India as distinguished from the Mohammedans; but in a more restricted sense it is applied to the Vaishyas (q. v.). In the Shaster they are called Shuddery, and they follow the occupation of merchants or of brokers. Should a Banian quit his mercantile occupation and give himself wholly up to the performance of religious duties, even though he still retain his caste, he is regarded as a Brahmin of a more devout kind. The Banians are the great factors by whom most of the trade of India is managed. They claim it as almost a matter of sacred right that all mercantile arrangements should be conducted through them. They are found, accordingly, everywhere throughout Asia, where they are not only merchants, but act as bankers, and give bills of exchange for most of the cities of Hindustan.

Banira was probably a Gallic local goddess near Lausanne. She is only mentioned on an inscription found there.

Banker, in liturgical phraseology, is (1) a covering for a bench; (2) hangings of cloth; (3) the side-curtains of an altar.

Banker EXPEDITIONARY, at the Court of Rome. An officer who undertakes the procuring of bulls, dispensations, etc., at the court of Rome or in the legation of Avignon, whether in the chancery or penitentiary.

Bankputtis was the god of the sea among the ancient Prussians, "the foam-forming," "the agitator of the waves."

Banks of PIETY (or Monts de Pitié, as the French call them) are common in Popish countries. They are professedly designed for the benefit of the poor, but really intended to promote the interests of the Church. They are, in fact, spiritual pawnbroking establishments, conducted on the usual principles of these institutions, but the profits of which go to the papal treasury. They were approved by the fifth Lateran Council. See MONTES.

Banks, David F., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New York, was elected rector of St. Luke's Church, Nashua, N. H., in 1861; in 1864 he was rector of Christ Church, Norwich, Conn.; and in the following year Grace Church at Yantic was added to his charge. About 1871 he removed to Yonkers, N. Y., as rector of St. Paul's Church; in 1877 he went to Fairfield, Conn., where he died suddenly, Aug. 29, 1878, aged forty years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Banks, Edward, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced his ministry in 1803, and died Nov. 9, 1823, aged fifty. He was a zealous and pious man, and many were converted under his ministry. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1824.

Banks, John (1), a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Sunderland, Cumberland Co., England, in June, 1637. He became a Christian at the age of sixteen, and at the age of twenty-two was recognised as a minister. He entered at once upon that life of suffering for conscience' sake so common among Friends in the period in which he lived. At one time he says his associates in prison, where he was thrust because he would not pay certain fees, were "a Bedlamman and four with him for theft, two notorious thieves, two moss-troopers for stealing cattle, and a woman for murdering her child." For several years he travelled extensively through Great Britain and Ireland. A full account of his different journeys, together with a large number of his letters written to his wife and others, may be found in his Memoirs. He has also left an account of a long imprisonment of nearly seven years which he endured in the city of Carlisle (1684-91). The last fourteen years of his life he lived in the County of Somerset. His death took place Aug. 6, 1710. Several of his epistles and other papers may be found in The Friends' Library, ii, 1-68. (J. C. S.)

Banks, John (2), D.D., an Associate minister, was born in Stirling, Scotland, about 1763, and was educated in his native country. He was for some time a minister in the Presbytery of Edinburgh, but resigned his charge and crossed the ocean in 1796. He preached for some time to the Associate Congregation in New York city, and declined a call from that body in 1798. He was installed as pastor at Cambridge, N. Y., in September, 1799. Here he remained until June, 1802, when he became pastor at Florida, N. Y. He remained in this charge fourteen years, during which time he gave private instruction to boys and young men. In 1816 he removed to Philadelphia as permanent supply, and soon after opened a select school for instruction in Latin and Greek. Afterwards he took charge of the grammar-school connected with the university, and taught several pupils Hebrew. In 1818 he was installed as pastor of the congregation which he had served as supply for two years. In May, 1820, he was elected professor of theology in the Eastern Theological Seminary at Philadelphia. He continued to discharge the duties of his professorship and pastorate until his death, April 10, 1826. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 52.

Banks, Joseph, a minister of the Associate Church, son of Dr. John Banks, was born at Florida, N. Y., July 27, 1806. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1823, and was a student of theology under his father at the time of the latter's death, in 1826. He was licensed by the Associate Presbytery of Philadelphia, Oct. 1, 1828, and shortly after went South, and was ordained Oct. 15, 1831, by the Associate Presbytery of Carolina as pastor of Bethany and Sardis churches, S. C., and Pisgah and Nob Creek, N. C. He subsequently settled in the congregations of Northfield, Stow, and Springfield, O.; but, in consequence of feeble health, resigned his charge and accepted an appointment as chaplain in the Western Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, at Allegheny City. He was appointed missionary to the island of Trinidad, July 27, 1843, and labored in that field for eight years. On his return in 1851 he established a semimonthly paper entitled The Friend of Missions. He died at his residence in Mercer, Pa., April 8, 1859. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 53.

Banks, Matthew, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Rotherham, Feb. 23, 1798. He was converted in early life, entered into revival work with great zeal, received his first appointment to Antigua, W. I., in 1826, and soon saw a great revival on that island characterized by extraordinary scenes. He returned to England in 1837, retired from the active ministry in 1860, and died at Bridlington, June 15, 1878. Mr. Banks was quick and decisive in action, independent in judgment, and an original thinker. His preaching was earnest, fervently Protestant, and was successful in awakening sinners. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 45.

Banks, Robert, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was converted when twenty-one, and soon began to be very active in preaching throughout the counties of Wicklow and Wexford. He began his regular ministry in 1792, became a supernumerary at Athy, or Carlow (Hill, Alphab. Arrangem. [1846]), in 1824, and died at Carlow, April 24, 1855, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. "Faithful as a minister, he walked before his house with a perfect heart." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Bankson, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Oglethorpe County, Ga., Jan. 8, 1795. He was taught to know the Scriptures from his infancy; emigrated with his parents at the age of eight to Illinois, where he received a very imperfect English education; but, embracing religion at the age of fourteen, he applied himself earnestly to reading and study, and became a good scholar. In 1813 he entered the Illinois Conference, and labored diligently on its frontier circuits till his death, Sept. 4, 1831. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1833, p. 214.

Bannard, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Falwell, England, Jan. 6, 1820. He was converted in his nineteenth year; graduated at Union College in 1846; taught during several subsequent years in Jonesville Academy, and in 1850 united with the Troy Conference, which he served till his decease, May 11, 1853. Mr. Bannard was amiable, humble, devout, a good scholar, and an able preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1854, p. 374.

Banner, a square flag carried in processions after Roman Catholic custom, and usually designating the parish to which it belongs by the image of the patron saint. In the chapel of orders of knighthood, as in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, the Chapel of the Order of the Garter, the banner of each knight—i. e. a little square flag bearing his arms—is suspended at his installation over his appropriate stall. The installation of a knight is a religious ceremony, hence the propriety of the act. It is not uncommon to place banners taken in battle over the tombs of victorious generals. Banners were formerly a part of the ornaments of the altar, and were suspended over it "that in the Church the triumph of Christ may evermore be held in mind" (Durand). A heraldic banner is attached to the staff on which it is carried by one side, while the ecclesiastical banner is suspended from the top of the staff by means of a yard. See Pugin, Gloss. of Eccl. Ornament and Costume.

Banners in church and processions were adopted from Constantine's use of the labarum—the cross-banner —which was carried in the van of his army. They were used to commemorate the Easter victory of our Lord. The sacred banner of the Maccabees had the initial letters of the Hebrew words forming the text Exod. xv, 11. The emperor Heraclius in 621 took a picture of the cross to battle in his war with Persia, and carried the cross on his shoulders up Calvary as an act of thanksgiving, which was the origin of the festival of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. The earliest instances of banners in England are those of two guthfana, war-vanes or standards, which were given by bishop Leofric to Exeter Cathedral. But St. Augustine before this had entered the gates of Canterbury with a banner of the cross carried before his procession, singing a litany. The banner of St. Cuthbert was of white velvet with a red cross of the same material, and contained in the centre St. Cuthbert's corporax cloth. It was fringed with red silk and gold, and had three silver bells attached to it. It was of great weight, and five men assisted the bearer when it was carried in procession. Pope Gregory III sent a banner which he had blessed to the king of France. Leo III gave one to Charlemagne; and Alexander II sent another to William of Normandy for his invasion of England. Philip II of France also received a papal banner. King Henry V carried a cross-banner in his expedition against the Lollards; and in the rising of the North in 1570 the rebels carried a banner embroidered with the five wounds, a chalice, and a cross, with the legend In hoc signo vinces ("thou shalt conquer by this sign"). The banners of St. John of Beverley, St. Peter of York, and St. Wilfrid of Ripon were carried on a sacred car, crowned with a cross, by archbishop Thurstan in 1138, at the battle of the Standard, or Northallerton, an imitation of the carroccio invented by Eribert, archbishop of Milan, in 1035; and beneath the banner of St. John, carried by a priest, Edward I fought against the Scots. Henry II carried the banner of St. Edmund of Bury to the battle of Fornham, Oct. 16, 1673. Round the shrine of St. Cuthbert at Durham the banners of the king of Scotland, lord Neville, and other noblemen were placed as ornaments and acts of homage. The earl of Surrey borrowed St. Cuthbert's banner (which was carried at Flodden), and, as Skelton says, that of St. William of York in his Scottish campaign. Ferdinand and Isabella chased the Moors out of Granada, led by the cross-banner. The English Henrys and Edwards fought beneath the banners of St. Edmund the Confessor and St. George. In later days captured flags were suspended round the dome of St. Paul's, and the banners of the Bath and St. George at Westminster and Windsor. Henry VII offered the banner of St. George at St. Paul's after his victory at Bosworth. The oriflamme, or banner of St. Denis, was always carried before the kings of France in battle, as by Philip le Bel and Louis le Gros; and regimental colors invariably receive benediction by a priest before their presentation. Pope Pius V in 1568 "baptized" the duke of Alva's babel, or standard, by the name of Margaret. After the Reformation in England, Cartwright mentions "bells and banners in rogations, the priest in his surplice saying gospels and making crosses." In parish processions banners are still carried in front of choirs at Peterborough, Southwell, and other places. At Salisbury, before the Reformation, three large banners were carried on Ascension-day—two in the midst, of the cross, and one in advance, representing the Lion of Judah; while in the rear was his trophy, the image of a dragon. At Canterbury they included the arms of noble benefactors. In some places till recently a lingering relic of banners might be seen in the garlands suspended upon the poles which were carried at the perambulation of parishes. Casalius says the procession resembles a celestial host rejoicing in the triumph of Christ, and displaying the sign of the cross and banners to the discomfiture of the powers of the air. And Cranmer said, "We follow His banner as Christ's soldiers, servants, and men of war, for the remembrance of him, declaring our proneness and readiness in all things to follow and serve him"—a thought which beautifully harmonizes with the admonition at holy baptism, that we should serve under Christ's banner, and fight manfully against his enemies, continuing his faithful soldiers and servants unto our lives' end (Psa. xx, 5). Banners were used at weddings and funerals; the lesser guilds borrowed those of the parish church.

Bannister, Edward, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Phelps, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1814. In 1838 he graduated from the Wesleyan University, Conn., taught school at Vienna, N. Y., and, having joined the Genesee Conference, was stationed at Barrington; but was discontinued at his own request, and studied medicine for a few months. In 1840 he preached a short time at Le Roy, N. Y. In 1841 he became a teacher in Gouverneur Seminary, N. Y., and in 1842 joined the Black River Conference, spending the two following years as pastor at Ogdensburgh and Syracuse. In 1844 he became a teacher in the Oneida Conference Seminary, and in 1850 opened a school in San José, Cal. From 1854 to 1860 he was pastor and presiding elder in various appointments in that state; in 1860-67 was president of the University of the Pacific at Santa Clara, but afterwards returned to the active ministry, and died at Marysville, Cal., Sept. 27, 1871. See Alumni Record of West. Univ. s. a. 1838.

Bannister, Stephen, an English Congregational minister, was born in Portsea in 1801. He began his ministry at Epping, where he preached about fifteen years, and then retired to Coventry. He subsequently spent a few years successively at Cheltenham, Cardiff, and Crediton. Thence he removed to Gloucester, where he died, Feb. 2, 1874. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1875, p. 311.

Bannister, William, an English Wesleyan missionary, commenced his labors in New Brunswick in 1833, laboring in Petitcodiac, Fredericton, and Grand Menan. In 1838 he removed to the West Indies, where he became one of the most efficient ministers. From 1846 he was chairman and general superintendent of the missions in the St. Vincent and Demerara district. He died of the cholera at Barbadoes, July 9, 1854. He was most indefatigable in relieving the suffering in that sad period. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1854.

Banoell, Ludovicus, a French Dominican, and professor of theology and philosophy at Avignon, where he died Dec. 22, 1685, is the author of, De Militia Angelica S. Thomæ:—Moralis Divi Thomæ (2 vols.):—Cursus Universæ Theologiæ tam Moralium quam Scholasticæ (6 vols.). See Echard, De Scriptoris Ordinis Dominicorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bañolas, Leon de. See RALBAG.

Baodan, king of Ireland, lived in the 6th century. He ascended the throne about 565, was removed by Colman, son of Dermot, and, vanquished and pursued, he took refuge in a monastery governed by Columba, who afterwards became a Pictish disciple. But even here he was pursued and massacred. Columba, indignant at the violation of the sacred place, demanded vengeance, and raised a crusade which resulted in the death of Colman. The successor of Baodan was Hugh II, or Aodh, son of Immeric. See Hocfer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baotan. See BAEDAN; BATHEN.

Bapchild (or rather Witenagemote), COUNCIL OF (Concilium Baccandeldense). Of these there are said to have been two.

I. Held between A.D. 696 and 716 at Bapchild, near Sittingbourne, in Kent; a Kentish Witenagemote, at which abbesses and presbyters, as well as bishops and abbots, were present, and where the celebrated Pri-lege of Wihtried was enacted, granting to the Kentish metropolitan a free election in the case of abbots, abbesses, priests, and deacons. The date cannot be precisely determined. Spurious forms of the Privilegium extend it to the election of bishops and to the whole of Saxon England.

II. Held A.D. 798, if at all; said to have been under Kenulf, king (not of Kent, but) of Mercia, and archbishop Athelard, with bishops (two lists, both spurious), abbots, and an archdeacon; and to have prohibited lay interference with churches and monasteries, in compliance with a mandate of pope Leo III. The decree, however, is verbatim that of the (genuine) Council of Cloveshoo of A.D. 803, from which also one of the lists of bishops is partially taken. The copy at Canterbury, however, has no signatures.

Baptæ (from βάπτω, to wash), a name formerly applied to the priests of the Thracian goddess Cotys, or Cotytto, and was derived from a practice in their festivals of washing in tepid water. Buttmann, however, in his Mythologus denies that the name Baptæ was applied to the priests referred to. See COTYS.

Baptism, ANGEL OF. Tertullian speaks of an angel who is present at baptism, and who prepares the waters of the font, and under whose auspices men are prepared by the cleansing of the font for the following gift of the Holy Spirit. His language is not inconsistent with a belief that this may have been a mere individual speculation of his own rather than a doctrine generally accepted in his time. No parallel to this language has hitherto, so far as the writer knows, been alleged from any other early writers. But in more than one of the early Ordines Baptismi there will be found expressions derived, in all probability, from this very passage of Tertullian.

Baptism of Desire (baptismus fluminis) is a phrase used for the desire experienced by an unbaptized person living in a heathen country or beyond the influence of the Visible Church to receive the sacrament of baptism, which desire, with a sincere intention and hearty repentance, is regarded by theologians as standing in the place of, or as equivalent to, actual baptism—baptismus fluminis.

Baptism of Tears is a phrase for that repentance in which the shedding of tears forms a part, and by which a sinner is restored to the favor of God and to communion with his Church.

Baptismal Regeneration. A writer in the Cyclopædia Britannica (9th ed. s. v. "Baptism") has these striking remarks on the origin of this dogma:

"In studying the statements made by the early fathers upon baptism, we find not so much a distinct and definite doctrine as groupings towards a doctrine, and it is not until we come to St. Augustine that we can find any strict and scientific theory of the nature and effects of the sacrament. The earlier theologians sometimes make statements which imply the most extreme view of the magical effects of the sacrament, and at other times explain its results in a purely ethical way. Thus, for example, Hermas says, 'Our life is sanctified by water;' while Tertullian expressly declares, 'Anima non lavatione sed responsione sanctitur.' It should never be forgotten that the abundant use of metaphorical language by the Greek fathers, and the want of a strictly theological terminology, prevent our finding anything like the precise doctrinal statements which became familiar in the Western Church; while the prevalence of curious Greek physical speculations, which taught the creative power of water, mingled with and distorted ideas about the effects of water in baptism. It was St. Augustine, the great theologian of the Western Church, who first gave expression to exact dogmatic statements about the nature and meaning of baptism. The real difficulty to be explained was the connection between the outward rite and the inward spiritual change; or, to put it more precisely, the relation between the water used and the Holy Spirit, who alone can regenerate. The Greek theologians had shirked rather than faced the difficulty, and used terms at one time exaggerating the magical value of the element, at another insisting on the purely ethical and spiritual nature of the rite; but they never attempted to show in what precise relation the external rite stood to the inward change of heart. It is true that one or two theologians had almost anticipated Augustine's view, but the anticipation was more apparent than real; for the theology of the Greek Church in this, as in most other doctrines, is greatly hampered by the mystical tendency to represent regeneration and kindred doctrines much more as a species of chemical change of nature than as a change in the relations of the will. Augustine insisted strongly on the distinction between the sacrament itself and what he called the 'res sacramenti'—between the inward and spiritual and the outward and material; and by doing so Augustine became the founder of both the modern Roman Catholic and the modern Protestant views. Apart from certain modifying influences, it would not be difficult for the orthodox Protestant to subscribe to most of Augustine's views upon baptism, for he insists strongly on the uselessness of the external sign without the inward blessing of the Spirit. But in this doctrine, as in most others, Augustine's doctrine of the Church so interfered as to make practically inoperative his more spiritual views of baptism. The Church, Augustine thought, was the body of Christ; and that in a peculiarly external and physical way, and just as the soul of man cannot, so far as we know, exert any influence save upon and through the body, so the Spirit of Christ dispenses his gracious and regenerating influences only through the body of Christ, i. e. the Church. But the Church, Augustine thought, was no invisible spiritual communion. It was the visible kingdom of God, the visible 'civitas Dei in peregrinatione per terras'; and so entrance into the Church, and the right and possibility of participating in the spiritual benefits which members of the Church can alone enjoy, was only possible by means of a visible entrance into this visible kingdom. Thus, while Augustine in theory always laid greatest stress upon the work of the Holy Spirit and upon the spiritual side of baptism, he practically gave the impulse to that view of the sacrament which made the external rite of primary importance. It was the Holy Spirit who alone imparted spiritual gifts to the children of God. But the one way by which the benefits of this Spirit could be shared was in the first place through baptism. Baptism was thought to be necessary to salvation, and all who were unbaptized were unsaved. In this way Augustine, while recognising the spiritual nature of the sacrament, held views about the importance of the rite which were as strong as those of any Greek theologian who had mingled confusedly in his mind Christian doctrines and the maxims of pagan philosophy about the creative power of the element of water. Of course such a doctrine of the importance of the baptism with water had to be modified to some extent. There were cases of Christian martyrs who had never been baptized, and yet had confessed Christ, and died to confess him; for their sakes the idea of a baptism of blood was brought forward; they were baptized not with water, but in their own blood. And the same desire to widen the circle of the baptized led the way to the recognition of the baptism of heretics, laymen, and nurses. It was the Augustinian doctrine of baptism which was developed by the schoolmen, and which now is the substance of modern Roman Catholic teaching. The schoolmen, whose whole theology was dominated by the Augustinian conception of the Church, simply took over, and made somewhat more mechanical and less spiritual, Augustine's doctrine. They were enabled to give the doctrine a more precise and definite shape by accommodating it to the terms of the Aristotelian philosophy. They began by distinguishing between the matter and the form of baptism. Had Augustine had this distinction before him, he would probably have called the water the matter, and the action of the Holy Spirit the form which verified and gave shape to the matter; but the whole idea of the schoolmen was much more mechanical, the magical idea of the sacrament came much more into prominence, and the spiritual and ethical fell much more into the background; and with them, while water was the materia sacramenti, the forma sacramenti was the words of the rite—'I baptize thee,' etc., etc. Thus insensibly the distinction between the external rite and the work of the Holy Spirit, which Augustine had clearly before him in theory at least, was driven back into its original obscurity; and while it was always held theoretically that the grace conferred in baptism was conferred by the Holy Spirit, still the action of the Spirit was so inseparably connected with the performance of the rite that the external ceremony was held to be full warrant for the inward spiritual presence and power; and it was held that in baptism grace was conferred ex opere operato. The actual benefits which were supposed to come in this way were freedom from original sin, and forgiveness of it and all sins committed up to the time of baptism, and the implanting of a new spiritual life—a life which could only be slain by a deadly sin. The scholastic doctrine of baptism is the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church, and the statements made by Möhler on the one hand, and Jesuit theologians on the other, do not do more than give a poetical coloring to the doctrine, or bring out more thoroughly the magical and mechanical nature of the rite."

Baptismerium, the mediæval title of a service-book containing the ritual used in administering baptism.

Baptismia (βαπτισμια) and Baptismios (βαπτισμιος), Greek terms for godmother and godfather respectively.

Baptisms, REGISTER OF. Such record was first ordered to be kept by the injunctions of Cromwell in 1538, and the regulation was renewed by Canon 70 of the Synod of London, 1602-3, which orders "ministers to keep a register of christenings, weddings, and burials;" the said register to be kept in "a sure coffer with three locks and keys." In the Church of Rome the baptismal register is directed to be kept in the sacristy, and the register of each baptism ought to be signed by the father, if present, and by the sponsors. In most modern churches similar records are required.

Baptist, EDWARD, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., May 12, 1790, and was a graduate of Hampden Sidney College. Changing his relations from the Presbyterian Church, which he joined at the age of eighteen, he became a Baptist, and was ordained in 1815 and settled in Powhatan County. Dr. Baptist occupied a very prominent position in his denomination in Virginia, and took an active part in promoting its interests in the state. In 1835 he removed to Marengo County, Ala., and was for many years pastor of a Church in Uniontown. He was a somewhat prolific writer, contributing many articles to the Richmond Religious Herald, etc. He died March 31, 1863. See Baptist Encyclop. p. 72. (J. C. S.)

Baptista (Battista) OF FERRARA, surnamed Panatius, an Italian monk of the Order of Carmelites, lived in the latter half of the 15th century. Versed in literature, both sacred and profane, he left a number of works, for the most part unpublished, among which we cite, Chronica sui Ordinis:—De Ruina Romani Imperii:—De Monte Sina:—Vita Mechitidis:—Chronica Ferrariensis:—Sermones Varii. He also translated into Latin several discourses of St. John Chrysostom. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptista (Bautista), Alfonso (or Juan Ildefonso), a Spanish Dominican and theologian, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He taught theology at Saragossa, and wrote, Commentaria in Primam Secundæ D. Thomæ:—Apologia por la Autoridad de los Doctores de la Iglesia y Santos Padres, contra un Memorial intitulado Á los Juezes de la Verdad y Doctrina (Saragossa, 1628), in response to the Jesuit Juan Bautista Posa. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptista (Bautista), Anselmo, a Spanish theologian, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He was a monk of the Order of Cîteaux at Huestas, and wrote, Relacion de las Vidas y Triunfos de los Gloriosos Martires, de los Milagros de Nuestra Señora de Loreto:—Ars Amandi Deum, translated into Italian and Spanish. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptista (Battista), Giovanni, an Italian Jewish convert of the 15th century, and physician by profession, is the author of Liber de Confutatione Hebraicæ Sectæ (Strasburg, 1500), which he dedicated to cardinal Bernardo Caravajal. The whole is divided into three sections: the first treats of the first advent of the Messiah, with an explanation of thirteen prophecies; the second, of his second advent in the time of Gog, i. e. the Anti-christ, at which time the remnant of the Jews shall be saved; the third deals with the manner of refuting the Jews. In conclusion, he admonishes all those Jews who have found the Saviour to remain steadfast in the faith, and to live according to the Gospel. See Wolff, Bibl. Hebr. iii, 353 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i,

84; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Kal-kar, Israel und die Kirche, p. 81 sq. (B. P.)

Baptista, Gregorio, a Portuguese theologian, a native of Funchal, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He first entered the Benedictine Order, and became doctor of theology and general preacher of the order, then went over to the Franciscans. He wrote, a Commentary on the 13th Chap. of St. John (Coimbra, 1621); the first part was published, but the two others were not:—Completa da Vida de Christo Cantadas a Harpa da Cruz, por ille Mesmo, translated from Portuguese into Spanish by Ferd. de Camargo. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptista (Battista), Hortensio, an Italian bishop and theologian, native of Frosignone, died in 1594. He was doctor of theology and bishop of Veroli, and wrote Comment. de Rerum Universitate. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptista (Bautista), José, a Mexican theologian, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He belonged to the Order of St. Francis, was keeper of the convent of Letzucca, and taught theology. He wrote, Informationes Confessoriorum in India vel America:—De Casibus Conscientiæ circa Confessiones Occurrentibus:—Placitas Morales de los Indios:—De Miseria et Brevitate Vitæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptiste DE SAULIS, a French theologian of the 15th century, belonged to the Order of the Cordeliers. He wrote Une Somme de Cas de Conscience (Paris, 1449). He must not be confounded with Battista surnamed Trovamala, a theologian who also wrote, about 1580, a Summa Casuum Conscientiæ, of which Bellarmine (De Scriptor. Eccles.) speaks in eulogistic terms. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptisti, Pietro, an Italian theologian, a native of Perugia, of the Franciscan Order, died July 13, 1677. He wrote, Scala dell' Anima per Giungere in Breve alla Contemplatione, Perfezzione e Unione con Dio. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baptianski, DEDAIUS, a Hungarian monk of the Order of St. Francis, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He wrote Fasciculus Myrræ (Vienna, 1701), a dissertation concerning the Passion. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bar, another name of the Chaldean god Bilgi.

Bar, Alexander, a Scottish prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Moray in 1362, and was such until 1390. He was witness to several charters in the nineteenth year of king Robert II. He died May 15, 1397. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 141.

Bar, François de, a learned French Benedictine, was born in 1538 at Seizencourt, near St. Quentin. From 1574 he was grand prior of the Abbey of Anchin (Order of St. Benedict), upon the Scarpe, and was well versed in ecclesiastical history. His works remain unpublished; but at the period of the Revolution they were transported from the Library of Anchin to that of Douay, where they are still preserved. He died March 25, 1606. We notice among his works, *Epistolæ:—Cosmographia:—Opera Varia:—Compendium Annalium Ecclesiasticarum Cæsaris Baronii:—Historia Archiepiscopatus Cameracensis et Cœnobiorum ejus:—Historia Monastica:—*and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bar, Louis, cardinal-bishop of Chalons-sur-Marne, brother and heir of Edward III, resigned in 1419 in favor of René of Anjou, his nephew, against whom Adolphus VIII, duke of Berg, bore arms, but without success, claiming a right to the duchy of Bar through his wife, sister of cardinal Louis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bar, Louis de, a French theologian, was a native of Sens. At the age of thirty he went to Rome, where he embraced the ecclesiastical calling; became secretary of the cardinal of Ferrara; was appointed legate to France to Charles IX, and accompanied to Spain the cardinal Ugo Buoncompagno (afterwards pope Gregory XIII), who appointed him produtary. After the death of this pontiff, De Bar gave his attention wholly to his functions as dean of the apostolic sub-deacons of St. Peter's at Rome, and to the relief of the poor. He died in 1617. He wrote, among other works, Ex quatuor Evangelistarum Textu Confecta Narratio, which was published four months before the death of the author. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bara, a festival formerly celebrated with much magnificence at Messina, in Sicily, representing the Assumption (q. v.) of the Virgin Mary. The word was also employed as the designation of a huge machine exhibited during the festival. It was fifty feet high, and at the top of it was a girl fourteen years of age representing the Virgin, and standing on the hand of an image of Jesus Christ.

Bara (or Barra), JOHN, a Dutch engraver, was born in the year 1575. He published some plates in England, dated 1624 and 1627. The following are a few of his principal sacred prints: A Landscape with Susanna and the Elders:—Christ and his Disciples going to Emmaus:—The Parable of the Sower.

Barabara-Wasfu is the uncreated supreme god of the Malabars.

Barabbino, SIMONE, an Italian painter, was born near Genoa about 1585, and studied under Bernardo Castello. One of his best works is The Dead Christ, with the Virgin, St. Michael, and St. Andrew, in the Church of San Girolamo. He died imprisoned for debt; but Zani says he was living in 1664. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baraca. See BARAKA.

Barachus was bishop of Bacatha, or Metrocome, in Palestina Tertia, in the middle of the 4th century. When Justinian, at the request of St. Sabas, erected a church at Jerusalem in honor of the Blessed Virgin, Barachus was made superintendent of the works (Cyril, Scythop. Vit. S. Sabæ, No. 73). In 536 he attended the council held at Jerusalem against Anthimus and the Monophysites. See Labbe, Concil. v, 268.

Baradæus. See ZANZALUS, JACOB.

Baradâtus (or Varadatus) was a celebrated hermit near Antioch in the 5th century. After many years of utter seclusion in a cell so small that he could neither stand nor lie in it, he was at last induced by Theodotus, the bishop of Antioch, to come forth. He appeared wrapped in skins from head to foot, with the exception of his mouth and nostrils. Among other eminent monks and hermits, he was consulted by the emperor Leo after the Council of Chalcedon (Theodotus, Phil. 27; Evagrius, Hist. ii, 9; Nicephorus, Hist. xv, 22; Assemani, Biblioth. Orient. c. 19).

Baræas (Bapaiaç) is mentioned as one of Manes' disciples in the Greek form of abjuration (ap. Cotelier, Patres Apost. i, 545).

Barænus, Justus, a Dutch theologian, little known, who lived in the 17th century, wrote Epist. ad Abr. Scultetum (Antwerp, 1620), in which he defended the doctrines of Lutheranism. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baraga, FRIEDRICH, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop and missionary among the North American Indians, was born at Treffen, Carniola, June 29, 1797. He was educated at the University of Vienna; entered holy orders in 1823; came to America in 1830, and spent the remainder of his life in connection with the Chippewa and Ottawa missions in Michigan. In 1853 he became bishop of Marquette and Sault Ste. Marie. He died Jan. 19, 1868. He published a number of works in the Chippewa language, including a grammar and dictionary, and a German work on the History, Character, and Habits of the North American Indians (1837).

Barahona, PETRUS (surnamed Valdivieso de), a Spanish Franciscan who lived in the 17th century, is the author of, De Arcano Verbo, sive de Vivo Dei Sermone:—Interpretatio Literalis, Mystica, et Moralis in Psalmum lxxvi:—Commentatio in Epistolam ad Galatas:—Comm. in Epist. ad Hebræos. See Antonio, Bibl. Hisp.; Wadding, Bibl. Script. Minorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baraka (Arab. benediction), a name applied by the Coptic Church [see COPTS] to the unleavened bread used in the eucharist before it has been consecrated.

Barallots, a heretical sect of Bologna, Italy, who are said to have had all things in common, even their wives and children.

Barālus (or Barulas), an infant ("parvus, nec olim lacte depulsus")—mentioned by Prudentius (Hymn x, Ἐπεὶ σφραγίσαν), Eusebius Gallicanus, the author of Homily 48 in the works of St. Augustine, and others—to whom St. Romanus of Cæsarea, martyred at Antioch, and Asclepiades, the prefect, his judge, referred the question concerning the truth of the Christian religion. Baralus, having declared Christ to be the true God, was forthwith put to the torture by Asclepiades, and martyred with Romanus. The story has but small authority. See Ruinart, Acta Sinc. p. 360; Baillet, iii, 321.

Baranovius (Baranowski), ALBERTUS, a Polish theologian of the Roman Catholic Church, was at first bishop of Przemsł. In 1604 he was appointed to the diocese of Wladislaw, and finally was archbishop of Gnesen, where he died, in 1615. He wrote, Constitutiones Synodi Diœcesanæ Vladislaviensis anno 1607 Celebratæ (Cracow, 1607):—Councilum Provinciale Regni Poloniæ anno 1607 Celebratum (ibid. 1611):—Synodus Diœcesanæ Gnesnensis Habita 1612 (ibid. 1612). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Baranyi, PAUL, a Hungarian Jesuit and theologian, lived in the early half of the 18th century. In his native country he gained great renown as a preacher, and wrote Imago Vitæ et Mortis, or Az Életnek es Halálnak Kepe (Tyrnau, 1712), a collection of funeral orations in the Hungarian language. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baranzane (or Baranzano), JEAN ANTOINE (surnamed Redemptus), a Barnabite monk, was born at Serravalle, in Piedmont, in 1590. He was one of the first in the 17th century who threw aside the Aristotelian opinions in philosophy. He was on intimate terms with Bacon, and died at Montargis, Dec. 23, 1622. His works are, Uranoscopia, seu Universa Doctrina de Cælo (Geneva, 1617):—Novæ Opiniones Physicæ (Lyons, 1619, 8vo):—and some devotional works, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barara-Kied (or Radien Kieddie) was the son of Radien Atzie, according to the mythology of the Lapps. His father was the first of the deities; and, next to his father, he was the supreme god, the creator of the universe. The magicians of the Lapps represent him on their drums in the form of a huge house.

Barashnom, in Persian mythology, is the greatest ceremony of purification. A holy priest well instructed in the divine service washed the penitent in a sacred spot. The latter thereupon remained first three, then nine, days in a specially selected and secluded place, still continuing his purifications.

Barathus, JOHANNES, a Belgian Carmelite of the 15th century, is the author of, De Revelatione Divinorum:—Postilla in Apocalypsin:—Postilla in Epistolam ad Hebræos:—De Utilitate Scripturæ. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Swertii Athenæ Belgicæ. (B. P.)

Baratz, a document granted by the Turkish sultan to the Greek patriarchs and bishops, sanctioning them in the exercise of their ecclesiastical functions. It gives them power to appoint or depose the inferior clergy, to grant licenses for marriages, to issue divorces, to collect the revenues belonging to the churches, to receive the legacies bequeathed to them—in short, to enjoy all the privileges, and to perform all the duties, belonging to their high station.

Barawa Fire was an Indian discovery, similar to the Greek fire in that it continued burning under water. Beshukerna, or Visvakarma, is said to have discovered it when the good genii, Devas, fought against the evil Assurs.

Barax (or Baraze), CYPRIEN, a French missionary, was sent by the Jesuits, to which order he belonged, on a mission to the house of Moxes, and to other savage tribes of South America. He called them together, taught them to cultivate the soil, to weave cloth, and other useful arts. He spent twenty-seven years in this work, and finally suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Baures, a savage nation whom he attempted in vain to convert. He died Sept. 16, 1702, aged about sixty-one years. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barba, GIOVANNI, an Italian advocate and bishop, a native of Naples, had charge of representing the government of Naples among the twelve consistorial advocates. It was owing to Barba that pope Clement XII instituted the society of studies already projected by Sextus V. He died Sept. 11, 1749. He wrote Delle Arte e del Methodo delle Lingue, Libri III (Rome, 1734). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barba, Saint. See BARBARA, ST.

Barbarano, FRANCESCO, an Italian theologian of the Capuchin Order, was a native of Vicenza, and died in 1656. He wrote Orologio Spirituale; cioè Prediche per Tutte le Feste della S. V. (Vicenza, 1641):—Direttorio alla Vita Spirituale e Cristiana (Venice, 1647):—Historia Ecclesiastica della Città, Territorio e Diocesi di Vicenza (Vicenza, 1649-53):—Giocello Spirituale del Cristiano (ibid. 1651, 1657). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbarelli, GIORGIO (called Giorgione), a distinguished Italian painter, was born at Castel-franco, near Treviso, in 1477, and attended the school of Giovanni Bellini at Venice. He soon manifested great ability, and was the first of the Venetian painters who broke through the timid and constrained style that prevailed at the time of Bellini, and introduced a freedom of outline, a boldness of handling, and a vigorous effect of chiaro-oscuro which were unknown before him. He died in 1511. Of his oil-paintings the principal are, the picture of St. Omobono, in the school of Sarti at Venice:—Christ Bearing his Cross, in the Church of San Roch:—and in the school of San Marco, a picture of that saint appeasing the tempest. One of his most esteemed works is the Finding of Moses, at Milan.

Barbarians, BISHOPS FOR. In ordinary cases, the election of a bishop required the consent or suffrage, not only of the clergy of the diocese over which he was to preside, but of the faithful laity also. This rule was applicable only to countries already Christian. When a bishop was to be sent out to a distant or barbarous nation, it was required by the Council of Chalcedon that he should be ordained at Constantinople, to which city, as the new Rome, equal privileges with "the elder, royal Rome" were now to be assigned. Athanasius ordained Frumentius at Alexandria to be bishop of the Ethiopians. See Bingham, Christ. Antiq. (index). See IN PARTIBUS INFIDELIUM.

Barbarigo, Giovanni Francesco, a learned Italian prelate, nephew of the following, was born at Venice in 1658. He was successively ambassador to the court of Louis XIV, prior of the Church of St. Mark at Venice, bishop of Verona, cardinal and bishop of Padua. He published at his own expense the works of St. Zeno (Padua, 1710). He died at Padua, Jan. 27, 1730. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbarigo, Gregorio, an Italian prelate, was born at Venice, Sept. 25, 1625. Destined at first for a public administration, he afterwards embraced an ecclesiastical course, having studied at Padua both law and theology. He became canon and domestic prelate, and received from pope Alexander VII the care of the infected districts lying beyond the Tiber, a mission which he performed with zeal. In 1657 he was made archbishop of Bergamo, where his charity gained for him the surname of "the new Charles Borromeo." In 1660 he was made cardinal. From the bishopric of Bergamo he passed to that of Padua in 1663. He established in this last-mentioned place a seminary which he endowed, and where he introduced professors of Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, Greek, and Latin, and at the same time attached to the establishment a printing-house provided with the type for all these languages. He died at Padua, June 18, 1697. Miracles are said to have been worked at his tomb, and Clement XIII declared his beatification, July 16, 1761. We have from this prelate, among several regulations for his Church, twenty-five letters, written in Italian at Magliabecchi, in the Epistolæ Clarorum Venetorum ad Antonium Magliabecchum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbaro, DANIELLO, an Italian theologian of the 16th century, a native of Venice, was coadjutor of the patriarch of Aquila. In 1548 he was sent on an embassy to Edward VI of England. He attended the Council of Trent, where he distinguished himself. He died in 1569, aged fifty-seven years. He wrote Græcorum Patrum Catena in Psalmos Quinquaginta Davidis (Rome and Venice, 1588), and many other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbarossa, CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian, was born in 1562. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1597 pastor at Luneburg, in 1599 pastor and superintendent in Oldenburg, and died in 1623. He wrote, Delineatio Historiæ Passionis Jesu Christi:—Analysis Catechetica:—Postilla Postillarum Practica:—Epistolæ Evangelicæ et Passions-Postillen. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Barbary, RELIGION OF. The states of Barbary is a general name for the whole northern coast of Africa, with the exception of Egypt. The inhabitants are chiefly zealous and bigoted Mohammedans—more bigoted, indeed, than the communion of Islam in any other country. From their tolbas, or spiritual instructors, very little real knowledge is derived. There is no connection between the ministers of religion and the government, as in other Mohammedan countries; nor is there any corporate body, like the ulema in Turkey, to preserve and maintain the doctrine and discipline of the Church. The veneration of the people is bestowed almost exclusively upon a class of persons called marabouts, who, through absurd pretensions to supernatural power and an intercourse with invisible beings, raise themselves to the character of saints. Idiots and madmen are uniformly reputed holy. The higher class of saints, or marabouts, are second only to the king, if they do not rival him. The emperors of Morocco have been long accustomed, by high pretensions to sanctity, to heighten the respect of their subjects. A marabout discharges the duties of a priest, is an avorter of evil, and a manufacturer of talismans and amulets, besides performing many strange tricks with the view of exciting wonder and admiration. He has the privilege of granting sanctuary to any accused person, whether innocent or guilty, and even of affording protection to any one who has incurred the displeasure of the sovereign himself. In the Barbary states superstitions of various kinds prevail. The great mass of the people have a firm belief in an evil eye. Serpent-charmers are to be found exciting the wonder of all observers. Among the inhabitants of the northern coasts of Africa deceased relatives are held in great veneration. Every Friday evening "the feast of the dead" is held, when the people repair to the tombs of their ancestors, who are supposed to be present on that evening, and to share in the festival which is celebrated there. See Broughton [Mrs.], Six Years' Residence in Algiers.

Barbâta, in Roman mythology, was a surname of Venus, from a bearded statue of her erected to ward off evil from the Roman women who lost their hair in consequence of an epidemic disease.

Barbato (or Barbatia), a celebrated Italian jurisconsult, was born at Messina, in Sicily, in the 15th century. He wrote on the second book of the decretals, on the Clementines, relative to the cardinals, etc., and died at Bologna, July 21, 1479.

Barbâtus was a surname of the Asiatic Bacchus among the Romans, because here he appeared manly, dressed and bearded, much different from his usual youthful appearance.

Barbâtus, Sr., bishop of Benevento, was born about the end of the year 603. In his youth he was employed in preaching, and was made curate of the Church of St. Basil, in Morcona. He strove to destroy the remnants of superstition among the Lombards, and in 663 was made bishop of Benevento. He attended the Council of Rome in 680, under pope Agatho, and died Feb. 19, 682. See Baillet, Feb. 19.

Barbauld, Mrs. Anna Letitia, an eminent Christian writer of hymns, was born at Kibworth, Leicester, England, June 20, 1743. She was the daughter of Rev. John Aikin, LL.D., who for several years had charge of a flourishing academy. Her brother, John Aikin, M.D., like his sister, was a distinguished author. His sister early developed remarkable literary ability, and received an accomplished education. At the age of thirty (1773) she published a volume of miscellaneous poems, which was so well received that four editions of the work were called for within a year after publication. She was married in 1774 to the Rev. Rochemont Barbauld, a descendant of a family of French Protestants. Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Barbauld opened a select school in the village of Palgrave, which met with great success. Although busily occupied with her work as a teacher, Mrs. Barbauld found time to engage in literary pursuits. She prepared for the press her Early Lessons for Children and her Hymns in Prose for Children; in 1775 her Devotional Pieces, composed from the Psalms and the book of Job. In 1790 she published A Poetical Epistle to Mr. Wilberforce on the Rejection of the Bill for Abolishing the Slave-trade, and in 1792 Remarks on Gilbert Wakefield's "Inquiry into the Expediency and Propriety of Public and Social Worship." Mrs. Barbauld was associated with her brother in the production of Evenings at Home, a work in six volumes, commenced in 1792 and completed in 1795. Mr. Barbauld became pastor of a congregation at Newington Green, and with his wife made a home at Stoke-Newington. In 1804 Mrs. Barbauld published Selections from the "Spectator," "Tatler," "Guardian," and "Freeholder." She wrote also this year A Life of Samuel Richardson. In 1810 she edited the British Novelists, a series which was published in fifty volumes, and in 1811 wrote a poem, Eighteen Hundred and Eleven. She died March 9, 1825. Her rank among the English female writers is a high one. Her hymns are among the best sacred lyrics in the language, and not a few of them have found their way into our best collections. The best known of these are:

"Praise to God, immortal praise,
For the love that crowns our days;"

the Easter hymn,

"Again the Lord of life and light Awakes the kindling ray;"

also the hymn,

"Awake, my soul! lift up thine eyes!
See where thy foes against thee rise;"

and the hymns of which the following are the first lines: "How blest the sacred tie that binds," "Come, said Jesus' sacred voice," "Our country is Immanuel's land." See Aikin [Miss Lucy], Memoir of Mrs. Barbauld; Cleveland, English Literature of the 19th Century, p. 167, 168; Frost, British Poets, p. 35; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (J. C. S.)

Barbauld, Rochemont, an English dissenting minister, was born of French parents in England in 1748. He received the rudiments of his education at home; was intended by his father for the Church of England, though educated at the Dissenting Academy at Warrington to avoid the expense, and hazard to the morals, of a university education, and in 1773 entered the Dissenting ministry at Highgate, where he preached about a year. In the year following he removed to Palgrave, Suffolk, and took charge of a neighboring congregation of Dissenters in Norfolk. There he taught a very flourishing school. Eleven years later he removed to Hampstead, thence to Stoke-Newington, where he remained until about the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 11, 1808. Mr. Barbauld was liberal in theology, a man of active benevolence, of free and courageous spirit, and possessor of a winning simplicity and natural enthusiasm. See Whittemore, Modern History of Universalism, p. 248.

Barbe, the name given to a pastor among the ancient Waldenses (q. v.). See BARBETS.

Barbe, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1585, and probably studied under the Wierixes. He visited Italy and became proficient in drawing. The following are some of his best prints: The Annunciation:—The Nativity:—The Virgin Mary and St. Joseph Arriving at Bethlehem:—Christ on the Mount of Olives:—The Repose in Egypt:—The Holy Family, with the Infant Jesus Embracing St. Joseph.

Barbe, a French Lazarite and preacher of the 18th century, had charge of the Seminary of the "Bons Enfants" at Paris. He wrote, Prières Touchantes et Affectives, in which are explained in few words the gospels for all the Sundays of the year and for Lent (Paris, 1712):—Prières durant la Sainte Messe (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbe, PHILIPPE, a Roman Catholic minister, was born at London in 1723 of French parentage. Having studied at the College of Louis the Great at Paris, he took holy orders. He was shortly after called to the head of the College of Longres, and afterwards to that of Chaumont. Being recalled to Paris in 1785, he was placed in charge of the translation of the works of the Greek fathers for the collection which M. de Juigné, archbishop of Paris, was preparing. At the period of the Revolution he went to Chaumont, where he died soon after, in 1792. He wrote, Fables et Contes Philosophiques (Paris, 1771). Barbier, in his Dictionnaire des Anonymes, attributes to him wrongfully the work entitled Fables Nouvelles, Divisées en 6 Livres (ibid. 1762). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbelites was one of the names given to certain Ophitic Gnostics (Epiph. i, 85 B), taken from Barbelo, a personage in their mythology. Theoderet (Hist. Eccl. i, 13) calls them Barbeliotes, apparently on no independent authority. The common text of Irenæus (p. 107) speaks of "multitudo Gnosticorum Barbelo;" but Mr. Harvey reasonably suggests that Barbelo came in from the margin. This sentence refers to a "multitude" of heretics, "some" only of whom are said in the next sentence to have "imagined" (ὑπέθετο) Barbelo (Borboriani).—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Barber, Aquila, a minister of the British Wesleyan Methodist Church, was born in Bristol, Jan. 14, 1797. He was converted at the age of eighteen, was received into the ministry in 1821, became a supernumerary in 1863, settled at Gainsborough, and died April 21, 1870, having had the rare joy of seeing four of his sons called to the ministry. He was distinguished by a firm attachment to the Church, by cheerfulness and uprightness, and by his faithfulness and ability as a preacher. He wrote, A Brother's Portrait; Memorials of the Late Rev. William Barber, with Memorials of his Wife Written by Himself (Lond. 1830, 8vo). See Minutes of British Conference, 1870, p. 31.

Barber, Cyrus, a Baptist missionary, was born in Portsmouth, R. I., March 27, 1807. He pursued his studies at the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution. The Missionary Union appointed him as one of its missionaries July 22, 1839, and he was set apart for his work by ordination at Newport, R. I., in September of that year. He sailed with his wife from Boston Oct. 22, 1839, and reached Calcutta Feb. 20, 1840. He and Mrs. Barber, and Miss Rhoda Bronson, a sister of Rev. Dr. Bronson, were originally designated to the department among the Nagas, but it was decided that the two former should confine their labors to the Assamese. Accordingly, they took up their residence in Sibsagar, a town having a population at the time of eight thousand inhabitants, situated on the river Dikho, ten miles from the Brahmaputra. Here, for several years, Mr. Barber labored with great zeal, and a blessing followed his work. Officers and residents attached to the civil and military service of the East India Company rendered substantial aid to the mission. In February, 1845, a Church was formed in Gowahati, to which place Mr. Barber had removed. On account of ill-health, he left his station with the hope that a temporary absence might recruit his wasted strength. He died at sea, and was buried in Mozambique Channel Jan. 31, 1850. See Gammell, History of Missions (chapter on Assam); The Missionary Jubilee, p. 237. (J. C. S.)

Barber, Daniel Montgomery, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Montour County, Pa., March 16, 1800. He graduated from Washington College, Pa., in 1824, and was ordained Nov. 21, 1827, by Northumberland Presbytery as an evangelist, and appointed to labor on the Susquehanna river. In 1833 he accepted a call to the First Church, Williamsport, Pa., and after 1858 labored in other places. He died at Milton, Pa., Oct. 30, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 122; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 52.

Barber, Edward, a Baptist minister, was born in Exeter, R. I., Sept. 23, 1768. He was ordained pastor of a Baptist Church at Union Village, Sept. 25, 1794, and died July 1, 1834. He was distinguished as a preacher, a pastor, and a counsellor. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 194.

Barber, Eldad, a Congregational minister, was born in East Windsor, Conn., Sept. 24, 1801. He completed his theological course in Yale College in the summer of 1829, having spent the winter of 1828-29 under the direction of the American Sunday-school Union in Ohio. He was ordained as a missionary under appointment of the American Home Missionary Society Aug. 26, by the Litchfield South Association, at Woodbury, Conn., and for the next two years preached in the Presbyterian Church in Marion, O. From April, 1832, to October, 1835, he had charge of the Huron Institute in Milan, O., supplying also neighboring churches. He was pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Florence, O., from 1837 until his death, March 27, 1871. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1871.

Barber, Francis, a Baptist minister, was born in Pembroke, Mass., Dec. 22, 1806, and was a graduate of Waterville College in the class of 1834. He was licensed to preach in 1832. After leaving college, he pursued the three years' course of study at the Newton Theological Institution, and was ordained as an evangelist in Middleborough, Mass., Oct. 20, 1837, with a view to missionary labor in the West. He received an appointment from the Board of the Baptist General Convention April 15, 1839, as a missionary among the Shawnee Indians, and labored among this tribe until his mission was broken up by "border ruffians" in 1856. During the remainder of his life, he lived on his farm, five miles west of Lawrence, Kan., where he died, Feb. 13, 1863. (J. C. S.)

Barber, George M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Rush County, Ind., Sept. 25, 1824. He joined the Church in his twelfth year, and was converted in his fifteenth. He entered Asbury University in 1845, remained two years, then studied medicine in Rushville two years, and entered the medical department of the University of New York. In 1857 he graduated at Pennsylvania University, Philadelphia; moved to Cornersville in 1859, and there practiced medicine until 1866, when he removed to Madison, Ind. In 1868 he united with the South-east Indiana Conference, and labored with marvellous success until his decease, Aug. 14, 1874. Over seven hundred conversions bear witness to Mr. Barber's zeal and fidelity during his short ministry. He was warm-hearted and energetic. His great success, however, lay in his personal labors from house to house. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 96.

Barber, George Richard, an English Congregational minister, was born in the Fen district, Cambridgeshire, of Primitive Methodist parents. He was converted at the age of eighteen, changed his ecclesiastical views soon after, and accepted the Congregational pastorate at Castle Camps, Cambridgeshire, where he labored two and a half years. His death occurred April 16, 1878. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 297.

Barber, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Kinder, Derbyshire, Dec. 16, 1757. He was converted in 1778, and in 1782 was taken from his business as a weaver, and appointed by Wesley to the Birmingham Circuit. He subsequently labored on the Huddersfield, Manchester, London, and Bristol (1814) circuits. As a leading member of the Committee of Privileges, he was largely instrumental in saving the Methodist societies from the subversion of their religious liberty contemplated in a bill introduced in the House of Lords. He died in Bristol, April 28, 1816, being then for the second time president of the Conference. Barber's piety, sympathy, independence, and zeal for God and the truth were conspicuous. There was probably none more intimately acquainted with the doctrines and usages of Methodism. See Wesleyan Meth. Mag. 1818, p. 241, 321; Smith, Hist. of Meth. ii, 540; iii, 4; Minutes of the British Conference, 1816; Wesleyan Takings (Lond. 1841), i, 299.

Barber, Jonathan, a Presbyterian minister, was born at West Springfield, Mass., in 1712. He graduated at Yale College in 1730, and was licensed to preach in 1732. He preached for some years on Long Island. In 1740 he went South, and was superintendent of the Orphan House in Georgia seven years. He died in 1783. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 82.

Barber, Samuel, a Congregational minister, was born in Dublin, Ireland, Dec. 31, 1779. Soon after his birth, his parents removed to Manchester, England. On Sept. 1, 1801, he left Manchester to become a student in Rotherham College. His last day at Rotherham he received an invitation from the Church at Ulverstone, Lancashire, which he accepted, and after laboring there for a considerable time was ordained, June 14, 1807. He removed to Bridgenorth, Shropshire, May 22, 1809, and opened an academy, in which he continued from 1812 to 1844, in the meantime performing his duties as pastor. He resigned his charge in December, 1845, and withdrew from the Church. An illness of three years now undermined his health, and he died Oct. 24, 1854. He was a man of sterling worth, strict fidelity; a faithful minister and a devoted servant of God. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1855, p. 204.

Barber, Thomas, an Irish Wesleyan minister, first heard the Gospel preached by Methodists at Sidare, County Fermanagh. He was convicted of sin under the ministry of John Wesley, who admitted him into the Church. His love for souls soon led him to engage in missionary work on the Londonderry Circuit. His first appointment was to Sligo in 1779. After a most active service, he became a supernumerary in 1808, and died in 1826. Barber guided Adam Clarke's earliest religious course. He was a man of agreeable eccentricities, indefatigable energy, and great success. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1826; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 437.

Barber, William, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born in Bristol, of pious parents, whose training of him resulted in his early conversion. By diligence he acquired a respectable learning. In 1824 he was sent to Gibraltar as missionary to the Spaniards, but, after laboring with success for four years, was cut off at his post by the ravages of an epidemic fever, Oct. 26, 1828. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1829; Barber [Rev. Aquila], Memoirs (Lond. 1830).

Barberi, FILIPPO DEL, an Italian theologian, a native of Syracuse, lived in the latter half of the 15th century. He was appointed inquisitor of the faith in Sicily, and in the isle of Malta and of Gozo in 1481. Among other works, he wrote, Tractatus de Discordia inter Eusebium, Hieronymum, et Aurelium Augustinum; Approbatum Sibyllarum et Prophetarum Dictis Omniumque Gentilium Philosophorum et Veterum Poetarum qui de Christo Vaticinati sunt atque aliqua Prædixerunt; — Donatus Theologus, quo Theologicae Quaestiones Grammatica Arte Solvuntur (these works were published at Rome, 1481); — Libellus de Animarum Immortalitate; — Libellus de Divina Providentia Mundi Gubernatione, Hominum Prædestinatione atque Reprobatione (the author here teaches the doctrine of St. Thomas); — Sermonum Quadragesimalium Volumen Pergrande; — Domincarum ac Sanctorum Volumen. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barberini (not Barberino), Antonio (surnamed Il Vecchio), an Italian prelate and theologian, brother of Urban VIII, was born at Florence in 1569. In 1585 he joined the Capuchins; in 1624 was appointed cardinal bishop at Sinigaglia and librarian of the Vatican at Rome. He died Sept. 11, 1646. He is the author of, Constitutiones Synodales et Decreta pro Diocesi Senogallensi (Rome, 1627); — Tractatus de Antiquo Modo Eligendi in Religione Capuccinorum (ibid. 1640); — Ordinationes pro Bono Regimine Religionis Capuccinorum (ibid. eod.). See Bernardus a Bononia, Bibl. Capuccinorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Barberini, Bonaventura, an Italian theologian and prelate, was born at Ferrara in 1674. At the age of sixteen he entered the Capuchin Order, from which ill-health led him to withdraw and enter the Franciscan Order. He performed various subordinate ecclesiastical functions, and was finally made archbishop of Ferrara by pope Benedict XIV. He died Oct. 15, 1743. He wrote, Orazione Italiana (Forlì, about 1718), upon various subjects, which proved a great success:—Prediche dette nel Sacro Palazzo Apostolico per il Corso di Diecinove (Venice, 1752). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barberini, Francesco, an Italian prelate, nephew of Urban VIII, was born in Florence, Sept. 23, 1597. He was sent as legate by his uncle to France and Spain, and was afterwards vice-chancellor and librarian of the Vatican, bishop of Sabina, later of Porto, and finally of Ostia, and likewise cardinal. He had to leave Rome on the accession of Innocent X, but was permitted to return, and became dean of the sacred college. He died Dec. 10, 1679. He was learned in the languages, translated the twelve books of Marcus Aurelius from the Greek, and prepared a catalogue of the papal library. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Barberini, Maffeo. See URBAN VIII.

Barberini Manuscript (CODEX BARBERINUS), which belongs to the Barberini Library at Rome, No. 225, and is now designated by the letter Y, is a fragment (six leaves) of John's gospel, written on vellum, in folio, probably of the 8th century. It contains John xvi, 3–xix, 41 prefixed to a Codex of the gospels (G 392) furnished with Theophylact's commentaries, of the 12th century. The text is mixed, and lies about midway between Cod. A and Cod. B, i. e. between the Vatican and Alexandrinus. Scholz imperfectly collated the fragment, and Tischendorf published it entire, with a fac-simile, in his Monumenta Sacra Inedita, in 1846. See MANUSCRIPTS, BIBLICAL. (B. P.)

Barberino, ANTONIO (the younger), an Italian prelate and poet, nephew of Urban VIII, was born at Rome in 1608. He was archbishop of Rheims, and was made cardinal in 1628. He died in 1671. He wrote some Latin and Italian poems, which were published in the Ædes Barberinæ of Jerome Tesio (Rome, 1642). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbeyrac, JEAN, a famous French jurist, was born March 15, 1674, at Béziers, where his father was a minister of the Gospel. After the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, he went with his parents to Lausanne, where he pursued his theological studies. In 1694 he went to Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, and finally settled at Berlin, where he was appointed, in 1697, tutor at the French College. Giving up his theological studies, he betook himself to the study of jurisprudence. In 1706 he published the famous Latin treatise of Puffendorf in French, with notes, Du Droit de la Nature et des Gens, whereby he achieved such a renown that the Academy of Lausanne extended to him a call as professor of law and history in 1710. In 1714 he was appointed rector of the academy, an honor which he received for three succeeding years. But, being a conscientious man and unable to subscribe fully to the Formula Consensus, he accepted a call to Gröningen, where he died, March 3, 1744. Besides a number of articles published in Nouvelles de la République des Lettres, Bibliothèque Britannique, Nouvelle Bibliothèque, and Bibliothèque Raisonnée, he translated from the Latin a treatise of Puffendorf, under the title Traité des Devoirs de l'Homme et du Citoyen (1707), and of Noodt, Traité du Pouvoir des Souverains et de la Liberté de Conscience (eod.). From the English he translated Tillotson's sermons (1706–16). He wrote Traité du Jeu, from the standpoint of the natural and moral law (1709), and translated the famous treatise of Grotius De Jure Belli et Pacis (1724). He also wrote Traité de la Morale des Pères de l'Eglise (1728), and published Histoire des Anciens Traités depuis les Temps les plus Reculés jusqu'à Charlemagne (1739). See Gardes, Oratio Funeris in Obitu J. Barbeyrac (Gröningen, 1744); Laissac, Notice Biograph. sur Barbeyrac (Montpellier, 1838), which received the prize from the Société Archéologique de Béziers; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 491. (B. P.)

Barbi (or Barbâti, i. e. bearded). The lay brethren of several orders, especially those of the order of Grandmont, who had the management of the temporalities, were so called. We find mention of a distinct order of Friars Barbi in Alberici in 1113 and 1240.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Barbani, Andrea, an Italian painter, was born at Ravenna about 1680. Lanzi says he studied under P. Cesare Pronti, in whose style he painted subjects of history. Some of his works are to be seen in the churches and public edifices at Ravenna and Rimini. The best of them are the four evangelists, in the vault of the cathedral of Ravenna. He died in 1754. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbani, Giovanni Battista Simone, an Italian painter, was born at Ravenna and flourished about 1635. He probably studied under Bartolommeo. He died in 1650. His finest oil-paintings are at Bologna, being two of St. Andrew and St. Joseph in the Church of the Franciscans. His best fresco painting is the Assumption of the Virgin, in the dome of the Chapel of Our Lady del Sudare at Ravenna. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbican is an advanced work before the gate of a castle or fortified town, or any outwork at a short distance from the main works, generally serving the purpose of a watch-tower. There are barbicans remaining at York, Scarborough, Alnwick, and Carlisle castles. This term is especially applied to the outwork intended to defend the drawbridge, called in modern fortifications the tête du pont. It was frequently constructed of timber. It often consists of two walls parallel to each other with an arch or a gate at each end to defend the principal gate, which is midway between them.

Barbier, François DE SALES, a French theologian, was born in 1759. After studying at the abbey of Bellel, he became a regular canon of that abbey, and there taught mathematics and belles-lettres. During the Revolution, the school was broken up, and he travelled in Germany, but afterwards returned. He died April 1, 1824. He translated a History of Brabant into French from the German of Schmidt. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbier, Louis, a French prelate, the son of a tailor of Étampes, said to have been the first bishop who wore a wig. He became professor in the College of Plessis, almoner of Gaston, and finally bishop of Langres. He died in 1670. See Biog. Univ. iii, 348; Hook, Eccl. Biog. i, 508; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbiere, DOMENICO DEL (surnamed Fiorentino), an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Florence about the year 1506, and was instructed by Il Rosso, who took him on a visit to France, where Il Rosso was invited by Francis I to adorn the palaces Fontain and Meudon, in which his pupil greatly assisted him.

Barbieri, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO (called Guercino), an Italian painter, was born at the village of Cento, in Ferrara, in 1590. Before he was ten years old, he painted a figure of the Virgin on the façade of his father's house which would have been thought a very remarkable production even at a more advanced age. At different periods of his life he followed three different styles. In early life he imitated Michael Angelo Caravaggio in his violent contrasts of light and shadow. After visiting Bologna, Venice, and Rome, he chose a style distinguished by a grander and more elevated taste and design. In the middle of his life he commenced his stupendous work of the dome of Piacenza. Malvasia gives a list of one hundred and six altarpieces for the churches, one hundred and forty-four large historical pictures besides his great fresco works, and numerous Madonnas, portraits, landscapes, and private collections. Later in life, after the death of Guido, the great fame of that painter induced him again to change his style, but in this great undertaking he fell into feebleness and languor. In this weak state he painted most of his works for the churches at Bologna, also The Marriage of the Virgin, in the Church of San Paterniano at Faro. He left a great number of beautiful drawings, which are highly valued. He died in 1606.

Barbin, JEAN, a French minister of the Reformed religion, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He wrote Les Devoirs des Fidèles Réfugiés (Amsterdam, 1688). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbo, Luigi, an Italian prelate and historian, was born in 1381. He was the son of a Venetian senator of the family of Paul II. After having embraced a religious life, he instituted a reform among the pupils of St. Augustine. He assisted at the Council of Constance, and became bishop of Treviso, where he died in 1443. He wrote, History of the Reform of the Augustines: — Discourses: — and Meditations. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbo, Paolo, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Soncino. He entered the Order of St. Dominic, and became doctor in theology. He taught at Milan, Ferrara, and Bologna, and died Aug. 4, 1494, being at the time prior of the Monastery of Cremona. Among other works, he wrote Epitome Quæstionum in 4 Libros Sentent. a Principe Thomistarum J. Capreolo Tolosano Disputatarum (Pavia, 1522; and elsewhere). See Biog. Univ. iii, 350.

Barbolius, DEMETRIUS. See BARBUGLI, DEMETRIO.

Barbosa, Agostinho, a Portuguese prelate and jurist, was born in 1590. He went to Madrid and to Rome, and, destitute of resources, spent his time in the public libraries, recording at night what he had gained through the day. When the Portuguese monarchy was restored, Barbosa, who was still attached to Spain, was made bishop of Ugento by Philip IV, but died in 1649, soon after having assumed his bishopric. Among other works, he wrote, Formularium Episcopale: — Repertorium Juris Civilis et Canonici: — Varia Juris Tractationes (Rome, Venice, Paris, and Lyons): — De Officio et Potestate Parochi (Rome, Venice, and Lyons). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa, Antonio, a Portuguese missionary of the 17th century, belonged to the Society of Jesuits, and was placed in charge of a mission in Cochinchina. He wrote Dictionarium Linguae Annamiticæ (published by P. de Rhode, Rome, 1651). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa, Caetano (surnamed Constantino), a Portuguese preacher, was born at Evora in 1660. He became one of the best preachers of Portugal, and was commended for his inexhaustible charity. He wrote Sermão de Soledade (Lisbon, 1691). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa (Machado), Diogo, a celebrated Portuguese prelate and historian, was born in Lisbon, March 31, 1682. He studied at the University of Coimbra, and in 1724 took holy orders. Four years afterwards he became abbot of St. Adrian's in Lisbon, and finally bishop of Oporto. He died in 1770. He is the author of Bibliotheca Lusitana Historica, Critica e Chronologica. Na qual se Comprehende a Noticia dos Autores Portuguezes, e das Obras que Compuserão desde o Tempo da Promulgação da Ley da Graça até o Tempo Pre- zente (Lisbon, 1731–59, 4 vols. fol.). This is the most important work for the Portuguese literature. A smaller work of his is Summario da Bibliotheca Lusitana (ibid. 1786–87). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Barbosa, Domingos, a Brazilian Jesuit and poet, was a native of Bahia. He taught theology, took charge of the novices of the Convent of Bahia, and went to Rome as attorney-general of the province of Brazil. On his return he was given the oversight of the College of Pernambuco, and in 1685 died at Bahia, where he held the position of rector. He left in manuscript a poem entitled Passio Servatoris Nostri. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa (Machado), Ignacio, a Portuguese ecclesiastic and historian, was born in Lisbon in 1586. He studied at Coimbra, went to Bahia as a judge, but on the death of his wife entered holy orders, and died in 1634, leaving a few religious works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Barbosa, Jozé, a Portuguese theologian and historiographer, brother of Diogo, was born in Lisbon in 1674. He entered the Order of the Theatines, and died in 1750, leaving a number of works on the history of the royal family, for which see Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Barbosa, Manoel, a Portuguese jurisconsult, brother of Agostinho, was born at Guimaraens, and died in 1639, being nearly ninety years old. He became royal advocate in Alentejo. Among other works, he wrote De Potestate Episcoporum (Lisbon, 1638), and some esteemed commentaries on the laws of Portugal. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa, Pedro, a celebrated Portuguese theologian and jurisconsult in the latter part of the 16th century, was born at Viana, in the diocese of Braga. He was first professor of law at Coimbra, and afterwards royal chancellor. In 1595 he published his Commentaria ad Interpretationem Tituli Digestorum, Solutio Matrimonio, etc. (2 vols. fol.). After his death, which occurred in 1606, were published some other of his works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa, Simon Vaz, a Portuguese theologian, brother of Pedro, was born at Vimieiro in the second half of the 16th century. He accompanied his brother Agostinho to Rome, and became professor at Coimbra and canon of the collegiate church of his native place. He left Tractatus de Dignitate, Origine, et Significationibus Mysticis Ecclesiasticis, Graduum Officii Divini Vestitium Sacerdotalium, etc. (Lyons, 1635, 8vo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbosa, Vicente, a Portuguese Theatine, was born at Redondo in 1663, and died in Lisbon in 1711. He wrote an interesting work upon the island of Borneo, taken from the writings of the Theatine envoys sent to convert the inhabitants (Lisbon, 1692). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbour (Barber, Barbere, or Barbar), John, a Scottish clergyman, poet, and historian, was born in the period from 1316 to 1330, the place as well as the date being involved in obscurity. He became archdeacon of Aberdeen, and died in 1396. His only extant production is entitled The Bruce, and is a chronicle in Scotch verse of the warlike deeds of Robert I (1306–29) in his efforts for the independence of his country. It was published by Pinkerton with notes and a glossary (Lond. 1790, 3 vols. 12mo). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbour, Samuel, an English Congregational minister, was born in the County Antrim, Ireland, Jan. 4, 1803. In early life he studied at Glasgow University, but was unable to remain long enough to take his degree. He joined the Methodist Society, and became a local preacher. His views afterwards changed, and he joined the Congregationalists and was ordained as an evangelist in connection with the Leeds Mission. In a short time he became superintendent of the mission, having several under his direction, as well as their work to plan. Much of this work was in holding out-door meetings. He was engaged for some years in public controversy, contending valiantly and successfully against Swedenborgianism, Mormonism, socialism, Romanism, and the Barker development of infidelity. He died Oct. 4, 1855, with firm faith in Christ. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1857, p. 166.

Barbugli (Lat. Barbalus), DEMETRIO, an Italian Jesuit and theologian, lived in the early half of the 18th century. Among other works, he wrote, Lezioni Spirituali ad Uso delle Monache, formate sopra alcuni Documenti di S. Bernardo (Venice, 1727, 1752):—Enchiridion Propositionum Damnataram (Rimini, 1729). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barbus, MARCO, an Italian prelate of the 15th century, was a native of Venice. He studied law at Padua, then went to Rome; was made bishop of Vicenza and archbishop of Aquileia, then cardinal, in 1457. He died at Rome, March 11, 1490. He wrote, Relatio Legationis in Partibus Septentrionalibus:—Decreta de Celibatu:—a translation of the Responsiones Gennadii ad Mahometum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barcellos, FRANCISCO, a Portuguese ecclesiastic and poet, entered the Convent of Pena in 1525, and eventually became prior of the Convent of St. Mark, near Coimbra. He died June 29, 1570, leaving several Latin poems, of which the chief is entitled Salutiferæ Crucis Triumphans in Christi Gloriam (Coimbra, 1503). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barcelona, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Barcelonense). Of these several are mentioned, chiefly of a provincial character. The following are of some importance:

I. Held A.D. 540 by Sergius the metropolitan and six suffragans; passed ten canons upon discipline.

II. Held Nov. 1, 599, in the Church of the Holy Cross, at which twelve bishops of the province of Tarragona were present, Asiaticus of Tarragona presiding. They drew up four canons, of which the first two relate to the crime of simony; the third forbids the elevation of a lay person to a bishopric, the king's mandate notwithstanding; the fourth condemns the marriage of virgins consecrated to the service of God, and of penitents of either sex. See Mansi, Concil. v, 1605.

III. Held in 1068 by the legate-cardinal Hugo the White. Raymond, count of the principality, being inclined to do away with the use of the Gothic office, the abbots present, from the whole of his dominions, unanimously agreed to exchange it for the Roman rite. They further decreed that the clergy in future should live in entire continence, and not be married, as had hitherto been permitted.

Barceloneta, UGONE DI, an Italian theologian and preacher, was born in Piedmont about 1230. He was of the Dominican Order, and became cardinal of St. Sabina. His sermons gained for him great renown. He wrote, Manipulus Curatorum (Lyons, 1599):—Compendium Theolog. Veritatis:—Dialogus de Creatione Mundi (in manuscript, preserved in the Library of Venice). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barchnam (or Barkham), JOHN, an English divine and antiquary, was born at Exeter in 1572, and was admitted to Exeter College, Oxford, in 1587. He became a skilful linguist, a curious critic, an antiquary, especially in coins, and an able theologian. He died at Bocking, Essex, in 1642. He contributed to Speed's History of England, wrote a preface to Crakanthorpe's Defensio Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ (Lond. 1625), and published The Display of Heraldry (ibid. 1610). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Barclay, Charles Wesley, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1817. Concerning his early life there is no record. He entered the Genesee Conference in 1840, and labored faithfully until dropsy of the chest compelled him to desist from all active labor, and shortly caused his death, Jan. 25, 1847. Mr. Barclay was fervid in piety and devoted in life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1847, p. 164.

Barclay, Christian, an English minister of the Society of Friends, daughter of Gilbert Molleson, a merchant of Aberdeen, Scotland, and the wife of the celebrated Friends' Apologist, Robert Barclay, was born in 1647. She was religiously inclined from her childhood, and at the age of sixteen became an avowed Christian. She was approved as a minister among Friends. She was married to Robert Barclay in 1669. She was a diligent minister of the Lord Jesus, and her preaching was attended with the power and presence of the Divine Spirit. After a life of great usefulness, she died Dec. 14, 1722. See Piety Promoted, ii, 354, 355. (J. C. S.)

Barclay, Cuthbert C., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in New York city. He studied theology at Jubilee College, Ill.; was ordained deacon in 1855, and priest in the following year; officiated in Rock Island; as assistant in St. James's Church, Chicago; as rector of St. Paul's, Syracuse, N. Y.; of St. John's, North Haven, Conn.; of St. Thomas's, Bethel, Conn.; and then became rector of All-Saints' Church, New York city, which position he held at the time of his death, Feb. 7, 1863, at the age of thirty-three. He was the author of a Catechism on the Nicene Creed. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 152.

Barclay, David (1), a prominent member of the Society of Friends, father of Robert Barclay, a distinguished Quaker, was born at Kirkcounhill, Scotland, in 1610. He received a liberal education; travelled in Germany; enlisted in the army of Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, and soon rose to the rank of major; returned to his native land at the breaking-out of the civil wars; was made colonel; quelled an insurrection by the earl of Crawford in 1646; the same year routed the marquis of Montrose; in 1647 drove the marquis of Huntly into the Highlands; and was made governor of Strathbogie. When Cromwell's party came into power in Scotland, colonel Barclay lost his commission. Subsequently, however, he was three times elected a member of Parliament, in which position in 1656 he vigorously opposed the crowning of Cromwell as king. Notwithstanding this, after the Restoration he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle as "a trustee under the usurper;" but was at length liberated without trial. In 1666 he became a member of the Society of Friends, on account of which he was subjected to various indignities. See The Friend, vi, 282.

Barclay, David (2), a Presbyterian minister, after graduating at Princeton, studied theology, and was ordained by the Presbytery of New Brunswick Dec. 3, 1794, and installed pastor of the Church at Bound Brook, N. J. He remained there until April, 1805, when, on account of some troubles, in June of that year he removed, and became pastor of Knowlton, Oxford, and Lower Mount Bethel churches, N. J. He continued here till 1811. On April 25, 1819, Mr. Barclay was dismissed to the Presbytery of Redstone, and took up his residence in Punxsutawney, Pa., where he died, in 1846. Mr. Barclay had much trouble with his congregations; and one of his elders, Mr. Jacob Ker, published a volume of more than four hundred pages entitled The Several Trials of David Barclay before the Presbytery of New Brunswick and Synod of New York and New Jersey. He was a man of decided ability; quick, earnest, energetic in his speech, and imprudent in temperament. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Barclay, George, an English Baptist minister, was born at Kilwinning, Ayrshire, March 12, 1774. In early life he was connected with a sect called the Anti-burghers, and afterwards joined the Congregationalists. In 1803 he united with the Baptists. At the close of this year a Church was formed in his native place, which subsequently removed to the neighboring village of Irvine, of which he was chosen the pastor. After a faithful ministry of about thirty-six years, he died, at his residence in Hamfield, July 2, 1838. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1839, p. 21. (J. C. S.)

Barclay, John, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Clapham in 1797, became a Christian before reaching his majority, and began his ministerial labors in the autumn of 1823, and was "recognized" as such by Friends in Cornwall in 1825. After residing in Alton, and in Croydon for a time, he took up his abode in Stoke Newington. "His engagements in the line of ministry were not frequent, but he was at times led to address his friends in a weighty and feeling manner, endeavoring to turn their attention from a dependence on man, and from all that is superficial in religion, to a single reliance on the great Head of the Church." For the purpose of promoting the spiritual welfare of the members of the Society, he edited and published a series of selections from the writings of Friends eminent for their piety. In family visitation he was especially blessed. He died May 11, 1838. See Testimony of Deceased Ministers at the Yearly Meeting, 1839, pp. 3-9. (J. C. S.)

Barclay, Joseph, LL.D., third Anglican bishop of Jerusalem, graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1854. He commenced his experience in the mission field under the Rev. Dr. Stern, at that time in charge of the Constantinople station of the London Jews' Society. Three years later, at the request of the committee, he removed to Jerusalem, where, as incumbent of Christ Church and examining chaplain to bishop Gobat (q. v.), he faithfully discharged his duties until 1870. Having returned to England, he became rector of Stapleford, Herts, in 1873. When bishop Gobat died, in 1879, Dr. Barclay was appointed his successor. His episcopate lasted only two years, his death occurring Oct. 22, 1881. He is buried in the Protestant cemetery on the southern slope of Mount Zion, close by the tombs of his predecessors, Alexander and Gobat. Dr. Barclay was peculiarly fitted to fill his office. In addition to his knowledge of Hebrew, he was well acquainted with several of the modern languages, and able to preach in English, German, Spanish, Turkish, and Arabic. He is the author of The Talmud (Lond. 1878), being a translation of several treatises of the Mishna. (B. P.)

Barclift, WILSON, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Perquimans County, N. C., Oct. 24, 1804. He was early taught the duties of a religious life by his pious mother, but did not realize the joys of Christian experience until 1824. In 1826 he entered the Virginia Conference, in which he labored till his decease, Aug. 9, 1833. Mr. Barclift was characterized by his devotedness to the Church and his success in her upbuilding. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1834, p. 278.

Barcolo, GEORGE, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at New Utrecht in 1775. He graduated at Columbia College, N. Y., in 1795, studied theology under Dr. J. H. Livingston, and was licensed by the Classis of New York in 1798. He was pastor at Hopewell and New Hackensack from 1805 to 1810, and died at Peekskill, N. J., in 1832. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 170.

Barcos, MARTIN DE, a French theologian, was born at Bayonne in 1600. He was a nephew of John Duver-gier de Hauranne, a famous abbot of St. Cyran, and his master was Jansenius, bishop of Ypres, then professor of theology at Louvain. He had charge of the education of the son of Arnauld of Andilly, and in 1644 succeeded his uncle in the Abbey of St. Cyran, where he introduced certain reforms. His intimacy with Dr. Anthony Arnauld caused him to play an important part in the disputes concerning Jansenism. He died Aug. 22, 1678. His principal works are, La Grandeur de l'Eglise Romaine établie sur l'Autorité de Saint Pierre et Saint Paul:—Traité de l'Autorité de Saint Pierre et Saint Paul, qui réside dans le Pape, Successeur de ces deux Apôtres (1645):—De la Foi, de l'Espérance, et de la Charité (1691):—Exposition de la Foi de l'Eglise Romaine touchant la Grace et la Prédestination (Cologne, 1700 or 1697); this first appeared anonymously in 1697, and was seized and condemned by the archbishop of Paris and Noailles. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barcus, W. R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Richmond, O., May 8, 1844. He experienced conversion at the age of fourteen; by his own efforts gained a good education; served his country in the "hundred-day service;" received license to preach in 1870; and in 1871 entered the Pittsburgh Conference, which he served until death, Sept. 29, 1875. Mr. Barcus was brilliant, practical, modest, fearless. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 32.

Bard, David, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Leesburg, Va. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Donegal, probably in the spring of the year 1777. At the meeting of Presbytery, April 17, 1778, he announced his intention of taking a chaplaincy in the army, but changed his mind the following June. In October, 1778, he received a call to the great Cove in Virginia, and was ordained June 16, 1779. He supplied this church for one year, and then accepted a call to the united congregations of Kittoctan and Green Spring, Va.; the salary to be paid in wheat, rye, and corn. In 1782 he applied for release from this charge. Subsequently he was called to Bedford, Pa., in which charge he served three years; and in 1789 he made application for dismissal to the Presbytery of Transylvania, Ky., from the Presbytery of Carlisle. He returned this certificate the same year and accepted a call from the Frankstown congregation, and was stated supply at the same time of Sinking Valley. In 1799, after serving the congregation of Frankstown for ten years, the relation was dissolved at his own request. He was representative to Congress from the district in which he resided for twenty-two years. Mr. Bard was an antifederalist, and opposed to the administration of the elder Adams. He died March 12, 1815. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Huntingdon, 1874; Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Bard, Isaac, a Presbyterian minister, was born near Bardstown, Nelson Co., Ky., Jan. 13, 1797. He was prepared for college under Rev. James Blythe, D.D., ex-president of Transylvania University, at Lexington, and united with the Church at Bardstown, on profession of his faith, at about sixteen years of age. He had never graduated at any college when he entered Princeton Theological Seminary in 1817. Here he remained about two and a half years, and before he left was licensed, April 27, 1820, by the Presbytery of New Brunswick. He entered the senior class of Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., and regularly graduated thence in 1821. While in Union College he partially supplied a Reformed Dutch Church in the vicinity. On leaving Schenectady, Mr. Bard returned to Kentucky, where he was received and ordained by Muhlenburg Presbytery, July 26, 1823, at Greenville, Muhlenburg Co., Ky. At the same meeting of Presbytery a call from Greenville Church for his ministerial services was presented, and he at once began his labors there. Soon after, he received a similar call from the Church of Mount Pleasant for a portion of his time. This double relation he sustained ten years; but, after the dissolution of the pastoral relation, he continued to reside throughout the whole of his long life near Greenville; and during most of these years supplied those places as well as the Mount Zion and Allensville churches, preaching zealously and almost constantly, but never again assuming the pastoral office. After the division of the Presbyterian Church in 1862, he adhered to the Southern General Assembly. Mr. Bard lived to be the ministerial patriarch of all that region, at the time of his death being the oldest member of his synod, enjoying vigorous health and embracing every opportunity. He died June 29, 1878. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 11. (W. P. S.)

Bard, Nathaniel, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Sumner, Oxford Co., Me., Sept. 2, 1814. He was converted in 1835, and was licensed to preach by the Bowdoin Quarterly Meeting in 1840. He was ordained in 1841. The churches which he served during the thirty-five years of his active ministry were those of Webster, Wales, Litchfield, Durham, Richmond Corner, North Freeport, Bowdoinham, Monmouth, and Lisbon Falls, Me. During all this long period his residence was in Lisbon. At the time of his death, which occurred at Lisbon May 30, 1874, he was one of the oldest and most active ministers of the Bowdoin Quarterly Meeting, and filled a prominent position as a safe adviser and counsellor in all matters pertaining to the welfare of his denomination. See the Morning Herald, June 17, 1874. (J. C. S.)

Bardaisan. See BARDESANES.

Bardas, patriarch of Constantinople, was brother of the empress Theodora, mother of the emperor Michael III., and was tutor of this prince after the death of Theophilus in 842. He re-established the sciences in the empire, which had declined after Leo the Isaurian, who had burned the library at Constantinople. In order to acquire more authority, he caused the death of Theoctistus in 856, who was general of the troops of the emperor Michael III., and secured his position. He shut up his sister, the empress, in a cloister, drove St. Ignatius from the patriarchal see, and gave it to Photius, his nephew, in 858. This injustice was the source of a schism in the Greek Church about 860. He sought to gain control of the empire, but was assassinated by his enemy Basil, April 21, 866. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barde, JEAN CHARLES, a Reformed minister of Switzerland, was born at Geneva, Sept. 29, 1803, where he also prepared himself for the ministry. In 1827 he went to Lyons, where he labored for ten years. From thence he went to London, where he ministered to the Swiss congregation, and returned to his native place in 1830, where he was destined to labor till his end. Barde was no brilliant preacher, but he soon became the nucleus of Christian activity, which he developed in the formation of evangelical societies and other Christian enterprises tending to promote new spiritual life everywhere. He died July 12, 1878, greatly lamented by the Christians of the Church of Geneva. (B. P.)

Bardeanistæ. See BARDESANES.

Bardewit was a god of the Wends, worshipped in Wolgast. He had five heads, and was the god of peace, of merchandise, and of the five senses.

Bardi, Francesco, an Italian Jesuit, who was born at Palermo in 1583, and died March 28, 1661, is the author of Disputatio Moralis de Conscientia:—Quæstiones ex Theologia Morale. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Mongitor, Bibliotheca Sicula; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bardi, Geronimo (1), an Italian monk of the Camaldule order, was born in Florence about 1544. He distinguished himself by his erudition, but eventually became a secular priest. He died March 28, 1594, as curate of St. Matthew and St. Samuel, Venice, leaving several historical works; for which see Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bardi, Geronimo (2), a Roman Catholic philosopher and theologian of Italy, was born at Rapallo, in Genoa, March 7, 1603. He studied at Genoa and Parma; entered the Jesuit order in 1619, but retired from it in 1624, on account of ill-health, and in 1667 began to practice medicine. He died after 1678. He wrote, Prolusio Philosophica:—Encyclopædia Sacra et Profana:—Propædæmata et Dilucidationes in Platonis Timæum:—Prælectiones et Comm. in Aristotelis Metæora, Parva Naturalia et Problemata. See Oldoin, Athenæum Romanum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bardiāninus was a Christian martyr in Asia, commemorated Sept. 25.

Bardili, CHRISTOPH GOTTFRIED, a German doctor and professor of philosophy, who was born May 18, 1761, at Blaubeuern, and died June 5, 1808, at Stuttgart, is the author of Epochen der vorzüglichsten philosophischen Begriffe (Halle, 1788):—Significatus primit. vocis προφήτου ex Platone Erutus, cum Novo Tentamine Interpretandi 1 Cor. xiv (Göttingen, 1786):—Ursprung des Begriffs der Willensfreiheit (Stuttgart, 1796). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 281, 399, 482. (B. P.)

Bardin, JEAN, a French historical painter, was born at Montbar in 1732, and was instructed first by the elder Lagrange, but finished his studies at Rome. His picture of Christ disputing with the doctors gained him admission into the Academy of France in 1795. His subjects partake of poetry, history, and religion. He died in 1809.

Barditus was the war-song of the Germans, which they began by softly murmuring and then increasing to the loudest tones; and from the sound of the same they thought they could discern the success of the battle. The Romans adopted it later, on account of its inspiring effect.

Bards were sacred singers among the Gauls and Gaelic tribes, and accompanied the warriors to the field of battle and glorified their deeds. Their instrument was a kind of lyre, probably with five strings. It is doubtful whether the Germans called these poets by this name, but they were well acquainted with the poets and their songs. Charles the Great had such heroic poems collected, but pope Silvester had them burned subsequently. The bards existed longest in Scotland, where they afterwards became philosophers and priests. The poems of Ossian, collected by Macpherson, are noted specimens of these wild compositions, and fragments of many similar productions among the early Welsh are extant. The troubadours of the Middle Ages were the lineal descendants of these heathen poets. So old Homer is represented as having sung his immortal epic through the cities of Greece, and Arabia has even to modern times been famous for such strolling minstrels who were capable of improvising as well as of studied recitative. Religious themes are always characteristic of these effusions, and the popular mythology has been thus kept alive from age to age. Among the Celtic and Scandinavian tribes the immortality of the soul was from the earliest times a prominent doctrine of their bards, as we learn from their first mention by Roman writers. The sacred books of the Hindus are substantially mythological poems, and indeed the earliest literature of most nations consists chiefly of versiform legends of heroes and demigods. See POETRY.

Bardsley, SAMUEL, an English Wesleyan minister, was received on trial in 1768, and for half a century labored with zeal and success. On his way from the Conference of 1818 to his circuit, Manchester, he died suddenly (Aug. 19) at an inn in Delph (between Manchester and Leeds), leaning upon his travelling companion, Rev. Francis Wrigley. "He was much beloved, not because of his pulpit talents, for they were of no very brilliant order, but for his transparent simplicity of character and purpose, his unassuming manners, and genuine Christian feeling" (R. A. West). Bardsley had been for some time the oldest preacher in the connection. See Minutes of the Brit. Conference, 1819; West, Sketches of Wesleyan Preachers, p. 193-197; Smith, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 43; Stevens, id. iii, 255; Wesleyan Takings, vol. i.

Bardwell, Horatio, a Congregational minister and missionary, was born in Belchertown, Mass., Nov. 3, 1788. In 1809 he went to Stamford, Conn., where he pursued his studies till November, 1811, when he entered the theological seminary at Andover, where he took the course. He was licensed to preach by the Haverhill Association, July 6, 1814; was ordained a missionary at Newburyport on June 21, 1815; and sailed for India, from the same place, Oct. 23 of same year. He resided some years as a missionary in Bombay, and returned to this country in 1821. After laboring as an agent for the board for nearly two years, he obtained a dismission on account of impaired health. In October, 1823, he was installed pastor of the church in Holden, Mass., where he labored till 1832, when he received from the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions the appointment of general agent for the New England States. From 1836 to 1864 he was pastor in Oxford, Mass. Here he died, May 5, 1866, from injuries received during the burning of his dwelling-house. Dr. Bardwell's publications are a Sermon on Evangelizing the Heathen; two on Christian Baptism; and a Memoir of Rev. Gordon Hall (1834). See Cong. Quarterly, 1866, p. 304.

Bardwell, William, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Whately, Mass., in 1814. He experienced conversion at the age of seventeen; graduated at Wesleyan University, Conn., in 1842; and in 1844 joined the New England Conference. In 1849 his health failed, and he gradually declined until his death, March 27, 1851. Mr. Bardwell excelled as a pastor. He was pious, ardent, benevolent, and laborious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1851, p. 574; Alumni Record of West. Univ. s. a. 1842.

Barebone, PRAISE-GOD. The person who had this singular name was a Baptist minister in London. In 1640 he became pastor of a colony that separated from Rev. Henry Jersey's Church. Besides preaching, he carried on the secular occupation of a leather-seller in Fleet street. Rapin, in his second volume of the History of England, tells us that he "passed among his neighbors for a notable speaker, being used to entertain them with long harangues upon the times. This pointed him out to the notice of Cromwell, who nominated him a member of the legislative body that succeeded the Long Parliament in 1653." Such a man could not fail to make himself conspicuous in such a body; and from the special prominence which he attained as one of the most active members of the assembly, it was called, by way of derision, "Barebone's Parliament." When this Parliament dissolved, he seems to have ended his connection with the government, being dissatisfied with the course which Oliver Cromwell took in setting himself up as "lord protector" of England, and assuming an authority that seemed to have all the qualities belonging to the rightful possessor of the throne. After the restoration of Charles II, the government regarded him with a jealous eye, and upon some pretext he was seized and committed to the Tower. It is very evident that he was a strong republican, and held views which, although accepted in these days, were exceedingly obnoxious at the time. It is not known what were his circumstances in the later years of his life, nor when he died. It is said that he had two brothers whose names were more remarkable even than his own. The name of one of them was Christ-came-into-the-world-to-save Barebone; and that of the other was And-if-Christ-had-not-come-into-the-world-thou-hadst-been-damned Barebone. For short, this latter was called "Damned Barebone." See Wilson, History of Dissenting Churches, i, 47-49. (J. C. S.)

Barēca (Βαρῆκα), a village mentioned by Eusebius as lying near Azotus (Onomast. s. v. Βαπακαί); probably the present village Burka, an hour north-east of Esdūd (Van de Velde, Memoir, p. 291). See BENE-BERAK.

Bareipisasu was a Malayan protecting god of the battle-field.

Barella, CRISTOFORO, an Italian theologian, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He completed his studies at Milan, and became secretary of Visconti, bishop of Cremona, and assisted in the spiritual services of another Visconti, archbishop of Milan. He wrote Elogj d' Uomini Illustri che 1658 Pugnarono in Difesa di Trevi (MS.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barelli, FRANCESCO LUIGI, an Italian monk and biographer, was a native of Nice. He belonged to the Order of the Barnabites, and finally went to Bologna. He died in 1725. Among other works, he wrote, Memorie dell' Origine, Fondazione, Avanzamenti, Successi e Uomini Illustri in Lettere e in Santità de' Barnabiti (Bologna, 1703, 1707):—Vita del P. Anton. Maria Zuccharia, Fondatore degli Barnabiti (ibid. 1706). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barenger, ANDRÉ THOMAS, a French theologian of the Augustinian Order, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote La Guide Fidèle (sic) de la Vraie Gloire, presented to the duke of Burgundy about 1687. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bärensprung, SIGMUND, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died in 1738 as provost and inspector at Neu-Angermünde, in Prussia, is the author of, Erklärung der Worte, Epist. Jud. 4:—Theses vom Binde- und Löseschlüssel (Leipsic, 1702):—Collatio cum Th. Ittigio de Confessione Privata (Halle, 1704):—Unterschied der evangelischen und socinischen Lehre (Frankfort, 1717; Leipsic, 1721):—Die Wiederbringung aller Dinge in ihrem ersten guten Zustande der Schöpfung (Frankfort, 1739, published after his death). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 476; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Barezzi (Lat. Baretius), FRANCESCO, an Italian theologian, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He was the son of Barezzo of Cremona, and became vicar-general and bishop of Torcello. He wrote, Additiones ad Manuale Confessorium Mart. Navarræ (Venice, 1616):—Greg. Sayri Thesaurus Casuum Conscientiæ e Addit. Franc. Baretii (ibid. 1618):—and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barfield, ABRAHAM, an English Dissenting minister, was born about 1771, and was educated for the ministry at Homerton. He was ordained first pastor of a Church at Ashwell, Herts, in 1797, and removed to Baker street, Enfield, in June, 1804. He died March 4, 1806. Mr. Barfield was amiable, affectionate, benevolent, and pious. As a preacher, he was truly evangelical in sentiment, "a workman that needed not to be ashamed, rightly divining the word of truth." His character in all the relations of life was such as to win universal respect. See Theological and Biblical Magazine, May, 1806, p. 214.

Barfknecht, CHRISTOPHER, a German theologian, was born in 1657. After studying at Königsberg, he visited the other German universities, and went to perform pastoral functions at Coeslin, which he soon left on account of the dissensions in the civil council. In 1702 he went to Wittenberg, where he died, in 1739. He wrote, Der Schuldredner (Berlin, 1686):—Lippi Aurelii Brandolini Augustini Eremitæ Oratio de Virtutibus Domini Nostri Christi (1708). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barford, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, was admitted into King's College, Cambridge, in 1737; was chaplain to the House of Commons, and died in 1792. He published a Sermon and a Latin oration. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barge-board (or Verge-board) is a board generally used on the verge of gables where the covering of the roof extends over the wall. It usually projects from the wall, and either covers the rafter, that would otherwise be exposed, or occupies the place of a rafter. On the gables of houses and church-porches, particularly on those of wood, barge-boards are very extensively used, but on the gables of the main roofs of churches they occur very rarely. The earliest barge-boards known to exist are of the 14th century. After that time they were used most abundantly, and were of very various designs, and in later examples they not unfrequently supported a hip-knob on the point of the gable. They are usually either feathered or panelled, or pierced with a series of trefoils, quatrefoils, etc., and the spandrels carved with foliage; when feathered, the cusps or points of the principal featherings sometimes have flowers carved on them. As Gothic architecture advanced, the barge-boards continued gradually to lose much of their rich and bold effect.

George Inn, Salisbury, cir. 1350.

Barger, JOHN S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Culpepper County, Va., Dec. 5, 1802. He experienced conversion in his nineteenth year, and two years later entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1831 he was transferred to the Missouri Conference, and in the next year to the Illinois Conference, of which he remained an honored member till his death, Jan. 4, 1877. Two years Mr. Barger served as agent for McKendree College, two for Illinois Wesleyan University, and one year as chaplain in the army. He was remarkable for his fine, gentlemanly appearance, melodious voice, fluent speech, and deep and uniform Christian experience. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 133.

Barghiocho, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian theologian and Jesuit who died at Rome in 1664, wrote Epigrammata Sacra. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bargi, PAULIN. See BERTI.

Bargrave, ISAAC, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1586, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge. He was tutor of Cambridge University in 1612, and chaplain to Sir Henry Wotton in one of his embassies. He became dean of Canterbury in 1625, and died in January, 1643. His publications consist of a few single sermons. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barham, RICHARD HARRIS, an English clergyman and author, better known by his assumed name of Thomas Ingoldsby, was born at Canterbury, Dec. 6, 1788. He was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Brasenose College, Oxford. Having been admitted to holy orders, he was appointed curate of Ashford, in Kent, from which he removed to Westwell, a few miles distant. About the year 1814, he became rector of Snar-gate, in Romney Marsh, Kent, and at the same time curate of Wareham. In 1821 he was elected canon of St. Paul's, London, and from that time gave much attention to literature. In 1824 he was appointed priest in ordinary of the Chapel Royal, and shortly afterwards was presented to the rectory of the united parishes of St. Mary Magdalene and St. Gregory by St. Paul's, London. In 1842 he was appointed divinity reader in St. Paul's Cathedral, and was permitted to change his living for the more valuable rectory of St. Augustine and St. Faith's, London. He died June 17, 1845. He was the author of the celebrated Ingoldsby Legends which began to appear in Bentley's Miscellany in 1837, and have since been published in three vols. 8vo, with a Memoir by his son. He was a frequent contributor to the periodicals of his day, and wrote considerable poetry of a high order. See Knight, Eng. Cyclop. Biog. i, 533; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; English Review (Lond.), 1847, p. 59; Hart, English Literature (Phila.), p. 449.

Barhishads, in the mythology of India, are subordinate deities belonging to the society of the great Pitris. They call themselves descendants of Atri. Their descendants are the Cinarras, Dailas, Danawas, Gandharwas, Garudas, Jabshas, Raishasas, and Urugas, all spirits of higher, or deities of lower, order.

Bari, TOMMASO, an Italian theologian who lived probably in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote Rhetorica Ecclesiastica (1691). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baria, GERONIMO, an Italian theologian, native of Nice, lived at the commencement of the 17th century, and wrote Pontificum Decreta et Constitutiones pro Regularibus (Turin). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barile, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, an Italian theologian, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He belonged to the Order of Theatines, and distinguished himself as a preacher. He wrote, Le Moderne Conversazioni Giudicate nel Tribunale Coscienza (Ferrara and Rome, 1716):—Scuola di Teologi che Verità Aperta al Mondo Cristiano d'oggi, ossia l'Amor Platonico Smascherato (Modena, 1716; published under the anagram of Nicodemo Belari). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barillon, HENRI DE, bishop of Luçon, was born in Auvergne, March 4, 1639. He founded a large number of charitable institutions, and died at Paris in April, 1699. He wrote, Statuts Synodaux de Luçon (1681):—Ordonnances Synodales du Diocèse de Luçon (Paris, 1685):—Prônes et Ordonnances du Diocèse de Luçon (Fontenay, 1693). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barindus. See BARRFIN.

Baring, Daniel Eberhard, a German librarian, was born Nov. 8, 1690, at Hamburg. He studied at Helmstädt; in 1719 was appointed librarian at Hanover, and died Aug. 19, 1733. He wrote, Beiträge zur hannöverschen Kirchen- und Schulhistorie (Hanover, 1748):—Das Leben Ant. Corvini (ibid. 1749). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 797. (B. P.)

Baring, Nicolaus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 9, 1607, at Zarentin, in Mecklenburg. He studied at Helmstädt; in 1632 was army chaplain; in 1636 pastor at Wilkenburg; in 1641 pastor at St. Ägidius's in Hanover; and in 1642 commenced his theological lectures at Rostock, where he died in

1648. He wrote, Epithalamion Davidicum:—Dissertatio Epistolica de Crucis Signo a Constantino Consecto:—Disquisitio quod Maria Magdalena non fuerit Pectatrix illa Luc. vii. 37. See Meiers, Nachrichten von der Reformation in Hannover; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baringer, JOHN, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was a native of Montgomery County, Va. In 1828, then a young man, he joined the Holston Conference, and after filling important stations for about seven years located. In 1838 he re-entered the active ranks, and continued faithfully until 1842, when failing health caused him to become superannuate, which relation he sustained until his death, July 17, 1860. Mr. Baringer was pious and devoted. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1851, p. 331.

Barjac, GABRIEL, a Genoese theologian who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, wrote Introductio in Artem Jesuiticam, in eorum Gratiam qui ejus Artis Mysteriorum aut jam Initiati, aut prope Diem Initiandi sunt, Conscripta (1599). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bar-Joseph BEN-ELCHANAN, a Jewish rabbi of the 17th century, is the author of אֲרֵבֶּת הַחַיִּים, a dogmatico-homiletical commentary on the historical books of the Old Test. divided into four parts. The first part, entitled פֶּסַח לְיָדֵינוּ, treats of those passages which have reference to David's house; the second, קִנְיָאֵי אֶפְרַיִם, speaks of the kings of Israel after the division of the kingdom, and of the so-called Messiah, the son of Joseph; the third, רִיבֵי הָהָן, speaks of Elijah and other prophets; and the fourth, רִבְכּוֹרֵי הַכֹּהֲנִים, treats of the priests and of the Noachites. The work was published at Frankfort-on-the-Oder in 1680. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 84; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sepharim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum tam Impressorum quam Manu Scriptorum (Wilna, 1880), i, 48, No. 935. (B. P.)

Bar-Juchne is the name of a fabulous bird described by the rabbinical writers. One of them says that when she extends her wings she causes a total eclipse of the sun. The Talmud declares that one of her eggs once fell out of her nest and broke down three hundred cedars and inundated sixty villages.

Barkdull, THOMAS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Columbiana County, O., June 24, 1813. He joined the Church in his nineteenth year; studied for the ministry at Norwalk Seminary; received license to exhort in 1834, and in 1835 was licensed to preach and received into the Ohio Conference. For thirty-three years he travelled and preached with great diligence and zeal. He died Jan. 4, 1869. Mr. Barkdull was warm and open-hearted in temperament, genial in disposition, and as a preacher evangelical, earnest, and logical. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 283.

Barker is the poetical name of Anubis, the dog-headed deity of the Egyptians. He was also called Hormanubis, his sagacity being so great that some thought him the same as Mercury.

Barker, Cyrus, a Baptist missionary, was born in Portsmouth, R. I., March 27, 1807. He pursued his literary and theological studies at the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution, and was ordained to the work of the Christian ministry at Newport, R. I., September, 1839, and was appointed a missionary by the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions July 22, 1839. He sailed from Boston, Oct. 22, 1839, and reached Calcutta, Feb. 20, 1840. His first station was at Jaipur, Assam, where he arrived May 14, 1840. He remained here a little over one year, and then removed to Sibsa-gor, a town of eight thousand inhabitants, on the river Dikho. Subsequently he took up his residence in Gowa-hati, which had become the chief place in Assam for missionary purposes. Here Mr. Barker devoted himself with zeal and success to his work for several years. A Church was organized in February, 1845, mission-schools were established, and much good was accomplished. On account of his health, Mr. Barker was compelled to leave his work. It was thought that a sea voyage would benefit him, and he embarked with this hope; but the expectations of himself and friends were disappointed. He died at sea, and was buried in Mozambique Channel Jan. 31, 1850. See The Missionary Jubilee, p. 184, 287. (J. C. S.)

Barker, David, an English Methodist preacher, came out from Mexborough, near Doncaster; was born in 1796; early converted to God; began to preach; entered the ministry of the New Connection in 1817, and travelled in eight important circuits. He was a man of rare talents, good memory, sound judgment, gentle spirit, well-stored mind, great humility, melting compassion, correct taste, and deep piety. He was killed by the overturning of a coach near Bolton, March 19, 1831. See Minutes of the British Conference.

Barker, Davis Robert, a Congregational minister, was born in Hope, Me., July 16, 1813. He graduated from the Oberlin Theological Seminary in 1843, and was immediately ordained as an evangelist. In the same year he became acting pastor of the churches in Johnston and Fowler, O. From 1845 to 1847 he served the churches in Canfield and Boardman; from 1847 to 1864 was with the churches of Mercer and West Lackawannock, Pa., alternating with East Salem and Greenville, exchanging the two latter for Millbrook after Feb. 18, 1857; and from 1864 to 1869 served the churches at Randolph and Townville, Pa. In 1869 he began pastoral work at College Springs, Ia., where he was installed Oct. 17, 1870, and where he died, Oct. 22, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 420.

Barker, Frederick, D.D., an English prelate, son of Rev. John Barker of Baslow, Derbyshire, was born in 1808. He was educated at Grantham School and Jesus College, Cambridge, graduating in 1831. He became incumbent of Upton, Cheshire; of St. Mary's, Edge Hill, Liverpool; and of Baslow, Derbyshire. He was consecrated metropolitan bishop of Australia in 1847, and his diocese was entitled the bishopric of Sydney, New South Wales. He died at San Remo, Italy, April 7, 1882.

Barker, George, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Bramley, near Leeds. He was called into the work in 1813, was useful in every circuit, and died suddenly Jan. 8, 1829, aged thirty-six. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1829, p. 449.

Barker, Imlah Goulding, a Baptist minister and teacher, was born in Virginia, Sept. 8, 1812. He took the three years' course of theological study at Newton, Mass. (1836-39), and was ordained at that place in August, 1839. He at once entered upon his duties as professor of Hebrew in Richmond College, Va., where he remained three years (1839-42). He died at Savannah, Ga., in 1842. (J. C. S.)

Barker, Isaac, a Congregational minister, was born in Unity, N. H., Dec. 15, 1792. From 1816 to 1844 he was a Methodist minister, but did not receive his ordination until June 10, 1827. After he had changed his ecclesiastical relation, he was pastor for five years of the Congregational churches which he had organized at Rockford and Cannon, Mich. From 1861, for one year, he was acting pastor in Laphamville, and then resided there without charge until 1867. Subsequently he lived at Rockford, where he died Feb. 13, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 17.

Barker, John (1), an English Dissenting minister, was born about 1683, and was educated at Attercliffe, Yorkshire. In 1709 he was chosen assistant preacher to a congregation in Crosby Square, London, which was under the pastoral care of the eminent Dr. Benjamin Grosvenor. Six years later the congregation in Mare street, Hackney, elected him pastor, as successor to the pious and excellent Mr. Matthew Henry. This charge Mr. Barker held till 1738, when he resigned, to the great grief of his people. After residing at Epsom, Surrey, about three years, he accepted a call from the congregation at Salters' Hall. Here he remained as long as he was able to perform the duties of his office; but in 1762 he was compelled to retire from work. After this he lived about one year. Mr. Barker was a man of eminent abilities, and united sound learning with ardent and unaffected piety. His preaching was solid, serious, and convincing. In 1748 he published a volume of sermons, and was preparing a second volume for the press, but was prevented completing his design. His purpose, however, was carried out by his executors, who, in 1763, issued the second volume. See (Lond.) Theological and Biblical Magazine, Oct. 1806, p. 413.

Barker, John (2), D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Yorkshire, England, March 17, 1813. He emigrated to America with his parents when three years old; graduated at Geneva College in his nineteenth year, and soon afterwards experienced conversion and received license to preach. His talents as an educator being recognised, he was appointed professor of mathematics in Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, at Lima, N. Y. In 1839 he became vice-president and professor of natural philosophy and chemistry in Allegheny College. In 1846 he was elected professor of ancient languages in Transylvania University, Ky., and in 1848 president of Allegheny College. That same year he entered the Pittsburgh Conference, but continued to fill the office of president till his death, by paralysis, Feb. 26, 1860. As a preacher, Dr. Barker was original, able, lucid, and often eloquent; as a man, amiable and witty. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 69; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Barker, Jonathan, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Manchester in 1763. He entered the service in 1793; retired from its active duties in 1832, but labored as much as possible until within a few weeks of his death, when his health entirely failed. He died March 16, 1839. See Minutes of British Conference, 1839.

Barker, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born in Bradford, Conn., Oct. 19, 1751. He graduated at Yale in 1771, was ordained over the First Church in Middleborough, Mass., in 1781, and died July 25, 1815. Mr. Barker took a lively interest in politics, and for one term or more represented his district in the United States House of Representatives. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 41.

Barker, Nehemiah, a Congregational minister, was born in 1720. He graduated at Yale in 1742, and was ordained in Killingly, Conn., in 1755, where he remained until 1756. In 1757 he removed to Long Island, N. Y., preaching in Southold and Aquebogue. He died in Mattituck, L. I., March 10, 1772. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 183.

Barker, Thomas Burgess, an English Congregational minister, was born near Sheffield, Jan. 10, 1800. He received the rudiments of his education from the minister of his native place, and afterwards was sent to Hoxton and Highbury colleges, where he studied for the Independent ministry. He was settled at Bere Regis, Christchurch, Tollesbury, Tamworth, and Ewell, and was much beloved by his congregations. On retiring from the ministry, he settled at Stoke Newington, where his best years were devoted to the education of youth in schools, and in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association. He was the founder of Abney House School, one of the largest and most flourishing schools for boys in the north of London. He was for some time chaplain of Abney Park Cemetery, of which place he published a guide. His death occurred April 25, 1881. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 285.

Barker, Thomas Richard, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Nov. 30, 1798. His father entered him in Christ's Hospital in 1807, where his progress was so rapid and thorough that he attained the rank of Deputy Grecian in 1815. About this time he was converted, and, deciding to enter the ministry, he entered Homerton Old College in 1821 for its special preparation. He preached successively at Alresford, Hants, 1822; at Harpenden, near St. Albans, 1824; and at Uxbridge in 1833. In 1838 Mr. Barker accepted a call to become classical, Hebrew, and resident tutor at Springhill College, Birmingham, where he labored until his death, Nov. 23, 1869. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 302.

Barkey, Anton Cornelius, a Protestant theologian of Germany who was born in 1741 at Cleverskerke, and died July 4, 1782, is the author of, Disputatio de Pseudo-doctoribus quorum Mentio fit 2 Pet. ii, 2 (Leyden, 1767):—Oratio de Doctrina et Ethices Christianae præ Philosophica Præstantia et Dignitate (Steinfurt, 1770):—Disputatio de Affectibus Veritatis Noxiis (ibid. eod.). See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Barkey, Nicolaus, a German theologian, father of the preceding, was born Sept. 11, 1709. In 1732 he was vicar at Middelburg, and in 1754 was called to Bremen as pastor of St. Stephen's, and professor of theology at the gymnasium there. In 1765 he went to The Hague as pastor of the German Congregation, where he died after 1778. He wrote, Disputatio Inauguralis ad Psa. xlviii (Gröningen, 1754):—Oratio Inauguralis de Admirabili Operum Divinorum Harmonia (Bremen, 1755):—Disp. in aliquot Loca ex Prioribus Actorum Apost. Capitibus (ibid. 1766). He also edited the Nova Bibliotheca Bremensis, Bibliotheca Hagana, and Museum Hagana. See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Barksdale, CLEMENT, an English clergyman, was born in 1609, and educated at Merton College, Oxford, having entered as servitor in 1625. He took holy orders, and in 1637 supplied the place of chaplain of Lincoln College at the Church of All-Saints. At the Restoration, Charles II gave him the living of Naunton, in Gloucestershire, where he remained until his death, in 1687. His publications consist chiefly of little religious tracts which were printed from time to time (1640-79). Besides these he published a poem, Nympha Libethris; or, The Cotswold Muse (1651). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barlaam, St. The modern Roman martyrology places the festival of Sts. Barlaam and Josaphat on Nov. 27 as of two actual saints worshipped by the Indians on the confines of Persia. Huet and others hold the history of these saints to be a mere romance. Baronius, however, receives it as true. See Huet, Orig. des Romans, p. 49.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Barlaamites, a sect of Christian heretics in the 14th century, were followers of Barlaam (q. v.).

Barlass, WILLIAM, an Associate minister, was born near Perth, Scotland, and preached for some years at Whitehill, where he continued until 1797. He came to New York in 1798, and afterwards engaged as a bookseller until his death, Jan. 7, 1817. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 38.

Barlow, Ann, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in 1787 at Darlington, England. She was the daughter of pious parents, who gave her a guarded Christian education. At the age of eleven years she was converted, and became a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Society. In 1842 she embraced the doctrines and principles as held by the Friends, and continued to be a useful minister of their society until the infirmities of age prevented her activity. She died March 10, 1867. See Annual Monitor, 1868, p. 9.

Barlow, Daniel B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Richland District, S. C., Aug. 9, 1806. He was converted when about twenty, and in 1829 was admitted into the Mississippi Conference, in which he filled many important stations with dignity and usefulness. On the division of the conference, he became a member of the Alabama Conference. He died Dec. 12, 1838. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1839, p. 663.

Barlow, Joel, an American preacher, diplomatist, and poet, was born at Reading, Conn., in 1755, and was first sent to Dartmouth College, but returned to New Haven, where he graduated in 1778. Shortly after this he was licensed a Congregational preacher, and joined the American army as a chaplain. At the close of the war, he resumed the study of law, in which he had previously been engaged, and settled in Hartford, where he established a weekly newspaper. While here, he adapted Watts's version of the Psalms to the use of the General Association of Connecticut, adding to it several original hymns. In 1788 he went to England as agent for the Scioto Company, but, finding himself associated with a party of swindlers, he resigned his office and went to Paris, where he became a zealous adherent of the Girondists. In 1795, while yet in Paris, he was appointed by president Washington consul to Algiers. He returned to Paris and resumed some commercial speculations in which he had formerly been engaged and through which he realized a fortune. In 1805 he returned to the United States and established himself in Washington. In 1806 he instituted a scheme for a national academy under the patronage of the government, but it failed. In 1811 president Madison appointed him minister to France. Napoleon, desiring his advice in diplomatic affairs, in the autumn of 1812, while on his Russian campaign, invited him to a conference at Wilna, Poland. Being attacked with inflammation of the lungs while on the journey, he died at Zarnowitch, a small village near Cracow, Dec. 22, 1812. His first poem was written in 1778. In 1791, on receiving his master's degree, he recited a poem called The Prospect of Peace, which was subsequently merged in The Columbiad. The germ of his great epic was The Vision of Columbus (1787), and attained greater popularity on both sides of the Atlantic than was the fate of the more pretentious work. His most popular poem, entitled Hasty Pudding, was written while at Chambéry, in Savoy. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.; Appletons' American Cyclop. s. v.; Duyckinck, Cyclop. of Amer. Lit. i, 408.

Barlow, Luke, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Congleton, Cheshire, Sept. 23, 1786. He was appointed prayer-leader at sixteen, commenced his ministry in 1807, retired in 1848, and died at Harbeck, near Harrogate, Aug. 5, 1861. Mr. Barlow was a genial, gentle man of spotless character; diligent, faithful, and well read in theology. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1861, p. 24; Wesleyan Meth. Magazine, 1864, p. 102.

Barlow, Thomas, a preacher in the United Methodist Free Church, was born of Wesleyan parents at Darlington, Devonshire, Aug. 7, 1810. He was converted to God in his youth, and at seventeen began to preach the Gospel. His love of freedom induced him in 1835, during the Warrentite disputes, to leave the Wesleyans, and join the Association Methodists, and again in 1851, when the reform movement began, he identified himself with it and entered the ministry. He labored hard for nineteen years, until 1870, when he was chosen book steward to the United Methodist Free Churches, in which office he served with fidelity till his health failed in 1874, when he became a supernumerary, and resided at the East End of London, preaching as he had strength to the end of life. He died June 29, 1880, and was interred in Ilford Cemetery. He was courteous, conscientious, devout, intelligent. See Minutes of the Assembly.

Barlow, William (1), D.D., an English prelate was descended from a family of this name in Lancashire. He became fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and afterwards dean of Chester. His account of the celebrated Hampton Court Conference is well known (Lond. 1604). It professes not to be an account of the conference at large, but, to use the author's own words, it is "as an extract, wherein is the substance of the whole." Various attempts have been made by the Dissenters to invalidate its authority, but in vain. Barlow was consecrated bishop of Rochester June 30, 1605; was translated to Lincoln in 1608, and died Sept. 7, 1613. His principal works, besides the above, are, Defence of the Articles of Faith (Lond. 1601), a Life of Dr. R. Cosin, and a few translated Sermons. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barlow (or Barlowe), William (2), an English divine and eminent mathematician, was the son of William Barlow, bishop of Chichester, and was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1564. About this time he went to sea and learned much of the science of navigation. About 1573 he took holy orders, and in 1585 became prebendary of Lichfield. He was installed treasurer of Lichfield Oct. 17, 1589, and died May 25, 1625. He wrote several works on subjects connected with practical navigation, the most remarkable of which was The Navigator's Supply (Lond. 1597). He was the first English writer on the nature and properties of the magnet, and the inventor of the compass-box as now used at sea. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Le Neve, Fasti, i, 582, 592.

Barlow, William (3), a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was pastor of St. Paul's Church in Syracuse, N. Y., and subsequently of Ogdensburg. He died at Chicago, Ill., Feb. 24, 1850. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1850, p. 159.

Barmmidbar RABBA is the title of a Midrash (or exposition) on Numbers. It contains twenty-three chapters. The age of its compilation is uncertain, but internal evidence points to the 11th or 12th century. According to Zunz, the work was written by two different authors. See his Gottesdienstliche Vorträge der Juden (Berlin, 1832), p. 258-262. (B. P.)

Barnabæus, HIERONYMUS, a priest of the Congregation of the Oratory at Rome who died July 18, 1662, is the author of Purpura Sancta, s. Vita Purpurati S. Rom. Eccles. Principis Cas. Baronii, etc., cui Accedunt Elogia Baronio ab Illustribus Viris Attributa. Opera Greg. Fritz (Vienna, 1718). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 858; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Oldoin, Athenæum Romanum. (B. P.)

Barnabas, ST., LEGEND AND FESTIVAL OF. There is a tradition that he became a believer after witnessing the miracle wrought by our Lord at the pool of Bethesda, and that he was one of the seventy disciples (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. i, 12; ii, 1). It is also said that he was the first preacher of Christianity at Rome, that he converted Clemens Romanus to the faith, and that he founded the churches of Milan and Brescia. But these and other statements are unworthy of credit. There is a general agreement of testimony about the time, place, and cause of his death. From very early times he has had the credit of martyrdom. It is believed that he was stoned to death by the Jews of Salamis in Cyprus about A.D. 64. Tradition says that his death took place on June 11, and that he was buried at a short distance from the town of Salamis. Nothing, however, seems to have been heard of his tomb until about A.D. 478.

Alexander, a monk of Cyprus, who wrote (Eulogy of St. Barnabas) about the beginning of the 6th century, gives an account of the martyrdom and burial of Barnabas, and then asserts that, in consequence of the many miraculous cures that had occurred in the neighborhood of the tomb, the spot had been called the "place of healing." But the discovery of the cause of these miracles was made in the following way. Peter the Fuller, patriarch of Antioch, was endeavoring to bring Cyprus under his episcopal sway, on the plea that the Word of God in the first instance was carried from Antioch to Cyprus. The Cypriotes resisted this claim on the ground that their Church had from the time of its founders been independent of the see of Antioch. Anthemius, the bishop of Cyprus, a timid and retiring prelate, was scarcely a match for an opponent so able and experienced as Peter. But he was encouraged by Barnabas himself, who appeared to him several times in a vision. At the saint's bidding, he searched a cave in the neighborhood of the "place of healing," and found a coffin containing the body of Barnabas and a copy of Matthew's gospel. He proceeded to Constantinople, where the dispute was heard before the emperor Zeno, and in support of his claim to remain independent he announced that the body of Barnabas had lately been discovered in his diocese. On hearing this, the emperor gave his decision in favor of Anthemius, bade him send at once to Cyprus for the copy of Matthew's gospel, and as soon as it arrived had it adorned with gold and placed in the imperial palace. After conferring great honors on Anthemius, the emperor sent him back to Cyprus with instructions to build a magnificent church in honor of Barnabas near the spot where the body was found. This order was strictly carried out; the body was placed at the right hand of the altar, and June 11 consecrated to the memory of the saint.

There is every reason to believe that in the Eastern Church these legendary events were the origin of the festival. No church, however, was built to the saint's memory at Constantinople. From early times the day was kept in the Eastern Church in honor of Bartholomew as well as of Barnabas. When the name of the former was added is quite uncertain. In A.D. 886 the day was the joint festival of the two saints. It has been asserted, but not proved, that the festival was not kept in Eastern earlier than in Western Christendom. The day occurs as the Feast of Barnabas in the calendar of the Venerable Bede: if this was inserted by that author, the day was observed in the Western Church in the 8th century. It does not, however, occur in all the old service-books. In the Martyrologium Romanum it appears as the festival of Barnabas only.

Barnaby, JAMES, a Baptist minister, was born in Freetown, Mass., June 25, 1787. He graduated at Brown University in the class of 1809, and was ordained in July, 1811, as pastor of the Church in Harwich, Mass., where he remained until 1819, when he removed to New Bedford, Mass. His pastorate here was for four years. Subsequently he was pastor of several churches, but his longest ministry was with the Church with which he was originally settled. At four different times he was called to this Church, and the whole period of his connection with it was thirty-nine years. His entire ministry covered a period of nearly sixty-seven years. During this time he baptized not far from two thousand eight hundred persons. He died at Harwich, Dec. 10, 1877. (J. C. S.)

Barnard, A. F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Dixfield, Me., Jan. 30, 1806. He experienced conversion in 1826; entered the Maine Wesleyan Seminary in 1829, where he pursued his studies for about a year and a half, and in 1832 joined the Maine Conference. During his ministry, he received twenty-three different appointments, two of which were in the East Maine Conference, and in all of which he succeeded well, and in some had glorious revivals. He died March 27, 1867. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1867, p. 133.

Barnard, Edward, an American clergyman, was born in 1721. He obtained an excellent education, became minister at Haverhill, Mass., and died in 1774. He published Sermons, etc. (1754, 1765, and 1773). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barnard (or Bernard), John (1), D.D., an English divine, was first a student of Cambridge, but removed to Oxford, where he became a fellow of Lincoln College in 1648. He afterwards became rector of Waddington, in Lincolnshire, and died in 1683. His works include, Censura Cleri (1660), against scandalous ministers not fit to be restored to the Church's livings, etc.:—Theologo-historicus; or, The True Life of the Most Reverend Divine and Excellent Historian, Peter Heylyn, D.D. (1683). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barnard, John (2), a minister in Andover, Mass., was born in 1690, and died in 1758. He published several sermons and discourses. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barnard, Thomas (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Hadley, Mass., about 1662. He graduated at Harvard College in 1679; was called as an assistant to the Rev. Francis Dane, pastor of the Church at Andover, Mass., in January, 1682, and was ordained in March following. When Mr. Dane died in February, 1699, Mr. Barnard succeeded to the pastorate. During four or five years before the division of the town into two parishes, the contention was warm in regard to the site for a new meeting-house; but in 1709 the division was amicably made, and Mr. Barnard, who had conducted himself throughout the controversy with prudence, was given the choice of the parishes. Eventually he was settled as minister of the North Parish. He died in Andover, Oct. 13, 1718. He is described as "one of the best of men and of ministers." See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 198.

Barnard, Thomas (2), a Unitarian minister, was born Aug. 17, 1716, probably at Andover, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1732, and was ordained and installed pastor of the First Church in Newbury, Mass., Jan. 31, 1739. He was, by his own request, dismissed Jan. 18, 1751; removed to Newburyport, studied law, became a practitioner at the bar, and was a representative of the town to the General Court. He subsequently re-entered the ministry, and was installed as pastor of the First Church in Salem, Mass., Sept. 18, 1775. Here he continued till the close of his life, Aug. 15, 1776. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 14.

Barnard, Thomas (3), D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Newbury, Mass., Feb. 5, 1733, being the son of Rev. John Barnard of Andover, Mass. He graduated at Harvard in 1748, was ordained over the North Church, Salem, in 1766, and died Oct. 1, 1814. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 41.

Barnardiston, GILES, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Clare, Suffolk, England, about 1624. His parents, who were persons of repute in the world, gave him an education consistent with their rank. After passing through the common schools, he was placed at the university, where he pursued his studies for six years, intending to take orders in the Episcopal Church. When civil war broke out in England, he was appointed a colonel in the army. Becoming weary of the service, he threw up his commission and retired to private life, and not long after joined the then greatly despised and persecuted Quakers, and proved to be one of the most earnest and zealous preachers among them. At once he became an object of the scorn and contempt in which the Friends were held in that ungodly age. He was despoiled of his goods to a large amount and exposed to innumerable hardships. He was, however, most diligent and faithful in the performance of his duties. We are told that "he visited many parts of his own nation, and was also on the Continent; and in all places where he went he left a good report and savor." The heresies of one Jeffery Bullock, a professed Friend, called forth a reply from Barnardiston, in which he clearly set forth the teachings of Holy Scripture concerning some of the cardinal doctrines of the common evangelical faith. About the year 1677, he was imprisoned in London for conscience' sake, and during the next three years was more than once incarcerated. He died at his house in Chelmsford, Nov. 11, 1680. George Whitehead says of him: "My soul was deeply affected with his innocent life, sincere and tender spirit to God, and with his humble example among his people in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity, in gravity, and sound speech that could not be condemned." See Friends' Library, iv, 1-10. (J. C. S.)

Barnaud, JEAN, a French theologian and Jesuit, was born at Charolles in 1575, and died at Lyons, Nov. 1, 1640. Sotwel attributes to him a book entitled Doctrina Christiana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barnden, JAMES, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Maidstone, Kent, Jan. 2, 1806. He was brought up religiously; converted in early life; entered the Bible Christian ministry in 1828, and travelled with much acceptance in nineteen circuits. He became a supernumerary in 1870 at Dymock, Gloucestershire, where he suddenly died, Feb. 27, 1875.

Barnes, Albert, D.D., one of the most prominent theologians of the Presbyterian Church, was born at Rome, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1798. He studied at Hamilton College with a view of becoming a lawyer, but the Christian experiences he had had there induced him to give up his fondly cherished plan for the work of the ministry; and upon graduating in 1820 he pursued a four years' course of theological study at Princeton, N. J. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Elizabethtown, April 23, 1823. His first pastorate was at Morristown, N. J., and in 1830 he accepted a call to the charge of the First Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, with which Church he retained official connection to the day of his death, Dec. 24, 1870.

Dr. Barnes was not only the friend of the rich, but also of the oppressed, especially of the slave, whose early, open, and faithful friend he was. "That native modesty which was so peculiarly a trait of his whole life never seemed to be in antagonism with the highest moral intrepidity. He thought, he spoke, he acted, from the sense of right which was so strong an element in his nature. Often in peril, and sometimes in actual experience, of implicating important personal relations, his sympathy with the oppressed never wavered or slumbered. His faith in the emancipation of the slave and the elevation of the colored people of the country, though often confessed to be dark respecting the process, was firm respecting the final event. As to his theological position, widely as men may have differed as to the soundness of some of his doctrinal statements and positions, they did not differ as to the purity of his motives and the guilelessness of his spirit. As he approached the close of his life, his own testimony was that "the objects of eternity became overpoweringly bright and grand." Yet he did not lose his interest in this world as the scene of the development of the great plans of God. He cherished to the last the cheerfulness of the world, of the certain progress of the race, of the destiny of man.

At Philadelphia, Dr. Barnes prepared those works which made his name a household word wherever the English tongue is spoken. The first of these was his Notes Explanatory and Practical on the Gospels (Phila. 1832), designed for Sunday-school teachers and Bible-classes, which soon attained a larger circulation, both in Europe and America, than any similar work. This was followed, in rapid succession, by Notes on the New Testament (11 vols.), on Job (2 vols.), on Isaiah (2 vols.), on Daniel, and on the Book of Psalms (N. Y. 1870, 3 vols.). By excessive literary labors, carried on chiefly by lamplight in the early morning, he nearly lost his sight. He also published, The Atonement in its Relations to Law and Moral Government (Phila. 1859):—Lectures on the Evidences of Christianity in the Nineteenth Century (N. Y. 1868):—Practical Sermons Designed for Vacant Congregations and Families (Phila. 1860):—The Way of Salvation (ibid. 1863), illustrated by a series of discourses:—Miscellaneous Essays and Reviews (N. Y. 1855, 2 vols.):—Prayers for the Use of Families (ibid. 1870), etc. See Lives of the Leaders of Our Church Universal (ibid.), p. 767 sq. (B. P.)

Barnes, Albert Henry, Ph.D., a Congregational minister, son of the preceding, was born in Morristown, N. J., Feb. 11, 1826. He was prepared for college at an academy in Philadelphia, and graduated at Yale College in 1846. He united on profession of faith with Yale College Church while a student, and studied theology one year in the Divinity School of Yale College, but subsequently entered the senior class in Princeton Seminary and remained one year. He was licensed by the New Haven East Association (Congregational) Aug. 15, 1850. Having accepted a call to become pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Lawrenceville, Pa., he was ordained at that place by the Presbytery of Pennsylvania, and installed pastor Dec. 6, 1854. He was released in 1860, after which he established a school in Philadelphia, which he taught from 1861 to 1870. He died May 6, 1878. Mr. Barnes was the author of a volume entitled Popular Mistakes in Education. He also wrote frequently for the newspapers, and especially for the New York Times. He was an earnest student, especially of the older English literature. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1879.

Barnes, Benjamin Nichols, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Southampton County, Va., Nov. 15, 1808. He received a careful religious training; experienced conversion in 1827; was licensed to exhort in 1829, and in 1830 joined the Virginia Conference, in which he travelled six years, graduating in all the orders of the Church. In 1836 he located and went to Indiana, and in the following year entered the Indiana Conference, wherein he served till his decease, Sept. 6, 1838. Mr. Barnes was a self-educated man. He possessed excellent preaching qualifications, and was a young man of great promise. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1839, p. 662.

Barnes, Charles Curtis, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Granville, Mass., in March, 1813. He experienced conversion in 1832, began preaching three years later, and in 1836 entered the New England Conference. On the division of the conference about 1840, he became a member of the Providence Conference, in which he did excellent service, and finally died, Nov. 29, 1846. Mr. Barnes was courteous and steadfast as a friend; conscientious, fervid, and uniform as a Christian; evangelical, diligent, and successful as a preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1847, p. 108.

Barnes, David, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born in Marlborough, Mass., March 24, 1731. He graduated at Harvard College in 1752, and commenced preaching shortly after. He received and accepted a call from the Second Church in Scituate in June, 1754. In 1780 he delivered the Dupleian Lecture at Harvard College. When the controversy which resulted in the division of the Congregational Church of Massachusetts began, it was well understood that his sympathies were on the liberal side. He died April 26, 1811. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 32.

Barnes, Elisha, a Baptist minister, was born in Farmington, N. Y., April 18, 1753. He was originally a Congregationalist, but about 1793 became a Baptist, and served the Baptist Church in Canaan as pastor thirteen years. He died in August, 1806. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 621.

Barnes, Francis, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1745, and was early remarkable for his acuteness and aptitude for learning. He was educated at Eton and at Cambridge University. In the latter place he resided during the rest of his life, his position there being master of St. Peter's College and professor of casuistry. He died in 1838. Dr. Barnes was considered one of the best Greek scholars of his day. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, Oct. 1838, p. 634.

Barnes, James Charles, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Carshalton, Surrey, England, April 10, 1789. He received a theological education at Princeton Seminary, N. J., was ordained by Transylvania Presbytery, and entered upon his Master's service at Lancaster, Ky., in 1819. His other fields of labor were Paint Lick and Rockcastle, Ky.; Dayton, O.; Hainesville, Mo.; and Somerset, Ky. He died at Stanford, Ky., March 15, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 95.

Barnes, James S., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of New York, entered the ministry in 1858, and soon after became connected as pastor with Christ Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., officiating until 1865 as assistant minister. In that year he was unemployed, but in 1866 became assistant minister of St. Peter's Church in the same city, in which position he continued to serve until 1872. In 1873 he was appointed missionary to St. John's Church, Yonkers, N. Y. The last two years of his life he ceased to perform active ministerial labor. He died Dec. 22, 1876. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Barnes, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Jan. 16, 1812. He became a Christian at the age of eighteen; soon after began a course of study at the Oneida Conference Seminary, and in 1840 entered the Oneida Conference. After several years of faithful labor, failing health obliged him to retire from active work, and he died March 24, 1847. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1847, p. 146.

Barnes, Joshua (1), a learned English divine, was born in London in 1654. He was educated at Christ's Hospital, and at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1686. He was chosen Greek professor at the University of Cambridge in 1695, and died Aug. 3, 1712. He published a large number of works, among which were, Geramia (1675):—a poetical paraphrase of the History of Esther (1676):—Select Discourses (1680):—and The History of Edward III (1688). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barnes, Joshua (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Frederick County, Md., in 1775. He embraced religion in early life; moved to Ohio in his youth; received license to exhort in 1804, and in 1805 entered the Ohio Conference. Two years later he located and became a merchant, which proved extremely detrimental to his spiritual interests. In 1812 he was powerfully reclaimed, again licensed to preach, and in 1816 removed to Illinois. In 1836 he entered the Illinois Conference, and served with zeal and fidelity until his death, Nov. 18, 1839. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1841, p. 149.

Barnes, Seth, was a Universalist minister, concerning whose birth and life scarcely anything is recorded. His field of labor seems to have been confined to Minneapolis, Minn., where he died suddenly, Aug. 12, 1866. Mr. Barnes was characterized by kindness and faithfulness. See Universalist Register, 1867, p. 75.

Barnes, Thomas (1), a Puritan divine of the 17th century, was a graduate of Cambridge University. Among his productions is The Wise Man's Forecast against the Evil Time (Lond. 1624). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barnes, Thomas (2), D.D., a learned English Presbyterian divine, was born at Warrington, in Lancashire, Feb. 13, 1747. He was educated at the academy at Warrington, and was ordained a preacher in 1769, when he was settled over the congregation at Cockey Moor, near Bolton. Here he labored twelve years with great success. In May, 1780, he removed to Manchester, where he labored as co-pastor of a large and wealthy congregation for thirty years. In 1786 he became principal of an academy at Manchester, but resigned in 1798. During the remainder of his life, he gave attention, in addition to his ministerial labors, to the advancement of the interests of the Manchester Infirmary. He died June 28, 1810. He contributed to various periodicals, and published a few sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barnes, Thomas (3), was the "father of Universalism in Maine." The date of his birth is not recorded, but he had arrived at maturity previous to 1772, about which time he embraced the Universalist faith, and soon began preaching it in Maine. In 1789 he removed to Oxford, Mass.; in 1792 to Woodstock, Conn.; and in 1799 settled in Poland, Me. In 1802 he was ordained over the united societies of Norway, New Gloucester, Falmouth, and Gray, Me. In 1804, in Norway, he finished the first Universalist meeting-house in Maine. His after-history and the date of his death are not accessible. See Whittemore, Modern History of Universalism, p. 316, 390.

Barnes, Zetto, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Onondaga County, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1807. He had religious convictions from early childhood; experienced conversion at the age of twenty-two, and in 1834 united with the Oneida Conference. In its effective ranks he continued till 1863, when he became superannuated. The circumstances of his death are painful, being the result of insanity, of which he showed signs for nearly a year. It occurred Sept. 22, 1864. As to his Christian character, no doubt can be entertained; for the amount and kind of work that he performed for so many years was proof of his being thoroughly imbued with the spirit of experimental piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 69.

Barneveldt, JAN VAN OLDEN, grand-pensionary of Holland, whose influence upon the religious history of his country entitles him to a place here, was born at Amersfoort, in the province of Utrecht, in 1547. He studied law, and commenced practice as an advocate at The Hague in 1569. He felt deeply his country's wrongs under the yoke of Spain, and served as a volunteer at the sieges of Haarlem and Leyden. In 1576 he was appointed counsellor and chief pensionary of Rotterdam. On the death of William the Silent in 1585, Barneveldt, as ambassador to England and France, offered these governments the protectorship of the Confederate States. On their refusal, he exerted all his powers to carry through the election of Maurice of Nassau as stadtholder of five provinces. He was then raised to the dignity of advocate-general of Holland and West Friesland. At the close of 1586 the earl of Leicester, who had been invested with absolute power in the provinces, was recalled to England. The official career of Barneveldt was one of eminent success and of satisfaction to the States; and when he proposed to resign his post in 1592, he was urgently entreated to remain. In 1598 the treaty of Vervins called Barneveldt to France, where he obtained from Henry IV a large promise of pecuniary help. In the same year he arranged with Elizabeth the public debt and securities which England then held from the republic. In 1603 he again appeared at the English court and secured an alliance with James I, to which Sully, as the representative of France, was a party. He next secured the treaty of peace between Spain and the republic, dated April 9, 1609, and to continue twelve years. Although the foundation of Dutch political independence, this treaty brought upon him the suspicions of the bigoted clergy and the sworn enmity of the stadtholder Maurice. The struggle of Arminians and Gomarists was already raging, and the two parties were led by Barneveldt and Maurice respectively. Maurice was aiming at the sovereign power; Barneveldt resolutely maintained the freedom of the republic. The clerical party, with Maurice as their leader, were determined to have Calvinism adopted as the state religion, and to tolerate no other; Barneveldt and the Arminians contended that each province should be free to adopt the form which it preferred. Barneveldt was the champion of the supremacy of the civil authority and the prime-minister of Protestantism. New difficulties arose in the question of the National Synod, or of the right of the States-General to enforce Calvinism on the seven provinces by means of an ecclesiastical synod; the enlisting of Waasgelders in the state of Utrecht; the occupation of Overijssel and Guelderland by the prince. In 1618 Barneveldt was illegally arrested, along with Grotius and Hoogerbeets, by a secret order which was afterwards adopted by the States-General. During the sittings of the Synod of Dort, he was brought to trial (March 7, 1619) in the most illegal and oppressive manner; found guilty of asserting the right of the provinces to settle each its own religion, and executed at The Hague, May 13, 1619. See Deventer, Gedenkstukken van Olden Barneveldt en zijn Tijd (The Hague, 1862-65, 3 vols.); Motley, Life and Death of John of Barneveldt (N. Y. 1874); Groen Van Prinsterer, Maurice et Barneveldt, Etude Historique (Utrecht and Lond. 1875).

Barney, Godfrey W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1795. He professed conversion in his youth, and in 1827 joined the Genesee Conference. In 1836 he became a member of the Black River Conference; was superannuate between 1837 and 1847; re-entered the effective lists in 1848; again was superannuate in 1849, and sustained that relation until his decease, May 12, 1863. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 105.

Barney, James Ormsbee, a Congregational minister, was born in Providence, R. I., Sept. 30, 1795. In 1821 he graduated at Brown University. His theological studies were pursued under direction of Calvin Park, D.D., and Jacob Ide, D.D. He was ordained pastor of the Church of Seekonk, Mass. (now East Providence, R. I.), Feb. 4, 1824, and was dismissed May 13, 1850. For two years he was seamen's chaplain and acting pastor of the Fourth Church in Providence, R. I. In June, 1852, he returned as acting pastor to Seekonk, and remained there until 1868. From 1869 to 1874 he filled the same position in the Church at Berkley, Mass. After this, he resided without charge in East Providence, where he died, March 7, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 17.

Barnhart, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Maryland, May 22, 1823. He entered the Baltimore Conference in 1845; was appointed presiding elder of Juniata District in 1865; elected to Chicago General Conference in 1868; removed to Iowa in 1876, and died in that state, at Red Oak, while presiding elder of Council Bluffs District, May 8, 1880. He was a worthy gentleman and a faithful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 253.

Barnhurst, Washington, a Baptist minister, was born at Philadelphia, Dec. 30, 1830, and united with the Broad Street Church in that city when he was sixteen years of age. His college course was pursued at Lewisburg University, where he graduated in 1851, and his theological course at the Rochester Seminary. His ordination as pastor of the Church at Chestnut Hill, Pa., took place Sept. 8, 1853, on leaving which place he went to Burlington, N. J., and in 1856 took charge of the Third Church in St. Louis, Mo. In all these pastorates he was greatly blessed with revivals of religion. The constant and exhausting labors of these years of ministerial work broke down his health, and in 1860 he left the pastorate and sought to recruit on a farm in Miller County, Mo., where he died, April 29, 1862. See Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 81. (J. C. S.)

Barnic, Sr., a Celtic bishop, whose burial-place in Cornwall is thus given by William of Worcester, p. 113: "St. Barnic episcopus, Anglicè Seynt Barre, sepelitur in ecclesia de Fowey; et ejus festum per tres dies proximè ante festum St. Michaelis." Leland (Itin. iii, 33) gives his full name as St. Fim-barrus (i. e. "fine hair"). Barrocius seems another form of the name, and there are several saints of the same name in Ireland (see Whitaker, Cathedral of Cornwall, ii, 214). The St. "Barrus," bishop of Cork, of the Acta Sanctorum, Sept. 7, 142, is commemorated on Sept. 25.

Barnuevo, Don Sebastian de Herrera, a Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Madrid, according to Palomino, in 1611. He was instructed in painting by Alonso Cano. Many of his productions are to be found in the churches and convents at Madrid, the best of which among the paintings are, the Beatification of St. Augustine, in the great Chapel of the Augustine Recollets, and the Nativity, in the Church of San Gerónimo. He died at Madrid in 1671.

Barnum, Caleb, a Presbyterian minister, was licensed by the Fairfield East Association May 30, 1759, and was ordained and settled pastor of a Congregational Church at Franklin, Mass. He remained here eight years, and then resigned on account of difficulties in the congregation. Early in the Revolutionary War Mr. Barnum was appointed chaplain in the western army, but died in camp in 1776. Mr. Barnum was admitted to an ad eundem master's degree at Harvard in 1768. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Barnum, Nelson, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Shoreham, Vt., Jan. 12, 1811. In 1844 he entered the Michigan Conference, and in 1846 was appointed to the Indian mission work about Lake Superior, where he spent the remainder of his life among that benighted people. He died Aug. 5, 1854. Mr. Barnum was an amiable companion, an affectionate parent, an exemplary Christian, and a zealous minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1854, p. 440.

Barnwell, William H., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for many years rector of St. Peter's in Charleston, S. C., died at Frankford, Pa., in February, 1863. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 152.

Baro, BONAVENTURA. See BARONIUS.

Baroccio (or Barocci), Fiori Federigo d' Urbano, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Urbino in 1528. He studied under Battista Veneziano until he was twenty years of age, then went to Rome, and was invited by cardinal della Rovere into his palace, where he executed some fresco paintings. During the pontificate of Gregory XIII he returned to Rome, and painted two fine pictures for the Chiesa Nuova, representing the Visitation of the Virgin to Elizabeth and the Presentation in the Temple, which are thought his greatest efforts. He died in 1612. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Baroes was bishop of Edessa, to which see he was translated from Haran by the emperor Constantius, A.D. 361. Sozomen, however, states that Baroes (together with Eulogius) was not consecrated to any definite see, but was raised to the episcopate while he remained in his monastery, as a token of honor for his services to the Church. Baroes was banished by the Arian Valens to Egypt—first, to the island of Aradus;

then, with the view of checking the crowds that flocked to the holy confessor, to Oxyrynchus, in the Thebaid; and finally to a fortress named Philæ, on the barbarian frontier, where he died in extreme old age, A.D. 378, the same year in which his persecutor died, in or after the disastrous battle of Adrianople. His name stands in the Martyrologium Romanum on Jan. 30.

Baron, Bonaventura. See BARONIUS.

Baron, Jaime, a Spanish Dominican of the Convent of St. Ildefonsus at Saragossa, was born in 1665, and died in 1734. He published, in Spanish, The Girle of Chastity of St. Thomas Aquinas:—The Nun Instructed in her Duties (1 vol. 4to):—The Third Order of St. Dominic, etc.

Baron, John, a preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was a Lancashire lad, born near Bacup, among the "common people." A diligent Sunday scholar, a devoted teacher; converted at nineteen, he began to preach, and as a home missionary did good service for God among the poor in several circuits. While yet in rising manhood, he died at Ilkstone, Feb. 7, 1862, suddenly, but gloriously, having lived a most useful life and left a precious memory. See Minutes of the Sixth Annual Assembly.

Baron (or Baronius), Martin, a Polish theologian, lived in the early half of the 17th century and wrote, Icones et Miracula Sanctorum Poloniæ (Cologne, 1605):—Vita, Gesta, et Miracula B. Stanislai (Cracow, 1609):—Vite, Gesta, et Miracula Sanctorum quinque Fratrum Polonorum Eremitorum Casimiriensium Sancti Romualdi (ibid. 1710). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baron, Richard, an English Dissenting minister, but most noted for his zeal as a political writer, was born at Leeds, Yorkshire, and educated at the University of Glasgow, which he left with honorable testimonials in 1740. The next account we have of him he was ordained pastor of the Dissenting meeting at Pinners' Hall, Broad Street, London, in 1753. Much of his time and talents was employed in the cause of religious liberty, especially in editing books and collecting tracts on that subject. He died at Blackheath, Feb. 22, 1768. His publications include A Cordial for Low Spirits and The Pillars of Priestcraft and Orthodoxy Shaken (1768).

Baron, Robert, a Scottish clergyman, was professor of divinity in Marischal College, New Aberdeen, and was well known for his excellent abilities. He was elected to the see of Orkney in the early part of the 17th century, but, being forced by the perversity of the times to flee out of the kingdom, he died at Berwick, having never been consecrated. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 227.

Baron, Vincent, a French Dominican, was born at Martres, in the diocese of Rieux, May 17, 1604. He joined his order at Toulouse, and for some time acted as teacher of philosophy and theology. He openly held religious disputes with Calvinistic preachers, and thus became known to his order, which elected him twice as prior. Towards the end of his life he retired to Paris, devoting his time entirely to pious exercises and literary work. He died there Jan. 21, 1674. His Theologia Moralis (Paris, 1665, 2 vols.) was put on the Index, but in 1667 and 1668 he published a second edition. He also wrote, Le Christianisme Établi sur les quatre Principaux Mystères de la Foi (ibid. 1660):—L'Hérésie Convaincue, ou la Théologie des Luthériens Réduite à quatre Principes et Réfutée d'une Manière toute Nouvelle; avec l'Examen de l'Ouvrage du Ministre Claude contre l'Eucharistie (ibid. 1668). For his other works, see Wildt's article s. v. in Wetzzer und Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon; also Tournon, Histoire des Hommes Illustres de l'Ordre de St. Domin. (Paris, 1743–49), v., 489; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Werner,

Der heilige Thomas von Aquino, i, 764, 863; iii, 441, 451, 547. (B. P.)

Baroncino, PORPORINO, an Italian theologian and antiquarian, a native of Faenza, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote, La Galleria Cesarea aperta, etc. (Faenza, 1672):—Ad Kalendarium Romanum Aniternæ effusum Minuscula Commentaria Ludicrum Geniale (Naples, 1680, under the name of Porporino di Faenza). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barone, MARCELLO, an Italian theologian of the Order of Dominicans, was first prior, then vicar-general, of the Society of St. Mark at Naples. He died in 1699. He wrote, Rime Spirituali (Naples, 1678, 1679):—De Ezacto Amorum Numero ac Mundi Creationis Opusculum Chronologicum (ibid. 1694). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baroni, CAVALCADO GASPARE ANTONIO, a reputable Italian painter, was born at Roveredo in 1682, and studied under Balestra. He executed five works in fresco for the choir of the Church of the Carmelites of that city. His best works are the prophets Elijah and Elisha and the Last Supper. He died in 1759. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Baronius, Domenico, a Florentine priest, lived in the 16th century and wrote strongly against the Roman Church. He seems to have concurred with the Vaudois, and was equally rejected by the Catholics and sectaries.

Baronius (Baro or Baron), Bonaventura, an Irish monk, nephew of Luke Wading, was born at Clonmel, in the County of Tipperary, near the commencement of the 17th century. His true name was Fitzgerald. He studied at Rome, and there became a Franciscan, and died March 18, 1696. His principal works are, Metra Miscellanea (Rome, 1645):—Opuscula Varia (Würzburg, 1666):—Theologia (Paris, 1676). He followed the opinions of Scotus. He also wrote Annales Ordinis SS. Trinitatis Redemptionis Captivorum, etc. (Rome, 1686, fol.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baronius, Justus, a French theologian, was born at Xanten, in the duchy of Cleves. He renounced Calvinism at the commencement of the 17th century, and gave himself up to pope Clement VIII. He wrote, Motifs de la Conversion, etc.:—Traité de Préjugés et de Prescription contre les Hérétiques:—and a collection of letters entitled Epistolarum Sacrarum ad Pontif. Libri Sex (Mentz, 1605). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baronius, Martin. See BARON.

Barontus, saint and hermit, lived at Berry in the 7th century. After passing some years in the married state, he quitted the world, and retired with Agloalda, his daughter, into the Abbey of Lonrey. Under the influence of a vision, he requested permission of the abbot Francardus to quit the abbey and betake himself to some solitude. After visiting the tomb of St Peter, he settled himself in a cell at Pistoia, in Tuscany, where he was joined by Dizier and four others, who submitted themselves to his course of discipline. St. Barontus died first, and miracles are said to have been wrought at his tomb. A monastery was built (March 27, 1018), whither Restaldus translated his body. His festival is marked on March 25.

Barozzi (da Vignola), GIACOMO, an Italian architect, was born in 1507. While young he studied painting at Bologna, but, not succeeding, he turned his attention to perspective. At the same time he studied architecture, and visited Rome, where he measured nearly all the ancient edifices that still remained in that city. In his latter days he produced a valuable treatise on the five orders of architecture, which has become the alphabet of architects. He erected a magnificent palace at Minerbo, near Bologna, for the count Isolani; the house of Achille Bochi; the façade on the bank, and the canal of Navilio at Bologna. After the death of Michael Angelo, he was appointed architect of St. Peter's, and erected the two beautiful lateral cupolas.

Barr, Absalom K., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Rowan County, N. C., Oct. 4, 1806. In 1821 he entered Chapel Hill University, N. C., where he graduated in 1826; entered Union Theological Seminary at Prince Edward, Va., in 1828; was licensed by Concord Presbytery, N. C., Oct. 5, 1832, and labored for two years in Mecklenburgh County. He was opposed to the institution of slavery, and removed to the state of New York in 1835, where he preached in Onondaga and Yates counties. From 1843 to 1854 he preached in Richland County, O., and, his health then failing, he employed his time in colportage. He died June 5, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 176.

Barr, Andrew, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Columbus, O., Jan. 20, 1820. He was educated at Jefferson College, Pa., and Princeton Theological Seminary. He labored in Ravenswood, Va.; Truro and Crestline, O.; Wysox, Pa.; and finally as chaplain of the 141st Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. He died April 11, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 92.

Barr, Daniel, an English Wesleyan missionary, was sent to the island of Jamaica in 1831. He died at Morant Bay, Oct. 17, 1835. He was affectionate, upright, consistent. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1836.

Barr, Gideon T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Quarryville, Pa., Dec. 4, 1832. He was deeply impressed with religious motives in early childhood; experienced conversion at the age of seventeen; received license to preach in 1855, and in 1856 entered the Philadelphia Conference. He died July 1, 1867. Mr. Barr was pleasing and attractive in address, buoyant in spirit, affable in conversation, studious and thoughtful in habit, careful and effective in preaching. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 37.

Barr, Hugh, a Presbyterian minister, was born in North Carolina in 1790. In 1820 he was ordained by the Shiloh Presbytery, and sent as a missionary to Northern Alabama, and was settled at Courtland in that state, where he remained for fourteen years. In 1835 he joined the Illinois Presbytery, and was stationed at Pisgah, Morgan Co. In 1836 he settled at Carrollton, Ill., where he remained until his death, in 1852. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 287.

Barr, Isaac G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Tennessee in 1811. He removed to Marion County, Ill., where he was converted in 1831, and, after having exercised his gifts as exhorter and local preacher, in 1835 was admitted into the Illinois Conference, in which he did faithful service until his decease, in 1844. Mr. Barr was a sincere Christian, an affectionate parent, a diligent man, a laborious student, and an excellent preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 662.

Barr, Jacob, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1753. In the Revolutionary War, he was among the first in South Carolina to enter the contest for American independence. About 1786 he experienced religion, soon made himself useful as class-leader, exhorter, and local preacher, and was finally ordained elder. Twenty years of his life were spent as justice of the quorum. He died June 15, 1823. See Methodist Magazine, vi, 400.

Barr, John A., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Rowan County, N. C., in 1832. He was brought up piously, and was converted early. He graduated at Davidson College, N. C., in 1854, and afterwards studied at Union Theological Seminary, Va., and graduated at Columbia Seminary, S. C., in 1857. The same year he was licensed by Concord Presbytery, N. C., and, after laboring for some time in that state, settled in 1860 in White County, Ark., and served the Church in Searcy till his death, July 18, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 424.

Barr, John T., A.M., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Liverpool in 1802. His mother's pious training gave him to the Church when young. In 1826 he was admitted into the ministry, and labored successfully for thirty-three years. He died March 10, 1859. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1859.

Barr, Joseph W., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Liberty township, Trumbull Co., O., July 22, 1802. He was converted in 1823. He graduated at Western Reserve College at Hudson, O., in 1830, and studied theology in Princeton Seminary, N. J. In 1832 he was ordained by the Philadelphia Presbytery, and expected to sail immediately to the foreign mission-field; but before the vessel started he was attacked with cholera, and died near Petersburg, Va., Oct. 25, 1832. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 445.

Barr, Ninian, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born in Glasgow, of parents belonging to the Church of Scotland. At the age of sixteen he found salvation in a revival at the Methodist Church. He was received by the Conference in 1816, and appointed to Newfoundland, where he labored faithfully for ten years. His remaining life was spent in the work in Great Britain. He retired from the activities of the itinerancy in 1854, and resided henceforth at Arbroath, Scotland, where he died, Dec. 20, 1865, in the seventy-first year of his age. He was a man of sound judgment, honorable in conduct, of genial temper, although constitutionally nervous; an original, thoughtful, earnest preacher, and successful in winning souls. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1866, p. 17; Wilson, Newfoundland and its Missionaries (1866), p. 239.

Barr, Peter, an English Congregational minister, was born in Glasgow, studied for the ministry at the Edinburgh Theological Hall, and began his colonial ministry in 1864 at Caversham, New Zealand, as assistant. Thence he removed to Yorke Peninsula, thence to Truro, South Australia, where his labors told with great and good effect. He died Dec. 6, 1875. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 344.

Barr, Sauney, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1835. He experienced conversion in 1856; lived a consistent Christian life in connection with the Presbyterians for ten years; then joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, received license to exhort in 1872, to preach soon after, and in 1873 entered the Mississippi Conference, wherein he labored till his death, in 1875. He was learned and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 14.

Barr, Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Derry, Westmoreland Co., Pa., April 2, 1775. He was converted after he had reached manhood, and was licensed by the Hartford Presbytery at Brookfield, Trumbull Co., September, 1809. He labored in Euclid, O., from 1810 to 1820, and in Wooster, Wayne Co., from 1820 to 1828, when he took an agency for the General Assembly's Board of Missions. For the last year and a half of his life he preached in Reeshville, Ind. He died Aug. 28, 1835. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 442.

Barr, Thomas D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Rutherford County, N. C., April 22, 1814. He was trained in the Presbyterian Church; was converted when nine years old; united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at fourteen; went to Alabama in 1833, was received into the Alabama Conference in 1839, and died at Marianna, West Fla., Sept. 4, 1843. He labored with zeal and profit. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843-4, p. 463.

Barr, Thomas Hughes, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Greensburg, Pa., Nov. 19, 1807. At the age of nineteen he united with the Church at Wooster, of which his father was pastor. In 1835 he graduated at the Western Reserve College, Hudson, O., and in the fall of the same year entered Princeton Seminary, where he was regularly graduated in 1838. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, April 24 of that year. Having accepted a call to the united churches of Wayne and Jackson, Wayne Co., O., he was ordained and installed by the Presbytery of Wooster June 23, 1841. The pastoral relation existing between him and the Church of Wayne was dissolved April 21, 1847, but he continued to be pastor of the Jackson Church more than thirty-six years, until his death. During the last few years of his life he was very feeble. He died at Canaan Centre, O., Nov. 29, 1877. During his long ministry in this one charge, he had acquired a vast influence over all classes of the whole community. His knowledge of the Scriptures in the original was very thorough. He was also a profound theologian, but nevertheless modest, retiring, humble, discerning, wise. See Neurological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1878. (W. P. S.)

Barr, William H., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in North Carolina in 1779. He was educated at Hampden Sidney College, studied theology privately, was licensed by the Concord Presbytery in 1806, and became a missionary in the lower parts of South Carolina. In 1809 he accepted a call from Upper Long Cane Church to become their pastor, where he remained until his death, Jan. 9, 1843. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 384.

Barradas (or Barradius), SEBASTIAN, a Portuguese theologian, was born in 1542. He was of a noble family, and belonged to the Jesuit Order. He taught at Coimbra and at Evora both rhetoric and philosophy, and so brilliant was he as an instructor that he was surnamed the St. Paul of Portugal. His conduct was like to that of a saint; and he was held in such high veneration that even a piece of his apparel was sought for. He died April 14, 1615. He wrote, Comment. in Historiam et Concordiam Evangelicam:—Itinerarium Filiorum Israël ex Ægypto in Terram Promissionis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barral, VINCENT, a monk of Lerins in 1577, and afterwards titular abbot, who died at Palermo, left Chronologia SS. et Aliorum Virorum Illustrium ac Abbatum Sacre Insule Lerinensis (Lyons, 1693, 4to). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Barraso, MIGUEL, a Spanish painter and architect, was born at Consuegra in 1558, and studied painting in the school of Bicerra. He executed for Philip II, in the principal cloister of the Escorial, The Resurrection, Christ Appearing to the Apostles, The Descent of the Holy Ghost, and St. Paul Preaching. He died at Madrid in 1590.

Barrass, EDWARD, a Baptist minister, was born at Nailstone, Leicestershire, England, Oct. 7, 1790. At the age of about forty he came to America, and received (March 31, 1833) from the Church in Flemington, N. J., a license to preach. He was afterwards ordained, and was pastor of churches in Warren County, N. J.—viz. Delaware, Oxford, and Mansfield—and subsequently of two churches in Pennsylvania. After a brief illness, he died at Montana, N. J., Sept. 16, 1869. In the churches of which he was the pastor "his work and worth are held in grateful remembrance." See Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 81, 82. (J. C. S.)

Barratt, GEORGE M., a Methodist minister, was born in Shropshire, England, in 1811. He united with the Church at seventeen, was accepted by the Wesleyan Missionary Committee, and in 1837 was sent to New Brunswick. He preached at various points in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; became a supernumerary in 1873, after forty-two years' toil; settled at Carleton, N. B., and died there Aug. 14, 1878. His zeal and faithfulness won many to Christ. See The Wesleyan, Sept. 1878.

Barre, Jean Jacques de la, a French Protestant theologian who was born at Geneva in 1696, and died in 1751, wrote, Pensées Philosophiques:—Dialogues sur Divers Sujets. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barre, Nicolas, a French philanthropist, founded in 1678 the order of Brothers and Sisters of Christian and Charitable Schools. This order is obliged by its statutes to devote itself entirely to the education of poor children of either sex. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barreira, Balthazar, a Portuguese of Lisbon, entered the Company of Jesuits at Coimbra in 1556. During the dreadful plague of Lisbon in 1569, his charity and attention to the sick were unbounded, and continued even after he had himself sickened with the disease. His excellence being thus proved, he was sent as missionary to Angola in 1580, where he learned the language and was blessed with vast success. In his sixty-fifth year, after his return to Portugal, he was sent to Cape Verd, whence he proceeded to Sierra Leone, on the coast of Africa. He died in 1612 at Ribeiro Grande. See New Gen. Biog. Dict. iii, 223; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Barreira (or Barreria), Petrus. See BARRIERE.

Barrell, NOAH, a Baptist minister, was born at Hartford, Washington Co., N. Y., May 5, 1794. He entered the ministry about 1822, and was pastor of fifteen churches in the states of New York, Ohio, and Wisconsin. During his ministry, he baptized not far from twelve hundred converts. He is said to have been "a man of good natural endowments, of most gentle and winning spirit." He died at Geneva, Wis., April 16, 1875. See Baptist Encyclop. p. 82. (J. C. S.)

Barreto, FRANCISCO, a Portuguese ecclesiastic, was born at Montemayor in 1588. He was a Jesuit, and was sent to the Indies as a missionary, where he taught philosophy and theology. As visitor of his society he afterwards went to Malabar and to Goa, and died at the latter place, Oct. 26, 1663. He wrote An Account of Missions in Malabar, in Italian. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barrett, Alfred, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Attercliffe, near Sheffield, Oct. 17, 1808. When fifteen years of age he united with the Wesleyan Methodist Society; entered the ministry in 1832; was governor of Richmond Theological Institution for many years; spent the closing years of his life in retirement, and died at Clapton, Oct. 26, 1876. "He was a man of high intellectual capacity and of refined and cultivated tastes. He was a hard student. Some of his works are valuable; and his sermons, carefully prepared and hallowed by much fervent prayer, were remarkable for beauty of language and depth of thought, as well as for energy and unction. . . . Powerful in the pulpit, unrivalled in the Bible class, and not less remarkable for the faithful and fruitful discharge of pastoral duties, he was also diligent in the more subordinate functions of his office." Mr. Barrett combined dignity and refinement with that courtesy, gentleness, and affection which won him many friends. William Arthur calls him "the lovely Alfred Barrett—a pearl of great price" (Life of Dr. S. D. Waddy, by his youngest daughter, p. 345). Owing to a constitutional tendency, his soul was sometimes for weeks under a cloud of sadness and gloom. Mr. Barrett wrote the following: The Pastoral Office; with Special Reference to the Wesleyan Methodists (Lond. 1839, 8vo):—Pastoral Addresses (1824; ibid. 1845, 2 vols. 12mo):—Catholic and Evangelical Principles Viewed in their Present Application (ibid. 1843, 8vo):—Life of Mrs. Cryer (ibid. 1845, 12mo):—Christ in the Storm; or, The World Pacified (ibid. 1849, 12mo):—The Boatman's Daughter (ibid. 1847, 18mo):—Discourse on Modern Mental Philosophy, with Strictures on Mr. J. D. Morrell (ibid. 1850, 12mo):—Life of Rev. J. H. Bumby, with a Brief History of the New Zealand Mission (ibid. 1852, 18mo):—Devotional Remains of Mrs. Cryer, with an Introduction (ibid. 1854, 16mo):—The Ministry and Polity of the Christian Church, Viewed in their Scriptural and Theological Aspects (ibid. eod. 12mo):—sermon on Psa. cxix, 18, in Sermons by Wesleyan Methodist Ministers (1850):—Consolator; or, Recollections of the Rev. J. Pearson (ibid. 1856, 12mo):—a sermon on Knowing our Fathers' God. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1877, p. 14; Osborn, Wesleyan Bibliography, p. 66.

Barrett, Benjamin, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Eccleshill, near Bradford, in 1779. He was converted at fourteen, admitted to the rank of a local preacher at nineteen, entered the itinerancy in 1807, and, after thirty-two years of pious, unassuming, faithful service, died May 24, 1839. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1839.

Barrett, Edward Semans, a Congregational minister, was born in Cavendish, Vt., Oct. 17, 1810. He graduated at Middlebury College in 1838; taught at Canton, N. Y., at the same time pursuing theological studies. He commenced preaching at Weston, Vt., where he was ordained in 1841. In 1844 he was a member of the legislature of Vermont. From 1845 to 1852 he was a teacher in Leicester, and from 1848 to 1850 superintendent of schools in Addison County. In 1861 Mr. Barrett was appointed clerk in the Pension Office at Washington, D. C., where he continued until his death, July 18, 1866. See Cong. Quarterly, 1867, p. 42.

Barrett, Elisha D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Northampton, Mass., in 1789. After a preparatory training, he entered Williams College, and was graduated in 1813. After graduation, he removed to Virginia and opened a high-school, his patrons being mostly slave-holders. He also organized a Sunday-school, to which the blacks as well as whites were invited. As the instruction of the blacks was contrary to law, he was threatened with its penalties if he did not desist. Despite all threats, he continued, declaring that there was a higher law which had superior claims upon him. His school was not closed, and he conducted it with success. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian churches of Plumb Creek and Glass Run, where he labored many years with great success. His late years were spent in Illinois and Missouri. In his eighty-eighth year he taught a private class in Latin and Greek. His last sermon was preached when he was ninety years of age. He closed his long and useful life in Sedalia, Mo., Nov. 6, 1880. See Presbyterian, Dec. 1, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Barrett, George J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Mechanicsville, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1818. He professed religion in early life; became a teacher among the Chippewa Indians at Green Bay, Wis., in his eighteenth year; and in 1839 entered the Illinois Conference. Ten years later ill-health obliged him to locate. On recovering, he began preaching for the Congregationalists, and remained with them fifteen years. In 1863 he re-entered the Illinois Conference, and continued zealous and faithful until his death, Feb. 19, 1877. Mr. Barrett won the reputation of being the wittiest man ever connected with the Illinois Conference. Always cheerful and buoyant, he scattered sunshine wherever he went. He was conscientious and strong in all his convictions; was brave, and wielded a scathing irony against all that he thought to be wrong; was generous and eloquent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 134.

Barrett, Henry C., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born Jan. 19, 1848, and united with the Church at the age of seventeen. He graduated at the State Normal School at Mansfield, Pa., and in September, 1874, went to Hillsdale to prepare for the ministry, where he remained two years. He accepted a call to the Church in Hinckley, O., and commenced his duties in July, 1876. In the midst of great usefulness, and with bright hopes of success in his ministry, he was called away, after an illness of three weeks, Jan. 28, 1878. See Morning Star, Feb. 27, 1878. (J. C. S.)

Barrett, John, D.D., an Irish clergyman and educator, was born in Dublin in 1753. He was educated at Trinity College, of which he became a fellow in 1778, a member of the senior board in 1791, and librarian in 1792, having served as assistant during the preceding eight years. He died Nov. 15, 1821. Dr. Barrett was a fine scholar, and distinguished in particular for a memory which was almost miraculous. He was, however, exceedingly eccentric in his habits, and rarely passed beyond the precincts of his college. He published, An Inquiry into the Origin of the Constellations that Compose the Zodiac, and the Uses they were Intended to Promote:—An Essay on the Earlier Part of the Life of Swift:—Evangelium secundum Matthæum ex Codice Rescripto in Bibliotheca Collegii SSæ Trinitatis juxta Dublin. See the (Lond.) Annual Register, 1821, p. 245, 656; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barrett, Myron, a Presbyterian minister, was born at North-east, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1816. He was prepared for college at Burr Seminary, Vt. He graduated at Yale College in 1844, after which he went to Columbus, O., and taught four years. He afterwards entered Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., where he spent about two years, and then entered the senior class in Princeton Seminary, N. J., where he was regularly graduated in 1851. He was licensed April 16 of that year by the Presbytery of New York, and received a call from the Church at Pontiac, Mich., but did not accept it. He went to Detroit, Mich., preached a few weeks in the First Presbyterian Church of that city, and then was chosen assistant pastor, and filled the pulpit for fifteen months during Dr. Duffield's absence in Europe. Mr. Barrett was ordained as an evangelist by the Presbytery of Detroit, in the First Church of Detroit, March 9, 1852; was installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Newton, Sussex Co., N. J., June 26, 1854, and here he continued about five years. His health then failing, he resigned his charge, continuing, however, to preach as he had opportunity. He spent the following summer in the employ of the American Tract Society, and then made three successive engagements of six months each to supply the Church at Stroudsburg, Pa., but declined to accept its call. He preached for one year as assistant pastor to the South Church, New Haven, Conn., and afterwards supplied for periods of various length churches at White Plains, N. Y., and elsewhere, being seldom unemployed upon the Sabbath. He died May 8, 1876. Mr. Barrett was a man of quick perceptions and logical intellect. His convictions of truth were clear and intense, and gave power to his preaching. He was active and useful as a citizen, and as a man and a Christian commanded the unwavering respect of all who knew him. See Neurological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1877.

Barrett, Samuel, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born in Royalston, Mass., in 1794. He was educated in Wilton, N. H., and at Harvard College, where he graduated in 1818, and subsequently at the Theological School at Cambridge. In 1825 he became pastor of the Twelfth Congregational Society, and for a time edited the Christian Register. In 1860 he retired to Roxbury, where he resided till his death, June 24, 1866, though for some time previous to his demise he served as Unitarian pastor in Boston. See Appletons' Annual Cyclop. 1866, p. 568.

Barrett, Selah, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., Feb. 25, 1790. When he was a child his father moved to Vermont. Here, at the age of twenty-two, he was hopefully converted, and joined the Strafford Church, this being the first Free-will Baptist Church formed in the state. In the fall of 1817 he removed to Rutland, O., and in 1837 was licensed to preach by the Meigs Quarterly Meeting. His ordination took place in September, 1849, in Cheshire, O. Here he preached more than in any other place, although he labored in different churches in his own quarterly meeting and in that of Athens. He died in Rutland, July 12, 1860. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1861, p. 91. (J. C. S.)

Barrett, William D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Virginia, July 19, 1797. He received a careful religious training; experienced conversion in his nineteenth year; soon began exhorting, and in 1817 joined the Virginia Conference. Four years later he located on account of ill-health; removed to Ohio, and in 1830 entered the Ohio Conference, and in it labored diligently till his death, Feb. 22, 1839. Mr. Barrett was open-hearted and frank as a man, confident and unwavering as a friend, affectionate as a parent, and devoted and zealous as a minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1840, p. 52.

Barrez. The Carmelites were formerly called "Frères Barrez," or Barry Friars, because their habit for a time was party-colored—part black and part white. This was about 1285. They afterwards resumed the white dress, which was their original habit. See Collier, Hist. Dict. vol. iv; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Barrinn (Barrindus, Barrinthus, and also Finbar and Findbar, white hair), the name of three Irish ecclesiastics:

1. Son of Ædh, or Achadh, of the family of St. Bridget, who was related to the Irish king called the Lawgiver, who reigned A.D. 164-174 (Todd, St. Patrick, p. 287). His festival is Nov. 8.

2. Bishop of Druim-cuilinn (now Drumcullen, Kings Co.) and of Cillbairrflinn, celebrated May 21. His date as given by Usher (De Brit. Eccl. Prim. [Dublin, 1639]) is A.D. 590; but Lanigan (Eccl. Hist. Irel. ii, 221) thinks he must have flourished earlier. Usher counts him among the three hundred who formed the second order of Irish saints, and quotes from the Life of St. Carthagus, calling him abbot of Druim-cuilinn, on the borders of Munster and Leinster. Kilbarron Parish, Diocese of Raphoe, County Donegal, receives its name from this saint. See Stat. Acc. Ireland, i, 462.

3. Abbot of Inis-damle, on the borders of Ken-salach in Leinster, whose festival is celebrated January 30. Some appear to confound him with No. 1 above.

Barri, GIACOMO, a Venetian painter and engraver, lived about 1650. He etched a fine plate of the Nativity, after P. Veronese; also some plates after his own designs; and in 1651 he published a work of some merit, entitled Viaggio Pittoresco d'Italia.

Barrientos, Genes de, a Spanish theologian, studied at Salamanca, entered the Dominican Order, and made himself known as a theologian and preacher. Applauded at the court of Charles II for his eloquence, he did not remain to be dazzled by his success, but consecrated himself to foreign missions. In 1685 he went to the Philippine Islands, and became successively titular bishop of Troy and suffragan of the archbishop of Manila. He died in 1694. He wrote Reflexiones Theologicas (Manilla, 1684). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barrientos, Lopez de, a Spanish theologian, was born at Medina del Campo in 1382. He entered the Dominican Order, and became professor of theology at Salamanca. He held this position from 1416 to 1433, when he was placed in charge of the education of the prince Henry by the king of Castile, John II. In 1438 he was appointed bishop of Segovia and grand-chancellor of Castile, and in 1440 assisted the king at the States-General of Valladolid. In 1442 he became bishop of Avila, and, after bringing about a reconciliation between prince Henry and the king, his father, he became bishop of Cuenca and inquisitor-general of all Castile. He refused the bishopric of Compostella, and remained at Cuenca till his death, which occurred May 21, 1469. The poor were his heirs. He wrote, Clariss Sapientie:—Index Latinus ad Sancti Antonini, Archiepiscopi Florentini, Summam Theologicam:—and several other works which remain unpublished. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barrière, François, a French Jesuit and theologian who lived in the early half of the 18th century, wrote Les Grandes Vérités de la Religion pour purifier le Chrétien, le conformer à Jésus-Christ, et l'unir à Dieu (Toulouse, 1704, 3 pts.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barrière, Jean de la, founder of the Order of the Feuillants, was born at Saint Céré in 1544. At the age of eighteen he was appointed to the Abbey of the Feuillants, of which he took possession in 1565. He died as a prisoner at Rome in 1600. His varied fortunes are recounted under the article FEUILLANTS.

Barrière (or Barrerria), Pierre de, a cardinal, and bishop of Autun, a native of Rodez, lived at the close of the 14th century. He refused to accept the cardinalate at the hand of pope Urban VI, because he believed that this pontiff had not been legally elected, but accepted it later from Clement VII. He wrote a treatise upon schism, directed against John of Lignano, defender of Urban; it was published in Duboulay's Histoire de l'Université de Paris, vol. iv. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barrimiit, in Mongolian mythology, is the name of the six perfections which the priests of the religion of Lama are required to reach—namely, sanctification from worldliness, true zeal, holiness, virtue, devotional meditation, and wisdom.

Barrindus. See BARRFINN; also BARRY.

Barringer, Joseph, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Buffington's Island, O., May 7, 1817. He was converted in his seventeenth year, and in 1838 entered the Ohio Conference, in which he served the Church till his decease, Sept. 3, 1871. Mr. Barringer was an able preacher, a sound theologian, a logical and lucid speaker. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 249.

Barringer, William, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was born in Cabarras County, N. C., Feb. 18, 1816. He was educated at Chapel Hill; entered mercantile business at Concord; experienced a powerful conversion in 1842, and in 1844 joined the South Carolina Conference, in which he served with diligence and fidelity until his sudden death, March 17, 1873. Experimental religion was Mr. Barringer's great theme, and he exhibited it as the controlling power of his life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 804.

Barrington, SHUTE, a prelate of the Church of England, was born in 1734. He was educated at Eton and at Merton College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow; was ordained in 1757; obtained various preferments, and at length, in 1769, the bishopric of Llandaff; in 1781 that of Salisbury; and ten years after that of Durham, which he held till his decease, in March, 1826. Bishop Barrington was a man of deep piety, a patron of all religious and philanthropic institutions, and wholly devoted to the great work committed to his care by the Church. His talents were acknowledged to be considerable, and his various publications, which consisted of Biblical criticisms, tracts, sermons, and charges, were all consecrated to the glory of God.

Barritt, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Owlet Hill, near Colne, Lancashire, in 1756. He was converted at the age of seventeen, and was called into the ministry by Wesley in 1786. He travelled eighteen circuits; became a supernumerary in 1817, and died March 8, 1841. He was a good man and a useful laborer. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1841, p. 156; Wesleyan Meth. Magazine, 1843, p. 177.

Barritt, John Wesley, an English Wesleyan minister, son of the preceding, entered the ministry in 1817, preached at Banff, Peterhead, Ayr, Middleham, and Grantham, and became a supernumerary at Middleham in 1825; resumed work at Walsingham in 1830; retired again in 1838; resided at Halifax, Colne, and other places; received a great shock to his mental powers by an accident in 1855, and died in Manchester, Nov. 3, 1861, in the seventieth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1862, p. 15.

Barritt, Myron. See BARRETT.

Barrios (or Barrocus). See BARRY.

Barrocius, ST., a disciple of St. Cadoc, in the 6th century. When Cadoc sailed from the island Echni to Barrow with his disciples Barruc and Gualches, he found that they had forgotten his enchriridion, and sent them back for it, saying, "Go, not to return." The irritable and revengeful character of Celtic saints is noted by Giraldus. A sudden storm overset their boat, and Barruc lies buried in the island of Barry, to which he gave his name. This account is late, and there is an evident use of Nennius in it. Giraldus Cambrensis, whose family took its name from Barry Island, describes the saint's shrine in his time thus: "Cujus et reliquiæ in capella ibidem sita, hederæ nexibus amplexata, in feretrum translata continentur." His feast-day is variously stated as Nov. 29 (Cressy, Church History, xx, 18) or Sept. 27 (Ritson, Arthur, p. 157).

Barrois, HUBERT, a French theologian of the Benedictine Order. He entered the Order of Moyen Moutier in 1711, became abbot in 1727, and was invested with the principal honors of the Society of St. Vanne. He published various works upon the constitution of his order and upon other subjects. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barroll, WILLIAM, a missionary of the Church of England, was a native of Wales. He was licensed to preach by the bishop of London, and immediately on his arrival in Maryland succeeded his uncle, the Rev. Hugh Jones, in the rectorship of North Sassafras Parish, Cecil Co. When the livings were taken away from the clergy in Maryland in 1776, he removed to Elkton, Md., and taught school for the support of his family. He died in North Sassafras Parish in 1778, aged about forty years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 12.

Barron, THOMPSON, a Universalist minister, was born in Billerica, Mass., April 17, 1816. He was left an orphan at the age of eight; learned the carpenter's trade; gave himself a liberal education, and began preaching in 1836. In 1837 he was ordained at Bridgewater, Vt., in which vicinity he preached until 1841, when he removed to Winchester, N. H. He afterwards removed to Concord, N. H., in 1846; to Dayton, O., in 1851; to Marietta, O., in 1853; to Muscatine, Ia., in 1856; returned to Enfield, N. H., in 1858; afterwards labored in Wentworth; and lastly removed to Newport, same state, where he retired to a small farm, and there continued until his death, Jan. 4, 1870. Mr. Barron was a man of positive theological views, impetuous temperament, of marked independent character, and very limited popularity. See Universalist Register, 1871, p. 100.

Barrow, David, a Baptist minister, was born in Brunswick County, Va., Oct. 30, 1758. He united with the Church in his seventeenth year, and began to preach when he was eighteen. He was ordained in 1774, and had the pastoral care of three churches in Virginia, itinerating much also in that state and in North Carolina. He was exposed to many of the persecutions which in those times the Baptists suffered. "In 1778 he was seized at one of his meetings by a gang of twenty men, dragged a half-mile, and forcibly dipped under water twice, with many jeers and mockeries." In 1798 he removed to Montgomery County, Ky., and became pastor of the Church at Mt. Sterling. He was a warm advocate of antislavery, and was regarded as a leader in the abolition movement in the section of the state in which he lived. He died Nov. 14, 1819. Among his published writings were a book against slavery and a treatise in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity. See Baptist Encyclop. p. 83. (J. C. S.)

Barrowclough, Samuel, a minister of the Methodist New Connection, a native of Stainland, Yorkshire, was born in 1756, and devoted himself in early life to the Methodists. He joined the New Connection at the time of the division, and in 1804 entered their ministry; travelled in thirteen circuits, laboring with great success, some of his converts being eminent Christians. He was an eloquent and able divine; but in 1820 his health failed, and he retired to Manchester, and died there Dec. 1, 1821. See Minutes of the Conference.

Barrowclough, William, an English Wesleyan minister, and a young man of deep piety and promising gifts, was appointed by the Wesleyan Missionary Society to Sierra Leone in November, 1855. He labored there for three months, was seized with a fever, and died, much lamented, April 3, 1856. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1856.

Barrowes (or Barrowe), HENRY, a Brownist, was executed at Tyburn with John Greenwood, April 6, 1592, "for writing and publishing sundry seditious books and pamphlets tending to the slander of the queen and government." He wrote, A Brief Discoverie of the False Church; as is the Mother, so is the Daughter (Lond. 1590):—and Platform which may Serve as a Preparation to Drive away Prelatism (1593). See Brook, Lives of the Puritans; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barrowists, a name which was sometimes applied to the Brownists (q. v.), after one of their leaders.

Barrows are mounds of earth which have in many countries been raised over the remains of the dead. Their use was prevalent among many of the ancient inhabitants of Europe. Virgil attributes it to the ancient Romans, and Herodotus mentions it as being a practice among the Scythians. Many monuments of this kind are to be found in both England and Scotland, while in Scandinavia the practice of building them has prevailed for many centuries. The usual form of the Scandinavian barrows is either round or oblong, and some of them have rows of upright stones set around them. Barrows with stone chambers were earliest in use. Of the oblong some have been found to contain two cinerary stone chests, one at each end, and occasionally one in the middle. Round barrows were commonly raised over stone vaults or mortuary chambers in which the dead body was deposited, either buried in sand or laid out on a flat stone, and sometimes in a sitting posture. Barrows in considerable number were often raised on a field of battle, high ones surrounded with stones for the chiefs, and low mounds of earth for the common soldiers. Among the wooden barrows mentioned there were those known as ship-barrows, made by taking a boat or ship, turning it keel uppermost, and raising a mound of earth and stones upon it for a house of the dead. See Mallet, Northern Antiquities (Blackwell's ed.); Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v. See MOUNDS.

Barrows, Allen, a Baptist minister, was born in Hebron, Me., July 7, 1807, and was a graduate of Waterville College in the class of 1834. He was ordained the September following his graduation as pastor of the Baptist Church at Hallowell Cross Roads (now Manchester), Me., where he remained one year, and then removed to Leeds, Me. His pastorates were: Leeds, 1835-37; Ellsworth, Me., 1837-45; Calais, Me., 1845-50; East Machias, Me., 1850-52; Leeds, 1852-54; Fayette, Me., 1854-57; Litchfield, Me., 1857-64; East Sumner as a supply, 1864-72, at which place he died, April 24, 1875. "Mr. Barrows was very firm and earnest in his opinions; sound, judicious, and instructive in his preaching; and a truly excellent man in all the relations of life." (J. C. S.)

Barrows, Eleazer Storrs, a Presbyterian minister, was born Jan. 18, 1790, in Mansfield, Conn. He graduated at Middlebury, Vt., in October, 1811; spent 1811-12 in Castleton, Vt., 1812-15 in the Carolinas, and studied divinity at Princeton in 1815-16, acting a portion of 1815 as tutor in Middlebury College. He preached in Middletown, N. Y., 1816-17; and at the close of 1817 accepted a tutorship in Hamilton College, and for three years filled the professorship of Latin in that institution. On June 29, 1819, he was received by the Presbytery of Oneida as a licentiate of the Presbytery of New Brunswick, and on June 25, 1822, was dismissed to the care of the Presbytery of Onondaga. This body ordained and installed him over the Congregational Church at Pompey Hill. Here he remained until 1828, combining the charge of the academy part of the time with that of the Church. He edited the Utica Christian Magazine from 1828 to 1833, also supplying the pulpit at Waterville for some time. On leaving the editorial chair, he was settled at Cazenovia until 1842. He then returned to Utica with broken health, preaching here and there according to his ability. He died July 28, 1847. He was a man of great energy, judgment, skill, and won the esteem of all. See Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 459.

Barrows, George Wellington, a Congregational minister, was born at Bridport, Vt., Feb. 23, 1817. He entered Middlebury College, but did not complete the course; graduated at Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., in 1844; was ordained pastor at Salisbury, Vt., in 1845, where he labored until 1863; was twice elected to the Legislature of Vermont; was installed at Elizabethtown, N. Y., in 1864, and remained pastor there until his death, Sept. 26, 1881. Mr. Barrows was a man of firmness and decision, sweetness and evenness of temper, good sense, and perfection of character. His sermons were terse, forceful, and sound. See Minutes of the General Association of New York, 1881, p. 41.

Barrows, Homer, a Congregational minister, was born at Wareham, Mass., Dec. 19, 1806. He graduated at Amherst College in 1831; at Andover Theological Seminary in 1834; was pastor at Lakeville, then at Middleborough, Mass., 1836-42; at Norton, Mass., 1842-45; at Dover, N. H., 1845-52; Wareham, 1852-59; Plaistow, N. H., 1859-69; and Lakeville, 1869-72. He then removed to Andover, Mass., where he died, April 1, 1881. See Necrology of Andover Theological Seminary, 1880-81, s. v.

Barrows, Lorenzo Dow, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Windham, Vt., July 1, 1817. He experienced religion at the age of fourteen. His academic education was in the Sanbornton and Newbury seminaries. He received license to exhort and preach in 1835, and in 1836 entered the New Hampshire Conference. He filled leading appointments in New England until impaired health led to his transfer to prominent stations farther south—such as Newark, N. J., Charleston, and Cincinnati. For three years he was president of Pittsburgh Female College, and for six years of New Hampshire Conference Seminary and Female College. In 1871 he threw himself into the cause of the freedmen, and assisted in establishing the Clark Theological School at Atlanta, Ga. He was an early and active worker in the temperance reform. He died Feb. 18, 1878. In the pulpit, on the platform, at conferences, and before legislatures, Dr. Barrows was ever ready and powerful. He was a devoted husband and father, and an exemplary Christian. He published, a revision of Holyoake's Rudiments of Public Speaking and Debate, showing his ability as a critic:—a Manual of Chapel Services, for schools and colleges. He also established the Prohibition Herald, which he edited over a year. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 56; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Barrows, Michael, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born in Sligo in 1782. He was converted in his seventeenth year under a sermon by James Bell; entered the sacred work in 1805, retired to Carrickfergus in 1839, and died in Dublin, March 12, 1855. He is highly spoken of. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Barruel, Augustin DE, a learned French Jesuit, was born Oct. 2, 1741, at Villeneuve-de-Berg, near Viviers. After assisting Freron in the publication of L'Année Littéraire, he edited the Journal Ecclésiastique until August, 1792. He then went to England, where he published a work against the French Revolution, entitled Mémoires sur Jacobinisme, which was prohibited in France. After the Revolution, Nov. 9, 1799, abbé Barruel desired to return to France, and July 8, 1800, he circulated about Paris a tract warmly recommending fidelity to the consular government. This writing gained for him the favor of the First Consul, who, in order to recompense him, appointed him canon of the Cathedral of Paris. In 1803 he published, in two large volumes, an apology for the Concordat, entitled De l'Autorité du Pape, which was violently attacked by abbé Blanchard in three successive articles. Barruel died at Paris, Oct. 5, 1820. His principal works are, Ode sur le Glorieux Avènement de Louis-Auguste (Louis XVI) (1774);—Le Patriote Vénérable, ou Discours sur les Vraies Causes de la Révolution (1789);—Collection Ecclésiastique, ou Recueil Complet des Ouvrages faits depuis l'Ouverture des États-Généraux, relativement au Clergé (1791-92);—Histoire du Clergé de France pendant la Révolution (1794, 1804);—Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire du Jacobinisme (1797, 1803). These various works, all directed against the Revolution, were marred by exaggeration and harsh criticism. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 468, 818; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Barry (Barrius, Barrindus, Barrocius, Barr, Finbar), St., commemorated Sept. 25, has both an Irish and Scotch history. According to the Irish history, he was a native of Cork or its neighborhood, and the founder, bishop, and patron of the first Church there, spending his life in that district as a confessor. He was educated at first in Leinster under Mac-corb; and at Corcaach-Mór, the "marshy place" where Cork now stands, he founded his Church and established a school. He had previously had a school at Loch Ire. All accounts agree that he visited Rome, and on his way paid a visit to St. David at Menevia. After an episcopate of seventeen years, he died at Cloyne, Sept. 25, 633 (or 630), and was buried at Cork. He is patron of Kilberry Parish, in Waterford; perhaps also of Kilberry Parish, Diocese of Dublin, County of Kildare. See Caulfield, Life of St. Fin Barre (Lond. 1864); and for a long list of authorities, Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Barry, Basil, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ann Arundel County, Md., March 1, 1789. He joined the Church at the age of sixteen, received license to preach in 1813, and in 1815 entered the Baltimore Conference. In 1844 ill-health obliged him to retire from the active ranks, and he located at Rockville, Md., where he continued to reside until his death, Sept. 2, 1877. As a preacher, Mr. Barry was studious, Biblical, sound, and forcible; as a man, spiritual. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 15.

Barry, Edmund D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Kinsale, Ireland, in 1777. His earlier studies were prosecuted under an able master in charge of the academy at Youghal, and in 1796 he was entered as fellow-commoner at Trinity College, Dublin. In 1798 he came as an exile to America, his banishment growing out of the political agitation in Ireland during 1796-97. He began his career as a teacher on Staten Island, where he remained fourteen months. In 1800 he taught at the Elizabethtown Academy. He became assistant minister of the French Church in New York in 1808, and at the same time took charge of the Protestant Episcopal Academy in that city, where he remained thirteen years. Removing to Baltimore, Md., he occupied a position as instructor in a similar institution. He returned to New York in 1824, where he established a flourishing academy. He died at Jersey City, N. J., April 20, 1852. Dr. Barry was a man of eminent piety, courteous and graceful in his manner, and beloved by a large circle of friends. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1852, p. 326.

Barry, Edward, D.D., an English divine, was born at Bristol about 1759. He was originally intended for the medical profession, and, after the usual course of study, graduated as M.D. at St. Andrews College. Preferring to enter the Church, he received the curacy of Marylebone, London, where he was very popular as a preacher. Subsequently he obtained the living of St. Leonardi's, Wallingford, where he died, Jan. 16, 1822. Dr. Barry was an energetic and successful clergyman, and an able defender of the principles of the Church of England. The following are a few of the works published by him: A Letter to Mr. Cumberland, occasioned by his letter to the bishop of Llandaff (1783, 8vo);—Theological, Philosophical, and Moral Essays (2d ed. 1791, 8vo);—The Friendly Call of Truth and Reason to a New Species of Dissenters (1799, 8vo; 4th ed. 1812);—Works (1806, 3 vols. 8vo);—a number of Sermons, etc. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1822, p. 266.

Barry, George, D.D., a clergyman of Scotland, was born in the County of Berwick in 1748. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and for a short time was employed as a private tutor to the sons of some gentlemen in Orkney, by whose patronage he became second minister of the royal burgh and ancient cathedral of Kirkwall. About 1796 he removed to the island and parish of Shapinsay. He first attracted public notice by the statistical account of his two parishes, published in Sir John Sinclair's Statistical Reports. He was very zealous in his labors for the education of youth, and for that reason the Society for the Propagation of Christian Knowledge in Scotland about 1800 chose him one of their members and gave him superintendence over their schools at Orkney. He died May 14, 1805. Shortly after his death appeared his History of the Orkney Islands.

Barry, Gerald (usually called Giraldus Cambrensis, or Gerald of Wales), an English clergyman descended from a noble family, was born at the Castle of Mainaper, near Pembroke, in 1146. His early training was conducted by the bishop of St. David's, his uncle. He was afterwards sent to Paris for three years, after which he returned to England, in 1172, entered into holy orders, and received several benefices in England and Wales. He became the legate of Richard, archbishop of Canterbury, for correcting various disorders in Wales, and executed his office with great vigor. At the death of his uncle, David FitzGerald, bishop of St. David's, he was elected to the vacant see, but declined the office on account of an irregularity in the election, more especially, however, on account of the opposition of king Henry II. He then returned to Paris, and engaged in the study of civil and canon law, especially the papal constitutions or decretals. In 1179 he was elected professor of canon law in the University of Paris, but declined the honor. In 1180 he returned to England, and was appointed bishop of Menevia pro tempore, which function he fulfilled three or four years with great success. In 1184 he became chaplain to Henry II, and subsequently received various honorary appointments. In 1198 he was again elected bishop of St. David's, but this time the opposition of Hubert, archbishop of Canterbury, stood in the way, and after a contest of five years, in which he made three journeys to Rome, he was finally defeated. Soon after this he retired from public life, and spent the remaining seventeen years of his life in literary labors. He is supposed to have died in 1223. Among his works we note, Topographia Hiberniæ (Frankfort, 1602);—Legends of Saints;—Liber Invectionum;—Gemma Ecclesiastica;—The Itinerary of Cambria;—and De Gestis Giraldi Laboriosus. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Barry, James (1), a historical painter of the British school, was born at Cork, Ireland, in 1741. He was educated in the school of Mr. West at Dublin, where, at the age of twenty-two, he gained the prize for a historical picture representing the arrival of St. Patrick on the coast of Cashel. In 1770 he went to England, and exhibited in the Royal Academy his Adam and Eve, and the year following his Venus Anadyomene. He was elected a Royal Academician in 1777, and professor of painting in that institution, but on account of misconduct was obliged to resign. He struggled with his evil genius, poverty, and neglect, and died in the greatest indigence at London in February, 1806. The principal works of this great artist are the series of pictures in the Adelphi, which are best described by himself in his pamphlet, and which he terms a Series of Pictures on Human Culture.

Barry, James (2), an early Methodist preacher, entered the work in 1774, and died at Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, in 1783. "As he labored much, so he suffered much, but with unwearied patience. In death he suffered nothing, stealing quietly away." See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Barry, John, an English Wesleyan missionary, was of Irish Protestant parentage. He was appointed to the island of Jamaica in 1824, and on his return in 1832 he gave evidence before both Houses of Parliament on the negro race. He was afterwards sent to Canada and Bermuda, but, on his rupturing a blood-vessel, returned to England in 1836. He vainly tried to regain his health in Guernsey and the West Indies, and died in Montreal, June 21, 1838. "His sermons were rich in thought and chaste in expression, and delivered with great earnestness and power." See Cooney, Autobiog. of a West. Meth. Missionary (Montreal, 1856), p. 235, 248; Minutes of the British Conference, 1838.

Barsaiti, Marco, an eminent Italian painter, was a descendant of a Greek family of Friuli. He painted a picture of Christ Praying in the Garden, in the Church of St. Giobbe, in 1510, which was highly extolled by Ridolfi. There are a number of his works in the churches of Friuli, and one (The Vocation of St. Peter) in the Church of the Certosa, which Lanzi says is one of the most beautiful pictures of the age.

Barsanians were one of the minor Egyptian sects of the Monophysites during the latter part of the 5th century. Joannes Damascenus identifies them with the Semidalitæ (q. v.), and states that they had no valid consecration of the eucharist, but, having mixed a few crumbs of sacramental bread consecrated by Dioscorus, the Eutychian patriarch of Alexandria, with a measure of fine wheat flour, partook of the loaf made therefrom, and regarded it as a reception of the holy communion. Damascenus strangely attributes to them the tenets both of the Gajanitæ (or Julianists) and of the Theodosiani (or Severians), who held opposite doctrines as to the corruptibility of Christ's body, adding thereto something of their own.

Barsanuphians (or Barsanuphites) were an obscure subdivision of the Monophysites, taking their name from Barsanuphius, an Egyptian pretender to the episcopal rank. They separated from the Jacobites in the reign of the emperor Zeno, at the latter part of the 5th century, and were reunited to them in the time of the patriarch Mark, about 810. At that time they had two bishops, whom Mark at first refused to recognise, but afterwards acknowledged, and appointed them to the first vacant sees. The founder of this sect was a different person from the Palestinian anchorite. See Fleury, Hist. Eccl. x, 116; Neale, Patr. of Alexand. ii, 137, 221.

Barsanuphius, a solitary of Palestine, an Egyptian by birth, in the reign of Justinian, about 540. According to the story related by Evagrius (Hist. Eccl. iv, 33), he shut himself up in his cell in a monastery at Gaza, where he remained for more than fifty years, seeing and seen by no human being, and eating no earthly food. Eustochius, the bishop of Jerusalem, disbelieving the tale, commanded the cell to be broken open, whereupon fire burst out and consumed the sacrilegious disturbers of the holy man's repose. Barsanuphius was the author of Quæstiones et Responsiones Asceticæ Variæ, and a Parænesis ad Proprium Discipulum, originally printed by Montfaucon, Biblioth. Coislin. p. 394; and afterwards by Galland, Biblioth. Vet. Patr. xi; and Migne, Patrolog. lxxxvi, pars i, 887 sq.

Barsom, in Persian cultus, is a bundle of consecrated twigs which the priest holds in his left hand while reading the Zendavesta. They are held together by a sacred band of palm-leaves, which is called Evanguin. The tree from which the branches are taken is not mentioned; the number is decided according to the number of books which the priest reads.

Barsony (de Lovas Bereny), GEORGE, a Hungarian theologian, was born at Peterfalva near the commencement of the 17th century. He embraced the ecclesiastical profession, preached several years in Szerdahely, became canon at Gran in 1653, and was made bishop of Grosswardein in 1663. He distinguished himself by his zeal against Protestantism. He died Jan. 18, 1678. He wrote Veritas Toti Mundo Declarata; Argumento Triplici ostendens J. C. Regiam Majestatem non Obligari Tolerare in Hungaria Sectus Lutheranam et Calvinianam (Raschau, 1671; Vienna, 1672). D. Joh. Posahazy published a refutation of the work, entitled Falsitas Veritatis Toti Mundo Declarata, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barsotti, Giovanni Carlo, an Italian theologian who lived at Florence near the middle of the 18th century, wrote Vita del Servo di Dio Gaetano Pratesi Marescalco Fiorentino (Florence, 1756). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barsotti, Nicola, an Italian ascetic writer, was a Capuchin at Lucca near the middle of the 17th century. He wrote, Spirituale Humane semper Peregrinæ Mortalis Vitæ Remigium, habens Portum suum Immortalem Æternam Vitam (first printed in Italian, then in an abridged form in Latin, Vienna, 1647):—Sermones Evangelici pro Quadragesima et Adventu (ibid. 1667):—Sermones de Sanctis per Annum Occurrentibus (ibid. 1668). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barstow, George, a Congregational minister, was born in Duxbury, Mass., in 1770. He graduated at Brown University in 1801; was ordained pastor of the Church in Hanson, Mass., Jan. 26, 1803; and died Feb. 11, 1821. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 646.

Barstow, Zedekiah Smith, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Canterbury, Conn., Oct. 4, 1790. He was admitted to college in 1811; after graduation he pursued his theological studies under the direction of president Dwight, and was licensed in New Haven, Conn., in 1814. For two years he was tutor and college chaplain in Hamilton College, and was invited to accept a professorship, but declined. He was settled over the Congregational Church in Keene, N. H., July 1, 1818, where he served fifty years. After his resignation he continued to preach for destitute parishes in the vicinity. For thirty-seven years he served as trustee of Dartmouth College; was secretary for many years of the General Association of New Hampshire, a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, trustee of Kimball Union Academy, trustee and secretary of Keene Academy. He was also a member of the New Hampshire Legislature, and chaplain of that body in 1868 and 1869. He died March 1, 1873. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1873.

Barstucke (or Berstucke), in Lithuanian mythology, was the name of certain middle beings between the subdeities and men—goblins, or gnomes. The head among them was Puschkeit, governing the earth and plants. These goblins made their abode principally under elder-bushes, which were therefore sacred to them.

Bartels, AUGUST CHRISTIAN, D.D., a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 9, 1749, at Harderode, in the duchy of Brunswick. He studied at Helmstädt, and in 1773 was appointed pastor at Eimbeck, in Hanover. In 1778 he was called to Brunswick, and in 1789 was made court preacher and provost at Riddagshausen. He died Dec. 16, 1826. He was an excellent pulpit orator, and attracted both the higher and lower classes. With the exception of Ueber den Werth und die Wirkungen der Sittenlehre Jesu (Hamburg, 1788–89, 2 pts.), his writings were mostly sermons. See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner des 18ten und 19ten Jahrhunderts, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 310; ii, 65, 86, 158, 167, 173 sq., 181, 198. (B. P.)

Barthénos (Βαρθενός) is given by Epiphanius (i, 82 d) as the name of the wife of Noah, meaning probably the daughter of Enos, as other ancient authorities state that the patriarch married Haikal, the daughter of Abarez of the sons of Enos (Dittmann, Conflict of Adam, p. 98, 141).

Bartholin, THOMAS, a famous physician, librarian and rector of the Academy at Copenhagen, was born Oct. 20, 1616. He studied philosophy, philology, theology, and medicine at Leyden, and died Dec. 4, 1680. He wrote, Paralytici Novi Test. Medico et Philol. Commentario Illustr. (Copenhagen, 1673; Leipsic, 1685):—De Cruce Christi Hypomnemata IV: 1. De Sedili Medio; 2. De Vino Myrrhato; 3. De Corona Spinea; 4. De Sudore Sanguineo (Amst. 1670; Leyden, 1695):—Dissertatio de Latere Christi Aperto (ibid. 1646, and often):—Nicolai Chronica Episcoporum Lundensium ed. Th. Bartholin (Copenhagen, 1709):—De Sanguine Vetito (Frankfort, 1673). See Vinding, Academia Hafniensis; Nicéron, Mémoires; Bartholini, Dissert. de Medicis Danis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 146, 538, 560, 834; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 89. (B. P.)

Bartholmess, Christian Jean Guillaume, a French Protestant theologian, was born Feb. 26, 1815, at Geisselbronn, in Alsace. He studied at Strasburg, and, after completing his theological course, went to Paris as tutor of the family of the marquis de Jeaucourt. Here he especially devoted his leisure hours to the study of the history of philosophy, and published La Vie de Giordano Bruno (1847, 2 vols.). Two years later he published Huet et son Sépétisme, for which he obtained the degree of doctor of philosophy. In 1850 he published L'Histoire de l'Académie de Prusse depuis Leibnitz jusqu'à Schelling (2 vols.). In 1853 he accepted a call as professor of philosophy to Strasburg. In 1855 he published Histoire Critique des Doctrines Religieuses de la Philosophie Moderne (2 vols.). He died Aug. 31, 1856, at Nuremberg. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bartholomæus Iscanus. See BARTHOLOMEW OF OXFORD.

Bartholomæus, Paulinus a St., a German Carmelite, was born at Hof, Austria, in 1748, and died at Vienna in 1806. He wrote, Systema Brahman. Liturg. Mytholog. Civile ex Monumentis Indicis Musei Borg.; Dissertationibus Hist.-criticis Illustravit (Rome, 1791; Germ. transl. Gotha, 1797):—India Orient. Christiana, cont. Fundat. Eccles. Seriem Episcoporum, Missiones, Schismata, Persecut. (Rome, 1794). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 519, 841. (B. P.)

Bartholomäi, Johann Christian, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 26, 1708, at Ilmenau. He studied at Jena, but on account of his poor health gave himself entirely to the study of philology and Church history, and accepted a call to the ducal library at Weimar, where he died, Feb. 1, 1776. He published, Acta Historico-ecclesiastica (pt. 96–120, Weimar, 1753–58):—Nova Acta Historico-ecclesiastica (ibid. 1758–72, 11 vols.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 580. (B. P.)

Bartholomäi, Wilhelm Ernst, a Protestant theologian of Germany, brother of the preceding, studied at Jena; in 1723 was preacher at Roda; in 1730 second deacon at Weimar; in 1731 court deacon; in 1736 court preacher and member of consistory; and died May 26, 1753. He published, Acta Historico-ecclesiastica (pt. 1–95, which his brother continued):—Materien aus der Theologie, Kirchen- und Gelehrten-Historie (Weimar, 1737–42). See Moser, Jetztlebende Gottesgelehrte; Neubauer, Jetztlebende Theologen; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 580. (B. P.)

Bartholomæus, Dominicus, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, came to America in 1748. He served the Church at Zulphocken from 1748 to 1759, when he died. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 170.

Bartholomew of Avogadri, a native of Brescia, Italy, and a professor of canon law, who flourished about 1240, wrote on the Decretals, also several epistles and a chronicle of the cities of Italy, all of which works are lost. He died in 1258, being eighty-four years old. See Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 435; Pancirol. iii, 7.

Bartholomew of Bologna, an Italian ecclesiastic who lived in the beginning of the 14th century, was a Dominican missionary. Pope John XXII consecrated him at Avignon for the bishopric of Maratha, a city situated on the confines of Armenia and Persia. He made many converts among the heathen and Mussulmans, built a great many churches and monasteries, and was appointed archbishop of Naxivan, in Armenia, which became the centre of his missionary labors. He published several treatises in the Armenian language, and translated the Psalms and some parts of the works of Thomas Aquinas into Armenian. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bartholomew of Braganza, an Italian Dominican who held the episcopal see at Vincenza from 1250 to 1268, and died in 1270, wrote, A Commentary on the Bible:—Scholæ in Dionysium Areopagitam de Celestia Hierarchia:—Vitæ Sanctorum in Epitomen Redactæ: Narratio de Reliquiis Spinæ Coronæ Christi 1260 Vicentiam Perlatæ, etc. See Barbaranus, Historia Vicentina; Ughelli, Italia Sacra; Echard, De Scriptoribus Ordinis Dominicanorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bartholomew of St. Concordia, a native of Pisa, Italy, composed, about 1338, a Summary of Cases of Conscience, printed, together with his Sermons, at Lyons in 1519. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, app. p. 31; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 528; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bartholomew, bishop of Exeter. See BARTHOLOMEW OF OXFORD.

Bartholomew of Foigni (de Fusiaco), bishop of Laon, was suspended about the year 1142 by cardinal Ivo, the legate of pope Innocent II, for having confirmed an unlawful divorce between Raoul, count of Vermandois, and his wife. After this he left his bishopric and became a monk of Cîteaux. He wrote Epistola Apologetica ad Synodum Rhemensensem, which is still extant, and is given in Labbe, x, 1184. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 220; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 367.

Bartholomew of Modena, an Italian Dominican, famous alike as theologian and preacher, who died in 1448, is the author of De Christo Jesu Abscondito in Sollemnitate Corporis Christi (Venice, 1555):—Commentat. in Regulam S. Augustini:—Concio de Veritate Stigmatum B. Catharinæ de Senis:—Comment. super Integra Psalteria:—Comment. super Evangelium Matthæi (the two latter in MS.). See Echard, De Scriptoribus Ordinis Dominicanorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bartholomew, bishop of Oxford. So Dupin styles an ecclesiastical writer of the 13th century who wrote a Penitential, which he says was in MS. in the Library of St. Victoire at Paris. But clearly he is mistaken in calling him bishop of Oxford, which see was not erected till 1542. He means Bartholomæus Iscanus, bishop of Exeter (Exoniensis), who was consecrated in 1161, and died Dec. 15, 1184; and who, as Godwin states, wrote several works, a list of which may be seen in Bale. Some letters written to him by John of Salisbury, bishop of Chartres, are still extant. See Godwin, De Pras. Ang. p. 403; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 369; Tanner, Bibl. Brit. p. 78.

Bartholomew of Przemisl, a Polish Dominican, and preacher at Cracow, where he flourished towards the end of the 16th and beginning of the 17th century, wrote in his vernacular a commentary on the gospels of the Christian year, and in Latin, Conciones in eadem Evangelia et Opusc. de Confraternitate Dei. See Echard, De Scriptoribus Ordinis Dominicanorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bartholomew of Urbino, an Augustine hermit, was made bishop of Urbino in 1343, and died in 1350. He completed the Milleloquium of St. Augustine, commenced by his master, Augustinus Triumphus (Lyons, 1555), and composed the Milleloquium of St. Ambrose (ibid. ed.). He wrote some other pieces. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, app. p. 44; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 528.

Bartholomew, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Northwich, Cheshire, in 1802. He united with the Church in his sixteenth year, entered the Conference in 1829, and was appointed to Alexandria, Egypt. After travelling in that country and Palestine for five years, he returned to England, and was employed in the home ministry for twenty years. In 1854 he retired and removed to Gloucester, and died Sept. 9 of that year. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Bartholomew, John Glass, D.D., a Universalist minister, was born in Pompey, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Feb. 28, 1834. He received a liberal education, and at the age of nineteen commenced preaching. From his entrance into the ministry his pulpit labors attracted attention by his happy elocution, magnetic personal influence, and dramatic delivery. He was ordained in 1856, and appointed to the following places: Upper Lisle, Broome Co., N. Y.; two years at Oxford, Chenango Co., N. Y.; to Aurora, Ill.; in 1859 to Roxbury, Mass.; in 1865 at Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y.; in 1868 to Auburn, N. Y.; in 1871 to Syracuse, N. Y.; and in 1873 to Newark, N. J., where he died, April 14, 1874. See Universalist Register, 1875, p. 128.

Bartholomew, Orlo, a Presbyterian minister, was born in West Goshen, Conn., in 1802. He was educated at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., and studied theology at Auburn Seminary, N. Y. He was licensed by Cayuga Presbytery in 1836, preached in Henrietta, N. Y., for a short time, and the rest of his ministry was spent in Augusta, N. Y. He died May 7, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1865, p. 158.

Bartholomew, Thomas, an English Wesleyan minister of the primitive stamp, was received into the ministry from the Keighley Circuit in 1782. He travelled for thirty-eight years, dying in 1819. He was humble, unassuming, and highly esteemed by all who knew him. He read Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Syriac, and enriched his mind with the learning of Walton's Polyglot Bible. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1820; Smith, Hist. of Methodism, i, 540-541.

Barthasius, saint and martyr, was burned with another priest called Verca, with a solitary, by name Arpila, and with twenty-three other persons, in a church in which they were assembled, in the 4th century, during the persecution of the Goths, in the time of Valentinian I and Valens. See Ruinart, p. 599.

Bartine, DAVID WESLEY, D.D., an eminent Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. David Bartine, an honored and useful member of the Philadelphia Conference, was born in Trenton, N. J., March 17, 1811. He received a good academical education, with some knowledge of the classics, which fitted him to become a medical student under Dr. John M'Kelway, a distinguished physician in Trenton. About this time he was converted, and joined the Methodists. He was licensed to preach, and in 1831 gave up the study of medicine, and was employed on Middlesex Mission. He was admitted on trial in the Philadelphia Conference in 1832. The people thronged to hear him at every appointment. Along the sea-shore and in the Quaker settlements he went as a flaming herald. The following appointments were his fields of labor: 1832, Tuckerton, N. J.; 1833, Camden, N. J.; 1834-35, Mariner's Bethel, Philadelphia; 1836-37, Bristol, Pa.; 1838, Sharpstown and Woodstown, N. J.; 1839-40, transferred to New Jersey Conference and stationed at Franklin Street, Newark; 1841-42, Morristown; 1843-44 Salem; 1845-46, Halsey Street, Newark; 1847-48, Camden; 1849-50, Burlington; 1851-52, transferred to Philadelphia Conference and stationed at Fifth Street, Philadelphia; 1853-54, Trinity, Philadelphia; 1855-56, Lancaster, Pa.; 1857-58, Harrisburg, Pa.; 1859-60, Green Street, Philadelphia; 1861-64, presiding elder on North Philadelphia District; 1865-66, St. George's, Philadelphia; 1867-69, transferred to New Jersey Conference and stationed at State Street, Trenton; 1870-72, transferred to Newark Conference and stationed at Trinity, Jersey City; 1873-75, Morristown; 1876-78, Calvary and Orange, N. J.; 1879, Emory, Jersey City; 1880-81, Belleville, N. J. He died in Trenton, Aug. 13, 1881.

XI.—12*

Dr. Bartine was a noble specimen of a man—nearly six feet tall, stoutly built, straight, and vigorous; his hair was black and beautiful, his forehead high and commanding, his large dark-gray eyes were brilliant, his lips at times compressed. All these gave him a marked personal presence. His mind was of a high order, cultured and well-balanced; his imagination sublime, his voice having wonderful compass and sweetness, his diction faultless, and his gift of utterance most remarkable. His deep piety, burning zeal, and profound knowledge and use of the Scriptures made him a very successful and popular preacher. He stood forth a champion for liberty, education, temperance, Sunday-schools, and missions, but pre-eminently as a preacher of righteousness. His great popularity made him a favorite at dedications, extra meetings, and at Conference. His mightiest efforts were made at camp-meetings. Here he stood as a prince of preachers. In the deep solitude of the woods at night, when the stars peered through the trees, when the old-fashioned torch-light fires lighted up the ground and flashed over the vast congregations, and the stand was crowded with preachers, then he seemed almost inspired to preach the Word of Life with marvellous edification to the Church and wonderful awakening power to the unconverted. Thousands were swayed under his preaching like fields of grain by the wind. For fifty years he went forward untarnished in reputation, never listening to flattering overtures of other denominations for his ministry. The last decade he seemed like one of the old prophets; his venerable appearance and long flowing locks, his youthful fire and full, sweet-toned voice, made him to the last a man of mark. See (N. Y.) Christian Advocate, Oct. 20, 1881.

Bartizan is the small overhanging turret which projects from the angles on the top of the tower, or from the parapet or other parts of a building. It is not so common in England as on the Continent.

Bartlett, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New York city, July 11, 1821. He professed religion when about eighteen, studied two years at Wesleyan University, and shortly afterwards joined the New York East Conference. He labored diligently until stopped by his last sickness, which was of short duration. He died Nov. 2, 1854. Mr. Bartlett was feeble in constitution, but strong in sociability and spirituality. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1855, p. 546.

Bartlett, D., a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about 1800. He was licensed by the Church at Hartford, Me., in 1822, and ordained as pastor of the Church at Guildford, Me., in that year. Here he remained one year, and then accepted a call to the Church in Sangerville, Me., where he continued five years (823-128), and then removed to Warren, Me. His ministry in this place was also five years in duration (1828-33). His subsequent pastorates, all in Maine, were: 1837, Dexter; 1838, Thomaston; 1842, Friendship; and 1843, Camden. The exact date of his death the writer has been unable to ascertain. See Millet, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 435. (J. C. S.)

Bartlett, Dwight Kellogg, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Utica, N. Y., March 30, 1832. He received his preparatory education in the Collegiate School of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and was graduated at Union College in 1854. He taught in Rome, N. Y., from 1854 to 1855, after which he occupied the position of tutor in Union College over three years, during two years of which time he was also engaged in the private study of theology under the guidance of Rev. Dr. Hicock. He entered Princeton Seminary in 1858, and remained there one year. He was licensed by the Presbytery of North River in 1859, and the same year ordained and installed pastor of Smithfield Church, to which he had previously preached as a stated supply. His pastoral relation to this Church was dissolved in 1862, when he was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Stamford, Conn., by the Third Presbytery of New York. He remained here until 1864, when the relation was dissolved. He then accepted a call to become pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, Rochester, N. Y., where he was installed, and labored with great usefulness and success until 1874, when he accepted a call to the Second Reformed (Dutch) Church at Albany, N. Y., where he remained until his death, which occurred at New York, Jan. 11, 1880. See Neurological Report of Princeton College, 1881; N. Y. Observer, Jan. 20, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Bartlett, Horace, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Portland, Conn., Jan. 17, 1793. He experienced conversion in 1814, and in 1822 united with the New York Conference, in which he labored with devotedness, zeal, and success. He died Feb. 3, 1858. Mr. Bartlett's life was characterized by high integrity and uniform piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 99.

Bartlett, James, a minister of the Bible Christians, was born at Somerton, England, April 12, 1816. When a boy he narrowly escaped death by fire and drowning. In 1835 he gave his heart to God. In 1840 he offered himself to the work of the ministry, and was accepted. In his ministry of forty-one years he filled fourteen different appointments. He was very successful in the conversion of souls. As a pastor, he particularly excelled. His death was calm and bright. He died in 1881. See Minutes of the Bible Christians' Conference, 1881.

Bartlett, John, a Unitarian minister, was born in Concord, Mass., May 22, 1784. He graduated at Harvard College in 1805; remained there two years after as a student of theology; was chaplain of the Boston Almshouse about three years; was ordained as pastor of the Second Church in Marblehead, Mass., May 22, 1811; and died Feb. 3, 1849. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 243; viii, 416.

Bartlett, Mayhew, a Baptist minister, was born in Chilmark, Mass., Aug. 11, 1829, and was a graduate of Brown University in the class of 1854. He took the course of study at Newton, Mass. (1855-58); was ordained June 3, 1858, and was pastor of the Church in West Tisbury, Mass., during the year following. He then took charge of the Church in East Tisbury, where he remained until his removal to Exeter, N. H., in 1859. His residence here covered a period of only a few months. He returned to Tisbury, where he died, Sept. 24, 1860. See Newton General Catalogue, p. 44. (J. C. S.)

Bartlett, Nathaniel, a Congregational minister, graduated at Yale College in 1749; was ordained minister in Reading, Conn., May 23, 1753; and died in 1810. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 638.

Bartlett, Willard, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Vermont, Oct. 9, 1782. When young he removed to Canada, where, at the age of thirteen, he was converted. He was licensed to preach the Gospel at twenty-two. After preaching several years, he was ordained at Wheelock, Vt., in 1814. Not long after this he removed to Melbourne, C. E., which was his home during the remainder of his life. A Church was formed in that place July 11, 1818, of which he took the pastoral charge, retaining it until the state of his health prevented his further service. He died Aug. 31, 1855. Mr. Bartlett is said to have been a man of deep thought, ready at all times to give a reason for his faith, and remarkable for his perseverance. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1857, p. 87. (J. C. S.)

Bartlett, William, one of the founders of the Theological School at Andover, Mass., was born in Newbury, Mass., Jan. 31, 1748. His gifts to the institution in whose prosperity he took a life-long interest were generous and timely. He endowed the chair of sacred rhetoric with a donation of twenty-five thousand dollars, and built the chapel, one of the large halls, and two professors' houses. For five or six years he paid the president's salary, and gave largely towards the foundation of another professorship. He left also in his will fifty thousand dollars to the seminary. Mr. Bartlett died Feb. 8, 1841. (J. C. S.)

Bärtling, Peter Conrad, a German theologian, was born Nov. 24, 1680. He completed his studies, travelled in Germany and Holland, and distinguished himself by his knowledge of theology. He died in 1734. He wrote, Zeit und Ewigkeit, oder die gegenwärtige und zukünftige Welt, in allerhand zufälligen moralischen Andachten nach Anleitung einiger Schriftsteller (Brunswick, 1735), a posthumous work. See Hoefler, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bartolette, Charles, a Baptist minister, was born in Lower Dublin, Pa., in 1783. He pursued his theological studies with Rev. Dr. Samuel Jones; having completed which, he accepted a call to become the pastor of the Church at Flemington, N. J. Under his long and useful ministry the Church enjoyed a large measure of spiritual prosperity. For thirty-six years he was the pastor of the sole Church which he served in that relation, and retired from active service only because of failing health. He removed his membership after his resignation to the Tenth Church in Philadelphia, in whose communion he died, in 1853. See Minutes of Philadelphia Baptist Association, 1853, p. 20. (J. C. S.)

Bartoli, Pietro Sante (called Perugino), an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Perugia about 1635. He painted in early life, but afterwards devoted himself entirely to engraving. His prints number over a thousand, a list of which may be found in Nagler's Künstler-Lexikon. The following are some of his principal works: The Sepulchral Urn, in the court of the capital:—a set of friezes, subjects from the Bible, twelve plates:—a set of several plates of the Life of St. Peter:—The Adoration of the Magi:—The Birth of the Virgin:—Daniel in the Lions' Den.

Bartolucci (di Celleno), GIULIO, a learned Italian Bernardino, was born at Celleno in 1613. He was a pupil of the Jewish convert Giovanni Battista (q. v.), who instructed him in Hebrew. In 1651 he was appointed professor of the Hebrew and Rabbinic languages at the Collegium Neophytorum et Transmarinorum in Rome, and Scriptor Hebraicus of the Vatican Library. He died Nov. 1, 1687. He is the author of Bibliotheca Magna Rabbínica de Scriptoribus Hebræorum Ord. Alphab. Hebr. et Lat. Digest. (Rome, 1675, 1693, 4 vols.). The idea and plan, and in part the material, of the work he received from his teacher, who commenced it in a chronological order, which was abandoned by Bartolucci. A continuation of the work was made by Imbonato under the title Bibliotheca Lat. Hebr. Auct. . . cum Indicibus (ibid. 1694). In the latter work we have also a list, De Scriptoribus Latinis qui contra Judæos vel de Re Hebr. Scripserunt, cum Annotat. Crit. et Histor. Of the complete Bibliotheca, including the continuation by Imbonato, Brunet says, "Ces deux ouvrages se trouvent difficilement." See

First, Bibl. Jud. i, 89; Wolf, Bibliotheca Hebraica; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bartolomeo, Maestro, an Italian painter, flourished about 1236 in Florence. In the Church of the Servi in that city, according to Lanzi, is an Annunciation, painted in 1236, still in good preservation, which is held in the highest veneration, and is inscribed "Ecce Virgo Concipiet," etc.

Bartolozzi, Francesco, a Florentine designer and engraver, was born in 1730, and was instructed by Hughfort Ferretti in drawing, and studied engraving under Joseph Wagner of Venice. His principal religious works, executed in England about 1764, are, Abraham and the Angels, an etching:—The Miracle of the Manna:—Job Abandoned by his Friends:—The Virgin and Infant:—Rebecca Hiding the Idols of her Father, etc. He died at Lisbon in 1813.

Barton, Bernard, known as "the Quaker poet," was born near London, England, Jan. 31, 1784. He early developed a poetical taste, and in 1811 published a volume of poetry which, coming from such a source, awakened the admiration of scholars in England. In 1806 he removed to Woodbridge, and in 1810 became a clerk in the banking-house of Messrs. Alexander, where he remained nearly till the time of his death. At one time he thought of abandoning his business as a banking clerk, but the remonstrances of his friend Charles Lamb, who set before him the uncertainties of a merely literary life, kept the gentle poet at his desk. During the leisure hours of his profession, he devoted himself to literary pursuits. The Edinburgh Review gave a flattering notice of a volume of his poetry published in 1820. "The staple of the whole poems," said the critic, "is description and meditation—description of quiet home scenery sweetly and feelingly wrought out, and meditation overshadowed with tenderness and exalted by devotion; but all terminating in soothing and even cheerful views of the condition and prospects of mortality." Of his Devotional Verses the (Lond.) New Monthly Magazine, March, 1826, says, "Mr. Barton's style is well suited to devotional poetry. It has great sweetness and pathos, accompanied with no small degree of power, which well qualify it for the expression of the higher and purer feelings of the heart." Another writer says, "His religious poems, while they are animated with a warmth of devotion, are still expressed with that subdued propriety of language which evinces at once a correctness of taste and feeling." Such was the esteem in which he was held that he was honored with a pension of one hundred pounds, granted to him by the queen, during the administration of sir Robert Peel. It was said of him that, "whether at his official place at the bank or in the domestic circle, he was the same pleasant man, and had the same manners to all, always equally frank, genial, and communicative; and, as he was charitable towards all, so he was beloved by all, of whatever creed, party, or condition in life." His death took place Feb. 19, 1849. See Selections from the Poems and Letters of Bernard Barton, with a Memoir, by his daughter, Miss Lucy Barton; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Cleveland, English Literature of the 19th Century, p. 494; Gentleman's Magazine, Nov. 1849. (J. C. S.)

Barton, Frederic Augustus, a Congregational minister, was born at Chester, Vt., Jan. 24, 1809. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1831, at Andover Theological Seminary in 1836; was ordained pastor at Collinsville, Conn., in 1839; was pastor there 1838-43; Chocopee Falls, 1843-46; Indian Orchard, Mass., 1858-61; East Boston, 1868-71; and Newtonville, Mass., 1871-81. During the interval of 1846-58 he was engineering in South America and elsewhere; in 1861-62 he was chaplain of the 10th Massachusetts Volunteers, and from 1862 to '68 he lived without charge at Nashua, N. H. He died in his last charge, Feb. 23, 1881. See Necrology of Andover Theol. Seminary, 1880-81, s. v.

Barton, John Graeff, LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of New York, was born in Lancaster, Pa. In 1852 he was appointed professor of English language and literature in the Free Academy, New York city. In this position he remained throughout his active life. He died at Hamburg, N. J., May 19, 1877, aged sixty-four years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Barton, Joseph, an English Congregational minister, was born at Doncaster in 1803. After he had given evidence of piety he was urged to devote himself to the Episcopal ministry; this, however, he objected to, and joined the Congregationalists; was educated at Rotherham College, and became pastor at Bakewell. Mr. Barton subsequently labored successively at Brasington, Ravenstonedale, Wirksworth, and at Mattock Bath, where he died in 1874. See (Lond.) Cong. Yearbook, 1875, p. 312.

Barton, Titus Theodore, a Congregational minister, was born at Granby, Mass., in 1765. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1790; was ordained over the Church at Tewksbury, Mass., in 1792, and was dismissed in 1803. His next charge was Fitchburg, 1804-13. He removed to Hilham, Tenn., and thence in 1827 northward, designing to settle in Jackson, Ill., but died very suddenly on his journey, Oct. 31, 1827. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 47; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 87.

Barton, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at St. Ives, Huntingdonshire, March 27, 1803. He united with the Methodist society at the age of twelve, studied law at Baldock, Herts; was received on trial for the ministry in 1826; labored in some of the principal circuits (Cambridge, Leeds, Birmingham, London, Bradford, etc.); was assistant secretary of the Conference, and secretary of the Southern Branch of the Theological Institution; discharged his duties at the Conference of 1856; went home never to preach again; and died at Bradford, Yorkshire, on the fifty-fourth anniversary of his birthday. Barton stood high in the estimation of his brother-ministers, and many encomiums on his character are on record. He was an eminent Christian, a faithful servant of the Church and Conference, and a thoughtful and powerful preacher. He published a Memorial of James Fison of Thetford (1845, 12mo), and a Discourse on Public Worship (1841, 18mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857, p. 410; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, Dec. 1865, art. i.

Barton, Zachariah T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Clarke Co., Va., in 1846. He experienced conversion in his eighteenth year, and entered the Virginia Conference in 1872, in which he served the Church until his death, Nov. 21, 1874. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 9.

Bartonar, a monastic officer; the overseer of bar-tens, granges, and farms; a granarer.

Bartram, James Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born at Cheltenham, Oct. 1, 1824. He began his ministerial labors under the direction of the London City Mission, but was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church at Wendover, Bucks, July 3, 1851. He removed to Deal, Kent, in 1856, where he continued to labor during the remainder of his life. He died in the midst of his useful labors, June 6, 1879. He was a zealous nonconformist, but advocated his views in that Christian spirit which caused his opponents to respect and reverence him. See (Lond.) Cong. Yearbook, 1880, p. 309.

Baruch, Book of, Apocryphal. By way of supplement we add that different from the Jewish Baruch Apocrypha is a later Christian one, which was published in the Ethiopic by Dillmann under the title

Reliqua Verborum Baruchi, in his Chrestomathia Æthiopica (Lipsæ, 1866); in Greek under the title Paralipomena Jeremia, by Ceriani, in his Monumenta Sacra et Profana, tom. v, fasc. 1 (Mediolan. 1868, p. 8-19); and in a German translation by Prætorius, in the Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, 1872, p. 230-277. (B. P.)

Baruch BEN-BARUCH ben-Moses, a Jewish rabbi who flourished at Salonica about the year 1600, is the author of אֲלֶה הַדְּלִדוֹת, or a twofold commentary on Ecclesiastes. The one, entitled קְהֵלֶה יַעֲקֹב, gives an explanation according to the sense; the other, קְשֵׁת יִשְׂרָאֵל, contains an allegorical exposition of the book. It was published at Venice in 1599. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 89; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 53; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sephurim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum (Wilna, 1880), iii, 518, No. 57. (B. P.)

Baruch BEN-ISAAC, a Jewish writer, who died at Constantinople in 1664, is the author of בְּרָכָה יִצְחָק i. e. a Haggadic and homiletical commentary on the Pentateuch and the five Megilloth—i. e. the Psalms, Proverbs, Lamentations, Song of Songs, and Ecclesiastes—published at Cracow, 1646 a. o. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 90; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sephurim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum (Wilna, 1880), i, 162, No. 274-276. (B. P.)

Baruchus, a Scottish saint who flourished about A.D. 700, is said to have attained to the episcopal dignity. After residing some time in Ross-shire, where he was greatly venerated, he passed into Ireland, and thence into Wales, and died at Barry, in Glamorgan-shire.

Barwick, JOHN, an English clergyman, was born at Wetherslack, in Westmoreland, where he resided at the commencement of the civil war. Suspected by the Puritans, he left Cambridge and went to London, where he lived as chaplain to bishop Morton at Ely House. After the execution of king Charles, Barwick engaged with the same zeal in the affairs of Charles II; on which account he was arrested and sent to the Tower, where he was confined for two years, and released Aug. 7, 1652. After the declaration of Monk in favor of the king, Barwick was sent to lay before his majesty the state of ecclesiastical affairs, and was appointed his chaplain. He was afterwards appointed to a stall at Durham, and to the livings of Workingham and Houghton-le-Spring, and in 1660 became dean of Durham, which office he very shortly after resigned for the deanery of St. Paul's and rectory of Therfield, Herts. He died in 1664. His Life of Thomas Morton, Bishop of Durham, and his sermon preached at St. Paul's in 1661, entitled Deceivers Deceived, are his best-known works. His Life, originally written in Latin by his brother Peter, was printed in English (London, 1724).

Barzæus, GASPARD, a Jesuit, was born at Goes, in Zealand. He studied at Louvain, whence he passed into Portugal, entered the Jesuits' order at Coimbra in 1546, and was the constant companion of St. Francis Xavier, by whom he was sent to Ormuz, on the Persian Gulf. He died at Goa, Oct. 6, 1553. As a missionary, he is considered second only to St. Francis Xavier.

Barzakh is the name given by the Mohammedans to the time and condition of the soul between death and the resurrection. The souls of the believers partake, even in this state, of a part of the blessedness to follow; on the other hand, the souls of the unbelievers are banished to the place of punishment, the seventh heaven. The souls of the prophets go directly into Paradise; the martyrs, however, live in the bodies of beautiful green birds, which eat of the fruit of the trees of Paradise.

Barzena, ALFONSO, a Spanish Jesuit, surnamed "the Apostle of Peru," was born in 1528 at Cordova. He was a disciple of John of Avila, and went to Peru. He acquired the languages of Tucuman and of Paraguay, and devoted his life to the instruction of the natives. He died at Cuzco in January, 1598. Besides his Catechisms and some small ascetic treatises, he wrote, Lexica et Præcepta Grammatica, item Liber Confessionis et Precum, in quinque Indorum Linguis, quarum Usus per Americam Australem, nempe Puquimica, Teno-cotica, Catamarcana, Guarimica, Natizana, sive Moguazana (Lima, 1590), a very rare book, reputed to be the first published in Peru. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Barzo, in Persian mythology, is the genius of the primordial mountain Alborji and of the water gushing therefrom, over which a mighty spirit reigns, Tashter, whose assistant therefore Barzo is.

Basacomatrius, BORROMÆUS, a French or Italian theologian of the Dominican order who lived in the early half of the 14th century, wrote Tractatus de Philosophia et Philosophis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basan (or Basanwow), in Norse mythology, was a king and priest of the Sigambers, wise, and possessing the most useful attributes, but too desirous of conquest for a priest. He conquered, from B.C. 264 to 240, every king of Britain, and received the title of the Great Basan. Having spent his life in idol-worship, he was worshipped after death as a god of war, and his fame was celebrated in all the songs of the ancient bards.

Basan, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris, Oct. 23, 1723, and studied under Stephen Fessard and Jean Daulé. In 1767 he was chiefly employed in print-selling, and published a Dictionnaire des Graveurs. He died Jan. 12, 1797. The following is a list of some of his prints: Louis XV, with Diogenes:—Cardinal Prince de Rohan:—Bacchus and Ariadne:—Christ Breaking the Bread:—The Female Gardener. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basana, DOMINIC OF, a Christian martyr, was a citizen of Bassano, Italy, and followed the wars of Charles, the emperor, in Germany, where he received the first taste of Christ's Gospel. He became able to instruct others in this doctrine, and he travelled and worked in the Church, till at length, in 1550, he went to Placentia, and there preached to the people the true doctrine. He was taken by some officers and put in prison. From thence he was led to the chancellor's house, and was asked whether he would renounce his doctrine. He answered that he maintained no doctrine of his own, but only the doctrine of Christ, which he was ready to seal with his blood; and at the same time gave hearty thanks to God for accepting him as worthy to glorify his name with his martyrdom. Upon this, he was committed to a filthy and stinking prison, where, after he had remained a few months, he was exhorted divers times to revoke, otherwise he should suffer; but still he remained constant in his doctrine; whereupon, when the time came assigned for his punishment, he was brought to the market-place where he had preached, and there was hanged. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 461.

Basany, in the mythology of India, was the wife of Vaishya, created from Brahma's left hip, and therefore belonging to one of the lower castes, as the Brahmins sprang from the head, and the Kshetry from the shoulders, of Brahma.

Bascetti, CLEMENTE, an Italian theologian, was born at Monastica, and lived about 1680. He wrote, Viridarium Theologicum, etc. (Venice, 1688):—Giardinetto di Verità, etc. (1693). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basch, SIEGMUND, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 3, 1700, at Juliusburg, in Silesia. He studied at Breslau, Jena, and Leipsic; in 1730 was pastor and co-inspector at Christianstadt; in 1734 arch-deacon and assessor of consistory at Sorau; in 1751 general superintendent at Hildburghausen; and died, April 24, 1771, as first court preacher, member of consistory, and superintendent of the duchy of Weimar. He wrote, Disputatio de Interpretatione N. T. ex Patribus Apostolicis (Leipsic, 1726);—Epistola de Ultimis Eliæ (ibid.);—Deutlicher Beweis von der Glaubwürdigkeit der heil. Schrift;—Pastorale Christi ex VII Epistolis ad Ecclesias Asianas (1752). See Hamberger, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baschi, MATTEO, an Italian visionary, was born in the duchy of Urbino, near the close of the 15th century. He entered the Convent of Montefalconi, where a sort of religious madness seized him. He believed that it had been revealed to him that the costume of the Franciscans should be changed, and, with the sanction of the pope, Clement VII, it was attempted; but the Franciscans refused to do this, and he was imprisoned. The capuchon, or cowl, which he wished them to adopt was that from which the Capuchin friars, who adopted it, derived their name. Matteo Baschi was the first general of the Capuchin Order, and died at Venice in 1552. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bascom, Ellery, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Chester, Mass., July 5, 1798. He was educated at the academies of Tallmadge and Aurora, O., and was graduated at the Western Reserve College. He studied theology in Princeton Seminary, where he remained nearly three years, and was ordained an evangelist by the Huron Presbytery in 1833. He was never settled as a pastor. His successive fields of labor were as follows: Lower Sandusky, Williamsfield, Jackson, Wilkesville, O.; and Pleasant Hill and Kendallville, Ind. His health failing, he removed to Janesville, Wis., preached one year at Decatur, and two years at Jefferson, Ia., when he removed to Duluth and preached two years. He then removed to Upland, Kan., where he died, Dec. 25, 1880. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882. (W. P. S.)

Bascom, William, a Congregational minister, was born at Orleans, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1802; was ordained pastor of the Church in Fitchburg, Mass., Oct. 16, 1805; was dismissed Dec. 15, 1813; and died in 1845. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 243.

Base is the lower part of a pillar, wall, etc.; the division of a column on which the shaft is placed. The Grecian Doric order has no base; but the other classical orders have each their appropriate bases, which are divided into plinth and mouldings, though in some examples the former of these divisions is omitted.

In Middle-Age architecture, the forms and proportions of the various members not being regulated by arbitrary rules as in the classical orders, the same capricious varieties are found in the bases as in all the other features of each of the successive styles. In the Norman style, the mouldings of the base often bear a resemblance to those of the Tuscan order, with a massive plinth which is most commonly square, even though the shaft of the pillar and the moulded part of the base may be circular or octagonal. There is often a second or sub-plinth under the Norman base, the projecting angle of which is chamfered off. In the earlier period of this style the bases generally have but few mouldings, but, as a rule, they increase in numbers and vary in their arrangement as the style advances. There is a very great variety of bases in the Norman style; often in the same building scarcely any two are alike. This seems to be especially the case in the earlier division of the style both in Normandy and in England, and the bases in the two countries are often exactly alike. In Gundulph's Crypt in Rochester Cathedral this variety of bases is found, and it continues until quite late in the style.

At the commencement of the Early English style the bases differ but little from the Norman, having very frequently a single or double plinth retaining the square form, with leaves springing out of the mouldings lying on the angles. At a later period the plinth commonly takes the same form as the mouldings, and is often made so high as to resemble a pedestal; and there is frequently a second moulding below the principal suite of the base, as at the Temple Church, London. In this style the mouldings of the base sometimes overhang the face of the plinth. The mouldings of the Early English bases do not vary so much as those of the other styles, and those which are most usual approach very nearly to the Attic base. One of the characteristics of early examples of the Early English base is that it will hold water, which is not the case in any other style.

In the Decorated style there is considerable variety in the bases, although they have not generally many mouldings: the plinths, like the mouldings, conform to the shape of the shaft, or they are sometimes made octagonal, while the mouldings are circular, and in this case the mouldings overhang the face of the plinth. In some examples, where the shaft of the pillar is circular, the upper member only of the base conforms to it, the other mouldings, as well as the plinth, becoming octagonal. The plinths are often double and of considerable height, the projecting angle of the lower one being worked either with a splay, a hollow, or small moulding. A common suite of mouldings for bases in this style consists of a torus and one or two beads above. In the Perpendicular style the plinths of the bases are almost invariably octagonal and of considerable height, and very frequently double, the projection of the lower one being moulded with a reversed ogee or a hollow. When the shaft is circular, the whole of the mouldings of the base sometimes follow the same form; but sometimes the upper member only conforms to it, the others being made octagonal like the plinth. In clustered pillars in which there are small shafts of different sizes, their bases are often on different levels, and consist of different mouldings, with one or two Window-shaft, Stanton Harcourt, Oxfordshire.

Dorchester, Oxfordshire.

Pier, Ewelme, Oxfordshire.

Door, Haddiscoe, Norfolk.

Perpendicular Base.

members only carried round the pillar, which are commonly those on the upper part of the lower plinth. The characteristic moulding of the Perpendicular base is the reversed ogee, used either singly or doubly: when double there is frequently a bead between them. This moulding, when used for the lower and most prominent member of the base, has the upper angle rounded off, which gives it a peculiar wavy appearance. The mouldings in this style most commonly overhang the face of the plinth.

The above descriptions apply only where a single shaft occurs. In compound piers, which are made up of groups of single pillars, the bases become more complex.

Basedow, JOHANN BERNHARD (known also as Bernard of Nordhalbengen), a German theologian and sectary, was born Sept. 11, 1723, at Hamburg. He studied at Leipsic and Kiel; was in 1753 professor of practical philosophy at Sorø, in Denmark; in 1761, professor at Altona; went to Dessau in 1771, where in 1774 he founded the "Philanthropin," an institution in which education was to be achieved without any religious influence—a principle which Rousseau had laid down before him. In 1778 he retired from this institution, went to Magdeburg, where he died July 25, 1790. Lichtenberger, in his Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, says of Basedow, "His life is that of a vulgar adventurer, and his character deserves neither sympathy nor esteem;" and, concerning his educational system, the same writer says, "He has, nevertheless, the merit of having called the attention of his age to the important problem of education, and of demanding that this should be conceived in a more rational and humane manner; but he was deceived in the method generally, and lacked the authority needed to effect a like reform." He is the author of Philalethie, oder Neue Ausichten in die Wahrheit und Religion der Vernunft, bis an die Grenzen der glaubwürdigen Offenbarung (Altona, 1754, 2 vols.):—Theoretisches System der gesunden Vernunft (1765):—Methodischer Unterricht in Religion und Sittenlehre (eod.). He also published Universalgesangbuch zur gesellschaftlichen und unanständigen Erbauung (Berlin and Altona, 1767), changing some very fine hymns according to his own taste. See, besides the article in Lichtenberger, Meyer, Basedows Leben, Charakter und Schriften (Hamburg, 1791, 2 vols.); Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 219 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Baselius (or Van Baale), Jacob (1), a Dutch theologian and historian, was born in 1530. He preached at Flushing and at Berg-op-Zoom, where he died in 1598. He wrote an account of the siege of this city in 1588, which was published in 1603. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baselius, Jacob (2), a Dutch theologian, son of one who bore the same name, native of Leyden, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He was pastor of Kerkwerven, and devoted himself to civil and ecclesiastical history. He wrote Sulpitius Belgicus, sive Historia Religionis Instauratæ, Corruptæ, et Reformatæ in Belgio et a Belgis (Leyden, 1657); translated into Dutch by Melchior Leydekker, and published in connection with the Nederlandsche Historie of Z. Van Boxhorn (Amsterdam, 1739). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basement is the lower story or floor of a building beneath the principal one. In ordinary houses the lower story is not called a basement unless partly below the surface of the ground. In larger buildings in which an architectural arrangement is introduced, the lower story, even if above the ground, is called a basement if in the composition it serves as a pedestal or substructure for the main order of the architecture.

Base-moulding (or Base-table) is a projecting moulding or band of mouldings near the bottom of a wall, etc.; it is sometimes placed immediately upon the top of the plinth, and sometimes a short distance above it, in which case the intervening space is frequently panelled in circles, quatre-foils, etc.

Base-moulding.

Basenzi, PAOLO EMILIO, an Italian painter, was born at Reggio in 1624, and studied under Albano. He painted a number of works for religious edifices, of which those in the Church of San Pietro are most esteemed. He died in 1666. None of his works are mentioned.

Basharites, a division of the Mohammedan sect called Metaweilah (q. v.).

Bashuysen, HEINRICH JACOB VAN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 26, 1679, at Hanau. He studied at Leyden and Franeker, and was in 1701 appointed professor of Oriental languages and Church history at the gymnasium of his native city. In 1703 he was made professor of theology. In 1716 he was called to Zerbst as professor of theology, history, and Oriental languages; and died Dec. 31, 1758. Bashuysen was one of the most learned scholars of his time; especially was he well versed in Rabbinical lore. He wrote, Diss. de Fatis Ecclesiæ N. Test. (Franeker, 1700):—Diss. de LXX Hebdomadibus Danielis (ibid. eod.):—Diss. IV Positiones ad Sciagraphiam Systematis Antiquit. Hebraicæ. (Hanovæ, 1702-12):—Diss. de Academiis Academicorumque Titulorum Origine Hebraica (ibid. 1703):—Diss. de Fœdere Gratiæ (ibid. 1704):—Diss. de Impositione Manuum (ibid. eod.):—Clavis Talmudica Mazina (ibid. 1714), etc.:—Lib. I. Observationum Sacrarum de Integritate S. Scripturæ, occasione R. Maimonidis Tract. de Libro Legis (Latine versi) (1708). His writings fill about five printed pages in Döring's Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands. See, besides, Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 92; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 18; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Literatur, i, 190, 196, 526; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Basicles is the name of two early Christian martyrs: (1) At Rome, with Rogatus and others, under Aurelian, June 10; (2) June 12, under Diocletian, with Polymachus and others.

Basil, the friend of Chrysostom, with whom he lived on terms of the closest and most affectionate intimacy. The friends were equal in age, in rank, in property; read the same books, and studied under the same masters—Diodorus, afterwards bishop of Tarsus, and Carterius. They simultaneously resolved on adopting an ascetic life. Basil was the first to put the purpose into execution, living in solitude and devotion in his paternal home. On Chrysostom following his example, the two friends prepared to take a house and live together; but were prevented by the entreaties of Anthusa, Chrysostom's mother. The circumstances attending Basil's elevation to the episcopate, and the pious fraud by which his scruples were overcome, are narrated in the article CHRYSOSTOM. We do not know the name of his see; but, as Chrysostom promised to give him his presence and counsel frequently, it could hardly have been far from Antioch. Baronius thinks it was Raphanea (Chrysostom, De Sacerdot. i, 1-3; vi, 13).

Basil, saint and martyr, bishop of Amasea, in the diocese of Pontus and province of Helenopontus, is said to have been one of the victims of the persecution set on foot, about 322, by Licinius, the colleague of Constantine, in Armenia; and especially in Pontus and the city of Amasea. The author of the Acts of this saint appears to say that he attracted the fury of the emperor by receiving into his house, and protecting from his violence, a virgin named Glaphyra—one of the women attached to the household of the empress Constantia; for which act he was carried to Nicomedia, killed, and thrown into the sea. His body was alleged to have been cast ashore at Sinope, carried thence to Amasea, and buried there near a church that he had built. He is commemorated April 26.

Basil, saint (the father of St. Basil the Great), was the son of St. Macrina the elder, but the name of his father is unknown; he was, however, a scion of a noble house in Cappadocia or Pontus. During the cruel persecution under Galerius and the Cæsar Maximin Daia, they were compelled to flee into the deserts, where they continued for about seven years, i.e. from 306 to 313. At the end of this period they returned to Pontus, where Basil, their son (the subject of this article), soon became known for his virtues and talents. He united to vast erudition a rare gift of eloquence, which gained him a high reputation at the bar. The time of his death is not known, but the decease of his wife, St. Emmelia, probably took place in 370 or 372. The Church honors their memory on May 30.

Basil of ACHRIDA was metropolitan of Thessalonica, and flourished about 1155. Pope Hadrian wrote to him to entreat him to forsake the Greek schism and unite himself to the Church of Rome. Basil replied, with dignity, that his Church was not schismatical, nor was the Church of Rome in any way her superior. His Letter to Hadrian will be found in Baronius, A.D. 1115, and (Greek and Latin) in the Jus Græc.-Rom. v, 307; also his Reply to some questions concerning certain marriages (Greek and Latin), ibid. p. 309. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 231.

Basil of ANCYRA (1), a presbyter who became a martyr for the faith under Julian the Apostate, A.D. 362, was of Christian parentage and of orthodox faith. During the reign of Constantius, he was a bold and uncompromising opponent of Arianism, and maintained the truth with great courage at the Council of Jerusalem in 335. He was more than once apprehended as a seditious person by the provincial governors, but recovered his liberty. The Arian council under Eudoxius, held at Constantinople in 360, forbade him to hold any ecclesiastical assembly. The zeal of Basil was still further quickened by the attempts made by Julian to suppress Christianity. The natural result followed; he was apprehended, and brought before the governor of the city, Saturninus, who put him to the torture, and informed the emperor of the prize he had secured. On the arrival of Julian at Ancyra, Basil was presented to him; and, having reproached the emperor with his apostasy, he suffered death by red-hot irons on June 29. His festival, probably the anniversary of his persecution, is kept both by the Greek and Latin Church on March 22.

Basil of ANCYRA (2) attended the second Council of Nicæa (the so-called seventh General Council), A.D. 787. At the first session Basil read a lengthy apology for the tardiness of his arrival, and, abjuring the heresy as to image-worship which he had previously favored, expressed his acquiescence in the decision of Hadrian of Rome, Tarasius of Constantinople, and the holy apostolic thrones; and signed the decrees of the council. See Labbe, Concil. vii, 670, 887.

Basil, bishop of ANTIOCH, succeeded Maximus II. as forty-third bishop of the see, A.D. 456. A portion of a letter addressed to him by St. Simeon Stylites is preserved by Evagrius (H. E. ii, 10), in which Simeon expresses his thankfulness for the declaration of the faith made at the Council of Chalcedon, and exhorts Basil to play the man in behalf of the truth. He was one of the orthodox bishops to whom a letter was addressed by the emperor Leo, requesting their counsel with regard to the disturbances caused at Alexandria by Timothy Ælurus (Labbe, Concil. iv, 890).

Basil of CILICIA was, according to Photius (Cod. xlii, 107), a priest of the Church of Antioch when Flavianus governed that see in the reign of Anastasius, and afterwards became bishop of Irenopolis in Cilicia; for there is no reason to doubt that he was the same with the Basil mentioned by Suidas. He died after the year 518, and wrote an Ecclesiastical History, in three books. The first began A.D. 450 and ended 483; the second carried it down to 518; and the third contained the actions of the emperor Justin. "He also," writes Photius, "composed a treatise against John of Scythopolis, whom he loads with many reproaches, accuses him of Manichæism, of reducing the period of the Lent fast to three weeks, and of permitting to eat birds during that time." Also he charges him with not waiting for the communion till the sacrifice was ended, but taking the holy mysteries immediately after the Gospel, that he might the sooner get home to his own dinner. This treatise was in sixteen books; and it appears, from the summary given by Photius, that Basil decidedly held the views of Nestorius on the subject of the two natures. Suidas asserts that he also wrote a work against Archelaus, a priest of Colonea. See Dupin, History of Ecclesiastical Writers, i, 541; Cave, Historia Literaria, i, 466.

Basil of GLEMONA, a French missionary to China in the 18th century, prepared a Chinese dictionary, entitled Hân tsü sî t (1726), several copies of which have been circulated in China and Europe. It was translated into Spanish, Russian, Portuguese, and French, and served as a model for that published by Guignes in 1813, by the order of Napoleon—Dictionnaire Chinois, Français et Latin. Julian Klaproth published in 1820 a supplement to the work of Basil of Glemona. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basil of LYONS, a French Capuchin, who died in 1628 at Grenoble, is the author of, Diarium Veri Christiani (Lyons, 1617):—Præsis Veri Christiani, Servi Dei (ibid. 1628). See Bernardus a Bononia, Bibliotheca Capuccinorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Basil, bishop of PARUM in Mysia, on the Hellespont, and confessor. A hymn in the Menæa, assigned by Harless (ap. Fabric. Bibl. Græc.) to April 12, but by Le Quien to March 12, commemorates his sufferings for the faith. The language employed leads Le Quien to the conclusion that he suffered in the persecutions of the Monothelite or Iconoclast emperors. See Le Quien, Or. Christ. i, 788; Fabricius, c. 29.

Basil of SOISSONS, a French Capuchin, who was sent as a missionary into England in 1691, is the author of, Défense Invincible de la Vérité Orthodoxe de la Présence Réelle de J.-C. en l'Eucharistie, etc. (Paris, 1676 a. o.):—Defensio, seu Vera Religio clare Demonstrata, et Novarum Sectarum Falsitas penitus Eversa (ibid. 1676):—Compendium Clarissimum Doctrinæ Christianæ cum Auctoritatibus S. Scripturæ (ibid. 1678):—Condemnatio Novatorum per Os eorum circa Materias Controversas inter eos et Catholicos Romanos (ibid.):—De Existentiâ Dei contra Infideles (ibid.):—Réflexions Morales sur ce Passage de l'Écriture—Utinam saperent et intelligerent, et novissima providerent, Deut. xxxii, 8 (ibid. 1686). See Bernardus a Bononia, Bibliotheca Capuccinorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Basil, bishop of TIBERIAS, at the end of the 8th century, was originally an inmate of the monastic College of the Resurrection at Jerusalem, of which he afterwards became abbot. Here he was the intimate friend of the intruding patriarch of Jerusalem, Theodore, who, while still a monk, took him as his companion on the visit paid by him to St. Stephen at the monastery of St. Saba, with the view of learning from him the future issue of his ambitious designs. Basil afterwards visited St. Stephen on his own account, and received from him an assurance that he would attain the episcopal dignity, together with a warning of the difficulties of the office. He subsequently administered the affairs of the see of Jericho, and finally became bishop of Tiberias. See Leontius, Vita S. Steph. apud Le Quien, Or. Christ. iii, 306 sq., 665 sq., 708 sq.

Basil, bishop of TRAJANOPOLIS, in the province of Rhodope, in Thrace, and metropolitan, took part in the "Robbers' Synod" at Ephesus in 449, when he gave his verdict in favor of the orthodoxy of Eutyches and against Flavian. He was present in 451 at the Council of Chalcedon, when he joined the noisy adversaries of Theodore, and appears on the orthodox side consenting to the deposition of Dioscorus, and accepting the same of Leo. He was one of the bishops to whom the emperor Leo wrote in 458, requesting their opinions on the disordered state of ecclesiastical matters at Alexandria, after the murder of Proterius and the usurpation of Timothy Ælurus.

Basila, Abiad, a Jewish rabbi, who died at Mantua in 1743, is the author of מְנַחֵם חַיִּים, or a philosophy of Judaism (Mantua, 1730; Lemberg, 1858), in which he defends Judaism against Greek and Christian philosophers. See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 53; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 92; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sepharim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum (Wilna, 1880), i, 41, No. 769. (B. P.)

Basila, Raphael Chajim, son of the preceding, is best known as the editor of the famous Mantuan Bible with Norzi's (q. v.) commentary, published under the title מְנַחֵם חַיִּים. Basila added some notes, and also appended a list of nine hundred variations. The work was published at Mantua in 1742. The commentary itself was published at Vienna in 1813, and of late in the Warsaw Rabbinic Bible, 1860-66. The remark of the writer of the art. Norzi in this Cyclopædia, "the work of Norzi marked great progress in Biblical exegesis, but it has no longer any value," is, to say the least, a very superficial one, for Norzi never attempted exegesis, but textual criticism, as any one acquainted with the work can see from the very first page. As to its value, it is best shown by the use which Baer and Delitzsch, the latest editors of the Hebrew text, make of it. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 92; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 53; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sepharim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum (Wilna, 1880), ii, 343, No. 1558; Dresde, Programma quo Commendantur Raphaelis Chajim Basila, Judei Recentioris, Exercitationes Criticæ in Diversitatem Lectionis Codicis Ebræi ab Everardo van der Hooght Observatum (Wittenb. 1774). (B. P.)

Basilēa (queen), in Greek mythology. Uranus had by a number of wives forty-five children. Of these Titēa alone gave him eighteen, who, from their mother, received the name of Titans. Basileia was the oldest, and also brought up her brothers. After her father had been translated among the gods, she undertook the government of the kingdom. She then (still a maiden), in order to leave the kingdom to children of the family, married her brother Hyperion, and by him became mother of Helios and Selene. The fear that Hyperion might ultimately draw the kingdom towards himself led the brothers to an atrocious act. They killed the husband, drowned Helios, and Selene, disheartened, threw herself from the top of the house. A dream comforted the unhappy mother. Helios made known to her that he and his sister had been placed as sun and moon in the heavens, and that the Titans would receive their just punishment. Basileia (thence called bona dea) told the people what had happened, and they then bestowed the names of her children upon the sun and moon. She finally became insane, and at death was taken among the deities.

Venus was often worshipped as Basileia, but without being identified with the subject of the above sketch.

Basileus (king), in Greek mythology, was the surname of a number of gods—of Jupiter, of Neptune, of Apollo. Neptune especially was worshipped by this name at Trézene.

Basilica, or law books. The large Justinian compilation of Roman law (the so-called Corpus Juris Civilis), because of its being written in Latin, could not satisfy the wants in the East, a Greek translation being needed. In order to avoid all ambiguity, the emperor Basilius Macedo undertook the publication of a manual (Πρόχειρος νόμος) in the year 878 (published by Zacharia, Heidelberg, 1837), which was revised in 885 (Ἐπαναγωγή τοῦ νόμου). Besides, he undertook Ἀνακάθαρσις τῶν παλαιῶν νόμων (repurgatio veterum legum) in sixty (comp. Πρόχειρος, § 3) or forty (Ἐπαναγωγή, § 1) books, which again were revised by the emperor Leo the Wise in 886, and which received the title Basilica: ὁ βασιλικὸς (νόμος) or τὰ βασιλικά (νόμματα), consisting of sixty books. It was edited, in connection with others, by Symbarius or Sabbatius. Of a later revision under Constantine Porphyrogenitus, we read in Balsamon, Voelli et Justelli Bibliotheca Juris Canonis, ii, 814, but this statement is without any foundation. The Basilica are a Greek elaboration of Justinian's compilation, put together from older translations and commentaries, extracts from Justinian's Novelle, promulgated after 535, and from the Πρόχειρος of Basilius. Fragments of old versions and elucidations were added as scholia from the beginning, to which others were added, till finally a kind of glossa ordinaria was formed, which was also published by the editors. The manuscripts of the Basilica are all incomplete, and so also the editions. Single books were edited in a Latin translation by Gentianus Hervetus (Paris, 1557), Cujacius (1566), Labbeus (1569). The Greek text, with a Latin translation and scholia, was first published by Fabrot (Paris, 1647, 7 vols. fol.). To these were added supplements by Ruhnken (Reitz, a. o.). The latest edition is, Basilicorum Libri LX post A. Fabroti curas ope codd. MSS. a Gust. Ern. Heimbachio atisque Collatorum Integriores cum Scholiis editit, edidos ænuo recensuit, deperditos restituit, translationem Latinam et adnotationem criticam adjectit Carol. Guil. Ern. Heimbach. (Lipsiæ, 1833-48, 5 vols.) :—Supplementum Editionis Basilicorum Heimbachianæ Libri XV-XVIII Basilicorum editit Carol. Ed. Zacharia a Lingenthal (ibid. 1846). On the history of the Basilica and their importance for ecclesiastical law, see Zacharia, Historia Juris Græco-Romani Delineatio (Heidelberg, 1839), p. 35 sq.; Mortreuil, Histoire du Droit Byzantin (Paris, 1843-1846), ii, 1 sq.; iii, 230 sq.; Biener, De Collectionibus Canonum Ecclesiæ Græcæ (Berolini, 1827), § 5; Mejer, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Basilicāni, Nestorian followers of Basil of Irenopolis the Cilician (Dion. Areop. Eccies. Hier.).

Basilicapetri, CARLO, an Italian prelate, was born at Milan in 1550. After having studied jurisprudence, he joined the Barnabites, whose general he became. In 1593 he was appointed bishop of Novara, and died Oct. 6, 1615. He wrote, De Concordantiâ Evangelistarum:—De Immunitate Ecclesiastica. See Ughelli, Italia Sacra; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Basiliſſus, a Marcionite of the 2d century (Euseb. Hist. Eccles. v, 18), perhaps the same as Blastus (Volkmar, Hippol. p. 27).

Basilides (1), saint and martyr, was an officer of the guards of Aquila, governor of Egypt, who was ordered to guard the virgin martyr Potamiana, and to carry her to execution. On the way to the scene of her torment, when the heathen multitude pressed upon her, and polluted her chaste ears with filthy and obscene words, Basilides honorably and kindly compelled them to fall back. In return for this the holy virgin promised that, when she was gone hence, she would entreat the Lord for him. Accordingly, some time after her death, Basilides confessed himself to be a Christian, and was carried before the judge. When urged by some Christians to explain the circumstances which had led to such a determination, he declared that Potamiana, three days after her martyrdom, came and stood over him in the night, and placed a crown upon his head, saying that she had prayed for him, and that he would soon be called away. He was brought a second time before the judge, and, remaining resolute in the faith, was ordered to be executed; and accordingly he was beheaded at Alexandria. Eusebius, from whom the above is taken, declares that the virgin martyr appeared in the same manner to multitudes of others about that time, all of whom were converted (Ilist. Eccles. vi. 5, 8).

Basilides (2), saint and martyr, was one of the four soldiers of the army of Italy, under Maxentius, who witnessed a glorious confession at Rome, before the præfect of the city, named Aurelius. In the year 309 the præfect of Rome was one Aurelius Hermogenes, and this is probably the proper date of their martyrdom. Aurelius had heard that Basilides and his companions had openly avowed their belief that the God of the Christians was the only true God; whereupon he caused them to be cited before him, and did all in his power to induce them to sacrifice to the idols, but in vain; and he then committed them to prison. While there they converted to the faith Marcellus the jailer, and several of the prisoners. The emperor Maxentius caused them to be brought before him and severely beaten with rods of iron; but he found them immovable, and eventually ordered that their heads should be struck off. Their bodies were buried on the Aurelian road, about four and a half leagues from Rome, where it seems a chapel was afterwards built over their tomb. Their festival is kept in the Roman Church on June 12. See Baillet and Butler, June 12.

Basiliscus (1) was bishop of Comanes, or Comana, in Pontus, who, according to Palladius (Dial. de Vita S. Joh. Chrys. c. 11), was martyred at Nicomedia, about 312, during the persecution of the emperor Maximinus, together with the celebrated St. Lucia, priest of Antioch. When peace was restored to the Church, the body of St. Basiliscus was brought back to Comanes, and buried a short distance from the town; a church, moreover, was built over his tomb. In 407 St. John Chrysostom passed through Comanes, and his guards, not willing that he should stop in the city, caused him to pass the night in the presbytery of the church of St. Basiliscus. During the night the martyr Basiliscus appeared to St. Chrysostom, entreated him to be of good courage, and assured him that they should be together on the following day; accordingly, on the following day he died, and was buried near the martyr. Basiliscus is said to have been shod with red-hot iron shoes, and then beheaded and thrown into the river (Baronius, at May 22). The festival of St. Basiliscus is May 22, the day on which his body was translated; his martyrdom occurred Jan. 7. See Ruinart, Acta Sinc. p. 505; Baillet and Butler, May 22.

Basiliscus (2), saint and martyr, is said to have lived in the 4th century, to have been a soldier, and to have been martyred at Comanes, in Pontus, about 306. The Greeks mark his festival on May 22. He is probably the same as the preceding.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Another of the same name is mentioned by Ruinart in connection with St. Mamas, to whom, with Basiliscus, a church was dedicated at Constantinople, their day being July 29.

Basilisk, in the superstition of the Middle Ages, was a fabulous animal which was to come from an egg laid by a thirty-year-old cock, and which a turtle was to hatch. It was to be frightfully large, with the body of a fowl, a brazen bill and brazen claws, also a long tail, formed like three snakes, and with three points. Such an animal was regarded as dangerous from its size, and deadly from its poison, and it was supposed that it killed even with its look, and is itself invulnerable, the only weapon available against it being a looking-glass, at the presentation of which it is frightened and bursts.

Basilissa, wife of Julian, is commemorated as a martyr of Antioch (A.D. 296) in various Church lists on March 3 (Byzant.), May 20 (Jerome), June 9 (Old Rom.), or Nov. 25 (Armen.).

Basilus. See BASIL.

Basilla is the name of three Christian saints in different early martyrologies: (1) Virgin martyr at Rome under Gallienus, commemorated May 20; (2) commemorated Aug. 26; (3) in Antioch, Nov. 23. See BASSILLA.

Basin, Eucharistic. When the people offered bread and wine at the holy communion, as they did at first in large quantities, the ministers of the altar were obliged, after receiving it, to wash their hands before proceeding to consecrate. This they did in large vessels, or basins, of silver, earthenware, etc. At the present day in the Latin Church, the form is still kept up by the priest dipping the tips of his fingers in water contained in a little basin. The alms and other devotions of the faithful are, by the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer, directed to be received in a decent basin, or, as it is otherwise called, an alms-dish (q. v.), which ought to be on every altar, that the alms, etc., collected by the churchwardens, deacons, or others may be received in it. See BASINS.

Basin, Bernard, a Spanish theologian, canon of Saragossa, lived at the close of the 15th century. Among other works, he wrote Tractatus de Artibus Magicis et Magarum Maleficis (Paris, 1485). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basin, Thomas, a French prelate, was born at Calais, France. He studied philosophy at Paris; in 1431 was assessor of the philosophical faculty of Louvain; and finally bishop of Lisieux. He was a great favorite with king Charles VII, but was obliged to leave the country under his son, Louis XI. He went to Louvain, where he lectured on jurisprudence. From thence he went to Trier, and finally to Utrecht, where pope Sixtus IV appointed him archbishop of Cesarea and vicar to the bishop, David Burgund, of Utrecht. He died Dec. 30, 1491. He wrote, Res suo Tempore Tractati Gestæ:—a treatise against Paul of Middelburg:—and left in MS. Consilium super Processu Puellæ Aurelianensis, i. e. a history of the Maid of Orleans. See D'Achéry, Spicilegium, vol. iv; Mathæus, Analectes, vol. ii; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Basins, Ecclesiastical Use of. Before the high-altar, and above the steps to it, were usually three basins of silver, hung by silver chains, with prickets for serges or great wax candles, and latten basins within them to receive the droppings. These tapers burned continually, night and day, in token that the house was always watching unto God. Basins were used for carrying the cruets and the ewers for the ablution of the priest's fingers. They were usually in pairs, one being used for pouring, the other for receiving the water; thus we find one engraved with the mortal life and a second with the divine life of Christ. The material was sometimes enamelled copper or silver-gilt, and the embellishment was frequently of a heraldic rather than religious character. At Durham one basin and two cruets were used at a time. There is a beautiful basin of the time of Edward II, wrought with figures of a knight helmed by a lady at a castle gate, in St. Mary's, Bermondsey, which once belonged to the abbey there. Two enamelled basins of the 13th century at Conques are called genellions; one is used as a ewer, and the other as a jug. There was also a large basin for alms, usually double gilt, used upon principal festivals, and a smaller one of less value for ordinary days. Alms-basins of Flemish manufacture and latten are preserved at St. Margaret's, Westminster.

Basinus, Sr., a French prelate, was born in Lorraine. He entered the Monastery of St. Maximinus at Treves, where he made such advance in Christian perfection and holiness that, upon the death of Herwinus, the monks elected him abbot of their community. Subsequently, about A.D. 670, when the see of Treves became vacant by the death of St. Numerianus (or his successor), Basinus was compelled to fill it. As archbishop of Treves, he relaxed nothing of his former strictness in discipline or morality. After filling the see for twenty-two years, he resigned his office, and St. Ludwinus, his favorite nephew, succeeded him. The remainder of his days he employed in preparing for his death, which happened towards the end of the year 700. His festival is marked March 4. See Baillet, vol. i.

Baskerville, JOHN T., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., Feb. 17, 1803. He graduated in medicine in Baltimore city in 1822; professed conversion in 1833; received license to preach in 1839, and about that time entered the Tennessee Conference. In 1843 he received an appointment to the agency of the Memphis Conference Female Institute. He thus labored as agent and as minister until 1853, when he became superannuated, which relation he sustained until his death, May 1, 1873. Mr. Baskerville was warm and impulsive in nature, and decidedly pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 851.

Basket, ECCLESIASTICAL USE OF. See CANISTER.

Basket, JOHN C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was received into the Kentucky Conference in 1839, and labored with marked usefulness and popularity until his death, Aug. 27, 1844. Mr. Basket was remarkable for his amiability and zeal. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1846, p. 56.

Basmagut, in Hindû mythology, was an evil dæmon (Danawa). Because of the sacrifice Homa, which he made by cutting up his own body and offering the pieces to Siva, the latter endowed him with the power to convert into ashes everything that he touched. But when, in love with Parvati, he sought to try his destroying power on Siva also, the latter fled to Vishnu, who assured the frightened god of his help and revenge. Vishnu appeared to Basmagut in the form of Parvati, and promised to listen to his petitions if he would learn the dance of her husband, which she danced for him. Basmagut imitated the movements of Vishnu, and the latter putting his hand on his head, Basmagut did the same, thus destroying himself.

Basmotheans (Basmothei, or Masbothæi), a name given to certain heretics who kept the Sabbath days (Clemens Alexand. and Const. Apost.).

Basolus (or Basiolus), Sr., was a hermit, born in the 6th century, in the Limousin, who, resolving to quit the world, went to Rheims to visit and consult Gilles, the bishop of that see. In A.D. 575 he entered the Monastery of Verzy, and was regarded by the abbot Dromer and the other monks as a model of perfection; but, in order to attain to a higher state, he resolved to betake himself to perfect solitude, and in 580 retired to a neighboring mountain, where he constructed a chapel and a cell, which he occupied for forty years, and died Nov. 26, about 620 (or 625). The Roman martyrology commemorates him on Nov. 26. Usuardus, who lived in the 9th century, speaks of his day as Oct. 15, the day of his translation by Hincmar of Rheims.

Basor, ANTHONY, a Christian martyr, was an Englishman by birth, and suffered martyrdom in the early part of the 16th century. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 457.

Basque Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. There are at least eight dialects of the Basque language, which is a tongue utterly unlike other European languages, unless we except the Finnish, with which it appears to have some slight connection. The Basques who can read at all can, in almost every instance, read either French or Spanish; but, as a matter of course, their mother-tongue is more valued by them than acquired languages. According to the geographical position, we have the French and Spanish Basque. See Bible of Every Land, p. 314-318.

I. French Basque.—The French dialect of the Basque is spoken in the south-western extremity of France, on the frontiers of Spain. It formerly included the three subdivisions of Labour, Lower Navarre, and Soule, and it is now comprehended in the department of the Lower Pyrenees. The entire New Test. in the Basque of Lower Navarre was published at Rochelle in 1571 under the title Jesus Christ Gure Javanaren Testamentu Berria. It was translated by John de Licarrague, a minister of the Reformed Church and a native of Béarn. In the dedication to Jeanne d'Albret, queen of Navarre, at whose expense it was published, the translator says: "Et peu s'en fallut que je ne desistasse entièrement, voyant mon entreprise d'autant plus grande, que la langue en la quelle j'ay escrit est de plus steriles et diverses, et du tout inusitée, pour le moins en traduction." A copy of this New Test. was found in the library at the University of Oxford, and from this copy the British and Foreign Bible Society printed in 1825 at Bayonne one thousand copies of the gospel of Matthew, under the superintendence of Mr. Pyt, a minister of the Reformed Church in Béarn. The Roman Catholic bishop was opposed to the circulation of this edition, and destroyed about eight hundred copies of the same. This opposition only encouraged the British and Foreign Bible Society to publish another edition. Under the care of Mr. Montleza and the superintendence of friends at Bordeaux and Bayonne, the text of 1571 was altered in accordance with the modern forms of language, and so many changes were introduced as virtually to constitute a new version. The New Test. in this new and revised form was completed at press in 1828, and further editions soon followed. Since 1869 the same society has published the Basque New Test. in the Labourdin dialect.

II. Spanish Basque.—This dialect is spoken in the provinces of Biscay, Guipuscoa, and Alava. The educated class of the people can read and understand Spanish, but their native dialect has a peculiar charm for them. No portion whatever of the Scriptures appears to have been printed until the year 1838, when Mr. George Borrow, with the aid of the British and Foreign Bible Society, edited and published an edition of the gospel according to Luke. In 1848 this version of Luke was revised and amended by the translator, named Oteiza, and printed at the expense of the same society. As this translation was, however, a mixture of the Guipuscoan and the Biscayan, an edition in the pure Guipuscoan dialect was printed, at the expense of the Rev. J. E. Dalton, in 1870, to which in 1878 was added the gospel of John, which had been also translated at the expense of the same gentleman, under the care of Señor de Brunet.

For linguistic purposes, see Bonaparte, Le Verbe Basque en Tableaux, accompagné de Notes Grammaticales, selon les huit Dialectes de l'Euskara (Lond, 1869); Van Eys, Essai de Grammaire de la Langue Basque (Amst. 1867); id. Grammaire Comparée des Dialectes Basques (1879). (B. P.)

Bas-relief (or Basso-relievo) is sculptured work the figures of which project less than half their true proportions from the wall or surface on which they are carved. When the projection is equal to half the true proportions it is called mezzo-relievo; when more than half it is alto-relievo.—Parker, Gloss. of Architect. s. v.

Bass, Benjamin, a Congregational minister, was a native of Braintree, Mass. He graduated from Harvard College in 1715; was ordained pastor of the Church in Hanover, Dec. 11, 1728; and died in 1756, aged sixty-three. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 350.

Bass, Henry, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Berlin, Conn., Dec. 9, 1786. He was the son of Daniel Bass, one of the daring patriots who threw the tea overboard in Boston harbor. He joined the Church in 1807, soon after began to preach, and in 1811 entered the South Carolina Conference, and for thirty-seven years did effective work. In 1848 he became superannuated, and continued to sustain that relation until the close of his life, May 13, 1860. Mr. Bass was a guileless Christian minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 252.

Bass, John, a Congregational minister, was born at Braintree, Mass., March 26, 1717. He graduated at Harvard in 1737, and was called to the pastorate in Ashford, Conn., where he was ordained in 1743. In 1751 he was dismissed "for dissenting from the Calvinistic sense of the quinquarticular points," having embraced the opinions of John Taylor, of Norwich, England. In 1842 Mr. Bass was employed to supply the pulpit of the First Congregational Church in Providence, R. I. In 1758, his health being poor, he entered upon the practice of medicine, and continued therein till his death, Oct. 24, 1762. The Providence Gazette of Oct. 30 spoke of his character in very exalted terms. Mr. Bass published A True Narrative of the Late Unhappy Contention in the Church at Ashford (1751), and—in answer to Rev. Samuel Niles, who had replied to the above—A Letter to Mr. Niles, with Remarks on his Dying Testimony (1753). See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 265.

Bass, Rowland G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Powhatan County, Va., June 30, 1808. He was led to Christ in early life by the teachings, example, and prayers of his devoted mother; and in 1830 entered the Virginia Conference, in which he served the Church zealously until his decease, Dec. 9, 1838. Mr. Bass was a man of great excellency of character, sound in mind and theology, modest in manner, solicitous and affectionate. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1839, p. 666.

Bass, Sabbathai, a Jewish writer of Holland, was born at Kalisch in 1641. In 1689 he established a Hebrew printing-office at Dyrenfurt, and died in 1718 at Krotoschin. He is the author of, שַׁבְּתַי הַבְּרִי, a supercommentary on Rashi on the Pentateuch and the five Megilloth (Amst. 1680 a. o.):—שַׁבְּתַי הַבְּרִי, an index of Hebrew literature, including the works of Christian writers, giving altogether 2360 titles, viz. 2200 of Jewish, and 160 of Christian writers (ibid. 1680; Zolkiew, 1806). He also edited some other works. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 92 sq.; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sepharim or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum, iii, 609, No. 1236, 1238. (B. P.)

Bass, Stephen, a Methodist Episcopal minister,

was born in Marion District, S. C., June 8, 1795. He received a careful religious training, joined the Church at the age of sixteen, soon after began exhorting, and in 1820 was admitted into the South Carolina Conference. He died Sept. 6, 1820. Mr. Bass was exemplary in piety and zeal. See Methodist Magazine, iv, 279.

Bassani, JACOPO ANTONIO, an Italian preacher and poet, was born at Venice in 1686. He belonged to the Jesuit Order, and preached in nearly all the cities of Italy. He counted among his auditors at Rome and Bologna pope Benedict XIV. He sojourned habitually at Padua, where he died, May 21, 1747. He wrote Thirty Sermons (Bologna, 1752). His Latin and Italian poems were published by Roberti at Padua in 1749. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bassaræ (or Bassandes) (Βάσσαρες), a long robe, a name sometimes given to the Bucchæ (q. v.) or Manide, from the long robe which they wore on festival occasions.

Bassée (or De la Bassée), ÉLOI, a French theologian, was born about 1585. He taught theology to the Capuchins of Lisle, and died in 1670. He wrote, Flores Theologiæ Practicæ (Douai, 1639):—Supplementum (1658). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basseporte, MADALEINE FRANÇOISE, a French painter, was born in Paris, Sept. 5, 1700, and studied under the famous Robert. In 1732 she succeeded Obriette as painter of natural history in the Royal Gardens, with a salary of one hundred pistoles a year. Her chief works are, The Martyrdom of St. Fidelio de Sigmaringa, after Robert:—Diuna and Endymion, after a design of Sebastiano Conca. She died about 1780. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Basset, Fulk, an English prelate, was the son and heir of baron Gilbert Basset. In 1225 he was made provost of the collegiate Church of St. John of Beverley, and in 1230 dean of York. In 1241 he was elected bishop of London, and in 1244 was transferred to the see of Canterbury. In 1250 he began a controversy with archbishop Boniface, respecting the privileges of the see, but was overruled by the pope; in 1255, however, he succeeded in opposing the extortions of Rustand, the pope's legate. He built the church of St. Faith, near St. Paul's, and died of the plague in 1259.

Basset, Rachel, wife of Joseph Basset, was for many years an elder in the Society of Friends (Orthodox). She died at Uxbridge, Mass., Sept. 28, 1832, at the age of seventy-one years. See The Friend, vi, 24.

Bassett, Amos, D.D., a Congregational minister, was a native of Derby, Conn. He graduated from Yale College in 1784; was a tutor there from 1789 to 1793; was ordained pastor of the Church in Hebron, Conn., Nov. 5, 1794, and remained there until Sept. 28, 1824; was appointed, in that year, principal of the Foreign Mission School in Cornwall; was installed pastor in Monroe, Conn., in 1827. From 1810 to 1827 he was a member of the corporation of Yale College. He died in 1828. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 294.

Bassett, Archibald, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Derby, Conn., March 21, 1772. He received a careful education, and graduated at Yale College in 1796, with the highest honors of the class for scholarship in languages. He labored for five years at Winchester, Conn.; in 1807 became pastor of the Congregational Church at Wilton, N. Y.; and from 1810 supplied several churches in that vicinity. He was one of the original members of the Delaware Presbytery, organized in 1831, and remained connected with it for the remainder of his life. He died April 29, 1859. See Wilson, Hist. Presb. Almanac, 1861, p. 155.

Bassett, Christopher, an English divine, was born in 1753, at Aberdare, Glamorganshire, Wales. He was educated at a noted school in Cowbridge, and Jesus College, Oxford; ordained by the bishop of London, and became the curate of St. Anne's, Blackfriars. Here he remained several years, but his health failing he was compelled to return to his native country, where he became pastor of St. Fagan's, Cardiff. From St. Fagan's, where he labored faithfully some years, he removed to the home of his parents; but shortly afterwards took charge of Porthcerry church, near his father's house. This was a short time before the end of his life. He was seized with consumption, and died at the age of thirty-one. Mr. Bassett was wholly devoted to the service of God. Wherever he went he won seals to his ministry. See Church of Eng. Magazine, Oct. 1847, p. 269.

Bassett, John (1), D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Bushwick, L. I., Oct. 1, 1764. He graduated at Columbia College in 1786, and pursued his theological studies with Dr. John H. Livingston. He was ordained to the ministry of the Reformed Church, and settled as colleague pastor with Dr. Eilardus Westerlo, in Albany, Nov. 25, 1787. In 1804 he resigned this charge and retired from the active ministry. He was professor of Hebrew by the appointment of the General Synod of his Church from 1804 to 1812, when he resigned. He died at his native place in 1820. Dr. Bassett was a man of extraordinary erudition, and an excellent Hebrew and classical scholar. He trained a number of young men for the ministry. "In the pulpit he was noted for his sound and edifying discourses," but he was neither brilliant nor eloquent. In 1801 he translated from the Dutch, and published, a work called The Pious Communicant, by Rev. Peter Immens, pastor at Middelburg, Holland, 2 vols. pp. 600. He also published in 1791 a collection of Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs for the Use of the Reformed (Dutch) Church of the United States of America. See Rogers, Hist. Discourse, p. 32, 33. (W. J. R. T.)

Bassett, John (2), an English Bible Christian minister, was converted in November, 1819. In 1823 he entered the ministry, and a rich spirituality and vitalizing power attended his preaching for seven years. Fever cut short his labors at Penzance, Oct. 2, 1830. See Minutes of the Conference, 1831.

Bassett, John Samuel, an Irish Methodist preacher, was born at Coolfane, County Wicklow, in 1838. He had pious parents, was converted at the age of sixteen under the Rev. Thomas Guard, and entered the ministry in 1863, in which he was studious, zealous, and faithful. He suddenly but calmly entered into rest Sept. 26, 1870.

Bassett, William, a minister of the Society of Friends (Orthodox), was a member of the Queensbury (N. Y.) Monthly Meeting. He died at Queensbury, Oct. 17, 1835, aged twenty-nine years. See The Friend, ix, 53.

Bassetti, Marc' Antonio, an eminent Italian historical painter, was born at Verona in 1588, and studied under Felice Riccio, but afterwards became attached to the style of Tintoretto. He painted several pictures for the churches and public edifices of Verona, among which are a picture of St. Peter and other saints, in the Church of San Tommaso, and the Coronation of the Virgin, in the Church of St. Anastasia. He died in 1630. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bassi, Francesco, a Bolognese painter, was born in 1664, and studied under Pasinelli. He had some fine works in the public edifices in Bologna, the best of which is a picture of St. Antony Taken Up to Heaven by Angels. He was a distinguished copyist and imitator of Guercino. He died in 1693 (according to others in 1732). See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bassiānus, bishop of EPHEBUS, was originally a presbyter of Ephesus. The popularity he there gained by his service to the poor so excited the jealousy of Memnon, then bishop, that he, having failed to drive him from the city, forcibly ordained him bishop of Evaza (or Theodosiopolis). He, however, refused to recognise any tie to the see into which he had been thrust, and never once visited the place. The circumstances of his consecration being made known to Basil, Memnon's successor, he declared the see vacant, and admitted Bassianus to communion. On the death of Basil, A.D. 444, the inhabitants of Ephesus compelled Olympos, bishop of Theodosiopolis, to ordain Bassianus. Irregular as his ordination had been, Bassianus visited Constantinople, and succeeded in obtaining its recognition by the emperor Theodosius II. After four years he became odious to his flock, who thrust him into prison. Four months afterwards the emperor sent Eustathius, the chief Silentiary, to investigate the matter; and the case being laid before the chief bishops of the Christian Church—Leo of Rome, Flavian of Constantinople, and Domnus of Antioch—they pronounced for his deposition on the ground of forcible intrusion. On the receipt of this sentence, Bassianus was treated with the greatest indignity; his sacerdotal habit was violently torn from him, and he was cast into prison. At the Council of Chalcedon (q. v.) the see was declared vacant; but Bassianus and Stephen (ordained as his successor) were allowed to retain episcopal rank, and a pension of two hundred gold pieces was granted them from the episcopal revenues. See Tillemont, xv, 460-465, 690-692, 895; Cave, Hist. Lit. i, 442.

Bassiānus, bishop of LANDÆ, and a saint of the Roman calendar, was one of the bishops who condemned the Arian Palladius at the Council of Aquileia, and is mentioned as a friend of Ambrose. He died Jan. 19, 413, at the age of ninety.

Basilla, saint and martyr. The name of this saint appears in the ancient Roman calendar of the 4th century, given by Ruinart at the end of the Acta Sincera. There were two martyrs of this name. One appears to have suffered Sept. 22, 304, under Dioclesian and Maximianus, the other on May 20. See Ruinart, p. 617. See BASILLA.

Bassinger, SAPHIRENUS D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Springfield, N. Y., Jan. 27, 1802. He received a careful religious training; experienced conversion at the age of twenty; was class leader during the following ten years, when he was licensed to preach, and served the Church on several circuits, and in 1852 was sent to work among the Indians, on the Montello mission. In 1858 he was received into the West Wisconsin Conference, and did valiant work until his death, Aug. 31, 1864. Mr. Bassinger was a very laborious and successful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 186.

Bassler, BENJAMIN, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Berne, N. Y., 1808. He was graduated from Union College in 1830, and from the New Brunswick Seminary in 1833. He served the Church at New Rhinebeck and Sharon from 1833 to 1838, and at Farmerville from 1838 to 1866. He died at Farmerville in 1866. Mr. Bassler was of a cheerful disposition, and had a kindness of manner, with piety, which won all hearts and made him a successful worker for Christ. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 171.

Bässler, Ferdinand, a Protestant theologian of Germany who died at Schulpforta, in Saxony, Feb. 3, 1879, is the author of, Das heilige Land und die angrenzenden Landschaften (Leipsic, 1846; 2d ed. 1856):—Evangelische Liederfreude. Auswahl geistlicher Lieder von der Zeit Luthers bis auf unsere Tage (Berlin, 1853):—Auswahl altchristlicher Lieder vom 2. bis 15. Jahrhundert. Im Urtext und in deutschen Uebersetzungen (ibid.

1858):—Abriß der Kirchengeschichte für evangelische Gymnasien (ibid. 1876):—Timotheus. Geistliche Aussprüche an die Schulgemeinde (ibid. 1875). See Zuchhold, Bibl. Theol. i, 72 sq.; Schürer, Theolog. Literaturzeitung, 1877, p. 600 sq. (B. P.)

Bässler, Johann Leonhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 19, 1745, at Memmingen. He acted as pastor at different places, until in 1788 he was obliged to retire on account of broken health, and accepted a call as head of the lyceum in his native place, where he died, Oct. 9, 1811. He is the author of Geistliche Lieder für's Landvolk (Leipsic, 1778; 3d ed. 1782). Some of his hymns are still to be found in modern hymn-books. See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 224. (B. P.)

Bassol (or De Bassolis), JOHN, a Scotch Franciscan, called by the schoolmen Doctor Ornatisimus, lived in the 14th century, and was a disciple of Duns Scotus, with whom he went to Paris in 1304. In 1322 he went to Brabant, and died there in 1347. He wrote a commentary on Peter Lombard's four books of Sentences, printed in 1517, and some smaller works.

Bassus is the name of several early Christian saints: (1) Of Africa, natale, March 19; (2) natale, Oct. 20; (3) in Heraclea, Nov. 20.

Bassus, a heretic of the 2d century, was a disciple of Cerinthus, Ebion, and Valentinus. According to him, the life of men and the perfection of all things consisted in the twenty-four letters and the seven planets. He also asserted that salvation was not to be looked for in Jesus Christ alone.

Bast, MARTIN JEAN DE, a French priest and antiquary, was born at Gand, Oct. 26, 1753. He entered holy orders in 1775, and became curate in his native village till 1789, when he took an active part in the Brabançon Revolution. Under the imperial government he became canon of the Cathedral of Gand. In 1817 his infirmities compelled him to renounce an ecclesiastical life, and he devoted himself to numismatic pursuits. He died April 11, 1825, leaving several works on Roman, French, and Belgian antiquities, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bastard, THOMAS, an English clergyman, was born at Blandford, Dorsetshire, and educated at Winchester School, whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he was chosen perpetual fellow in 1588, and graduated two years later. For indulging too much his passion for satire he was expelled from the college. Soon after, he became chaplain to Thomas, earl of Suffolk, through whose influence he was made vicar of Bere Regis and rector of Almer in Dorsetshire. He died in Allhallows Parish, Dorchester, in April, 1618. His publications include, Chrestoleros; Seven Bookes of Epigrammes (Lond. 1598):—Magna Britannia (1605):—Five Sermons (1615):—and Twelve Sermons (eod.):—besides various satires and other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bastian, Carl, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born April 23, 1821, at Ströbeck, near Halberstadt. He studied at Halle, and acted as private tutor in different noble families from 1845 to 1850; and from 1850 to 1860 as religious instructor in different institutions. In 1860 he was appointed chaplain at Bernburg, in 1877 first preacher, and in 1878 superintendent there; and died May 7, 1881. He devoted his entire energy to the cause of the inner mission, in which field he developed a great activity. (B. P.)

Bastide, Louis, a French jurist and theologian, lived near the close of the 17th and the commencement of the 18th century. He wrote, among other works, De l'Accomplissement des Prophéties (1702), in response to a book of Jurieu:—Curactère des Officiers de l'Évêque, with two treatises in Latin entitled De la Jurisdiction and De l'Usure (Paris, 1692):—Des Panégyriques, mentioned in eulogistic terms by Flechier. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bastide, Marc, a French Benedictine of the Society of St. Maur, a native of St. Benedict of Saul, in Berri, who died May 7, 1668, wrote, Traité de la Manière les Novices:—Le Carême Bénédicte:—Traité de la Congregation de Saint-Maur. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bastide, Philippe, a learned French Benedictine of the Society of St. Maur, was born at St. Benedict of Saul, in the diocese of Burges, about 1620. He was successively prior of St. Nicaise of Rheims, of Corbie, and of other large monasteries. He died at the Abbey of St. Denis, Oct. 23, 1690. We are indebted to him for two learned dissertations, De Antiqua Ordinis Sancti Benedicti intra Gallias Propagatione, and De Decimis et earum Origine apud Judæos, Gentiles et Christianos. He left other works in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bastornolo. See MAZZUOLI.

Basva (bull), in Hindû mythology, is the name of Durmedeva, the god of virtue, because he is represented as a bull.

Batala, a name signifying God the Creator, is applied to the Supreme Being by the pagan inhabitants of the Philippine islands.

Batalerius, Jacobus, a Dutch Remonstrant divine and theologian, was born Dec. 27, 1593, and died July 31, 1672. He wrote, Examen Accuratum Disputationis Primæ Voëtii (anon. s. a.):—Confutatio Infulsi et Maledici Libri quem adversus Remonstrantes Edidit Voëtius Titulo Theriitis Heautontimorumen:—Dissertatio de Conversione Israelitarum a Divo Paulo cap. xi ad Romanos Prædicta (Hagæ, 1669, 18mo):—Vindiciæ Miraculorum per quæ Divinæ Religionis et Fidei Christianæ Veritas olim Confirmata Fuit, adversus B. Spinosam (Amst. 1674, 18mo):—Jacob et Esau (on Rom. ix, ibid. 1664, 18mo). See Cattenburgh, Bibliotheca Remonstrantium; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Walch, Bibl. Theol. i, 719; ii, 543. (B. P.)

Batava-Gourou, the god of heaven and of justice among the Battas of Sumatra.

Batchelder, Calvin R., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of Vermont, was rector of the Church in Highgate, Vt., from 1845 until 1860, when he became rector of Zion Church, Manchester, Vt., of which he remained pastor until about 1866. In 1877 he officiated at Bellows Falls, Vt., and in the following year became rector of Christ Church, Bethel, and St. Paul's, Royalton, in the same state. In 1873 he removed to Claremont, N. H., where he died in 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Batchelder, John, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, called a "pioneer missionary of Iowa," died at Burlington, Iowa, March 25, 1867, aged sixty-six years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. July, 1867, p. 335.

Batchelder, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Brookfield, Mass., Aug. 23, 1795. He was converted at the age of sixteen; received license to preach in 1817; was ordained deacon in 1821; and in 1830 was ordained elder and received into the Maine Conference. In 1841 he located, and in 1843 was put on the superannuated list, which relation he held until his decease, Feb. 15, 1873. Mr. Batchelder was a man of great devotedness to the Church, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 70.

Batcheller, Breed, a graduate of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was a clergyman of Dartmouth College, and was for many years engaged in teaching in Pendleton, S. C., and in Philadelphia. Having been ordained in 1846, he officiated for nearly two years at Radnor, Pa., and for four years at Stanton, Del. The latter part of his life was spent in Maryland, but on account of broken health he was unable to discharge the duties of his sacred office. He died in Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1856, aged forty-nine years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1856, p. 302.

Bate, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Dudley, Staffordshire, in 1784. He was converted at nineteen, entered the ministry in 1808, and died at Snaith, Feb. 19, 1855. He was distinguished for simplicity, sympathy, kindness, and forbearance. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Bate (or Batus), John, D.D., a learned English divine, was born in Northumberland, and educated in arts at York, and in philosophy and divinity at Oxford. He afterwards became prior of the Monastery of the Carmelites at York, where he died, Jan. 26, 1429. Besides a number of works on logic and kindred subjects, he wrote, Questions Concerning the Soul:—Of the Assumption of the Virgin:—The Praise of Divinity:—An Address to the Clergy of Oxford:—A Course of Sermons for the Whole Year:—and A Preface to the Bible. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bate, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Tipton, Staffordshire, Jan. 9, 1824. He united with the Church at the age of fifteen; spent three years (1845-48) at Didsbury College; was appointed in 1848 to the Diss Circuit; became a supernumerary in 1876; and died at Nantwich, March 6, 1877. He was a diligent reader and an acceptable preacher. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1877, p. 31.

Batelerius. See BATALERIUS.

Bateman, Charles, an English Congregational minister, was born at Walbeiton, Sussex, Nov. 22, 1802. His parents belonged to the Church of England, but in early youth he attended the Independent chapel, and later became a Sunday-school teacher and a member of the same Church. So great was his desire to extend the kingdom of God that he frequently preached on the village green to any and all who would listen. In 1830 he entered Hackney College, and two years later was ordained pastor at Abbott's Roothing, Essex. Here he labored till 1851, when the claims of a numerous family induced him to seek a more advantageous sphere. He next preached one year at Lincoln; six years at Charlesworth, Derbyshire; three years at Newmarket, Cambridgeshire; then, after three years without a charge, he preached five years at Rusholme, Manchester; and finally retired to Moss-side, Manchester, where he died, July 21, 1873. Mr. Bateman possessed considerable talent for poetry; his theological views were sound; his sermons practical, faithful, and earnest. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 310.

Bateman, John, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Bunhill, Norfolk, in 1732, and became an experimental Christian when but a child. At the age of twenty-six he removed from Bunhill to Chatteris, in the Isle of Ely. For many years he was an elder in the Society of Friends, and the companion of preachers on their tours among the churches. He became a formally recognised minister late in life; and after he "appeared" as such his labors were confined principally to his own meeting, where he specially directed his attention to those who were favorably inclined towards the Friends as the exponents of spiritual religion. He died March 24, 1816. See Piety Promoted, iv, 104-106. (J. C. S.)

Bateman, Thomas, an English clergyman of the 18th century, was chaplain to the duke of Gordon, and vicar of Walpole, Lincoln. He published, A Treatise on Tithes, etc. (1778):—Ecclesiastical Patronage of the Church of England (1782):—The Royal Ecclesiastical Gazetteer (1781):—and Sermons (1778, 1780). See Alibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bateman, William, an English prelate of the 14th century, was born at Norwich, and was sent to the University of Cambridge, where he took the degree of doctor of civil law before he was thirty years of age. In 1328 he was collated to the archdeaconry of Norwich, and soon after visited Rome, where he was appointed to various ecclesiastical honors. In 1343, being made bishop of Norwich, he returned to his native country, and in 1347 founded Trinity Hall in Cambridge. He died Jan. 6, 1355, at Avignon, on a diplomatic visit to the pope. He was a man of great personal integrity and strictness of administration.

Bates, Alvan Jones, a Congregational minister, was born in the part of Brewer now called Holden, Me., April 12, 1820. He received his preparatory education at Gorham Academy and at Bangor Classical School, and graduated at Bangor Theological Seminary in 1847. He was ordained as an evangelist Sept. 27, 1849, at Lincoln, Me., where he was acting pastor from 1847 to 1865. He was acting pastor at Harwich Port, Mass., from February, 1865, to March, 1868, and at Saundersville, in Grafton, Mass., where he was installed, June 22, 1869, and remained until his death. He was chaplain from September, 1862, to January, 1865, of the 2d and 14th Maine regiments. He died in Lincoln, July 29, 1877. (W. P. S.)

Bates, Benjamin Edward, Hon., a generous man of business, was born at Mansfield, Mass., July 12, 1808. He went to Boston in 1829, and commenced what proved to be a prosperous business career. He became a Christian under the preaching of Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher, joined his Church in 1832, and became an active Christian worker. In 1847 he had his attention directed to the remarkable water-privilege at Lewiston, Me., and soon after entered into arrangements for the utilizing of this great power for manufacturing purposes. In the spring of 1863 the educational wants of the Free-will Baptists of New England were brought to the notice of Mr. Bates, and his sympathy awakened in behalf of the young of that denomination who were seeking for a more complete training than they could obtain in institutions already in existence. The appeal was not made in vain. Mr. Bates paid $100,000 towards the endowment of the college which bears his name, and subscribed another $100,000 on condition that the friends of the college raise $100,000. An effort is now making (1881) to secure this sum. He died Jan. 14, 1878. See Morning Star, July 3, 1878. (J. C. S.)

Bates, Charles, an English Wesleyan missionary, was converted in early life; entered the work in 1824; labored in Newfoundland and the West Indies for nearly twenty years; and died at Tortola, Dec. 16, 1841. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1842.

Bates, George, a Universalist minister, was born at Fayette, Me., Feb. 12, 1798. He acquired a good common-school education; learned the blacksmith's trade; was licensed to preach in 1824, and ordained in 1825. He labored in Livermore, Hallowell, Canton, Auburn, and Turner, Me., in which latter place he preached for twenty-five years. He died in Auburn, Jan. 24, 1876. Mr. Bates was a truly evangelical preacher; winning, impressive, clear, unaffected, and forcible; and the embodiment of kindness, gentleness, and hospitality. See Universalist Register, 1877, p. 105.

Bates, George Washington, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Salisbury, Mass., Oct. 16, 1811. He experienced religion at the age of nineteen, and in 1835 entered the New England Conference, in which he remained a useful member till his death, Sept. 24, 1851. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 38.

Bates, Henry H., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of New York, was rector in Tariffville, Conn., for several years until 1859, when he became rector of the Church of the Messiah at Glenn's Falls, N. Y. Here he served until 1862, when he became a chaplain in the United States Army. He was minister of St. Paul's Church, Oak Hill, N. Y., from 1864 until his death, Jan. 14, 1868. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1869, p. 109.

Bates, James (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Randolph, Vt., Jan. 17, 1799. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1822; studied theology at Andover; was ordained colleague with Rev. Dr. Homer at Newton, Mass., in 1827, remaining there till 1840, when he was installed at Granby, Mass. His next charge was Central Village, Plainfield (1853-55). He died at Granby, Dec. 9, 1865. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 377; 1866, p. 126.

Bates, James (2), a Presbyterian minister, received his education in Scotland, and was called to the pastorate of a Congregational Church at New Cumnock. His health was failing, and, being advised to change climates, he sailed for Australia in April, 1858, but died there in July following. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 277.

Bates, John (1), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born at Ballymore, County Wexford. The years of his probation were spent in the north of Ireland, where his self-denying labors were remarkably successful. He was an affectionate and assiduous pastor. On account of failing health he became a supernumerary in 1862, still laboring, however, as strength permitted in his native county and at Cashel, where he settled, and where he died in 1865, in the thirty-second year of his age and the eighth of his ministry. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1866, p. 43.

Bates, John (2), a Baptist minister, was born at Bugbrook, Northamptonshire, England, Jan. 26, 1805. He removed to London in 1827, and procured a situation in a dry-goods store. Soon after he became a Christian and united with the Baptist Church. His thoughts soon began to be directed towards the Christian ministry, and he turned his attention to study to prepare himself for the work. He was designated as a missionary under the patronage of the Baptist Irish Society to labor in Ireland, and was stationed for one year at Ballina, on the western coast. Early in 1834 he removed to the city of Sligo, and became pastor of a small Baptist Church in that place; but soon removed to Coolany, and subsequently to Ballinacarrow, where he labored for a few months, and then returned to Ballina. From this place he made excursions in various directions as an evangelist for nine years. He left Ballina at the close of 1845. The greater part of the next four years was spent in Banbridge, in the neighborhood of Belfast, where he collected a Church of fifty members. In 1850 Mr. Bates came to the United States as missionary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, of which appointment, however, he did not avail himself, but proceeded to Cascade, Ia., where he became pastor of a Baptist Church, which, under his faithful ministry of fifteen years, became strong and influential. In all the region around he did good service as a missionary, and was instrumental in the formation of quite a number of Baptist churches. In 1864 Mr. Bates removed to Canada, and became pastor of the Baptist Church in Dundas, near Hamilton, where he remained nearly three years, and then accepted a call to one of the most important Baptist churches in the province, that of Woodstock. Here he had a ministry of six years, which was richly blessed; but on account of failing strength he resigned in June, 1873. His last ministry was at St. George. It lasted but two years, his death occurring May 8, 1875. See Smith [J. A.], Memoir, Sermons, Essays, and Addresses of Rev. John Bates (Toronto, 1877). (J. C. S.)

Bates, John H., a Presbyterian minister, was a native of New Hampshire, and a member of the Presbytery of Londonderry. He had been laboring for the freedmen in Charleston, S. C., for two years previous to his death, which occurred at Glen Springs, S. C., May 10, 1871. He was a man of great devotion to the cause of Christ. See Presbyterian, June 17, 1871.

Bates, Joshua, D.D., an eminent Congregational minister, was born at Cohasset, Mass., March 20, 1776. Under the instruction of Rev. Josiah C. Shaw he prepared for Harvard College, teaching a select school meanwhile, and graduating in 1800, when he became assistant teacher in the Andover Phillips Academy for one year. At this time he began to study theology under Rev. Jonathan French. In 1802 he was licensed to preach, and was ordained pastor of the Church at Dedham, Mass., March 16, 1803, and in this connection he served fifteen years. In March, 1818, he became president of Middlebury College, from which position he retired at the age of sixty-four. Being in Washington, D. C., at that time, he was chosen chaplain to Congress. After a visit to South Carolina, he preached for two months at Portland, Me., and then for two years as supply at Northborough, Mass. On March 22, 1843, he was installed pastor of the Church at Dudley, Mass., and he died there Jan. 14, 1854. Dr. Bates published a large number of sermons, lectures, etc. As a college president, he was very popular and efficient. His elocution was remarkably distinct. A striking trait in his character was his punctuality. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 465.

Bates, Lemuel P., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Blanford, Mass., Dec. 16, 1791. He was educated at Williams College, Mass., and at Princeton Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1822. He was successively pastor of the Congregational churches in Whately and Templeton, Mass., and in 1846 he removed West, and took charge of the Presbyterian Church at Pontiac, Mich., for one year. He was next stated supply for the Presbyterian churches in Conneautville and Hermansburgh, Pa., and in 1851 he preached at Utica, O. In 1859 he was appointed to a Church in Edwardsville, Ill., where he labored until death, March 5, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 78; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem., p. 32.

Bates, Merritt, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Queensbury, N. Y., July 12, 1806. When but seven years old he was thrown upon his own resources and began his life-struggle. From childhood he was in the habit of rising at four, summer and winter, and devoting the first three hours of the day to study. When his poverty forbid the luxury of a candle, the light of a pine knot served his purpose. Thus he strove until he acquired a solid English education, and became so proficient in the classics that in 1836 Middlebury College conferred upon him the honorary degree of M.A. In 1827 he entered the Troy Conference, and devoted thirty-six years of his life in its active ranks. In 1863 he became superannuated, and retired to a new farm near Travis City, Mich., where he died Aug. 23, 1869. Great zeal, diligence, and success marked Mr. Bates's course through life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 139.

Bates, Samuel, an Irish Methodist preacher, was born at Ballinamore in 1843. He was converted at the age of nine through the teaching of his pious father and the preaching of the Rev. Thomas Guard; entered the itinerant Irish ministry in 1866, and labored with acceptance for five years. He died at Wexford, Dec. 1, 1871.

Bates, William, a Congregational minister, the son of Joshua Bates, D.D., president of Middlebury College, Vt., was born at Dedham, Mass., Jan. 19, 1816. He graduated at Middlebury College in 1837, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1840. Two subsequent years were spent in teaching, and very successfully. In 1845 Mr. Bates was ordained over the Church in Northbridge, Mass., which he supplied till 1858. On June 16 of that year, he was installed pastor in Falmouth, Mass., where he died, Sept. 9, 1859. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 418.

Bateson, ANTHONY, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wray, Yorkshire, in 1815. His conversion occurred when he was about sixteen years of age, at Settle. In 1837 he removed to Preston and joined the Grimshaw-street Chapel. He received a sanction to preach occasionally, which he did with much acceptance. He was under the instruction of his pastor, Rev. R. Slate, for a year. In 1839 he was admitted as a student to Blackburn Academy, and upon his graduation received a unanimous call from the Lee Chapel, Horwick, which he accepted, and entered upon his duties as pastor Nov. 25, 1843. He removed to Egerton, near Bolton, in 1848, where he remained only till 1853, when the Middletown Church, near Manchester, called him, and he accepted. His work was greatly blessed here; but in the midst of great usefulness, with a few days' sickness, he passed away, on Sept. 30, 1854. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1855, p. 206.

Bath, LEVI, a Baptist minister, was born at Unadilla, N. Y., in 1819. He pursued his preparatory studies at Poultney, Vt., and was a graduate of Union College, N. Y. Michigan was the field of his ministerial labors for several years, he having had pastorates in several places in that state. In 1861 he took up his residence in Columbus, Wis., where he was pastor until obliged on account of ill-health to resign. He was elected by his fellow-citizens to fill several offices of public trust both in the town and in the county in which he lived. He died at his home in Columbus, March 4, 1876. See Baptist Encyclop. p. 85, 86. (J. C. S.)

Bathe (or Bates), WILLIAM, an Irish Jesuit, was born in Dublin in 1564. His parents, although Protestants, placed him under the care of a Roman Catholic instructor, and afterwards sent him to Oxford. He left England, and in 1596 became a Jesuit. Having spent some time among the Jesuits of Flanders, he travelled into Italy, and completed his studies at Padua, from which he passed into Spain, having been appointed to govern the Irish seminary at Salamanca. He died at Madrid, June 17, 1614. He published an Introduction to the Art of Music (Lond. 1584):—Junia Linguarum (Salamanca, 1611):—and several theological treatises. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bathen (Ibn el-Bathen, i. e. "inner science"), in Mohammedanism, is the inner, spiritual life, which consists in the purification and enlightening of the heart. The mystical sects among them call the practice of this inner life Tharikat and Habikat, i. e. the way and the truth.

Bathenians (from bathen, the secret knowledge of mysteries), a name applied to the Assassins (q. v.)

Bath-house is a large building for bathing at certain times, and was a usual adjunct to a Benedictine monastery; at Canterbury it occupied the site of the deanery.

Bathilda (Bathilde, Bathyldis, or Baldchilda), Sr. (corrupted into St. Bauteur and St. Baudour), was by origin a Saxon, and born in England, and was exposed for sale on the coast of France, when she was purchased by Erchinoald or Archambaud, the maire du palais of Chlodoveus, or Clovis II; she afterwards became, through the means of Archambaud, the wife of the king, about 640. St. Gregory of Tours calls her prudens atque elegans, and by her Clovis had three sons—Clothaire III, Childeric II, and Theodoric III. Upon the death of the king she became regent, and used all her authority in endeavoring to discover and reform abuses in Church and State, and founded many churches and religious houses; among the latter, the celebrated monastery of Corbie, in Picardy. She also endowed, or restored, the houses of St. Vandrille, Luxeuil, Jouarre, Farmoutiers, and Corbion; and completed that of Cala (Chelles), in the diocese of Paris, which St. Clotilda, the queen, had commenced. To this last monastery she retired, when the injustice of Ebroin, or Ebrovinus, the maire du palais, and the violence of others of the courtiers, had compelled her to resign the government. Having thus forsaken the world, she took the vows, and gave herself up to a religious life, under the abbess St. Bertila, whom she had herself constituted at the first establishment of the community. She died Jan. 30, 680, on which day she is commemorated, and her tomb is yet to be seen at Chelles. See Ruinart, Not. in Greg. Turon. p. 663; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bathing. The common use of baths throughout the Roman empire presented to Christian converts a special difficulty and danger. Yet, as the employment was not a forbidden one, Christians would be found to enter on it and reform its evils. The public baths at Rome, which were established by emperors or placed under magisterial control, were free from the grosser evils of the mixture of the two sexes; and many of the emperors, who were, more or less, under the influence of a higher culture, sought to check them. Though the practice is but little noticed unless where its accompaniment calls for censure, it appears that the most devout Christians did not think it necessary to abstain from the public bath.

It was in the "baths" of Ephesus that John encountered Cerinthus (Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii, 38). Tertullian, with all his austerity, acknowledged that bathing was necessary for health, and that he practised it himself (Apol. xlii). Clement of Alexandria lays down rules, half medical and half moral, for its use (Pædag. iii, 9). It formed part of the complaints of the Christians of Lugdunum and Vienna, and was mentioned by them as the first sign of the change for the worse in their treatment, that they were excluded from the public baths (Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v, 1). Augustine narrates how on his mother's death he had gone to the bath to assuage his sorrow, and found it fruitless (Confes. ix, 32). The old evils, however, continued to prevail, probably in worse forms in the provinces than in the capital. Epiphanius mentions mixed baths as common among the Jews of his time (Hæc. 30). Clement describes the mixture of the sexes as occurring in the daily life of Alexandria (Pædag. iii, 5); Cyprian (De Cult. Virg. p. 73) and Ambrose (De Off. i, 18) both plead against it with an earnestness which shows that it was a danger for Christians as well as heathens. It was even necessary, after the conversion of the empire, to forbid, under pain of deposition, the clergy of all orders from frequenting baths where the sexes were thus mingled. Offending laymen were in like manner to come under sentence of excommunication. Gradually the better feeling prevailed, and the "mixed baths" fell into a disrepute like that of houses of ill-fame. It was reckoned a justifiable cause of divorce for a wife to have been seen in one.

Traces meet us here and there of a distinctly liturgical use of bathing, analogous to the ablutions of Jewish worshippers and priests, as preliminary to solemn religious acts, and in particular to baptism. The practice existed among the Essenes, and there may probably be a reference to it in the "washed with pure water" of Heb. x, 22. Tertullian condemns as superstitious what he describes as the common custom of washing the whole body before every act of prayer (De Orat. xi). In Western Africa there was a yet stranger usage, which Augustine characterizes as "pagan," of going to the sea on the feast of St. John the Baptist, and bathing as in his honor (Serm. cxcix). As preparatory to baptism, it was, however, recognised. The catechumens who were to be admitted at Easter had during the long quadragesimal fast abstained from the use of the bath; and there was some risk in such cases, when large numbers were gathered together for baptism by immersion, and stripped in the presence of the Church, of offensive uncleanness. The bath was therefore brought into use, and the balneator attended with his strigil, and his flask of oil and his towels, after the usual fashion. This implies that the employment was lawful for Christians to engage in. Probably for this purpose, as well as for the use of priests before they celebrated the eucharist, Constantine constructed baths within the precincts of the great church which he built at Constantinople. They were recognized as important, if not essential, appendages to the more stately churches, and were entitled to the same privileges of asylum. Popes and bishops followed the imperial example, and constructed baths in Rome, in Pavia, in Ravenna, and in Naples. See BATHS.

Bathori, LADISLAUS, count, a learned Hungarian theologian, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He entered the Order of St. Paul the Hermit, and spent nearly all his life in the cloister of St. Laurent at Ofen. He wrote a translation of the Bible, and the Life of the Saints, in the Hungarian language. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bathrick, STEPHEN, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Cayuga County, N. Y., May 10, 1810. He was converted at nineteen, commenced preaching in 1832, and was ordained Sept. 23, 1833, pastor of the North Parma Church. For nine years he was pastor of this Church, at the same time performing pastoral work in the Church at Byron. He removed to Conneaut, O., about the year 1842. Subsequently he labored in New York and New England, and for a short time was in Michigan. Twenty years of his life were spent in central New York, with the exception of the brief period alluded to in Michigan. His last settlement was at Frankfort, Ill., where he died suddenly, Sept. 28, 1880. See Morning Star, Dec. 29, 1880. (J. C. S.)

Baths were used by the faithful before communion, by catechumens before baptism, with the use of the strigil and perfumes, and by the clergy on the eves of festivals. The latter had by the grant of Theodosius the right of sanctuary; and Constantine having built one at Constantinople, near the Apostles' Church, St. Hilary Damasus, and Adrian I followed his example at Rome. Paintings and mosaics adorned them, and bishops in their visitation enjoined their use. One at Puzzuoli still bears the name of the Bishop's Spring. See BATHING.

Bathylidis, St. See BATHILDA.

Batlan (ܒܬܠܢ, Chald. leisurely), a word formerly used among the Jews to denote a free person of full age, who had leisure to attend the service of the synagogue. It was a rule that a synagogue was to be erected in every place where there were ten Batlanin, but with a less number a synagogue could not be built, as ten were required to make a congregation. See SYNAGOGUE.

Batmanson, JOHN, a Roman Catholic divine, studied divinity at Oxford, became a monk, and afterwards prior of the Carthusian monastery, or Charterhouse, in the suburbs of London. He was an intimate friend of Edward Lee, archbishop of York, at whose request he wrote against Erasmus and Luther. He died Nov. 16, 1531. Batmanson wrote several works, among which are, Animadversiones in Annotationes Erasmi in Novum Testamentum.—A Treatise against some of M. Luther's Writings.—Commentaria in Proverbia Salomonis.—In Cantica Cantiorum.—De Unica Magdalena, contra Fabrum Stapulensem.—De Contemptu Mundi.—De Christo Duodenni.

Baton (anc. Bourdon). See STAFF, PRECENTOR'S.

Batrachitæ. Philaster (11) mentions a sect who worshipped the frogs of the plague before the Exodus, thinking so to appease God's anger. Later writers added the name. It was probably an obscure and misunderstood heathen superstition.

Batt, GEORGE, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Burrington, Devon, in 1809. He was converted under John Smith, the Methodist revivalist, in 1831, and joined the Bible Christians in 1832. He began to preach in 1833, entered the itinerant ministry in 1837, and for thirty-four years labored in many circuits with zeal and earnestness, till failing health obliged him to locate at Wellington. There for a year he worked as he had strength. His death took place Sept. 19, 1872.

Batta Version of the Scriptures. Batta is a language spoken by a large population on the isle of Sumatra. The Batta has three dialects—the Toba, the Mandailing, and the Daire. See Bible of Every Land, p. 373.

1. The Toba is spoken by the Battas of northern Sumatra. It is the most classical and widely spoken. The New Test. has been translated by the Rev. J. Nommensen of the Rhenish Missionary Society, and was printed at Elberfeld for the British and Foreign Bible Society, under the superintendence of the Rev. Dr. Schreiber, a former missionary, in 1878. The edition consisted of 4000 copies of the New Test., and 1500 copies of Matthew and John.

2. The Mandailing is spoken by 100,000 of the population of the southern part of the island. Nearly the whole of the New Test. was translated some years ago by the Rev. Dr. Schreiber, after it had been revised and improved by Mr. Leipoldt, another missionary of the Rhenish Society; it was also carried through the press by Dr. Schreiber at Elberfeld in 1878. The edition consisted of the same amount of copies as that in the Toba dialect.

For linguistic purposes see Van der Tunk, Bataksch Leesboek bevattende stukken in net Tobasch, Mandailingsch, en Dairisch (Amst. 1860–62), and Kurzer Abriss einer Batta'schen Formenlehre im Toba-Dialekte, translated by Schreiber (Barmen, 1867). (B. P.)

Battaglini, MARCO, an Italian prelate and antiquary, was born March 25, 1645, of a noble family, in a little town of the diocese of Rimini. In 1690 he was appointed bishop of Nocera, in Umbria, and in 1716 was made bishop of Cesena, in the Romagna, and died Sept. 19, 1717. He is the author of, Istoria Universale di tutti Concilii Generali e Particolari celebrati nella Chiesa (Venice, 1686 a. o.). See Giornale de Letterati d' Italia; Lami, Memorabilia Italorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theolog. Literatur, i, 655; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Battely, JOHN, D.D., an English clergyman and antiquary, was born at St. Edmund's Bury, Suffolk, in 1647. He was some time fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and chaplain to archbishop Sancroft, by whose favor he became rector of Adisham, Kent, prebendary of Canterbury, and archdeacon of that diocese. He died Oct. 10, 1708. In 1711 Dr. Thomas Terry published Dr. Battely's Antiquitates Rutupinæ. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Batten, THOMAS, a Welsh Wesleyan minister, son of Rev. William Batten, was born at Beaumaris in 1820. He was educated at Kingswood school, and converted at the age of fifteen. He commenced his ministry in 1845, and died April 10, 1857. "His sermons had point and power." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Batten, WILLIAM, a minister in connection with the British Wesleyan Conference, was one of the first-fruits of Methodism in North Wales, and there entered the labors of the itinerancy in 1804, retiring in 1843. Batten possessed shrewdness and sagacity, was of a cheerful disposition, and knew the reality of an experimental religion. He was chairman of the North Wales District for several years. He died at Llansantffread, Sept. 1, 1864, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1865, p. 11.

Batter is a term applied to walls built out of the upright, or gently sloping inwards: for example, the tower of Oxford Castle, and of St. Peter's Church (Oxford), of Isham Church (Northamptonshire), and some others, batter—that is, they are smaller at the top than at the bottom, the walls all inclining inwards. Wharf walls, and walls built to support embankments and fortifications, generally batter.

Tower of Oxford Castle.

Battersby, CHARLES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Manchester, England, in 1836. He emigrated to the United States with his parents in his ninth year; received from his exemplar an early, careful mental and moral training; experienced conversion in his nineteenth year, while teaching near Saugerties, N. Y.; and at once began laboring from house to house for the salvation of souls. He graduated at the State Normal School at Albany in 1858; resumed his profession as teacher at Gravesend, L. I.; received license to preach, and accepted a call to supply a vacant pulpit until 1864, when he entered his remaining life-work as city missionary and tract-distributor in New York city. He joined the New York Conference in 1865, and labored under its direction to the close of his life, receiving as his first appointment the Five Points Mission, and his three subsequent ones as chaplain of the city prison. He died of typhoid fever, May 29, 1868. Mr. Battersby was extremely modest and retiring in deportment, charitable in judgment almost to a fault, unflinching in duty, ardent and sportful in his home relations. His literary attainments and preaching abilities were extraordinary, and his life exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 89; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Bathey, AMOS P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Rhode Island. He was converted in early life; educated for the ministry at Kent's Hill, Me.; and after one year's service under the presiding elder, joined the Maine Conference. About six years later, 1848, he became superannuated, and held that relation to the close of his life. He died at Bucksport, Me., Oct. 9, 1849. Mr. Bathey was a devout man, a devoted minister, and a faithful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1850, p. 480.

Battier, JOHANN RUDOLPH, a Protestant theologian of Switzerland, was born at Basle, Nov. 9, 1693, where he pursued his theological studies. In 1730 he was appointed preacher at the orphanage of his native city, and in 1733 professor of Hebrew. He retired from this position in 1736 on account of broken health, and died in 1759. He wrote, Disput. qua Loca Vet. Test. in Evangelis Citata Cependit et contra Judæorum Strophas Defendit (Basle, 1716):—Theses Philologicæ Miscell. (ibid. 1733). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Battista DE FERRARE, so called from his native town, was a Carmelite, who flourished about 1494. He was secretary to Ercole II, duke of Ferrara, and left the following among other works: Florida, seu Hist. Christianitatis usque ad hæc Temp.:—Chron. Ord. Carmelit., etc.:—Vita Matheldis, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Battista, GIOVANNI GIUDA GIONA (originally Jehuda Jona ben-Isaac), the teacher of the learned Bartolucci (q. v.), was born at Safed, in Galilee, Oct. 28, 1588, where he was also appointed to rabbiship. He was a descendant of a Spanish family, which, after their expulsion by Ferdinand, retired into Tuscany. Pius V having expelled them thence also, his parents went to the East, where Jehuda Jona was born. Having gone through his course of studies, he visited Italy, Amsterdam, Hamburg, and Poland. In the latter country he joined the Church with his wife and children in 1625, taking the name of Giovanni Battista Giona, after the bishop Lancelot of Nola, the papal nuntius at the court of king Sigismund III of Poland, who baptized him. He now gave up his Talmudical studies, while he commenced the study of the Bible. As he made his living by the sale of jewelry, the king of Poland sent him to Constantinople for the purpose of buying precious stones. He was, however, taken for a spy of the Cossacks, who had lately burned a city upon the banks of the Euxine Sea, and would have lost his life had he not been ransomed by the Venetian ambassador. He was sent to Italy, where he remained some time as teacher of Hebrew and Chaldee at the Academy of Pisa, which he left for Rome, where he was appointed professor of Hebrew and assistant librarian at the College pro Propaganda Fide. He died May 26, 1668. He wrote, למדר המשיחיים, The Doctrine of Christianity, translated from the Italian of Robert Bellarmine, with notes (Rome, 1658):—ברית החדשה, The Four Gospels, translated from the Latin into Hebrew, with a preface of Clement IX (ibid. 1668):—הריגה, a discourse on the Advent of the Messiah and the Outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in Hebrew and Latin (ibid. 1653). See Wolff, Bibl. Hebr. i, 430; iii, 312 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 94; iii, 73; Wagenseil, Die Erlösung Israels, p. 137; Basnage, Histoire des Juifs (Taylor's transl.), p. 704; Kalkar, Israel und die Kirche, p. 81 sq.; Le Long-Masch, Bibl. Sacra, i, 144. (B. P.)

Battista, HORTENSIO. See BAPTISTA, HORTENSIO.

Battlement is a notched or indented parapet originally used only on fortifications and intended for service, but afterwards employed on ecclesiastical and other edifices and intended for ornament only. The solid parts of a battlement are called merlons, and the intervals between them embrasures, but these are rather military terms than ecclesiastical. In the earlier battlements the embrasures appear to have been narrow in proportion to the size of the merlons. On ecclesiastical buildings the battlements are often richly panelled, or pierced with circles, trefoils, quatrefoils, etc., and the coping is frequently continued up the sides of the merlons so as to form a continuous line round them, as at St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

St. George's, Windsor, and St. Peter's, Dorchester. On fortifications the battlements are generally quite plain, or pierced only with a very narrow, cruciform, or upright opening, the ends of which often terminate in circles, called loop-holes or oilllets, through which archers could shoot. Sometimes the coping on the top of the merlons is carried over the embrasures, producing nearly the appearance of a pierced parapet, as at the leaning tower at Caerphilly. Occasionally on military structures figures of warriors or animals are carved on the tops of the merlons, as at Alnwick and Chelstow castles. Towards the end of the 13th century, and afterwards, battlements are very frequently used in ecclesiastical work as ornaments on cornices, tabernacle work, and other minor features, and in the Perpendicular style are sometimes found on the transoms and bases of windows. It is remarkable that the use of this ornament is almost entirely confined to the English styles of Gothic architecture. In Wales a peculiar battlement is used, as at Swansea and St. David's, which has a hollow space under it to allow of the free passage of the water from the roof, an ingenious contrivance suitable to the climate. It is used chiefly in the 14th century.

Walls of York.

The Irish battlements are also very peculiar, consisting of a sort of double battlement, one rising out of the other; they are quite picturesque, but very liable to decay. The idea of them was probably taken from the Venetian battlements, which bear some resemblance to them. In Ireland there is frequently a row of holes on a level with the gutter to let off the water, instead of the English gargoyles or the Welsh openings.

The Irish battlements are also very peculiar, consisting of a sort of double battlement, one rising out of the other; they are quite picturesque, but very liable to decay. The idea of them was probably taken from the Venetian battlements, which bear some resemblance to them. In Ireland there is frequently a row of holes on a level with the gutter to let off the water, instead of the English gargoyles or the Welsh openings.

Battoni, Pompeo, an Italian painter, was born at Lucca in the year 1708, and studied in Rome under Sebastian Conca and Agostino Masucci. He was more employed on portraits than historical works. In St. Maria Maggiore is an altar-piece of the Annunciation; in the Pavilion at Monte Cavallo are five pictures, one of which is considered his best performance, representing Christ Giving the Keys to St. Peter; and in the Church of St. Girolamo, there is a Madonna, with saints and angels. He died at Rome in the year 1787.

Battus, Abraham, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Greifswalde in 1606. He studied at Rostock and Königsberg, and was appointed in 1632 professor of logic and metaphysics at his native place. In 1650 he was made professor of theology and pastor of St. James. In 1658 he took the degree of doctor of divinity, and was appointed in 1658 general superintendent of Pomerania and Rügen. He died Sept. 23, 1674. He wrote, Disputationes Logicae et Theologicae: — Oratio contra Photinianos: — Analysis Logicae Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Memoriae Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Battus, Bartholomæus, D.D., a Lutheran theologian of Germany, father of the preceding, was born at Hamburg, Sept. 10, 1571. He studied at Rostock and Wittenberg, was in 1596 appointed professor of metaphysics at Greifswalde, and in 1599 professor of theology and pastor of St. James. He died Nov. 3, 1639. He is the author of, Collegium in Confessionem Augustanam: — De Justificatione Hominis Peccatoris coram Deo, Libri 3: — Disput. XX in Epistolam ad Galatas: — Disputationes de Antichristo: — Commentat. in Epist. ad Ephesos, Coloss., et ad Philippenses: — Oratio de Christo Servatore, etc. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Moller, Cimbrii Litterati; Adam, Vitæ Eruditorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Batty, Christopher, a religious poet and preacher, was born in England early in the last century, and became a minister among a small sect of the Methodists called the Inghamites. He was an itinerant minister, and was often the companion of the Wesleys on their preaching tours, and shared with them the severe persecutions through which they were called to pass. He is best known as the author of the beautiful hymn, found in many collections, commencing with the line, "Sweet the moment, rich in blessing." See Belcher, Historical Sketches of Hymns, p. 81.

Batty, Edward, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Liverpool. He was converted in youth, and entered the ministry in 1808. A few of his circuits were, Sunderland, 1813 to 1814; Isle of Wight, 1817 to 1819; Bath, 1824 to 1826; York, Nottingham, etc. He became a supernumerary in 1848, taking up his residence in Guernsey, where he had formerly (1820-21) been stationed. He still worked. He died suddenly while attending the conference at Manchester, July 26, 1849, aged sixty-six. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1849.

Batty, James, an English Congregational minister, was born at Dent, Yorkshire, in 1779. In the midst of this dark and irreligious town Rev. George Whitfield once preached, and in the little chapel afterwards erected there Mr. Batty became a Christian, and soon began to lead the devotions, and eventually became the pastor (about 1816), still laboring at his worldly calling for his support. He preached three times on Sunday with great acceptance, and also in the surrounding villages with great usefulness, till his death, April 7, 1856. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1857, p. 168.

Batty, Thomas, an English Methodist preacher, was born in 1793 at Plessey, Northumberland. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and entered the itinerant ministry of the New Connection in 1818. He travelled in seventeen circuits, and, though neither learned nor accomplished, was a successful soul-winner in every circuit. Illness prostrated him in 1843, and he retired to the city of Ripon, where he died peacefully, March 30, 1844. See Minutes of the Conference, 1844.

Baucio, Carlo, an Italian theologian, was born at Capua in the 17th century. He wrote, Tractatus de Judicio Universali (Naples, 1640): — Varia Opuscula de Miscellaneis Practicis Casuum Conscientiæ (ibid. 1651): — Selecta Casuum Conscientiæ Reconditorum, etc. (ibid. 1652). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudart, Wilhelm, a Protestant theologian of Holland, was born at 1564 at Deinse, a small village of Flanders. He studied at Emden, and was at first pastor at Sneek, then at Zutphen, where he died in 1640. He was commissioned by the Synod of Dort, with Bucer and Bogerman, to prepare a new translation of the Old Test. This appeared under the title, Genetwaaardige Geschiedenissen go kerkelijke ols merdelijke, etc. (Arnheim, 1624). He also published a collection of sentences entitled, Apophthegmata Christiana (Amst. 1657): — Polemographia Auraco-Belgica (ibid. 1622). This work was published in France under the title, Description des Sièges, Batailles, Rencontres, etc., durant les Guerres des Pays-Bas ou de Nassau (ibid. 1616). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudemond, abbot of the monastery of Blandin, at Gand, in Flanders, lived in 690. He wrote a history of the life of St. Amand, whose disciple he probably was. It is found published in Bolandus, Acta Sanctorum, vol. i. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudet, Étienne, a French engraver, was born at Blois about 1620, and studied first in Paris. He afterwards went to Rome and adopted the style of Bloemart. His best works are said to approach the style of John Baptist Poilly. He was a member of the Royal Academy of Paris, where he died in 1691. The following are some of his principal sacred works: The Virgin Teaching the Infant Jesus to Read: — The Woman of Samaria: — Adam and Eve: — The Nativity: — The Communion of the Primitive Christians: — Moses Treading on the Crown of Pharaoh: — Worship of the Golden Calf: — Moses Striking the Rock. See Biog. Universale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Baudet, Gui, bishop of Langres, was born at Beaune, in Franche Comté, at the close of the 13th century. He was first professor of law, then chancellor of France in 1334, under Philip of Valois. He died in 1339. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudillius, saint and martyr. The name of this saint has been corrupted in various ways, but Baudillius is that assigned to him by St. Gregory of Tours (De Gloria Mart. i, 78). Very little is known about him, but the common opinion is, that he was born in that part of Celtic Gaul which lay towards the Loire; that he was married, and bore arms, although he is also said to have been subdeacon in the Church of Orleans. He suffered martyrdom at Nîmes, in the 3d or 4th century, and is a saint of some celebrity in Spain and France. His festival is marked on May 20, and an account of him will be found in the Acta Sanctorum.

Baudouin DE NINONE, canon of the abbot Church of Ninone in Belgium, and a monk of the Premonstrant Order, who lived at the end of the 13th century, left a chronicle from the birth of Christ to the year 1294, which is preserved among the MSS. of his abbey. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudouin, François, a French theologian and lawyer, was born at Arras, Jan. 1, 1520, and taught law successively at Strasburg and Heidelberg. He was the orator of Antony of Bourbon at the Council of Trent. He died at Paris, Nov. 3, 1573, leaving some historical and literary works, especially on Roman jurisprudence. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudouin, Gabriel, a French preacher of the Congregation of St. Vincent de Paul, and founder of the great Hospice of the Infant Jesus at Warsaw, was born April 5, 1689, at Avesnes, in Flanders. In 1717 he came to Poland, and there distinguished himself for more than half a century by his religious virtues and labors. He died at Warsaw, Feb. 10, 1768. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudouin, Louis Marie, a French priest, and founder of an order of nuns called the Ursulines of Jesus, was born Aug. 2, 1765, at Montaign, diocese of Luçon. He finished his studies at the Seminary of the Lazarites at Luçon, and took refuge in Spain during the Revolution. At the renewal of the amnesty accorded to the clergy, he returned to France and devoted himself to the Sables d'Olonne. There, in concert with a pious woman, he resolved to found a society for young women, for the purpose of giving a Christian education to the young, especially those connected with the order. This resulted in the founding of the above-mentioned society. He died at Chavanges, Feb. 12, 1835. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudran, BARTHÉLEMY, a French Jesuit and theologian, was born about 1730 at Vienne, in Dauphiny, and died at Lyons near the close of the 18th century. A number of his works have been published together under the title Œuvres Spirituelles de Baudran (Lyons, 1777). He afterwards published anonymously, L'Âme Contemplant les Grandeurs de Dieu, with L'Âme se Préparant à l'Éternité (ibid. 1778):—L'Âme Élevée à Dieu (ibid. 1776):—L'Âme Affirmée dans la Foi (ibid. 1777):—L'Âme Intérieure, ou Cécitude Spirituelle dans les Voies de Dieu (ibid. 1776). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudrand, HENEL, a French theologian, was born in Paris in 1637. He was director of theology and rector of St. Sulpice at Paris, and died at Beaune, in Gatinais, Oct. 18, 1699. He wrote Recueil Manuscrit des Actes de la Faculté de Théologie de Paris. This MS. is preserved in the library of the Seminary of St. Sulpice. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudrexel, PHILIP JAKOB, a Suabian theologian and musical composer, who was born at Fies about 1635, and died about 1700, was the author of, Primiæ Musiculis (Ulm, 1664, 4to):—Psalmi Vespertini (Co-logne, 1668, 4to). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baudri (or Baudry). See BALDERICUS.

Baudry (d'Asson), ANTOINE, a French Jansenist theologian, was a native of Poitou. At the age of thirty he left his native country, where he possessed a rich priory, and in 1647 entered at Port Royal des Champs, near Paris. On the suppression of Port Royal in 1662, he established himself in a house on the Faubourg St. Anthony, where he died, in 1668. He wrote Placet pour les Abbesses, Prieures et Religieuses de Port Royal, contre M. l'Archevêque de Paris (Paris, 1664). He published, in collaboration with Pont-Chateau of St. Martha, Anthony Amauld, and Varet, Morale Pratique des Jésuites (Bologna, 1669 sq.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bauduer, GILLES ARNAUD, a French theologian, was born at Peyrusse-Massas, near Auch, in March, 1744. He studied Hebrew and Greek, and taught theology in the Seminary of Auch. He died in 1787. Besides some unfinished MSS., he published a translation of the Psalms (Paris, 1783). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bauduin, DOMINIC, a French theologian and orator of Flemish extraction, was born at Liege, Nov. 14, 1742. He devoted himself to the instruction of the young, and was for a long time professor of history at Maëstricht. He died Jan. 3, 1809. His principal works are, Essai sur l'Immortalité de l'Âme (Dijon, 1781), republished under the title, De l'Immortalité de l'Homme, or Essai sur l'Excellence de sa Nature (Liege, 1805):—La Religion Chrétienne Justifiée au Tribunal de la Politique et de la Philosophie (ibid. 1788, 1797). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bauer, Adolph Gaspard, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Heltstadt, Feb. 27, 1662. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg; was in 1687 pastor at Silda and Harkeroda, in the County of Mansfield; and died March 4, 1719. He published, Disputatio de Religione Christiana (Wittenberg, 1685):—De Jehova Elohim Provisore et Vite Socialis Consulatore ex Gen. ii, 18 (ibid. 1686):—De Inductione (ibid. 1687):—De Leziologia Sacra in 1 Cor. ii, 1 (ibid. eod.):—De Beati tudine Dei ex 1 Tim. vi, 15, 16 (ibid. eod.). See Leporin, Leben der Gelehrten in Deutschland, i, 85; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bauer, Andreas, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Zeitz, March 10, 1590. He was professor of theology and archdeacon of St. Nicolai at Leipsic, where he died, Nov. 1, 1638. He wrote Dissertationes de Vera, Reali, ac Substantiali Carnis ac Sanguinis Christi in Actione Cœnæ Præsentia. See Götze, Elogia Theologorum; Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bauer, Bruno, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Eisenberg, in the duchy of Altenburg, Sept. 6, 1809. In 1834 he was private lecturer of theology at Berlin, and from 1839 to 1842 at Bonn, where, however, the venia docendi was taken from him on account of his Kritik der evangelischen Geschichte des Johannes (Bremen, 1840) and Kritik der evangelischen Geschichte der Synoptiker (Leipsic, 1840, 3 vols.; 2d ed. 1846). After that he lived at Berlin, and died at Rixdorf, near Berlin, April 13, 1882. Bauer was a representative of the left Hegelian wing and an extreme rationalist. Besides the above-named works, he published, Kritik der Geschichte der Offenbarung (Berlin, 1838):—Kritik der Evangelien und Geschichte seiner Ursprungs (ibid. 1850-52, 4 vols.):—Kritik der paulinischen Briefe (ibid. 1850-52, 3 pts.):—Christus und die Cæsaren (ibid. 1879):—Einfluss des englischen Quäkertums auf die deutsche Cultur (ibid. 1878):—Philos., Strauss, und Renan und das Urchristenthum (ibid. 1874). (B. P.)

Bauer, Christian Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 27, 1696, at Hopfgarten, in Thuringia. He studied at Leipsic, and died as doctor and professor of theology at Wittenberg, Sept. 28, 1782. He wrote, Disput. de Melchisedeco ex Hebr. vii., 2 (Leipsic, 1720):—Einleitung zur Hebräischen Accentuation (ibid. 1747):—Interpretatio Prophetiae Joelis (ibid. eod.):—Decades III Disputatum Theologic. ad Vindicandos Textus V. T. pro Christo in N. T. Citatos (Wittenberg, eod.):—Regia Davidis Theologia, quam Liber Psalmorum Tradit (ibid. 1750):—Collectio Nova Disputt. ad Vindicandos Textus V. Test. (ibid. 1752). See Dunkel, Nachrichten, i, 585; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; First, Bibl. Jud. i, 94; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bauer, Christoph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schneeberg in 1718. He studied at Wittenberg, and in 1744 was appointed deacon at Gräfenhaynichen, where in 1766 he also acted as superintendent. In 1768 he was called to the same office in Wurzen, where he died in 1778. He wrote, Die vorwitzige Kunst den Heiland durchs Loos um Rath zu fragen, aus den Quellen des Heidenthums hergeleitet und geprüft (Wittenberg, 1755):—Praktische Prüfung der Gründe, womit D. Heuman unsere Abendmahlslehre bestritten, aus der Patristik und Kirchengeschichte (ibid. 1765):—Sedes Doctrinae Biblica de Aeterna Filii Dei Generatione, Psalmii ii (Leipsic, 1775). See Dietmann, Chursächsische Priesterschaft, iv, 67; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 356, 453. (B. P.)

Bauer, Friedrich Gottlieb, a German theologian, son of Adolph Gaspard, was born at Silda, March 11, 1691. He studied at Jena, and died at Quenstedt, Feb. 21, 1740. He wrote, Disputatio de Harmonia Vitae Jehosaphati Regis Judae adductum Cup. Postr. Libr. I Reg. et 2 Chron. c. xvii—xxi (Jena, 1718):—De Monogamia ex Veteri Fædere Assorta in Mulach. ii, 15, 16 (ibid. eod.):—Terminus, Gottesgelehrte auf dem Lande; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bauer, Johann Friedrich Christoph, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Uffenheim, May 2, 1803. He studied at Erlangen; in 1826 was appointed vicar at Würzburg; in 1829 pastor at Marktbreit; and in 1839 dean and pastor at Würzburg, where he died Jan. 24, 1873. He published, Vom kirchlichen Indifferentismus im protestantischen Volke (Bamberg, 1839):—Gamaliel oder die Garantien der Kirche (ibid. 1840):—Ueber die Theilnahme der Geistlichen an der Armenpflege in ihren Gemeinden (Nürnberg, 1841). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 75. (B. P.)

Bauer, Johann Jakob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Genkingen, in Würtemberg, June 20, 1729. He studied at Tübingen, and died there Jan. 29, 1772, as doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, Disput. de Sanguine Christi in Cælis extra Corpus Existente (Tübingen, 1752):—Comment. Operationes Dei in Animis Hominum esse Miracula (1758):—Tentamen Exegeseos Nova Psa. xvi (1759):—Diss. Inaug. de Regendis Linitibus Criticis Textus Hebraici (1760):—Stricture quædam ex Philosophia Hebræorum, etc. (1766):—Acentus Hebraici, Institutum Plane Incomparabile (1768):—Dissert. Inaug. de Inscript. Sepulcrali, quam Hiobus Moribundus sibi ipsi Visus, Pont Voluit, Fide in Golem Messiam Plenissima, cap. xix, 23–27 (1770):—Theses ad Crisin Vet. Test. Pertinentes (1772):—Diss. Philolog. Hermeneutica in Oruc. Rom. i, 17 (1774):—Disp. quæ Annotationes ad Psalmum lxxviii Sistit. See Böck, Gesch. der Universität Tübingen; Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bauer, Karl Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Frohburg, Aug. 24, 1765. In 1785 he was pastor at his native place; in 1809 archdeacon, and in 1837 pastor at St. Nicolai in Leipsic, where he died in 1843. He wrote, Paragraphen als Grundlage zu Vorlesungen über Homiletik (Leipsic, 1826):—Die rechte Jubelfreude der Augsbургischen Confessionsverwandten (ibid. 1830):—Mahnungen der Zeit an die Vorstände der evangel.-protest. Kirche (ibid. eod.):—Was sind in der gegenwärtigen Zeit evangelisch-protestantische Christen der Ehre ihrer Kirche schuldig? (ibid. 1831):—Bedenken über verschiedene in der evangel. Landeskirche des Königreichs Sachsen sich regende Wunsch (ibid. 1833), etc. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 18, 60, 92, 133, 160, 196; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 74, ii, 1517 sq. (B. P.)

Bauer, Karl Ludwig, a Protestant theologian and philologist of Germany, was born at Leipsic, July 18, 1730. In 1756 he was rector at Lauban, and in 1766 at Hirschberg, in Silesia, where he died Sept. 7, 1799. He wrote, Philologia Thucydeæ-Paulina (Halle, 1773):—Logica Paulina, etc. (ibid. 1774):—Rhetorica Paulina (ibid. 1782). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 80, 112, 132; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 74. (B. P.)

Bauerschubert, Joseph, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1766 at Birnfeld. He performed his first ministerial functions at Würzburg, but soon after the outbreak of the French Revolution he was persecuted and deposed from his office. He died Sept. 24, 1797, as chaplain at Hausen, near Fährbrück, in the Würzburg diocese. He is the author of, Erbauungsbuch für Katholiken (Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 1793):—Sermons (8 vols., Erfurt and Leipsic, 1795–1801; some volumes were edited by Laubender). See Döring, Die Gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 54; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 145, 150. (B. P.)

Baufeti, Guillaume, bishop of Paris, was at first physician of king Philip of Valois, and died in 1320. He wrote a small treatise entitled, De Septem Ecclesiæ Sacramentis (Leipsic, 1512; Lyons, 1567). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bauge (or Baugi), in Norse mythology, was a Jote, brother of Suttung, who possessed the costly Meth, a drink which possessed the power of imparting the art of poetry and eloquence. Odin, desirous of possessing the same, made several fruitless propositions to the giant. He then took on the appearance of a servant, and, after slaying the nine servants of Bauge, offered to do the work of the nine laborers if Bauge would give him a taste of the Meth. Bauge promised, and, when the work was completed, led the god to the mountain where his brother lived. The entrance was blocked up by a huge rock, which Odin ordered Bauge to cut into. Bauge bored through it, and Odin converted himself into a snake and crept in. He now changed himself into the most beautiful man, and won by his songs and form the love of Gunlóde, the daughter of Suttung, and she favored him for three nights, consenting to his taking three draughts of the poetic Meth, which she guarded. Odin thus drank all of the Meth and flew away in the form of an eagle, but not without danger, for Suttung sought to overtake him in the same form. Odin had nearly reached Asgard, when he lost some of the Meth. This fell to the poor poets. The rest of the Meth Odin preserved in vessels. The gods very seldom gave it away, and then only to their favorites.

Bauge, Étienne de, bishop of Autun in 1113, renounced his bishopric in order to enter the monastery at Cluny. John Monteleon published in 1517 a work by this bishop upon Les Ordres Ecclesiastiques et les Ceremonies de la Messe. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baughner, Henry Lewis, D.D., a Lutheran divine, was born at Abbotstown, Pa., July 19, 1804. He graduated at Dickinson College in 1826, and studied theology at Gettysburg, Pa., and Princeton, N. J. He became pastor of a church at Boonsboro', Md., in 1829, and was a teacher at Gettysburg, Pa., from 1830 to 1832. He was professor of Greek and belles-lettres in Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, from 1832 to 1850, when he became its president, a post which he held until his death, April 14, 1868.

Baughman, JOHN A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Hartford County, Md., Aug. 2, 1802. He removed in early life with his parents to Ohio, experienced conversion in his nineteenth year, and in 1823 entered the Ohio Conference. He labored twelve years in Ohio, and thirty-two in Michigan. He was a true pioneer preacher. Mr. Baughman died in Detroit, Mich., March 1, 1868. He was a man of extraordinary physical strength, with a trumpet voice, cheerful temper, and untiring energy; a favorite both among children and adults. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 175; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Bauldri, PAUL, a French theological historian, was born of Protestant parents in 1639 at Rouen. He studied at Saumur and Oxford, was in 1685 appointed professor of church history at Utrecht, and died Feb. 16, 1706. He published, Lactantii De Moribus Persecutorum cum Notis Variorum:—Syntagma Calendariorum:—Considerationes Criticæ in Jobi cap. xxi., 31. See Burmann, Trajectum Eruditum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 909; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bauldry, MICHAEL, a French Benedictine of the 17th century, whom Ziegelbauer styled "primum Latiniacensis, tum Malleacensis cathedralis ecclesiæ magni priorem," is the author of, Manuale Sacrarum Cereemoniarum juxta Ritus S. Romanæ Ecclesiæ (Paris, 1646; 4th ed. Venice, 1703; 6th ed. 1719 a. o.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 625; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Baulthorn (or Bölthorn), in Norse mythology, was a forefather of Odlin on the mother's side. His daughter was called Bestla, and was married to Bör, the son of Bures. Baulthorn was grandfather likewise of Wile, and We, by Bestla.

Baum, JOHANN WILHELM, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in the year 1806. When he was ten years of age he was taken to Strasburg, into the house of his uncle, where he prepared himself for the ministry. After completing his studies he was appointed assistant at St. Thomas's, and afterwards first preacher there. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war, the German government appointed him professor at the University. He died as doctor and professor of theology, Oct. 29, 1878. Baum has made himself known by his writings touching the history of the Reformation, as well as that of his own time. Thus he published, Franz Lambert von Avignon (Strasburg and Paris, 1840):—Theodor Bezu nach handschriftlichen Quellen dargestellt (Leipsic, 1843):—Johann Georg Stuber, der Vorgänger Oberlins im Steinhale und Vorkämpfer einer neuen Zeit in Strassburg (Strasburg, 1846):—Capito und Butzer, being the third part of "Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Besslinder der reformirten Kirche." For a number of years he assisted his colleagues, Reuss and Cunitz, in the edition of Calvin's works, published in the Corpus Reformatorum. The University of Strasburg owes to him a large collection of letters, which belong to the period of the Reformation in Alsace. He belonged to the liberal Protestant party of his country. See M. Baum, Johann W. Baum, ein protestantisches characterbild aus dem Elsass (Bremen, 1880). (B. P.)

Baumann, Christian Sacale, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Berlin, Nov. 30, 1725, and died about the close of that century, leaving several memoirs on religious subjects. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baumann, Gottlob, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 10, 1794, at Besigheim. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1822 pastor at Notzingen, and accepted in 1839 a call to Kennath, near Stuttgart, where he died, Oct. 3, 1856. He is the author of, Christ- liches Hausbüchlein, of which 30,000 copies were sold. Besides, he wrote some hymns, which are still found in German hymn-books. See Knapp, Leichenrede mit Lebenslauf (Stuttgart, 1856); Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 43. (B. P.)

Baumann, John V. W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Beaufort, O., Feb. 22, 1841. He became an orphan at the age of eleven, experienced religion in 1858, received license to preach in 1859, and in 1863 graduated from the Illinois Wesleyan University. He served as supply in the Central Illinois and Illinois Conferences in 1864, and in 1866 joined the Illinois Conference, in which, through excessive labor and exposure, he brought upon himself disease of the lungs, of which he died, July 17, 1867. As a student Mr. Baumann was earnest, manly, and persevering; as a pastor methodical, faithful, laborious, and successful; as a Christian pure. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1867, p. 224.

Baumbach, JOHANN BALTHASAR, a German Orientalist, was professor of Hebrew and Greek at Heidelberg, where he died, Sept. 6, 1622. He is the author of, De Libro Psalms:—De Trium Linguarum Orientalium, Hebr. Chald. et Syrc. Antiquitate et Utilitate, etc.:—De Appellationibus Dei, quæ in Scriptis Rabbinarum Occurrunt:—De Urin et Thumim et Bath-Kol:—De Modo Disputandi cum Judæis. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrtes-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliographisches Handbuch, p. 19, No. 181; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Baume (Montrevel), CLAUDE DE LA, cardinal-archbishop of Besançon, was born in 1531. He had as vicar-general Anthony Lulle, father of the famous Raymond Lulle of the Isle of Majorca. It was this Anthony Lulle who collected the synodal statutes of the diocese of Besançon, and published them under the title, Statuta Synodalia Biont. Eccles. Metrop., cum Tractat. Summariis (Lyons, Rouille, 1560). Baume-Montrevel distinguished himself by his zeal against the Calvinists, whom he drove out of his diocese. His uncle, Peter de Baume, bishop of Geneva, driven from his see by the Calvinists, became cardinal-archbishop of Besançon. Claude de la Baume died June 15, 1584. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baumeister, KARL AUGUST, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Görlitz, Aug. 21, 1741. In 1779 he joined the Moravian Brethren, who elected him in 1814 as their bishop. He died at Herrnbut, Aug. 8, 1818. He is the author of some fine hymns, which are to be found in the Moravian hymn-book. See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 448; Knapp, Evangelischen Liederschatz, p. 1824. (B. P.)

Baumgarten, JAKOB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, father of Sigismund Jakob, was born Aug. 30, 1668, at Wolmirstadt, near Magdeburg. He studied at Leipsic and Erfurt; went to Halle with A. H. Francke, who appointed him, in 1697, inspector of the pædagogium, which was founded in 1695. In 1701 he was appointed pastor at his native place. In 1713 he was called to Berlin as garrison preacher, and in 1717 was appointed pastor of the Friedrichswerder and Dorotheenstadt Congregation. He died June 29, 1722. He is the author of some hymns. See Baumgarten, Fnebralia (Berlin, 1722); Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iv, 380 sq. (B. P.)

Baumgarten-Crusius, LUDWIG FRIEDRICH OTTO, a distinguished German theologian, was born at Merseburg, July 31, 1788. He entered the University of Leipsic in 1805, and studied theology and philosophy. In 1812 he was appointed professor extraordinary of theology at Jena. Here he remained during the rest of his life, ultimately becoming the head of the theological faculty. He died May 31, 1843. His theological lectures took a wide range, including all departments except Church history. His principal strength lay in the treatment of the history of Christian dogmas.

The most important of his numerous published works are, Lehrbuch der Christlichen Sittenlehre (1826):—Grundzüge der biblischen Theologie (1828):—Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte (1832):—Ueber Schleiermacher, seine Denkart, und seine Verdienst (1834):—and Compendium der Dogmengeschichte (1840). Commentaries on several of the books of the New Test., gathered from his papers, were also published after his death.

Bäumlein, Wilhelm, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died in 1866, is the author of, Versuch, die Bedeutung des Johanneischen Logos aus den Religions-systemen des Orients zu entwickeln (Tübingen, 1828):—Commentatio de Habacuci Vaticiniis (Heilbronn, 1841). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 79; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 95. (B. P.)

Baumunk, John, a German Reformed minister, was born at Reichenbach, Hesse-Darmstadt, Feb. 15, 1824. He emigrated to America in 1837, and was licensed to preach by the Miami Classis of Seven Mile, Butler Co., O., in 1852. He accepted a call from Samuel's, near Millville, O., the same year; also another at Seymour, Jackson Co., Ia., during the year 1856, where he labored with success until Sept. 16, 1857, when he died of insanity. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 406.

Bauny, Étienne, a French theologian, was born at Mouzon (Ardennes) in 1564. In 1593 he entered the Jesuit Order, and there taught successively classical studies and ethical theology. He attributes to conscience, says abbé Boulliot, the power of imputing to his enemies the supposed crimes, without calumny, of killing without becoming guilty of homicide; of appropriating the goods of another without stealing; and of disclosing numerous means of gaining heaven in spite of all. Nevertheless, his works were examined and sanctioned by his order. He died at St. Pol de Leon, Brittany, Dec. 4, 1649. Some of his works are as follows: Constitutiones Synodales Diocesis Leonensis (Paris, 1630):—Extrait d'un Livre intitulé Somme des Péchés, etc.:—Summa Casuum Conscientie (ibid. 1631):—Theologia Moralis (ibid. 1640). These moral works of Bauny were condemned at Rome by a decree, Oct. 26, 1640, and censured by the assembly of the clergy at Mantes in 1642, and by pope Urban VIII in 1642. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Baur, Samuel, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Ulm, Jan. 31, 1768. He studied at Jena and Tübingen, and died May 25, 1832, as pastor at Alpeke, near Ulm. He published, Archiv skizz. Religionsvorträge (Hildburghausen, 1793-1805, 8 vols.):—Repertorium für alle Anstverrichtungen eines Predigers (1805-35, 12 vols.):—Praktisches Handbuch für alle Kanzel- und Alturgeschäfte (Tübingen, 1829-31, 4 vols.):—Materialien zu extemporirbaren Kanzelvorträgen (1828-30, 2 vols.):—Andachten bei der Beicht und Kommunion (Ulm, 1819):—and a number of other homiletical and ascetical works, for which see Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 125, 135 sq., 182 sq., 203, 337, 367, 385, 391, 396, 398; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 81 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Baur, Valentin F., a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1757, and died as professor of theology at Tübingen, July 2, 1813. He is the author of, Ueber das Verhältniss der praktischen Theologie zur wissenschaftlichen (Tübingen, 1811):—Predigten (ibid. 1808-10, 2 vols.):—Zum Nachdenken über die christliche Confirmationshandlung (ibid. 1813). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 2, 130, 374; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 82. (B. P.)

Bauriegel, Karl Ernst, a German doctor of philosophy, and teacher at the seminary in Plauen, was born at Pulgar, in March, 1809, and died July 25, 1841. He wrote, Protestantische Glaubenslehre für Volksschullehrer (Leipzig, 1841):—Religionsgeschichte für Volksschullehrer und Volksschulen (Neustadt, 1845). See

Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 82; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. (suppl.), p. 216. (B. P.)

Bauriegel, Johann Christoph, a German teacher, was born at Kesselsham in 1773, and died at Pulgar, near Leipsic, in 1851. He wrote, Religionsbuch zum Hausgebrauche für Kinder (Neustadt, 1835; 2d ed. 1840):—Die Hauptstücke des Katechismus Lutheri mit Erklärungen (ibid. 1837):—Der Unterricht in der christl. Religion für Kinder (ibid. eod.):—Katechisationen über Gottes Wesen, Werke, und Wille (ibid. 1838-39, 8 pts.):—Vollständiger Auszug aus Dinter's Katechisationen (3d ed. 1841, 2 vols.):—Die Bibel für Schule und Haus (Grimma, 1840). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 82 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. (suppl.), p. 217. (B. P.)

Baur, Alfred, D.D., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was of French descent, and brother-in-law of bishop Henshaw. His first parish was in Guilford, Vt.; in 1822 he became rector of St. Mary's, Newton Lower Falls, Mass., where he remained until April, 1851. He afterwards officiated in St. Mark's, Boston; and at the time of his death was rector of Trinity Church, Bridgewater, and of St. Paul's, Hopkinton. He died at Boston, Dec. 26, 1865. He was an able preacher. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1866, p. 127.

Bause, Johann Friedrich, a German engraver, was born at Halle, in Saxony, in 1738. He is said to have learned the art without an instructor, and to have imitated the style of J. G. Wille. He died at Weimar in 1814. The following are two of his sacred plates: The Repentance of St. Peter and The Three Apostles.

Bautain, Louis Eugène Marie, D.D., a French philosopher and theologian, was born in Paris, Feb. 17, 1796. At the École Normale he adopted the views of Cousin, and in 1816 was called to the chair of philosophy in the University of Strasbourg. In 1828 he took orders, and resigned his chair in the university. He still remained at Strasbourg, however, for a number of years delivering lectures; and in 1849 he set out for Paris as vicar of the diocese. In 1853 he was made professor of moral theology at Paris, and held that post until his death, Oct. 18, 1867. In philosophy he was a scholastic of the Anselmic school, but in theology he showed Hegelian tendencies. Among his works the most important are, Philosophie du Christianisme (1833):—Psychologie Experimentale (1839; new ed. entitled Esprit Humain et ses Facultés, 1859):—Philosophie Morale (1842):—Conférences sur la Religion et la Liberté (1848):—and La Morale de l'Évangile Comparée aux Divers Systèmes de Morale (1855). For others see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Bava, Andrea, an Italian theologian, was born at Cavagnola, in Montserrat, in the latter half of the 16th century, and wrote, Trattato della Sede (Genoa, 1557): Istruzione della Vita Cristiana (Turin, 1564; improved ed. ibid. 1567). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bavière, Jean de (called Sans Pitié), bishop of Liège, lived at the commencement of the 15th century. He filled the country with troubles and scandals. The people of Liège revolted against him, and opposed to him Thierry of Harnes. Jean vanquished them in the bloody battle of Othee, and deprived them of their liberty and privileges. He allied himself with the count of Hainaut and the duke of Burgundy against France. In 1418 he obtained the subdeaconry, left the bishopric of Liège, and married the widow of Anthony, duke of Burgundy. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bavithin, Sr., succeeded St. Colomb as abbot of Hy. He died Jan. 9, 599, having written a Life of St. Colomb in Irish verse, and some Prophecies.

Bavo, Sr. (whose proper name was Allorin), the patron saint of Ghent, in Flanders, and of Haarlem, in Holland, was born about 589. Upon the death of his wife, he was brought to repentance through the preaching of St. Amandus. Bavo confessed to him his sins, sold all his goods and gave to the poor. Returning to St. Amandus at Ghent, he retired into the monastery which that saint had lately founded there in honor of St. Peter. After a time, he was admitted to the clerical office; and, being attached to the person of St. Amandus, benefited by his example and instructions. After visiting the most celebrated monasteries of France, he resolved upon his return to Ghent to endeavor to unite the austerity of the life of an anchorite to the observation of a conventual rule. A huge, hollow beech-tree formed his cell, which, after a time, he exchanged for a little hut in the forest of Malmédun, near Ghent; and again for the monastery of St. Peter, where he lived in total seclusion, practising the most unheard-of mortifications. He died Oct. 1, 653, or thereabouts. Many miracles are recounted as having been worked at his tomb in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, which monastery was subsequently called by the name of St. Bavo, and secularized in 1537. In 1540, when the Church of St. Bavo was converted into a citadel, the new canons were transferred to the parish Church of St. John, which was, in 1559, erected into a cathedral, and called thenceforwards the Cathedral of St. Bavo. The name of this saint occurs on 1 Oct. in martyrologies as ancient as the 9th century. See Acta SS. April, i, 874; May, ii, 494; Baillet, Oct. iii, 15; Butler, vol. x.

Bavosi, ALFONSO, an Italian theologian, was born at Bologna. He was canon regular of the Order of St. Augustine, and was several times elected general. He died May 5, 1628. He wrote, Controversiæ Miscellaneæ (Venice, 1580, 1589; Bologna, 1607):—Disputationes Catholicæ in quibus Præcipue Græcorum quorundam Opiniones Orthodoxæ fidei Recipiuntur, etc. (ibid, eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bawden (or Bawdween), WILLIAM, an English clergyman who was born in 1762, undertook a translation of the Domesday Book, which was to be completed in ten volumes; but he died in 1816, leaving only two volumes finished, which were published (Lond. 1809, 1812). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bawdkin. See BALDACHINO.

Bawor, in Norse mythology, was a dwarf who lived in stones and never made his appearance.

Baxmann, RUDOLF, a German licentiate of theology, was born at Stendal in 1832, and died July 2, 1869, on the same day on which the University of Göttingen had honored him with the doctorate of divinity. He is best known as the author of, Die Politik der Päpste von Gregor I bis auf Gregor VII (2 vols.):—Friedrich Schleiermacher, sein Leben und Wirken (Bonn, 1864):—Philippi Melancthonis Epistulæ Tres, nunc Primum Editæ et Commentario Instructæ (Vitebergæ, 1860). (B. P.)

Baxter, Andrew, a Scotch philosophical writer, was born at Aberdeen, in 1686, and educated at the university of the town. He was employed as private tutor to young gentlemen, among whom were lords Gray, Blantyre, and others. With the latter he travelled, and resided six years on the Continent. He published an Enquiry into the Nature of the Human Soul (Lond, 4to; 2d ed. 2 vols. 8vo). An appendix was subsequently published, and dedicated to the widely known John Wilkes. In 1779 Dr. Duncan collected from the MSS. of Baxter, and published, The Evidence of Reason in Proof of the Immortality of the Soul Independent of the More Abstruse Inquiry into the Nature of Matter and Spirit. Mr. Baxter published, for the use of his pupils and his son, a piece entitled Mathe sive Cosmotheoria Puerilis (Lond. 1740, 2 vols.). His treatise on the soul has been highly commended, and by no less authority than Dugald Stewart. Though he was not a graduate, he acquired a large amount of learning. He died in Aberdeen in 1750. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (W. P. S.)

Baxter, Benjamin Stephens, a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Elihu B. Baxter, was born at Cornwall, Vt., Aug. 8, 1809. In early life he was a carpenter, and began to preach in 1836, assisting Rev. Sherman Kellogg, the evangelist. Although he had previously labored with the Congregationalists, he was ordained Sept. 25, 1842, as a Free-will Baptist minister, in Waterbury, Vt., and the following year preached in East Whitehall, N. Y. During several succeeding years he labored as an evangelist with different denominations. In 1854 he resumed his relations with the Congregational Church, and became acting-pastor in Campton, Ill., in 1855, serving until 1857. The year following he preached in Plano, Ill. From 1859 to 1862 he ministered in Burns and Leon, Wis.; 1862 to 1864 in Biroqua and Portland; 1864 to 1868 in Mauston; 1868 to 1870 in Tomah; 1870 to 1872 in Hale; 1873 to 1877 in Mauston, where he remained without charge thereafter until his death, which occurred June 14, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 11.

Baxter, John, one of the first Wesleyan missionaries, was a native of England, a local preacher, and an employé in the Royal Dock Establishments at Chatham, Kent. In 1779 he went to the island of Antigua, W. I., where he was invested with a lucrative government office. Renouncing this in 1785 (Myles says 1786), he became a missionary among the slaves of the islands. Next to Nathaniel Gilbert, he may be considered the founder of Methodist missions in the West Indies. "He was greatly beloved by the negroes, and loved them in an equal degree; and went to glory (1806) from among them in the triumph of faith." See Myles, Chron. Hist. of the Methodists, p. 173; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism (see Index, vol. iii); Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 208.

Baxter, Joseph, a Congregational minister, and a lineal descendant of Richard Baxter of England, was the son of Lieut. John Baxter of Braintree, Mass., and was born June 4, 1676. He was a graduate of Harvard College in the class of 1693, and was ordained April 21, 1697. He offered his services as a missionary to the North American Indians, but they were so greatly under the influence of the Jesuit Ralle that they declined the offer. Mr. Baxter died May 2, 1745. See Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v.; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 319. (J. C. S.)

Baxterians, the followers of the nonconformist divine Richard Baxter (q. v.).

Bay is a principal compartment or division in the architectural arrangement of a building, marked either by the buttresses or pilasters on the walls, by the disposition of the main ribs of the vaulting of the interior, by the main arches and pillars, the principals of the roof, or by any other leading features that separate it into corresponding portions. The word is also sometimes used for the space between the mullions of a window, properly called a light; it is occasionally found corrupted into day.

Bay, ANDREW, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland. He was ordained by the New-Side Presbytery of Newcastle in 1748, and installed pastor of Round Hill Church, N. Y., and of Marsh Creek in Adams Co., Pa. He remained until 1760, and became pastor of Deer Creek Church, which relation he sustained seven years, when he was sent by the synod to the South to supply the vacancies which supplanted help. He visited the south branches of the Potomac, Wilmington, Newbern, Edenton, and Williamsburg. He also travelled extensively in Virginia and North and South Carolina. He made a tour of New England, and was sent by the synod in 1768 to the vacancies above Albany, N. Y. The congregation was, for its convenience, annexed to the New York Presbytery, which Bay joined in 1773, having accepted a call to Newtown, L. I., and after remaining a year was dismissed, he refusing to submit to the jurisdiction of the synod. He died in 1776. (W. P. S.)

Baya (Beya, or Vey), Sr.—commemorated Nov. 1 or 3—who is venerated at Dunbar, in Lothian, is said to have inhabited the island of Little Cumbrae, in the Clyde. She died on the island, and a chapel was raised over her remains, and may be the one now in ruins bearing her name. King places her in the 9th century.

Bayadere (from the Portuguese balladeira, i. e. ballet-dancer), is a professional dancing and singing girl of India. In the language of India they are called Devadasis, and are divided into various classes. The first live in the temple of Vishnu and Siva; they dance and sing during the solemnities of the worship. Those in the second class are called Natshes, or Natch-girls, and perform the same duties as above, but they do not belong to any particular pagodas. The third class are called Vestiatris, and those of the fourth Cancenis. The latter are placed under the care and supervision of an old woman, and are hired out by the latter, single or in greater numbers, in order to participate in festivities. They are taken from all ranks in life, are chosen for their beauty, and subjected to severe physical training, by which they acquire great variety and facility of motion. Most of these, that assist at the formal services of particular divinities in the temples, likewise serve the passions of the Brahmins so long as their beauty remains. If children are born to them, the girls are brought up to the occupation of their mothers, and the boys are trained to be musicians. They receive a fixed allowance of food and money, to which some classes add the income of an infamous profession. See DANCE.

Bayanne, ALPHONSO HUBERT (DE LATTIER), duke de, a French cardinal, was born at Valencia, Dauphiny, Oct. 30, 1739. He was auditor of the rote at the court of Rome in 1777, was appointed senator, April 6, 1813, and voted the forfeiture of the emperor in 1814. He was created peer of France by Louis XVIII., and assisted at the Champ de Mai, but was retained upon the list of peers, and refused to sit as judge in the trial of Marshal Ney. He died in Paris, July 26, 1818. He wrote a very rare and interesting medical work entitled, Discorso sopra la Mal'aria e le Malattie che Cagionano Principalemente in Varie Spiaggie d'Italia (Rome, 1793). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayard, Lewis P., D.D., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was a son of the Hon. Samuel Bayard, of Princeton, N. J. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1809; became rector of Trinity Church, Newark, N. J., in May, 1813; resigned his charge in 1820, and then preached in various places in the surrounding country; was the first Episcopal minister who officiated in Paterson, N. J.; and died at Malta, on his return from the Holy Land, Sept. 2, 1840. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 740.

Bayart, in the sagas of the Middle Ages, was the famous horse of the four Heimon children, on which they all sat, and whose fleetness, courage, and strength made them so dangerous to the king of France, that the forgiveness of four of their atrocious deeds was conditioned on the sacrifice of this noble steed. The oldest son, Renaud, was obliged to tie a millstone to the horse's neck, and throw it into the Seine; but it worked its way up again and swam to the shore. The weight was doubled and redoubled, but every time it gained new power and courage when it saw its rider. At last a millstone was tied to each foot, and around the neck, and Renaud was ordered away. The noble animal again came out of the water, but, not seeing its master, lost its strength and sank.

Bayer (DE BOPPART), Conrad, bishop of Metz
XI.—13

from 1415, was of the same family as Thierry Bayer de Boppart. This prelate first occupied his time in exterminating the brigands who were desolating the country, and bringing about a reconciliation between the people of Messina and the duke of Lorraine. He went to Rome to solicit the archbishopric of Treves for his nephew, James of Sterck. On his return he took the part of René of Anjou against Anthony of Vaudemont, was taken prisoner with René, and purchased his liberty with ten thousand talents of gold. Thanks to his generous ally, René also returned to his estate. The bishop of Metz employed him to introduce reforms and to subdue revolting vassals. In 1438 René bore arms into Italy. At that time, in concert with Erard of Chatelet, Bayer governed the two duchies. Bayer, in order to repulse them, in view of the financial crisis, laid taxes upon the estates of René, for which he was arrested, and gained his liberty only upon harsh conditions. The people of Messina received him in triumph, aided in paying the debts, and allied themselves with him in 1439 and 1440 to take revenge on the duke of Lorraine. Bayer consecrated the latter years of his life to the administration of his diocese. He protected artists, and called a number around him. He died April 20, 1459. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayer (Y SUBIAS), Francisco, a Spanish painter, was born at Saragossa, March 9, 1734. He was early instructed by an obscure painter, and soon after sent to Madrid, where he entered the school of Antonio Gonzales Valasquez. He painted several pictures for the churches of Madrid, among which were those of the life of St. Bruno, at the Carthusians. In 1765 he was received into the Academy at Madrid, and in 1788 made painter to the king. He died in August, 1795. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayer, Francisco Perez, a Spanish antiquary who was born at Valencia in 1711, and died in 1794, wrote, De Numis Hebræo-Samaritanis (Valent. 1781), and Numm. Heb. Sum. Vindiciæ (1790). These are standard works on the subject to which they relate.

Bayer, J. Adam, a German Reformed minister, was born at Zweibrücken, Rhine Baiern, Dec. 26, 1807. He came to America, and in 1831 became pastor of some congregations in Westmoreland County, Pa. Subsequently he served Meadville and French Creek, in Crawford Co., Pa., from 1833 to 1836; Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y., from 1838 to 1844; Fort Wayne, Ind., 1845, withdrawing after a short time and returning to Dansville, N. Y., where he died, Aug. 24, 1878.

Bayer, Johann, a Hungarian theologian, was born at Eperies, and was called in 1650 to the University of Wittemberg, where he became professor of philosophy. He wrote, De Notitiis Dei Naturali (Wittemb. 1659), and some other works indicated by Haranyi. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayer, Johann Wolfgang, a German Jesuit missionary, was born at Schlesslitz, Bavaria. He was sent in 1749 to Peru, in order to propagate the Christian faith. After the dispersion of his order in 1722 he returned to his native country. Murr has published an abridged account of the travels of P. Bayer (Nuremb. 1776). He died in 1796. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayer (DE BOPPART), Thierry, a French prelate, exchanged in 1365 the bishopric of Worms for that of Metz. The historians of his time have spoken in high terms of his personal qualities. He terminated the discussions raised between the inhabitants of Metz and his predecessor, formed an alliance with the dukes of Lorraine and Bar, and with Charles IV combated the duke of Milan, concerning which affair he went as ambassador to Rome. The new strifes with the inhabitants of Messina, the quarrels with the clergy which he wished to settle, and the wars with the dukes of Lorraine and Bar occupied and disturbed all the rest of his life. He died Jan. 10, 1884. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayes, JOSHUA, an English Presbyterian minister, was born in 1671, and died in 1761. He was one of the writers who completed Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Holy Scriptures. He also published a work against Popery (2 vols. 1735). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bayfield, RICHARD, an English martyr, was for some time a monk of Bury. He was converted by some godly men of London, who went about visiting and preaching to friends in the country around. For reading the New Test. in Latin he was cast into prison, whipped with a gag in his mouth, and then put in the stocks for nine months. He was released through Dr. Barnes. He prospered in the knowledge of God mightily after this, and was beneficial to Tyndale and Frith for their works in Germany, France, and England. He afterwards went to London, and was there betrayed. The articles laid against him by the bishop of London were numerous. After his examination he was taken to Newgate, and there burned, Nov. 23, 1531. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 680.

Bayless, John Clark, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Louisville, Ky., Jan. 7, 1819. His mother died while he was an infant, but he was sedulously trained by a pious grandmother in the precepts and practices of gospel truth. He was graduated from Centre College, Ky., in 1836. While a student he was converted during a revival in Danville, united with the Church there, and was baptized by the Rev. Dr. John C. Young. He entered Princeton Seminary in June, 1837, and remained until September, 1838, when the state of his health compelled him to leave. He returned, however, in August, 1839, and remained until he had completed his course in the spring of 1841. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Louisville, Sept. 23, 1841, and spent his first year of ministerial labor at Cloverport, Ky., and vicinity. At the end of this time he became pastor of the church at Jeffersonville, Ind., for two years, and, in addition, was for one year chaplain to the penitentiary. In 1844 or 1845 he removed to Covington, Ky., where he succeeded in building up a flourishing church, and sent out a colony to organize a second church (now North Street) in that growing city. In 1852 he removed to north-eastern Kentucky, and took charge, for a part of his time, of Bethesda Church (now Ashland Church), in Boyd County. Here began that great evangelistic work in which he spent the last twenty years of his life, and which extended not only through north-eastern Kentucky, but all contiguous parts of West Virginia. On this wide and needy field preaching points and Sabbath-schools were established. Iron-furnaces were made centres of work. New churches were organized wherever practicable. Thus he soon had five or six organized churches under his care, and each was a centre of extended mission work. In April, 1866, he severed his connection with Ashland Church, still continuing his work as an evangelist. In 1867 he bought a mountain farm near Grayson, Carter Co., Ky., and henceforth resided there, still, however, earnestly continuing his missionary labors. But his health grew more and more feeble, and for four or five years before his death he was able to travel very little, especially in winter. He died May 23, 1875. Dr. Bayless espoused the Southern side during the civil war, and at the time of his death was in connection with the Presbytery of Ebenezer, of the Southern Assembly. He was a man of great ability, and of strong and clear views on all subjects to which he gave his attention. He was an earnest, effective, and instructive preacher. He was especially fond of children, and gave much time and labor to efforts to instruct and benefit them in every way. His end was full of Christian joy and even of triumph. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 23. (W. P. S.)

Bayless, Lewis C., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New York city, Sept. 26, 1838. He was educated at the New York Free Academy, and studied theology at the Seminary at Princeton, N. J. He was ordained by the New York Presbytery in 1862, and installed pastor of the Eighty-fourth Street Presbyterian Church, New York city. He died Aug. 18, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac 1866, p. 95.

Bayley, Abner, a Congregational minister, was born at Newbury, Mass., in 1716. He graduated from Harvard College in 1736, was ordained pastor of the church in Salem, N. H., Jan. 30, 1740, and died March 10, 1798. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 389.

Bayley, C., D.D., an English divine, was born about 1752, near Whitchurch, Shropshire. He was sent to the grammar-school, where by assiduity he made great progress in learning, staying there until he became the master. To his advancement in literature his excellent grammar in the Hebrew language bears sufficient testimony. He entered the ministry as curate of the Rev. John Fletcher, vicar of Madeley, Salop, and subsequently labored with the Rev. Dr. Conyers, at Deptford. After much labor and perseverance, he erected a church in Manchester, and in 1788 became its first pastor. Dr. Bayley retained this charge till his death, which occurred April 2, 1812. His diligence in pastoral duty, his faithfulness in the ministrations of the pulpit, and his purity of life, were such as to place him in the front rank of the servants of Christ. He published The Christian's Choice (Manchester, 1801, 12mo). See (Lond.) Christian Observer, August, 1812, p. 477.

Bayley, James, a Congregational minister, was born Sept. 12, 1650. He graduated from Harvard College in 1669, was ordained at Danvers in October, 1671, resigned his charge in 1680, and died in 1707. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 186.

Bayley, John, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Newcastle-under-Lime, Staffordshire, England, March 13, 1814. In his youth he became a bold and decided infidel. He came to America in 1836, was converted in 1839, and in 1840 joined the Virginia Conference. In 1845 he visited England, returning to his work the following year. In 1860 he again visited England, to recruit his health, and returned in 1869. He died in Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 25, 1880. Mr. Bayley was a close student. The Bible was his chief study, and his preaching was always accompanied with the unction of the Spirit. Socially, he was entertaining, cordial, pure, and was eminently successful in winning souls to Christ. He was continually writing for papers and periodicals, and he wrote and published many interesting books. Among them are, Confessions of a Converted Infidel:—Marriage as it is and as it should be:—Pleasant Hours; also many smaller pamphlets, viz.: Shakespeare—Was He a Christian?—Facts About America for the People of England, etc. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 235.

Bayley, Josiah, a Unitarian minister, was born at Newbury, Mass., in 1723. He graduated at Harvard College in 1752, and was ordained pastor of the Church at Hampton Falls, N. Y., Oct. 19, 1757. He died Sept. 12, 1762. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 15.

Bayley, Robert Slater, F.S.A., an English Congregational minister, was born at Lichfield, in 1801. He was converted early in life, educated for the ministry at Hoxton College, and settled first at Louth, in 1833. In 1835 he removed to Sheffield, where he labored ten years. From Sheffield Mr. Bayley went to Queen-street Chapel, London, where he labored till his invitation to Eignbrook Chapel, Hereford, in 1856. He died Nov. 15, 1859. Mr. Bayley was the author of, Nat- ure Considered as a Revelation:—History of Louth:—Lectures on the Early History of the Christian Church:—The New Hebrew Concordance; and many sermons, lectures, etc. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1860, p. 175.

Bayley, William, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born about the year 1630, and was for some time a Baptist minister at Poole. He united with the Friends about the year 1655, and, as the "testimony" about him says, "travelled up and down in many places in the service of the Lord." He is spoken of as being singularly gifted by the Holy Spirit, and an "able minister of the New Testament." He underwent the personal sufferings usual in that age with his associates. In order to provide for the wants of his family, he followed the seas as master of a ship. His last voyage was made to Barbadoes. On his return from visiting Friends in that island he died, April 1, 1675, in lat. 46° 36'. See Piety Promoted, i, 73. (J. C. S.)

Baylis, Frederick, an English Congregational minister, was born at Rodborough, Gloucestershire, in 1826. Soon after his conversion he was accepted by the London Missionary Society, and sent to Fakenham and Rotherham to fit himself better for their work. In 1850 he was ordained at Southampton. On Sept. 14, 1850, Mr. Baylis left for India. He labored first at Madras, and finally at Neyoor, South Travancore. In August, 1854, the charge of the entire mission devolved on Mr. Baylis; also the general oversight of the medical department, for which he had been happily prepared by his early education. His death occurred May 17, 1877. Mr. Baylis was possessed of great energy and patient determination. He was indefatigable, self-possessed, and cheerful. His varied abilities and attainments qualified him for all departments of missionary labor. He had the confidence and esteem of both the English and native authorities of the province. Besides discharging his missionary duties, Mr. Baylis contributed numerous works to Tamil Christian literature, and for several years was joint, and afterwards sole, editor of the illustrated Tamil magazine, The Désopakāri. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 306.

Bayliss, Samuel, a Congregational minister, was born at Stratford-on-Avon, England, Jan. 9, 1812. His early years were spent in New York and Philadelphia, and from 1832 to 1842 he was engaged in business in Rochester, N. Y. From 1842 to 1853 he was agent of the American Tract Society; but May 1 of the latter year he was ordained an evangelist in Brooklyn, N. Y. As a result of his labors the Warren Mission Church in Brooklyn was organized in the following year, and he remained in pastoral charge of it until 1866, when he was elected secretary and agent of the Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. He continued to hold this position until 1877. His death occurred in Brooklyn, Feb. 12, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 12.

Baylor, Hon. and Rev., R. E. B., a licensed preacher of the Baptist denomination, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., May 10, 1791. He studied law in his native state, and, having been admitted to the bar, he removed to Alabama, and practised at Cahaba and Tuscaloosa. For two terms he represented the Tuscaloosa district in Congress. His conversion took place in 1839, and soon after he was licensed to preach. He removed to Texas not long after, where he was a member of the Texan Congress for a time, and for twenty-five years a circuit judge, and for a short time was on the Supreme bench. "Wherever he held courts he there also preached, often deciding cases on the bench during the day, and holding a protracted meeting at night." "His religious character aided him no little in his judicial career at a time when violence, lawlessness, and misrule prevailed among the people. He thoroughly identified himself with the people of God wherever he went." He was a generous friend and contributor to

"Baylor University"—called so from him—an institution of high character, situated in Independence, Washington Co., Texas, established in 1845. Mr. Baylor spent most of his time during the last ten years of his life in attending religious meetings. He died Dec. 30, 1873. "His memory is precious among all classes of people in the State of Texas. See Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 89.

Bayly (or Bailey), Anselm, LL.D., an English clergyman, who died in 1794, was sub-dean of his majesty's Chapel Royal, and published a number of educational and theological works (1751–89). His most pretentious work was, The Old Testament, English and Hebrew, with Remarks Critical and Grammatical on the Hebrew, and Corrections of the English (Lond. 1774, 4 vols. 8vo). "In this edition the authorized version, with a few alterations, chiefly in the punctuation, is printed so as to face the Hebrew; a few notes are added of an explanatory kind; the Keri readings are conveniently placed on the margin; and summaries of the books are appended. The work is of little value, except as it supplies a legible Hebrew text. The text is pointed, but only the athnach and soph-pasuk accents are inserted." Dr. Bayly published also a Hebrew Grammar, and a Practical Treatise on Singing (ibid. 1771).

Bayly, Benjamin (1), an English clergyman, was rector of St. James's, Bristol, and died about 1720. He published, An Essay on Inspiration (Lond. 1707):—and Sermons on Various Subjects (2 vols. 1721). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bayly, Benjamin (2), an Irish Methodist preacher, was born at Moneygrath, County Carlow, Oct. 13, 1807. He was converted at twenty-one, received into the Methodist Society by the Rev. Robert Huston, became a class leader and local preacher, and began in 1832 the career of an itinerant minister. During forty-two years he was in labors more abundant, and witnessed remarkable revivals of the work of God. He became a supernumerary in 1874, preaching as health permitted, but died at Enniskillen, Aug. 10, 1879.

Bayly, John, an English clergyman, son of bishop Lewis Bayly, was born in Herefordshire in 1595, and educated at Exeter College, which he entered in 1611. After completing his collegiate studies, he took orders and received some preferments from his father. He afterwards became one of the king's chaplains, and guardian of Christ's Hospital in Ruthyn. He died in 1633. His published works include, The Angel Guardian (1630):—and The Light Enlightening (eod.).

Bayly, Thomas, an Irish prelate, was bishop of Killala and Achonry, and died in 1670. He published, Theophilact's Comments on St. Paul (Lond. 1636). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bayne (or Baine), James, minister in Edinburgh, was born in 1710, and died Jan. 17, 1790. He was a protégé of the duke of Montrose, and was so celebrated a preacher that he was popularly called "the Swan of the West." He published, Discourses on Various Subjects (1778):—and a Sermon against Foote's Minor. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bayne, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Somerset County, Md., in 1796. He experienced conversion when about twenty-one; soon began active service as exhorter and local preacher; and in 1821 entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he labored with zeal and fidelity until the close of his life, Aug. 6, 1851. Mr. Bayne was a warm friend, a firm Methodist, and a plain, energetic, and useful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 20.

Bayne (or Baynes), Paul, an eminent English Puritan divine, was educated at Witherfield, in Essex, and at Christ College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. Shortly after his graduation he was chosen lecturer of St. Andrew's Church, in which office he continued until silenced for certain opinions advanced in his lectures. He died at Cambridge in 1617. He wrote, The Diocesan's Trial (1621):—A Commentary on the 1st and 2d Chapters of St. Paul to the Colossians; together with Divers Places of Scripture Briefly Explained (Lond. 1634, 4to):—Help to True Happiness, Explaining the Fundamentals of Christian Religion (3d ed. 1635):—A Commentary on Ephesians (1643), and some other works.

Bayne (or Baines), Ralph, D.D., an English prelate, was a native of Yorkshire, and was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He afterwards went to Paris, where he was for some time royal professor of Hebrew. He remained abroad until the accession of queen Mary, when he was consecrated bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. On the accession of Elizabeth he was deprived and for some time imprisoned, but afterwards lived in the bishop of London's house. He died in 1559. He published, Prima Rudimenta in Linguam Hebraicam (Paris, 1550).

Baynes, JOSEPH, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Kissingington, Westmoreland Co., in 1633. He was converted in 1652, through the preaching of George Fox, and united with the Quakers. Some time after this he began to preach, and commended himself to those whom he addressed of like faith, as one who "truly loved and feared the Lord, making it his daily care to keep his conscience void of offence towards God and man." For the non-payment of tithes, and for other reasons, he was despoiled of his goods and frequently imprisoned, all which "he endured with steadfastness and great patience." For many years during the latter part of his life he travelled in England. He took special interest in the spiritual welfare of the young. He died Jan. 26, 1714. See Piety Promoted, ii, 145-147. (J. C. S.)

Bayon, NICOLAS, a French theologian, was born at Pont-à-Mousson, about 1570. He was canon of the Cathedral of Verdun. He wrote, De Sacramentis et Sacrificiis Missæ (Verdun):—De Decem Præceptis Decalogi et Quinque Præceptis Ecclesiæ (ibid. 1622):—Solutions des Cas de Conscience, etc. (ibid. 1620). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bay-window is a window forming a bay or recess in a room, and projecting outwards from the wall either in a rectangular, polygonal, or semicircular form, often called a bow-window. Bay-windows do not appear to have been used earlier than the Perpendicular style; but at that period they were very frequently employed, particularly in halls, where they are invariably found at one end, and sometimes at both ends, of the dais; and the lights are generally considerably longer than those of the other windows, so as to reach much nearer to the floor. Semicircular bay-windows were not used till Gothic architecture had begun to lose its purity, and were at no period so common as the other forms. Windows of this kind are sometimes used in upper stories, and in such cases are supported on corbels or on projecting suites of mouldings. See ORIEL.

Compton Winyate, Warwickshire.

Baza, in Persian religion. The Persians give sins a certain weight, which must be balanced by good deeds or penances. Baza is such a weight of sins as equals 90 staters or 22½ Arabian drachms.

Bazan, FERDINANDO, archbishop of Toledo, was born in 1627. His taste for literature led him to establish an academy of the learned in his own house. He died in 1702. He wrote some works, which are unpublished, in Spanish and Italian. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bazend, another name for the ZEND AVESTA (q. v.).

Bazin, George W., a prominent Universalist, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1794. He there learned the printer's trade; removed to Boston in 1820; became connected with the Universalist Magazine as printed in 1828, and continued his connection with it for forty years, excepting about six years which he spent in the office of the Eastern Argus. He died Dec. 21, 1873. See Universalist Register, 1874, p. 141.

Bazin, Jean Baptiste, a French theologian and hagiographer, was born at Auxonne, Jan. 14, 1637. He was in 1673 procurator-general of the Order of the Cordeliers of Dijon. He died at his native place, Jan. 30, 1708. He wrote, Præcis Recollectionis Animæ (Paris, Degollier, 1686):—La Grand'-Messe et la Manière de l'Entendre et d'y Assister Saintement (Lyon, 1687):—Éclaircissements sur la Sainte Messe (ibid. 1688):—Abrégé de la Vie de Saint Jean Cupistrum, etc. (ibid. 1698). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bazin, Nicolas, a French engraver, was born at Troyes, in Champagne, in 1636, studied under Claude Mellan, and established himself at Paris as an engraver and print-seller. He died about 1706. The following are some of his principal religious works: The Portrait of the Virgin; The Annunciation; Christ Crowned with Thorns; The Crucifixion; St. Jerome and St. Peter (two plates). See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bazius, JOHANNES, bishop of Wexiö in Sweden, was born in 1581, and died in 1649. He wrote, by order of his government, a history of the Swedish Church, entitled Inventarium Ecclesiæ Sueco-Gothicorum, continens Integram Historiam Ecclesiæ Suecorum, libris viii. descriptum, usque ad annum 1642 (Linköping, 1642, 4to).

Bazur was an Oriental magician. All amulets of the Persians are called Bazuband after him.

Bazzani, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter, was born at Reggio, in 1690, and studied under Gio. Canti. Many of his fresco paintings are at Mantua and in the convents in its vicinity. He was director of the Academy at Mantua, where he died in 1769. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Beach, Aaron Crowell, a Congregational minister, was born at South Orange, N. J., Dec. 28, 1805. After leaving the academy at Bloomfield, N. J., he entered Yale College, graduating in 1835, and three years after from Yale Theological Seminary. In June, 1842, he was ordained pastor of the church in Wolcott, Conn., where he remained exactly fifteen years. From Feb. 1859, to April, 1876, he was pastor of the Millington Church in East Haddam; and after this he remained without charge. He died at East Haddam, Conn., July 30, 1881. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 23.

Beach, ANSON F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Cheshire, Conn., in 1810. He experienced conversion at the age of nineteen, soon began preaching, and in 1833 united with the New York Conference. In that body, with but a short intermission as supernumerary, he labored earnestly to the close of his life, Oct. 6, 1847. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1848, p. 225.

Beach, H. W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was admitted into the Upper Iowa Conference in 1858, but became superannuated, on account of ill-health, in 1863. At the close of one year, he made another year's effort to keep in the effective ranks, but bodily weakness obliged him to resume a superannuated relation, which he sustained until his decease, Dec. 19, 1878. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 50.

Beach, Isaac Closson, a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Milford, Conn., March 2, 1802. He studied theology in private, and after being licensed by the Litchfield South Association, in 1828, preached in Washington and Bethel, Conn. He served as an agent of the American Bethel Society in Ohio in 1829-30. He was then ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church in New Paltz, Ulster Co., N. Y., where he remained about five years. After eighteen months' service as pastor of a church in Newburgh, N. Y., he removed, in 1848, to Northern Illinois, where he labored for three and a half years as a home missionary. His next remove was to Southern Ohio, where he had charge of the Church at North Bend about three years. Thence he went to Cincinnati, and spent between three and four years as pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church. His health again failed, and in September, 1858, he settled in Kansas, residing first at Wyandotte and afterwards at Olathe. Until 1862 he was general missionary of the Presbyterian Church for the territory, travelled largely, and organized churches. He died Feb. 23, 1873. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1873.

Beach, James, a Congregational minister, was born at Winchester, Conn. He graduated from Williams College in 1804, and studied theology under Rev. Asahel Hooker; was ordained pastor in Winsted, Conn., in 1805, resigned his charge in 1843, and died June 10, 1850, aged seventy years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 319.

Beach, John, a Christian martyr, was burned at Rochester, April 1, 1556, because of his faithful adherence to the Gospel. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 130.

Beach, Lyman, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Wallingford, Conn., Dec. 21, 1792. He received a careful bringing-up, experienced conversion at the age of seventeen, and was licensed to exhort in 1813. He served in the war with Great Britain, and became a backslider. He purchased a farm in 1818, in Stockbridge, N. Y. He rejoined the Church in 1820, and was relicensed to exhort; was licensed to preach in 1822, and employed one year by the presiding elder, and in 1828 entered the Oneida Conference. He served the following charges: Palatine and East Brockett's Bridge, Camden, Lebanon, Brookfield, Norwich, Westmoreland, Litchfield, Deansville and Clinton, Sangerfield, Augusta, Smyrna, Hamilton, Brookfield (again), Onondaga, Onondaga Mission, Camillus, Lowell, Westmoreland (again), Bennett's Corners and Indian Missions; and in 1858 was superannuated. He lived in Verona until 1874, and then went to Augusta, N. Y., where he remained until his decease, Jan. 30, 1880. Mr. Beach was a man of great influence, excellence of character, superior ministerial gifts, sound judgment, ready command of language, and pleasing address. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 80.

Beach, Stephen, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Wallingford, Conn., March 15, 1790. Although lacking the advantages of a collegiate education, he became a good scholar and an excellent preacher. He was ordained deacon Oct. 20, 1815, immediately after which he officiated in St. Albans, Fairfield, and Sheldon, Vt., for several years. On Aug. 24, 1817, he was ordained priest. In 1822 he became rector of Salisbury, Conn.; in 1833 he removed to Essex, in the same state, taking charge also of St. Stephen's Church, East Haddam. In 1836 he resigned the parish at Essex, and assumed the rectorship at East Haddam, where he died, Jan. 14, 1838. As a preacher, his sermons were remarkably clear, earnest, and instructive, and he excelled in extemporaneous address. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 532.

Beacock, WILLIAM, an English Wesleyan missionary, went to the West Indies in 1815, and labored in the island of St. Vincent's. He died Aug. 29, 1817, of a fever induced by a cold when sailing in an open boat for Prince Rupert's Bay. "His charity, diligence, humility, resignation, and love have rarely been excelled." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1818.

Beacom, JAMES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 15, 1817. Following his natural inclinations, he became a votary of the histrionic art, and acquired some celebrity therein. He was the associate of Forrest, and also Parsons, who, like him, abandoned the stage for the Christian ministry. He experienced conversion at the age of thirty, and soon afterwards entered the Pittsburgh Conference. He grew in knowledge and grace with a rapidity rarely surpassed, and labored with great zeal and fidelity until near the close of his life, when he became superannuated, and retired to Pittsburgh, where he died, April 21, 1862. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 43.

Beacon Turrets occur at Llandrillo-yn-Rhos, at St. Burian's, Hadley, and St. Michael's Mount, under the modern name of St. Michael's Chair; they carried a light in a pot suspended on an iron frame, to guide travellers or ships. The cage for the cresset remains at Hadley Tower. Octagonal lanterns are found at Boston, in the west tower of Ely, at All Saints', York, and other places which served the same purpose. St. Hilary Tower was yearly whitewashed by the port of St. Ives, to render it conspicuous at sea. At Bow Church, Cheapside, and Winchester, there were beacons.

Beadle is a title of—(1) certain university officials known also as bedells of divinity, arts, and law, who formally attend the authorities upon public occasions, to perform certain prescribed duties; (2) a lay officer who preserves order in churches and chapels. See ACOLYTH.

Beadle, ELIAS ROOT, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cooperstown, N. Y., Oct. 13, 1812. He united with the Church at the age of seventeen, and soon after commenced his preparation for the ministry, spending parts of two years under the tuition of Rev. Dr. E. N. Kirk, then pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church at Albany, N. Y. In 1835 he was licensed to preach, and in 1836 was ordained. His health being much shattered in consequence of his labors as a city missionary, he accepted an invitation to become the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Albion, N. Y., where he remained for two years; at the end of which time he accepted an appointment as a missionary among the Druses of Mount Lebanon, Syria, and sailed from this country in June, 1839. The war in Syria prevented his entrance upon the work for which he had been set apart, and, after three years' missionary labor in different parts of Syria, he went to Constantinople, with the hope that Providence might open some field for work in Turkey. To recruit his health, he decided, after a time, to return to his native land. In 1840 he went to New Orleans, where he continued for nine years "in labors abundant and most fruitful, in zeal ardent, in perils oft, amid epidemics and panics, sicknesses and calamities." As the result of his persistent toils, three Presbyterian churches were formed in New Orleans, one of which he was pastor for several years. In 1852 he returned north, and became pastor of the Pearl-street (Congregational) Church in Hartford, Conn.—a new church, of which he was the first minister. Here he continued for ten years, with but little relaxation from his ministerial labors, and then yielded to the pressure of disease, and was obliged to spend eight months in the West Indies to recruit his wasted energies. Returning to Hartford, he continued his labors for a time, and then resigned. After spending some time in the Old World, he returned to the United States, and having accepted a call to the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, he was installed Nov. 12, 1865, where for thirteen years he had a successful ministry. His death, which was sudden, occurred Jan. 6, 1879. In some respects, Dr. Beadle was a remarkable scholar, being well-informed upon all the sciences, but his specialties were mineralogy and conchology, in which latter science he was one of the very highest authorities in America. The museum of Brown University has been greatly enriched from his valuable collections. See Dr. Herrick Johnson's Memorial Sermon. (J. C. S.)

Beadon, RICHARD, D.D., an English prelate, was born about 1739, and educated at Cambridge, where he became fellow of St. John's College. He obtained a prebend in London in 1771, and another in 1775, and became archdeacon of London the same year. He was chosen master of Jesus College, Cambridge, in 1781, and vice-chancellor of the University in 1782. He was consecrated bishop of Gloucester June 7, 1789, and translated to the see of Bath and Wells in 1802. He died April 21, 1824. He published a few sermons. See Le Neve, Fusti (Index).

Beadulf. See BADULF.

Beadwin. See BADUVINI.

Beak-head is a term applied to an ornament which is very frequently used in rich Norman doorways, resembling a head with a beak. There are many varieties of this ornament. It is sometimes called cats-head, having then a tongue hanging out instead of a beak.

Beak-heads, Ifley Church, Oxfordshire.

Beal (or Beale) John, an English divine and philosopher, was born in 1603, and died in 1688. He contributed many papers to the Philosophical Transactions (1666-77). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Beal, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Devonport, in 1785. He was converted at the age of seventeen, and appointed teacher, by Dr. Coke, in the first Sunday-school established at Liskeard. He was received into the ministry in 1808, and for sixty-four years he did the work of an evangelist with ability, purity, and fidelity. In the early part of his ministry, he endured privation and persecution as a pioneer home-missionary in a part of Devon where Methodism was scarcely known, among a people sunk in ignorance and apathy. He was a conscientious and faithful student, and his sermons were practical, rich in experience, pervaded throughout by deep thought. He pursued anti-quarian studies with enthusiasm. He was affectionate and eminently simple-hearted and single-minded. He became a supernumerary in 1848, spent the evening of his days in genial activity, amid calm and sunshine, and died at Liskeard, June 18, 1872. He published the following works: The Fatal Tendency of False Principles; a sermon, 2d ed., with a Postscript to Rev. Dr. Cleeve (Exeter, 1819, 12mo):—Three Letters to Messrs. Littlejohns and Mouss, Committed to the Deron County Bridenell for Preaching in an Unlicensed Place, etc. (ibid. 1823, 8vo):—Infant Baptism (Weymouth, 1823):—Remarks on the Abrahamic Covenant, Infant Baptism, and Christian Education (ibid. 1824, 8vo):—Two Lectures on Geology and Geognosy (Devonport, 1826, 8vo):—Letters to the Young on Religion and Mental Improvement (Bristol, 1830):—Geology, Geography, and Chemistry (London, 1830, 12mo):—The Fathers of the Wesley Family (Weymouth, 1833, 12mo; 2d edition, with many additions London, 1860, 8vo):—Biog. Notices of Revs. Bartholomew and John Wesley (ibid. 1839, 8vo):—God, through Christ, the Only Fount and Cause of Being and Well-being to Man (Portsmouth, 1845, 8vo):—Britain and the Gael; or, Notices of the Old and Successive Races, etc. (2d ed. Liskeard, 1860, 8vo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1872, p. 34; Osborne, Wesl. Bibliogr. p. 67; Everett, Wesl. Takings, i, 352.

Beale, HENRY MARSHALL, A.B., an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born at Mount Mellick, in 1820. His parents were once Quakers. He entered the ministry in 1845, and after a few years accepted a tutorship in the Connectional School, where the influences of his gentle and cheerful temper, pure mind, and upright conduct were fully recognized. Disease was, however, rapidly developing, and under it he finally sank, Dec. 17, 1855. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1856.

Beall, ISAAC L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Fairfield County, O., Sept. 18, 1823. He was dedicated to the ministry from infancy, and enjoyed the privileges of an early religious education. He chose and prepared himself for the legal profession, was converted in 1848, soon began preaching, and in 1849 entered the Ohio Conference, in which he served on eight different appointments. He died Oct. 27, 1860. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861, p. 167.

Beals, DAVID, a Congregational minister, was born at Dalton, Mass., Jan. 28, 1829. He graduated from Amherst College, 1857, and from the Connecticut Theological Institute in 1860. The middle year of his theological course was spent in the Union Seminary, N. Y. He was ordained in East Hartland, Conn., June 10, 1863, where he remained four years and a half. While preaching as acting pastor at Southwick, Mass., he died Sept. 28, 1868. See Alumni Records of Conn. The. Ins. p. 84. (J. C. S.)

Beaman, H. H., a Baptist minister, was born in 1849. In early life he was frail in health, and was obliged to pursue his studies under private tutors. At the age of seventeen he was converted, and became a member of the Church in Athol, Mass. He was a decided, active Christian from the outset of his religious life, and about a year after joining the Church he felt himself called to enter the ministry. After preaching for a time at Warwick, Mass., he went to the Theological Institution at Newton, Mass., and remained there two years (1870-72). On leaving the seminary, he accepted a call to the pastorate of the churches of Hampton Falls and Seabrook, N. H., his ordination taking place Oct. 2, 1872. After a successful pastorate of four years, he was called, in 1876, to Bridgewater, Mass., where he remained another four years, and then removed to North Oxford, Mass. He died Aug. 10, 1881. "He was a good preacher, a faithful pastor, a kind and conscientious man. He fell at the post of duty, with the harness on." See The Watchman, Sept. 22, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Beamer, VALENTINE M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Clark County, O., Dec. 14, 1821. He labored on his father's farm until twenty-one years old; and in the winter, after leaving home, was converted, Feb. 7, 1843. In 1845 he united with the Ohio Conference, and served the charges of North Lewisburg and Washington circuits, Wayne and Coal River circuits. In the fall of 1849 he located, and in September, 1851, he was readmitted into the travelling connection in the North Indiana Conference. His appointments in that Conference were, Knightstown Circuit, Logansport Station, New Castle Circuit, Agent of the M. E. Tract Society, Muncie Station, New Castle Circuit, Richmond Station, Pendleton Circuit; Berry-street Station, Fort Wayne; Main-street Station, Peru; Miami Circuit, Elkhart Station; 1866 supernumerary; Mexico Circuit, Kokomo Station; Logansport District, Noblesville Station; 1876 supernumerary; Xenia Circuit, Alto Circuit, Jerome Circuit. He died June 27, 1880. He possessed more than an ordinary amount of native talent, and his eloquence was sometimes of a high order, while his sermons were always interesting and instructive. His ministry was eminently successful in the salvation of many souls. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881.

Beam-light is the lamp which burns before the holy sacrament; so called, because set on the rood-beam above the altar, in distinction from a light set upon a perch or swinging stand, or those placed in bowls suspended from the vault.

Beam-rood is the beam crossing the chancel arch, on which the rood or crucifix is fixed; sometimes the top of the chancel screen.

Bean, a saint whose day is Oct. 26; but nothing is known of him except that he was venerated at Wester Foulés, and at Kinkell, in Strathearn, Scotland. See BEVAN, St. He is not to be identified with St. Bean of Mortlach, but he probably is St. Bean, the uncle of St. Cadroë, or St. Bevan of Tamhlacht-Menan. See Martyr. Donegal, by Todd and Reeves, p. 337-9, n.; Reeves, Eccles. Ant. p. 113; Gordon, Monast. ii, 270; Bishop Forbes, Kalendar of Scottish Saints, p. 239, 277.

Bean, Benajah, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Salisbury, N. H., June 30, 1793. He was baptized by Rev. Joshua Quimby in 1812; moved to Whitefield, N. H., in 1821, and became a member of the Church in that place at the time of its organization. He was licensed to preach in 1823, and ordained Aug. 24, 1828; and was pastor of the Church at Whitefield for ten years, during which several revivals were enjoyed. In 1838 he moved to Bethlehem, N. H., and was pastor there for eight years. In 1850 he became pastor of what was called the Clarkville and Pittsburg Church, and subsequently of the Church at Stewartstown, N. H. He died in Colebrook, N. H., Dec. 17, 1856. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1858, p. 87. (J. C. S.)

Bean, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, June 2, 1796, of pious parents, and was converted about the age of twenty. He preached two years as an evangelist at Burslem, North Staffordshire; studied four years at the academy at Idle, and in 1824 was ordained at Upper Chapel, Heckmondwike, where he continued pastor until his death, March 7, 1862. Mr. Bean's power in the pulpit lay in his earnestness; the words he uttered came straight from his heart. He was a well-read man, a rapid speaker, a genial, faithful Christian. He left fifteen or sixteen hundred sermons fully written, and an immense number of skeletons—the produce, for the most part, of the hours he devoted to study before breakfast. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 205.

Bean, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Stratford, Vt., Sept. 23, 1817. He was converted at fourteen; removed to Illinois; commenced his itinerant life in Wisconsin in 1845; labored until he could do so no longer; retired in 1870; and died of apoplexy, near Baraboo, Wis., where he resided, May 1, 1880. He was an excellent revivalist, and preached with spiritual power; hundreds were converted under his ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 240.

Bean, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born in Boston, March 7, 1718. In 1741, under the preaching of Whitefield and Tennant, he became a Christian. Abandoning his calling as a trader, he devoted himself to preparatory studies, and at length graduated at Harvard College in 1748. He was ordained the third minister of Wrentham, Mass., Nov. 24, 1750, and remained pastor of the Church for more than thirty years. He died Dec. 12, 1784. See Panopht, v, 481-488; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Bean, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Bridgewater, Nov. 19, 1800. He was converted early in life, educated by private tutors, and was ordained pastor at Whitechurch, Hants. Thence he removed to Hope Chapel, Weymouth, where his pastorate continued eight years, after which he became pastor of Livery-street Chapel, Birmingham. On removing to London, he was for twelve months evening lecturer at Clapham Common. Mr. Bean's final charge was at Worthing, where he labored from 1855 to 1863, and then retired to London, where he died, Nov. 14, 1871. Mr. Bean had a commanding presence, great energy of character, and a warm and brotherly heart. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1872, p. 306.

Beane, SAMUEL, a Congregational minister, was born at Lyman, N. H., March 1, 1812. He was educated at the Haverhill (N. H.) Academy, where he was converted, at Dartmouth College (graduated 1836), and at Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained pastor of the Church in Great Falls, N. H., 1841, serving there three years. In 1846, he was installed pastor at Little Compton, R. I., the Church of which was bitterly divided on the slavery question, but had been united and harmony restored by Mr. Beane. He removed to Beloit, Wis., in 1857, conducting a female seminary for three years. His health improving, he returned east and was installed in Norton, Mass., 1860, where he labored until his death, after a protracted and painful illness, May 6, 1865. Mr. Beane was a model pastor, and a scriptural and earnest preacher. See Cong. Quarterly, 1867, p. 200.

Beanland, BENJAMIN, an English Wesleyan preacher in the early times, was called upon to endure grievous sufferings for the truth's sake. He had many narrow escapes and wonderful deliverances. After continuing for some time a local preacher, he yielded to solicitations and gave himself wholly to the work of the ministry. There being then no settled provisions for the Methodist preachers, Beanland was hard pressed, and, when his clothes were nearly worn out, he returned home; "sooner than being damned for debt, he would work and thus provide himself with what he wanted." The sequel proved he erred in this step. In spite of his industry, he was actually cast into prison for debt, and the remainder of his days were spent in distress; and he died under a cloud, "a monument" (in the opinion of Charles Atmore) "of the just displeasure of God against those who, for want of confidence in him, desert the path of duty." He had uncommon ministerial gifts, and was an acceptable and useful preacher. No dates can be found. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Beanus, a Scottish prelate, was the first bishop to the see of Aberdeen. He was bishop in 1015, and is said to have administered his diocese for thirty-two years with prudence and integrity. He died in 1047, and is commemorated as a saint on Dec. 16. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 101.

Bear, Charles W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Mount Jackson, Pa., Oct. 23, 1826. He was trained "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" was converted in 1842; licensed to exhort in 1858, to preach in 1859, and in the same year entered the Erie Conference. He did valiant service until his decease, Oct. 26, 1865. Mr. Bear was a man of fine social qualities, possessed a good English education, and rare preaching abilities. As a disciplinarian he was thorough, and as a pastor had marked success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1867, p. 143.

Bear, Jacob, a German Reformed minister, was probably born in eastern Pennsylvania, March 4, 1810, and licensed to preach either by the Susquehanna Classis or the Synod in 1836. He was settled first at Spring Mills, Pa., and remained there three years. In 1840 he had charge of twelve congregations in the vicinity of Shanesville, O.; preached there seven years, and then removed to West Point, Iowa Territory, where he died, Feb. 1, 1855. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 488.

Bearcroft, George, an English Congregational minister, was born at Leigh-Sinton, Worcestershire, Nov. 18, 1782. He was religiously inclined from childhood; ordained to the ministry in 1826, at Cradley; and there died, Aug. 2, 1861. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 222.

Bearcroft, Philip, D.D., an English clergyman, was born May 1, 1697, and elected scholar of the Charter-house in 1710. He went thence to Magdalen Hall, Oxford, in 1712, and graduated in 1716. He became fellow of Merton College, and took holy orders. In 1724 he was appointed preacher to the Charter-house, and in 1738 one of the king's chaplains. In 1743 he became rector of Stormouth, in Kent, and master of the Charter-house, Dec. 18, 1758. He died Nov. 17, 1761. His only published work was a Historical Account of Thomas Sutton, Esq., and of his Foundation in the Charter-house (London, 1737). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Beard. The practice of the clergy in ancient times in respect to wearing beards was in conformity with the general custom. Long hair and baldness by shaving being alike in ill-repute as unseemly peculiarities, the clergy were required to observe a becoming moderation between either extreme. The fourth Council of Carthage ordered that the clergy should "neither cultivate the hair, nor shave the beard." The contrary practice, however, having obtained in the later Roman Church, it has been contended that the word "shave" was an interpolation in the canon. But this has been disproved on the testimony of the Vatican and many other manuscripts; and long after it was the custom of the French bishops to wear short hair and long beards. See SHAVING.

Beard, Calvin M., a Universalist minister, was born in Wayne County, N. C., Sept. 5, 1822. He was reared under Methodist influence; was educated at Falling Creek Academy, with the Methodist ministry in view; embraced Universalism in 1848; moved to Union County, Ill.; spent some time in school-teaching; and in 1865 entered the Universalist ministry, wherein he labored until his death, Dec. 10, 1871. Mr. Beard possessed an unsullied character, and lived to do good. See Universalist Register, 1873, p. 119.

Beard, Edgar, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Connecticut, Oct. 29, 1830. He removed to Michigan when about twenty years of age; experienced religion in 1853; received license to preach in 1854, and entered Albion College for better ministerial qualifications. In 1858 he entered the Michigan Conference. For fourteen years Mr. Beard served the Church with zeal and earnest devotedness. He died March 4, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 97.

Beard, George, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Southwark in 1793. He was converted when seven; became local preacher at eighteen; was appointed a missionary to the West Indies in 1826; labored there until 1838, then on various circuits in England until 1866, when he became a supernumerary. The evening of his life was spent at Charlestown, Cornwall, where he died, April 5, 1877. His sermons were simple, original, earnest. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1877, p. 34.

Beard, John, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., Dec. 24, 1800. He was educated at Gallatin; was licensed by the Nashville Presbytery, April 3, 1823; and ordained by the same Presbytery, April 6, 1826. After several years of labor in Tennessee, he removed to Illinois, thence to Missouri, and finally to Kansas. He died in Atchinson County, Aug. 12, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 475.

Beard, Nicholas, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born, in 1622, at Rottingdean, Sussex Co., and from his youth was interested in the subject of spiritual religion. He often rode many miles to hear the best-reputed teachers that the times afforded. In 1655, he was converted under the preaching of George Fox, and not long after began to preach the Gospel. In this work he was engaged for many years in his own and the neighboring counties, enduring many outrageous persecutions. He died May 2, 1702. See Piety Promoted, i, 357. (J. C. S.)

Beard, Richard, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1799. He graduated from Cumberland College, Ky., and was immediately appointed professor of Latin and Greek in that college. He afterwards spent five years as professor in Sharon College, and in 1843 was elected president of Cumberland College, where he remained ten years and a half. When the chair of systematic theology was established in the Cumberland University, he was called to it, and continued actively in discharge of its duties until a few days before his death, which occurred in Lebanon, Tenn., Nov. 6, 1880. He published Systematic Theology (3 vols. 8vo);—Biographical Sketches (2 vols.);—one volume of Essays and Reviews, and Why am I a Cumberland Presbyterian? He was in favor of the union of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church with the Northern Presbyterian Church, and was appointed by the General Assembly to consider the matter. He was called to the moderator's chair several times. See N. Y. Observer, Dec. 16, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Beard, Spencer Field, a Congregational minister, son of Dr. David Beard, was born at West Brookfield, Mass., July 4, 1799. He entered Yale College in 1818, but retired on account of broken health; however, in 1824 he graduated from Amherst College, and in 1827 from Andover Theological Seminary. From 1827 to 1828 he was agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. In 1829 he was ordained pastor of the Church at Methuen, and was dismissed in 1832. From 1832 to 1835 he was acting-pastor at Norton, Mass., and from 1835 to 1837 of Greenville, Conn. He was installed at Montville, Conn., July 5, 1838, remaining until 1846; and in 1848 was acting-pastor at Waquoit (East Falmouth), Mass. After serving in this position until 1853, he removed without charge to Andover, Mass., where he resided until his death, Jan. 8, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 409.

Beard (or Bearde), Thomas, D.D., an English divine and author of the Elizabethan period, became prebendary of Lincoln in 1612. He is best known as the compiler of the Theatre of God's Judgments (London, 1597). He published also, A Retractive from the Romish Religion (1616);—Antichrist the Pope of Rome (1625);—Pedantius (1631). See Le Neve, Fasti, ii, 206; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Beardsall, Francis, an English Baptist minister, was born at Sheffield, Sept. 6, 1799. He was converted at the age of seventeen, while attending a Methodist class-meeting, and became a class-leader and local preacher in that denomination. Jan. 1, 1828, he joined a Baptist church in Loughborough, where he pursued his studies. After acting as an assistant to Rev. Mr. Stock at Castle Donnington, he became pastor of a Church at Market Harborough, and in 1834 removed to Manchester. Here he remained several years, and in the spring of 1842 embarked for America. He died on the voyage, June 25, 1842. See Report of English Baptist Union, 1843, p. 2. (J. C. S.)

Beardsly, NEHEMIAH BEACH, a Congregational minister, was born at Stratford, Conn., June 20, 1780

He graduated at Yale College, and studied theology in private. He was licensed to preach by the Hampshire South Association in October, 1806, and for several years performed home missionary work in Maine. In January, 1816, he was ordained, and settled over the Congregational Church in Chester, Conn., where he labored for more than six years. From April, 1824, to 1831 he was pastor of the Congregational Church in Union, Conn. This was his last charge. He died in Somers, Conn., Feb. 28, 1868. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1868.

Bearing-cloth is a christening robe or mantle, in which children were carried to the font. One of the 16th century, made of blue satin, and embroidered with silver lace and fringes and gold vignettes, is preserved at Bitterley Court, Salop.

Bearparke, WILLIAM, an English Congregational minister, was born at Ingleby Cross, Yorkshire, July 31, 1828. From childhood he was marked by serious and thoughtful habits. He became a member of the Church at Appleton-on-Wisk in 1848, and soon after was admitted to the Home Missionary Academy at Pickering. In 1852 he was ordained pastor at Mickleby, and there labored ten years. In 1863 he removed to Stokesley, where he died, Jan. 23, 1864. Mr. Bearparke was a diligent reader, had a well-furnished mind, and his sermons were marked by great excellence. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 220.

Bear-worship. Among the Ostiah Tartars in Siberia the bear is held in great veneration. It is sacrificed to their gods as being the most acceptable victim they can select. As soon as they have killed the animal they strip off its skin and hang it on a very high tree in presence of their idol. They now pay homage to it, and utter doleful lamentations over the dead bear, excusing themselves for having put it to death by attributing the fatal deed to the arrow and not to the person that shot it. This part of their worship arises from the idea that the soul of the bear will take the first opportunity of revenging itself upon the murderers.

Beast, AS A SYMBOL. See SYMBOLISM.

Beates, WILLIAM, an American Lutheran minister, was born in 1777. He was the senior member of the Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania, and died at his residence in Lancaster, Pa., Aug. 17, 1867, while administering the ordinance of the Lord's Supper to his family. See Appletons' Annual Cyclopædia, 1867, p. 573.

Beatitudes. In the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom the Beatitudes are ordered to be sung by the choir on Sundays, instead of the third Antiphon. Dr. Neale takes them, no doubt rightly, for the Beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount.

Beaton (or Bethune), JAMES, a Scottish prelate, was first chanter in the Church of Glasgow, and in 1543 got the Abbey of Aberbrothock, which he held until 1551, when he was preferred to the see of Glasgow. He was consecrated at Rome in 1552, and held the see of Glasgow until 1560; at which time he, perceiving the wild fury of the reformers in pulling down churches and monasteries, thought it prudent, for the preservation of the acts and records of his Church, to transport them out of his kingdom; so he took the opportunity and went away into France with the forces of that nation the same year, and carried with him all the writs pertaining to the see of Glasgow. He was appointed by queen Mary her ambassador at the court of France, and her son king James VI continued him in the same character, notwithstanding their difference in religious sentiments. After all these various changes, the king, by act of Parliament, restored bishop Beaton to the temporality of the see of Glasgow, which he enjoyed until his death, April, 1603. By his last will he left all his goods to the Scots College in Paris. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 259-262.

Beatriçi, Niccolo, a French engraver, was born at Thionville, in Lorraine, about 1500. He probably lived in Rome from 1532 to 1562. His style resembles that of Agostino Veneziano. The following is a list of some of his works: Bust of Pius III; Pope Paul III; Pope Paul IV, dated 1558; Cain Killing Abel; Joseph Explaining the Dream; The Nativity of the Virgin; Magdalen and St. John; The Prophet Jeremiah; The Adoration of the Magi.

Beattie, Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, July 21, 1824. He was educated at Belfast College, and studied theology at the Belfast Theological Seminary. He emigrated to Canada and subsequently to the United States. He was ordained by the Ouachita Presbytery of Arkansas in 1851, and labored first at Ebenezer and Mount Carmel, next at Three Creeks, Scotland, and Eldorado, then at La Pile and Carolina, and finally at Arkadelphia, where he died, Aug. 16, 1865. See Wilson, Presbyterian Historical Almanac, 1866, p. 346.

Beattie, Alexander O., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Ecclefechan, Scotland, Aug. 17, 1773. His education was limited. He was licensed in 1807, and appointed to a church in Kincardine. In 1825 he was called to Gordon-street Church, Glasgow, where he remained for thirty-two years. He was successful and very popular as a minister. He died June 10, 1858. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 271.

Beattie, John, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Salem, N. Y., in 1784, of Scottish parents, and was brought up among the Scotch Presbyterians. He studied under Dr. Proudfit, and was licensed by the Classis of New York in 1808. He became missionary in west New York and Canada, 1809 to 1810, where he had much hard labor, but heroically went forward where duty called. He was pastor at New Utrecht, L. I., 1809 to 1834; stated supply at Buffalo, 1838 to 1842; and pastor there from 1842 till his death, Jan. 22, 1864. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church of America (3d ed.), p. 172.

Beattie, Matthew, a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1786, and ordained as minister of the congregation of Dunscore, Scotland, in 1817. He died June 28, 1858. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 271.

Beattie, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted at the age of thirteen, gave himself to the work of the ministry in 1848, was trained at the Didsbury Theological Institution, and died at Crickhowell, County Brecon, Wales, Dec. 31, 1852, in his twenty-sixth year, and the second of his ministry. By his exemplary conduct he won the esteem of all. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1853.

Beatty, Charles, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Antrim, Ireland, in 1715. He removed to America after having received a classical education. While travelling as a peddler he was induced by Tennent to prepare for the ministry. He was taken on trial by the New Brunswick Presbytery, Oct. 12, 1742, and was licensed the next day and sent to Nottingham. In 1743 he was called to the Forks of Neshaminy, and was ordained and installed in the fall of that year. The synod sent him to Virginia and North Carolina in 1754, and he accompanied Franklin in the defence of the frontier, after the burning of the Moravian missionaries by the Indians. Franklin speaks of him as the zealous and devoted chaplain. He was advised by the synod in 1759 to go as chaplain to Col. Armstrong's regiment. In 1760 he was sent by the corporation of the widows' fund to Great Britain. The same year Beatty and Duffield were sent as missionaries to the frontiers of the provinces, to preach two months in those parts in accordance with the instructions of the corporation. Beatty published his tour in Great Britain, two pamphlets on Indian missions, and a sermon entitled, Double Honor is Due to the Laborious Gospel Minister. He sailed for the West Indies, but died Aug. 13, 1772, soon after reaching Barbadoes. (W. P. S.)

Beatty, Samuel Miller, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 4, 1805. He embraced religion at the age of nineteen, received license to preach in 1831, and in 1841 entered the North Ohio Conference. From 1861 to the close of the war he served in the United States Hospital in Cleveland, and afterwards in the Bethel agency, one year in Cleveland, and the remainder of his life in Toledo, where he died, Nov. 22, 1876. Mr. Beatty was tall, erect, and well-developed; his features noble and beaming with good-nature; frank and genial in manner. His culture of mind was largely the result of observation, he never having had many school privileges. His life was highly exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 110.

Beatus. See BENEDICT; BEAËDH.

Beatus, a Spanish theologian of the Benedictine order, and abbot of the monastery of Val-Gabado in Asturia, died in 789. He wrote, Libri de Adoptione Christi Filii Dei, against Elipandus, published in the collection Veter. Scriptor., of Peter Stevart:—a Commentarium upon the Apocalypse of St. John, which is unpublished. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beatus, GABRIELLO, an Italian theologian and mathematician, was born in 1607. He entered the Jesuit order, and was successively professor of philosophy, of theology, and of mathematics. He died April 6, 1673. He wrote, Usus Speculi Plani:—Natura in Arcum Coacta:—Sphæra Triplex:—Quæstiones Morales. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beau, JEAN BAPTISTE LE, a French Jesuit, was born, in 1602, in the Comtat-Venaissin, and died at Montpellier in 1670. He wrote, the Life of François d'Estaing, Bishop of Rhodéz (Clermont, 1653, 4to, in French), and that of Bartholomeo dos Martyres, Archbishop of Braga, in Latin.

Beaucaire, FRANÇOIS DE RÉGUILLOX, a learned French prelate and theologian, was born in 1514, at the château of Cresta. He was at first preceptor of the Cardinal Charles of Lorraine, whom he accompanied to Rome, and who gave to him the bishopric of Metz. He also went to the Council of Trent, and there spoke with great eloquence and zeal against the pretensions of the Ultramontanes, and upon the necessity of the Reformation. Beaucaire retired to Bourbonnais after having resigned his bishopric, and there composed his Rerum Gallicarum Commentaria, ab anno 1541 ad annum 1562 (Lyons, 1625). He died in 1591. He also wrote De Infinitum in Matrum Uteris Sanctificatione (Paris, 1565 and 1567); and some verse, which is found in Delicie Poetarum Gallorum Illustrum. His Histoire de France did not appear until after his death, as he had desired. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Beauchamp, ROBERT, an Irish Methodist preacher, was born in Limerick, April 28, 1798. He was honorably connected with Irish Methodism from the days of Mr. Wesley, was converted in his youth, joined the Methodists, entered the ministry in 1824, and for thirty-nine years faithfully discharged the pastoral office. He became a supernumerary in 1864, removed to England, and resided first at Newark, then with his son in London (John Beauchamp, Esq., treasurer of the Wesleyan Thanksgiving Fund). He was a spotless example of holy living, and peacefully died in London, April 28, 1873.

Beaucher, JAMES, D.D., an English prelate, became canon of Windsor in 1738, and was consecrated lord bishop of Hereford May 11, 1746. He died Oct.

20, 1787, aged seventy-eight. He published a Sermon Preached before the Lords (1752). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Le Neve, Fasti.

Beaufort, Daniel Augustus, of Huguenot descent, was pastor of the Church of the "New Patent," in London, in 1728; of the Artillery in 1728; and of the Savoy, and probably Spring Gardens, in 1741. Subsequently he went to Ireland, where he held the living of Navan, and was appointed dean of Tuam. His descendants are still in England, one of whom arrived at considerable distinction as a novelist. He was somewhat celebrated in his day as a religious controversialist. See Smiles, Huguenot Refugees, p. 398, 399. (J. C. S.)

Beaufort, Eustache de, a French monk of the order of Cistercians, was born in 1635. He embraced the monastic life contrary to his inclination, in order to satisfy his vanity and that of his family. After several years he was appointed to the abbey of Sept Font. He at first lived in luxury and debauchery, but in 1663 he repented of this course, and proposed to the friars a rigid reform; but they, after reproaching him severely, abandoned him. Eustache then rebuilt his monastery, and soon after, by the example of Rance, he assembled a new society, which submitted to more rigid regulations. He died Oct. 22, 1709. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaufort, Henry, an English prelate of considerable celebrity, was born about 1370. He was a natural son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, and was half-brother to King Henry IV. He studied at Oxford and Cambridge, but received the principal part of his education at Aix-la-Chapelle. He became prebendary of Lincoln in 1389, dean of Wells in 1397, chancellor of Oxford University the same year, bishop of Lincoln in 1398, and bishop of Winchester in 1404. He repeatedly filled the office of lord-chancellor, and was involved in all the most important political movements of his times. He was present at the Council of Constance, and voted for the election of Pope Martin V., by whom he was subsequently made a cardinal. When the cardinal's nephew, Henry V. of England, proposed to levy a new impost on the clergy, in order to raise money for carrying on the war against France, Beaufort was the chief opponent of the measure; yet he loaned the king, out of his own private purse, £28,000, a sum which seems to indicate that he was the wealthiest subject of his time in all England. His service in this affair was soon recognized by the pope, who sent him as legate into Germany to organize a crusade against the followers of John Huss. This undertaking failed, and the cardinal, having expended, in levying an English army against France, the moneys granted from Rome for other purposes, fell under the papal displeasure. In 1431 Beaufort conducted the young king, Henry VI., to France, to be crowned in Paris as king of France and England. Here he also endeavored in vain to reconcile the duke of Bedford, regent of France, with the offended duke of Burgundy. Cardinal Beaufort died at Winchester, in 1447. His memory is stained by his suspected participation in the murder of his great political rival, the duke of Gloucester, who headed the lay opposition to the despotism of ecclesiastical statesmen, and by the fact that he presided over the tribunal which sentenced the Maid of Orleans to perish at the stake. See Milner, History of Winchester; Gough, Life of Beaufort, in Vetusta Monumenta, vol. ii.; Le Neve, Fasti (Index).

Beaugendre, ANTOINE, a French Benedictine of the Society of St. Maur, and librarian of the abbey of Saint-Germain-des-Prés, was born in Paris in 1628. He published a new edition, with notes, of the works of Hildebert, bishop of Mans, archbishop of Tours at the time of his death, and of Marbod, bishop of Rennes, which was printed at Paris in 1708. He died Aug. 16, 1708. He also wrote, Vie de Messire Joly, Chanoine et Instituteur des Religieuses Hospitalières de Dijon. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaugrand, MARTIN, a French theologian, was born at Troyes, in 1620, and died in 1698. He was for twenty-five years director of the convent of the Ursulines of Troyes, and published a résumé of the doctrine of St. Augustine, entitled, Sancti Augustini Doctrinæ Christianæ Praxis Catechistica (Troyes, 1678). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaulieu, Eustory (or Hector) de, a French poet and theologian, a native of Beaulieu (Lower Limousin), wrote in the early half of the 16th century. He was successively organist of the cathedral, comedian, Catholic priest, and Protestant minister. He wrote, Doctrine et Instruction des Filles Chrétiennes Désirant Vivre selon la Parole de Dieu, avec la Repentance de l'Homme Pécheur (1565):—some songs and a collection of poems, published at Lyons in 1557, entitled Divers Rapports. He is also the author of Prologues:—Deux Moralités:—l'Enfant Prodigue, etc. According to Beauchamps he changed his name from Eustory to Hector, which occasioned the mistake of Duverdier, who makes a representation of two different authors. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaulieu, Louis le Blanc de, a French minister and professor of theology at the Calvinist Academy of Sedan, was born, in 1614, at Beaulieu, a small city of Lower Limousin. He was noted for the wisdom of his principles and for his conciliatory spirit. He was twice chosen—first by the marshal of Fabert, and then by Turenne—to form a plan for the union of Catholics and Protestants, but his negotiations did not succeed. He died Feb. 23, 1675. He left, Sermons, a Traité de l'Origine de la Sainte Écriture (London, 1660), and a collection entitled Theses Sedanenses (Sedan, 1675). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaulieu, Luke de, an English clergyman, was chaplain to Lord Jeffries; became prebendary of London in 1686, and prebendary of Gloucester in 1687. He died in May, 1723. His Theological Works were published in 1674–1706. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Le Neve, Fasti.

Beaulieu, Simon de, a French prelate, was a native of Beaulieu in Champaign. He was at first archdeacon of Chartres and Poitiers, then canon of Bourges and of St. Martin of Tours, and was elected archbishop of Bourges. Boniface VIII. appointed him cardinal, and made him his legate to France and England. He held a synod, of which he has written the Actes. He died at Orvieto, Aug. 18, 1297. He also wrote some epistles. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaumont, Christophe de, a noted French prelate, was born, July 26, 1703, at La Roque, in the diocese of Sarlat. In 1741 he was made bishop of Bayonne, in 1745 archbishop of Vienne, and in 1746 of Paris. He very rigorously sustained the bull Unigenitus against the Jansenists, and forbade the administration of the sacraments to those about to die unless they could prove by a certificate that they had formerly confessed to the priest of the parish. But the Parliament immediately took the matter in hand, and declared that the sacraments could not be refused on this ground, since the bull Unigenitus was not a rule of faith. The archbishop was supported by the king, but the Parliament persisted in their determination, and, when such a case of refusal occurred, had the revenues of the archbishop confiscated. The king forbade the Parliament to interfere in spiritual affairs, and followed his action by banishing all its members to foreign parts; but it was to no purpose. He was finally compelled to yield, since most of the other French bishops declared that the presentation of a certificate of confession was not necessary for the administration of the sacraments. Beaumont died in 1781. To great courage and firmness he added inextinguishable charity. See Ferlet, Éloge Funèbre de Mgr. de Beaumont (Paris, 1784); Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Gieseler, Ecclesiastical History, v, 180; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 85. (B. P.)

Beaumont, Claudio Francesco, an Italian painter, was born in 1694. After studying some time in his native city, he visited Rome, where he applied himself to copying the works of Raphael, Guido, and the Caracci. On returning to Turin, he was employed to decorate the royal palace, where he painted in fresco, in the library, various symbolical subjects relative to the royal family of Sardinia; and in the other apartments he represented the Rape of Helen and the Judgment of Paris. In the Chiesa della Croce is a fine picture of The Descent from the Cross. The king of Sardinia conferred on him the honor of knighthood, in whose service he died, in 1766.

Beaumont, Geoffrey de, A French prelate and peer, was born at Bayeux, at the commencement of the 13th century. He was legate of the holy see in Lombardy, and accompanied, as chancellor, Charles of Anjou, brother of St. Louis, to the kingdom of Naples. In 1265 he brought to the king of Sicily the aid of three thousand horses, which he had collected at Mantua. On his return, being appointed bishop of Laon, he performed the service of peer, in 1272, at the coronation of Philip the Bold. He died in 1273. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaumont, Guillaume Robert Philippe Joseph Jean de, a French ascetic writer, was born at Rouen near the close of the 17th century, and died in 1761. He wrote, L'Imitation de la Vierge (1758):—Devoion au Divin Cœur de Jésus (Rouen, 1751):—Vives des Saints (1757):—Exercices du Parfait Chrétien (eod.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaumont, John, an English Wesleyan preacher, and father of the eloquent Rev. Joseph Beaumont, M.D., was converted in early life; entered the ministry in 1786, and travelled until his death at Macclesfield, Nov. 8, 1822. "He possessed considerable musical talents, and some of his sacred compositions will long be esteemed." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1823.

Beaumont, Joseph, D.D., an English divine, was born at Hadleigh, Suffolk, March 13, 1615. At the age of sixteen he was placed in Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he made great progress in learning, and subsequently became fellow, tutor, and moderator. In 1648 he was ejected from his fellowship on account of his adherence to Charles I. He was ejected from three other preferments received during the Rebellion for a like reason. In 1650 he became domestic chaplain to bishop Wren. At the Restoration he was made first chaplain to Charles II. In 1662 he was appointed master of Jesus College, Cambridge, and in 1663 master of Peterhouse. The same year he was instituted to the rectory of Teversham, near Cambridge, and in 1664 to that of Barley, Hertfordshire. In 1665 he had a controversy with Dr. Henry More on account of certain doctrines advanced by the latter in his Mystery of Godliness, which he thought subversive of the English ecclesiastical constitution. Dr. Beaumont received the thanks of the university for his services on this occasion, and in 1670 was elected to the divinity chair. He died Nov. 23, 1699. His Poems in English and Latin were published in 1749. His principal work was Psyche, or Love's Mystery, in twenty-four cantos, displaying the intercourse between Christ and the soul (1648). He is said to have left all his critical and polemical works to his college, strictly forbidding the printing of any of them.

Beaune, Jean de, a French ecclesiastical writer of the 14th century, was a native of Beaune, in Burgundy. He entered the Dominican order at Dijon, and was inquisitor at Carcassonne from 1316 to 1333. He wrote Sententie Plures ab Inquisitore Late; published with the Latin History of the Inquisition, by Philip of Limborch (Amsterdam):—Acta Plura contra Albigenses Hæreticos, anno 1318 mense Maio et Mart seq. He also wrote some similar works under lengthy titles. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaune, Renaud de, a French prelate, son of baron de Samblancay, was born at Tours in 1527. He was chancellor of the duke of Alençon; but he afterwards chose the ecclesiastical profession, and was appointed successively bishop of Mende, archbishop of Bourges, and then, in 1596, of Sens. Clement VIII, irritated that this prelate had justified Henry IV, and that he had proposed to create a patriarch in France, obliged him to wait six years for his bulls. De Beaune firmly maintained the rights of France on all occasions, before the assembly of the clergy, before the states of Blois, where he presided in 1588, and especially at the conference of Surène, when he announced that Henry IV had decided to make abjuration. Renaud de Beaune became grand-almoner of France, and commander of the orders of the king. He died in 1606. He wrote Decreta Concilii Provincialis Bituricensis:—Discours dans l'Assemblée du Clergé (1605):—Oraison Funèbre de Marie Stuart (1573):—Sermon Funèbre sur la Mort du Duc d'Anjou, Frère de Henri III (1584):—Harangue dans les États de Blois:—Reformation de l'Université de Paris (Paris, 1601–67). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaupère, Jean (in Latin Johannes Pulchripetrus), a French theologian, was born at Nevers in 1380. At the commencement of the 15th century he completed his studies at the University of Paris, and devoted himself to ecclesiastical labors and honors. He was successively master of arts, doctor and professor of theology, rector of the university (1413), canon of Paris, Besançon, Rouen, chancellor of Notre Dame of Paris, and deputy of the university for the nation of Normandy at the council of Bâle. He took part in the process of condemnation of the Maid of Orleans in 1430, where he distinguished himself by his want of truth and his iniquity. In the process of re-examination in 1450, he excused himself for his conduct by the violence exercised by the English concerning the judges who condemned that heroine. He died about 1450. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaupied, Jean François, a French theologian, abbot of St. Spire of Corbeil, died in 1759. He wrote Les Vies et Miracles de Saint Spire et de Saint Jen (not St. Len), Premier et Troisième Evêque de Bayeux (Paris, 1736). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauport, Benjamin, a French theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, wrote Monitæsuron Evangeliorum (Paris, 1552, 1560); which is, notwithstanding the Latin title, a concordance of the gospels written in French. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaupuis, Charles Walon de, a French theologian, was born at Beauvais, Aug. 9, 1621. He was closely allied with the monks of Port Royal, whose schools he directed at Paris. After the suppression of these schools in 1650, he went into retirement. He died Feb. 1, 1709. He wrote, Maximes Chrétiennes, Tirées des Lettres de l'Abbé de St. Cyran (Paris, 1678):—Nouveaux Essais de Morale, Contenant Plusieurs Traités sur Différents Sujets (1699). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauregard, Jean Nicolas, a French Jesuit preacher, was born at Metz, June 16, 1731. The originality and eloquence of his sermons gained for him great success. The sermon which he preached during Lent, in 1789, produced a profound sensation. He took refuge in London during the Revolution, and there preached against the emigrants, whom he accused of being the direct abettors of the Revolution by their intrigues. Attracted to Germany by the princess Hohenlohe, who showed him great favor, he there continued his ministry, ever with his wonted success. His sermons, unpublished, were bequeathed, it is said, to the Jesuits of Russia. He died in 1804 at the chateau of Groninq, Suabia. His Analyse was published at Lyons and Paris in 1825. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauséant Avant was the war-cry of the Templars, in allusion to their colors—black for their foes, and white for friends, side by side; for which the old French word was baucant (piebald). The Hospitallers' flag was red with a white cross.

Beausobre, Charles Louis de, a French Protestant theologian, son of Isaac, was born at Dessau, March 24, 1690. In 1713 he was appointed preacher to the French congregation at Buchholz, near Berlin. In 1715 he accepted a call to Hamburg, but he soon returned to Berlin, where he died, March 10, 1753, as pastor of the French congregation and member of the Academy of Sciences. He published Le Triomphe de l'Innocence (Berlin, 1761); being a defence of the French Reformed Christians against their opponents. He also edited from his father's writings, Supplément à l'Histoire de la Guerre des Hussites (Geneva, 1745):—Sermons sur le xii chap. de l'Épître aux Romains (Lausanne, 1744):—Sermons sur la Resurrection de Lazare (1751). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Nouv. Bibl. Germ. xvii; Mémoires de l'Académie de Berlin, 1753. (B. P.)

Beauteville, Jean Louis Dubuisson de, bishop of Alais, was born at Beauteville in 1708. In 1755 he was sent to the assembly of the clergy, where he ranged himself on the side of moderation. The mandate which he published in 1762 against the Recueil des Assertions gained for him a number of enemies, especially on the part of his colleagues. Nevertheless he enjoyed great consideration, more especially on the part of the Protestants than among the Catholics of Alais. He was a learned prelate, full of religious fervor, devoted to his duty, and charitable towards the poor. Some of his writings created a public sensation; among others one entitled, Sur la Mort de Louis XV et sur le Sacre de Louis XVI. He had prepared a work against the report of M. de Brienne, at the assembly of the clergy of 1765; but was prevented from presenting it by his death, which occurred March 25, 1775. He was in correspondence with Clement XIV concerning means for terminating the divisions which were disturbing the Church of France. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauvais, Councils of (Concilium Bellovacense). Of these there were several.

I. Held in April, 845. Ten bishops were present. Hincmar was here elected to the archbishopric of Rheims, which had been vacant ten years. A sort of agreement (consisting of eight articles) was drawn up between Hincmar and Charles, the king, which the latter promised to observe religiously. See Labbe, Concil. vii, 1811.

II. Held Dec. 6, 1114, by Conon, legate and cardinal, assisted by the bishops of three provinces. Here sentence of excommunication was passed upon the emperor, Henry V, and Thomas Seigneur de Marle, accused of cruelty and robbery. Several decrees made by the later popes, for the preservation of Church property, and others relating to discipline, called for by the circumstances of the times, were renewed; also the case of certain heretics was discussed, whom the populace had burned at Soissons, without waiting for the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, fearing that it would be too lenient. The case of Godfrey, who had left his bishopric of Amiens, and retired to the monastery of Chartreuse, was deferred for consideration at a future council. See Labbe, Concil. x, 797.

III. Held in October, 1120, by the legate Conon and the bishops of three provinces. At this council, the canonization of Arnulphus, bishop of Soissons, took place. The then bishop of Soissons, holding in his hand the book containing the life of Arnulphus, certified to the truth of its contents. The day was then settled, with the abbot of Oudenbourg, on which the body of Arnulphus should be raised from the ground; and this was accordingly done May 1 of the following year. See Labbe, Concil. x, 882.

Beauvais, Gilles François, a French Jesuit and ascetic writer, was born in 1695 in Brittany. He published the Almanach du Clergé from 1664 to 1668. He died at Paris in 1773. Among other works, he wrote, l'Éducation d'un Grand Roi (Paris, 1718, 1759):—Vie du P. Azevedo, Jésuite (ibid. 1744):—Lettres Morales et Chrétienues d'une Dame à sa Fille, sur les Moyens de se Conduire avec Sagesse dans le Monde (ibid. 1758). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauvais, Jean Baptist Charles Marie de, bishop of Senez, was born at Cherbourg in 1731. He completed his studies at the College of Harcourt, under Lebeau, successor of Rollin. The noble appearance of his physiognomy was in harmony with that of Fénelon. His eloquence was charming, and he devoted himself entirely to the ecclesiastical calling. He acquired a reputation and became preacher at the court. He resigned his bishopric in 1783, and the viscount of Paris appointed him, in 1789, deputy to the States-General. He died April 4, 1790. An edition of his Sermons, Panégyriques, et Oraisons Funèbres was published (Paris, 1807). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 115; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Beauvais, Nicholas Dauphin de, a Parisian engraver, was born about 1687, and studied under John Audran. He engraved part of the dome of St. Paul's, after sir James Thornhill. Some of his plates are: The Virgin with the Infant Jesus upon a Pedestal, with Saints below; Mary Magdalene in the Desert; Thunder; The Descent of the Holy Ghost.

Beauvau, René François de, a French prelate, was born in 1664, at the Château du Rivau. After having completed his studies, and received the cap of doctor in the Sorbonne in 1694, he was appointed canon and grand-vicar of the Church of Sarlat, of which his uncle was bishop. Six years later he was himself made bishop of Bayonne. Here, by his ability, his zeal, his gentleness and charity, he won the affection and esteem of all in his diocese. He was convinced of their faithfulness by a circumstance which tested the sincerity of their sentiments. In 1707 Louis XIV called him to the bishopric of Tournay, which spread consternation throughout Bayonne, as the people were so reluctant to part with him. But all effort to retain him was in vain, for Louis would not change his plans, declaring it to be necessary that Tournay should have such a man as this one. Tournay was besieged and taken by prince Eugene, and M. de Beauvau rendered excellent service to the inhabitants. He afterwards retired to Paris, where Louis XIV, in recognition of his valuable services, defrayed his expenses with silver from the royal treasury. Tournay having been given to the emperor, M. de Beauvau resigned his bishopric, and became in 1713 archbishop of Toulouse, and in 1719 of Narbonne. He also had charge of the political government. As president of the states of Languedoc for twenty years, he there exhibited the same virtues as upon the different episcopal sees which he occupied. It is to his patronage that we are indebted for the Histoire du Languedoc, by the friars of St. Maur; also the Description Géographique, and the Histoire Naturelle, of the same province, by the Society of Montpellier. He died Aug. 4, 1739. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauvilliers, Marie de, abbess of Montmartre, daughter of the count of Saint Aignan, a gentleman attached to the duke of Alençon, was born April 27, 1574. At the period of the siege of Paris in 1590, Henry IV became enamoured of her, and installed her at Senlis; but he abandoned her when he met Gabrielle d'Estrées, her cousin. The abbess returned to the convent of Montmartre, where she had for more than fifty years a struggle against the disorders and lack of discipline of her subordinates, the nuns of the order of St. Benedict of Ferrières. She died April 21, 1656. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beauxalmis (Beauxamis, or Beaulxamis), THOMAS, a French theologian, of the order of the Carmelites, was born at Melun in 1524. He was curate of St. Paul at Paris, but was removed for having refused to inter Maugiron, and other favorites of Henry III. He governed his congregation of Alby in quality of vicar-general, from 1570 to 1573, and was often employed by king Henry III in important affairs of Church and State. He was afterwards made prior of Ville-Preux, and died at Paris, May 1, 1589. He wrote, in Latin, a Commentary on the Harmony of the Gospels (Paris, 1650):—A Defence of the Worship, Veneration, Intercession, etc., of the Saints (ibid. 1566, 8vo):—Honilies on the Gospels in Lent (ibid. 1567, 8vo); and many other works, in defence of his Church and against Protestant writers. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beaver (or Bever), JOHN (called also Biever, and in Latin Fiber, Fibervius, Custor, and Castorius), a Benedictine monk of the abbey of Westminster, lived near the commencement of the 14th century. He wrote, a Chronicle of the affairs of England, from Brutus down to his own time:—De Rebus Canobii Westmonasteriensis. These two works, often cited by the English historians, are still unpublished. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beebe, Gilbert, a Baptist minister, was born at Norwich, Conn., in 1800. At the age of seven he became a Christian, and at sixteen began preaching in New York city. He was ordained there in 1818, and began his ministerial life as an itinerant preacher. In 1836 he became pastor of the Church in Middletown, N. Y., where he remained during the rest of his life. He commenced the publication, in New Vernon, N. Y., in 1832, of the Signs of the Times, devoted to the Old-school Baptist cause, and continued his editorial charge of the paper after his removal to Middletown. He was a preacher of remarkable power and a vigorous writer. He was a disbeliever in the missionary and Sunday-school work, holding that God had no need of these. His physical powers and mental vigor he retained to the last, preaching on the day before his death, which took place at Middletown, May 2, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Bebel, Balthasar, a Protestant theologian, was born at Strasburg in 1632. In 1661 he was made professor of theology at his native place; in 1662 he received the degree of doctor of divinity; and in 1686 he was called as professor and general superintendent to Wittenberg, where he died, Oct. 2, 1686. He is the author of, Antiquitates Ecclesie in 3. Prioribus post Natum Chr. Sæculis (Strasburg, 1669):—Antiquitates in 4. Sæculo (ibid. 1679-80, 2 vols.):—Memorabilia Historie Ecclesiast. Recentioris a Tempore Reformationis 1517 Capte, usque ad annum 1680 Perducte, Continuata deinceps Supplementis usque ad annum 1730 (edita per Ch. A. Hausen, Dresden, 1731); and some other works. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 547, 579; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Becan is the name of several saints.

1. The son of Cula, and contemporary of St. Columba, lived at Imlech-Fiaich, now Einlagh, County Meath, Ireland. He was so famous in his day that some place him among the twelve apostles of Ireland. He is commemorated April 5.

2. Of Cluain-aírd-Molcraig, commemorated May 26. He was brother of St. Crinan, in whose life his monastery is called Killbreacan (or Cluainaird-Mobecoc) in Munster. O'Clery puts the site of this church in Muscraigh Breoghain, and attaches him also to Tigh Chonail, in Ui-Briuin Cualann; adding, from the Life of St. Abban, that he himself built a church at Cluainaird-Mobecoc, and left Becan in it with the office of the holy Church, as in every church he blessed. Here St. Becan continued till his death, A.D. 689 (or 690). In the Annals of Ireland he is known by the diminutives Dubeoc and Dubecoc. See Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. Irel. ii, 21, 129; O'Donovan, Four Masters.

3. Surnamed Ruim (or Ruimim); commemorated March 17, was the son of Ernan, and a near relative of St. Columba, and of the early abbots of Hy. Leaving Ireland, he went first to Iona, and then into a solitary place. There he lived for several years, while his uncle, Segenius, was abbot of the island. He died March 17, 677.

Becan, Martin, a noted French Jesuit, who flourished in 1550-1624, was for a long time professor of philosophy and theology in the colleges of his order. He was a favorite with the emperor Mathias, who retained him at Vienna, and with his son Ferdinand II, who made him his confessor. This position and his writings give us an insight into the zeal with which he supported that policy of which the 'Thirty Years' war was the final result. On sundry occasions he wrote against king James I, and he even went so far, especially in his Controversia Anglicana de Potestate Regis et Pontificis (Mayence, 1612), as to defend the legitimacy of attacking the life of kings. The Roman see found it wise to condemn the work. His Opuscula Theologica (Mogunt, 1610-21, 5 parts in 4 vols.) contain the following treatises:

Vol. I. De Calvinistarum et Catholicorum Prædestinatione; De Deo et Autore Peccati; De Justificatione, Justitia Bonorum Operum, Anxillis Gratiæ Christi. De Circulo Calvinistico contra Parem. Quæstiones Calvin. Aphorismi Doctrinæ Calvin. De Differentia inter Pelagianos, Calvinistas, Catholicos in Prædestinatione. De Off. Angelorum. Refut. Plessier de Eucharistia. II. De Fide Hereticis Servanda; de Antichristo Reformato; an Ecclesia Rom. Defecerit; de Cena Calv., Luth., Catholicor., Communione sub Utraque. Refutatio Apologiæ Regis Angl. de Primatu Ecclesiæ. Refut. Torturæ Torti. De Purgatorio Calvin. De Sacrificio Nature, Legis, Gratiæ. III. Examen Plagæ Regiæ contra Graseri Calvin. Comment. in Apocal. De Fide Deo Servanda. Privilegia Calvinistarum. Quæst. Batavica. Dissidium Anglicanum. Duellum c. Tokero. De Pontifice Vet. Testam. IV. Tituli Calvinistar. De Primatu Regiæ Ecclesiæ. Examen Concordiæ Angli. Epist. ad J. Sartorium de Eucharistia. Ad Georg. N., ex Calviniano factum Catholicum, de compar. Eccl. et Synagogæ. De Oratione pro Defunctis. V. Invocatio Sanctiorum. Judex Controversiarum. Ad Parem de Colloquio Swalbac, de Fide Hereticis Servanda. De Ecclesia Christi, Catholicorum, Luth. et Calv. De Eccl. Republica contra Marc. Ant. de Domluis.

He also published Manuale Controversiarum hujus Temporis (Würzburg, 1623; Heidelberg, 1759-60). His Opera Omnia et Posthuma were published at Würzburg, 1649. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 18, 341, 401, 456, 461, 479; Alegambe, Bibl. Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Val Andreas, Bibl. Belg. (B. P.)

Becan, Wilhelm, a Flemish theologian and poet, was born at Ypres in 1608. He was a Jesuit, and distinguished himself by his eloquence and poetry. He died at Louvain, Dec. 12, 1683. He wrote, Introitus Triumphalis Ferdinandi Austriaci in Flandriæ Metropolim Pandanum (Antwerp, 1636); with engravings from the designs of Rubens;—Idylles et Élégies; published with the works of P. Hoschius. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becandella, Mary, a French martyr, was burned at Fontaine, France, in 1534, for finding fault with a sermon which a friar preached. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 397.

Becart (or Becardus), Jean, a Flemish theologian, of the order of the Premonstrants, who died in

1635, wrote, S. Thomæ Cantuariensis et Henrici II Monomachia de Libertate Ecclesiastica (Cologne, 1624), under the name of Richard Brumaus, and is also the author of Annales Premonstratenses. See Swertii Athenæ Belgicæ; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Becc (or Beg), an Irish saint whose day is Oct. 12, was the son of De, and seems to have been attached to the court of Diarmait of Tara, about A.D. 500, when his prophecies appear to have had a wide reference and acceptance. O'Donovan (Four Masters, i, 197) places his death at A.D. 557. Colgan (Acta SS. 713, c. 4, § 3) gives his genealogy from Colla-da-chrioch; but the ancient pedigree represents him as eighth from Niall of the Nine Hostages.

Beccafumi, DOMENICO (called Micarino), an eminent Italian painter, sculptor, and engraver, was born at Siena in 1484. He visited Rome and studied the works of Michael Angelo and Raphael. He painted several pictures for the churches and cathedrals of Siena. He was living, according to Lanzi, in the year 1551. The following are some of his principal prints: The Nativity; St. Peter holding a Book and the Keys; St. Jerome kneeling before a Crucifix.

Beccancelled, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Becanceldense), is the name of two provincial synods.

I. Held in 692, by Wihtrud, king of Kent, at Beccancelled, in Kent (probably Bapchild, near Sittingbourne). Besides the king, there were present Brihtwald, archbishop of Canterbury, Tobias of Rochester, and several abbots, abbesses, and "wise men." The chief object of the council appears to have been to consult about the repairing of the churches in Kent, injured in the wars with the West Saxons. King Wihtrud then, with his own mouth, renewed and confirmed the liberties and privileges and possessions of the Church in his kingdom; forbidding all future kings, and all aldermen and laymen forever, all dominion over the churches, and all things belonging to them. He further directed that, upon the death of any bishop, abbot, or abbess, the event should be immediately made known to the archbishop, and a worthy successor be chosen with his consent. See Johnson, Eccles. Canons; Labbe, Concil. v, 1356.

II. Held about 796, by Athelard, archbishop of Canterbury, in which the privileges granted to the churches by Wihtrud and others were solemnly confirmed. This deed of confirmation is signed by the archbishop, twelve bishops, and twenty-three abbots. See Johnson, Eccles. Canons; Labbe, Concil. vii, 1148; Wilkin, Concil. i, 162.

Beccaria (or Beccariis), ANTON DE, a Dominican of Ferrara, who died in 1543 as bishop of Scodri, in Dalmatia, is the author of Glossemata super Psalmos Secundum 4. Sensus:—Expositio Jobi:—Homiliæ 50 super Epistolâ Canonica Petri, etc. See Échard, De Scripturibus Ordinibus Dominicanorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Becchio (or Becchius), GUGLIELMO, an Italian theologian, bishop of Fiesole, native of Florence, who died in 1480, wrote, Commentaria in Aristot. Ethic. Libr.:—Interpretatio super Primum Sentent.:—Dubitatur an Deus?:—Liber de lege Mahomethana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becci, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian theologian, a native of Castiglione, entered the Benedictine order at Monte Cassino, and became abbot of Arezzo; this office he held at the time of his death, which occurred in 1687. He was especially known by his anagrams. He wrote, Jac. Cavacchi Elogia Illustrum Anachoretarum (Rome, 1662):—Veritas Anagrammate Explorata ad Varia Terenda Concomia (Padua, 1668). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bec-crespin, JEAN DU, a French theologian and miscellaneous writer, nephew of Philip of Bec, was born about 1540. On his return to France from a journey in the East, he took part in the civil wars which were so numerous at this epoch, and was wounded in 1577 under the walls of Issoire. Authorized by the king to withdraw from the service, he was provided for at the abbey of Mortimer; became bishop of St. Malo in 1599, and counsellor of the crown. He died Jan. 12, 1610, leaving Paraphrase des Psaumes:—Sermons, upon the Lord's Prayer (Paris, 1586):—Discours de l'Antagonie du Chien et du Lievre (1593):—Histoire du Grand Tamerlan (Lyons or Brussels, 1602). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becerra, Dominico, a Spanish preacher of the 16th century, was a native of Seville. He was made prisoner by the Moors of Algiers, and conducted to Rome. He wrote El Frattado dos Costumbres (Venice, 1589). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becerra, Fernando, a Spanish hagiographer who lived at the commencement of the 17th century, wrote, La Vida e Morte de los SS. Martyres Fr. Fernando, etc. (Cadiz, 1617):—Reluzion del Martyrin del P. Fr.-P. de Zuñiga, en los reynos del Zapon, 1622, which is found in manuscript in several libraries of Spain. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becerra, Gasparo, a Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Bajeza, Andalusia, about 1520. He studied at Rome under Michael Angelo. He carved in wood images of Christ, of the Virgin, and of saints, which were among the most beautiful ornaments of the Spanish churches. He was one of the first to conceive the idea of painting statues. His chief work is the statue of the Virgin, made by order of queen Isabella of Valois, which is admired at Madrid. He left some remarkable fresco paintings. He died at Madrid in 1570. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Becerril, Alonzo, a Spanish sculptor, lived near the close of the 16th century. Nearly all of his works are in silver. He made for the Cathedral of Cuença crucifixes, reliquaries, chandeliers, and a splendid ostensoir which is admired to this day. For this last article he received 16,755 ducats, and the weight of it was 1600 marks. He left a large number of statuettes and bass-reliefs, which were highly esteemed for the delicacy of their execution. The work of Becerril is largely executed in Gothic style. He is one of the masters who have contributed largely towards the restoration of architecture to its primitive simplicity. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becerril, Francisco, brother of Alonzo, who died in 1573, and Cristobal, his son, who died in 1584, were also two commendable artists. They executed works for the Church of St. John at Alcarnon which were very highly esteemed. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bega (or Begga), an Irish saint, whose day is Feb. 10. It is said by Colgan (Tr. Thaum. p. 121) that when St. Patrick was in East Meath he left at the Church of Teichlaisran, in that county, two of his disciples, Bega a virgin, and Lugaith a priest, probably brother and sister, the children of Gauran. Near the church-door was a well and a tomb, the latter having the name of Feart-Bige, or Bega's tomb.

Bechada, Grégoire, a Limosin poet, composed in verse a recital of the Conquête de Jerusalem at the commencement of the 12th century. This poem, one of the most noteworthy of the French literature of this epoch, has not come down to us. The author worked on it for twelve years. Geoffrey, abbot or prior of Vigéois, a contemporary author, mentions it, with some details, in his History. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becher, Carl Anton Eduard, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Hildburghausen, May 6, 1741, and died as pastor at Oldisleben, in Thuringia, July 30, 1802. He wrote, Abhandlung vom Sabbath der Juden (Halle, 1775):—Ueber Toleranz und Gewissensfreiheit, etc. (Berlin, 1781):—Vermischte Abhandlungen zur Pastoraltheologie gehörig (Leipsic, 1782). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 95; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 487; ii, 40. (B. P.)

Bechman, Fridemann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 26, 1628, at Elleben, in Thuringia. He studied at Jena, where he became professor of philosophy in 1656. In 1668 he was appointed professor of theology, taking at the same time his degree as doctor of divinity. He died March 9, 1703. He is the author of, Annotaciones Ueberiores in Compendium Theol. L. Hutleri (Leipsic, 1696):—Theologia Polenica (Jena, 1702):—Dissertatio de Omnipræsentia Dei Secundum Substantiam (ibid. 1688):—Theologia Conscientiarum, sive Tractatus de Causibus Conscientiæ (ibid. 1692, 1705, 1713). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 296, 342, 417, 499; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Pipping, Memorie Theologorum; Zeumer, Vitæ Professorum Jenensium. (B. P.)

Bechor-Schor, Joseph, a French rabbi who flourished about 1160, is the author of a commentary on the Pentateuch, פירוש על החומש (Constantinople, 1520). In 1856 A. Jellinek published Genesis and Exodus according to a Munich MS. (Leipsic). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 95; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 85; Levy, Die Exegese bei den französischen Juden vom 10. bis 14. Jahrhundert (Leipsic, 1873), p. 21 sq.; Zunz, Zur Geschichte und Literatur, p. 74 sq. (B. P.)

Bechtel, John, a German Reformed minister, was born Oct. 3, 1690, at Bergstrasse, in the Palatinate. He emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1726, and began to preach at Germantown in 1728 without ordination. He was, however, ordained in 1742 by Rev. David Nitschman, a bishop in the Moravian Church, as a minister in the German Reformed Church of that place. Two years later he was dismissed for holding different doctrinal views. He died April 16, 1777. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, i, 312.

Becius, Jan, a Dutch Protestant theologian, was born in Holland in 1622. He was minister at Middelburg, and one of the defenders of Socinianism. He died near the close of the 17th century, leaving, Apologia Modesta et Christiana (1668):—Probatio Spiritus Autoris Arit Rediriri (1669):—Institutio Christiana (Amst. 1678). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beck, Cave, an English theologian who lived in the middle of the 17th century, wrote The Universal Character by which All Nations May Understand One Another's Conceptions, Reading out of One Common Writing their Own Tongues (1657). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beck, Christian Daniel, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Leipsic, Jan. 22, 1757. In 1782 he was appointed professor of philosophy, and in 1785 professor of Greek and Latin literature, at Leipsic, where he died, Dec. 13, 1832. He wrote, Monogrammata Hermeneutices Librorum Novi Fœderis (Leipsic, 1803):—Commentarii Histor. Decretor. Relig. Christ. et Formulæ Lutheranæ (ibid. 1801):—Consilia Formulæ Composite, Recitate, Tradite, Edite, Defensæ, et Prudentissima et Saluberrima Explicuit (ibid. 1830):—Commentationes Criticæ Quinquæ de Glossematis in Veteribus Libris (ibid. 1832). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 107, 592, 865; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 86. (B. P.)

Beck, Francis, an English theologian who lived in the early half of the 18th century, wrote A Complete Catalogue of All the Discourses, Written both For and Against Popery, in the Time of King James II, and an Alphabetical List of the Writers on Each Side (Lond. 1735). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beck, Jacob Christoph, a Swiss doctor and theologian, was born at Basle, March 1, 1711. In 1737 he was appointed professor of history in his native place, in 1744 professor of theology, and in 1759 professor of Old-Test. exegesis. He died in 1785. He wrote, Disputatio de Diluvio Noachico Universalis (Basle, 1738):—Synopsis Institutionum Universæ Theologiæ Naturalis et Revelatæ, Dogmaticæ, Polemicæ, et Practicæ (ibid. 1735):—Biblisches Wörterbuch oder Concordanz (ibid. 1770, and often, 2 vols.):—De Partibus Orbis quas ante Diluvium Noachicum Homines Incoluisse Videntur (ibid. 1739):—Epitome Hist. Eccl. Vet. Testamenti (ibid. 1770):—Disputatio de Codicibus Manuscriptis Græcis (ibid. 1774):—De Editionibus Principibus Novi Test. Græci (ibid. 1775):—Bigæ Editionum Novi Test. Syriaci (ibid. 1776). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 175; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 95; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, No. 184, p. 19; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Beck, Johann Tobias, one of the most prominent Protestant theologians of the 19th century, was born Feb. 22, 1804, at Balingen, in Württemberg. He studied at Tübingen; was in 1827 pastor at Waldthausen, and in 1829 teacher and preacher in Mergentheim. In 1836 he accepted a call as professor of theology at Basle, and remained there till 1843. In that year he accepted a call to Tübingen, where he remained until his death, Dec. 28, 1878. The great influence which he had exercised at Basle caused him to be honored by the Basle faculty with the doctorate of divinity when he left there for Tübingen. Greater yet was his influence in the latter place, where he was the complete antipode of Baur, the father of the hypercritical "Tübingen school." He was most popular as a professor. All modern novelties he treated with the silence of utter contempt, professing to know nothing but the Bible as the book of life. His writings are very numerous. Thus he wrote, Versuch einer pneumatisch-hermeneutischen Entwicklung des neunten Kapitels im Briefe an die Römer (Mergentheim, 1833):—Christliche Reden (Stuttgart, 1834-60, 6 vols.):—Einführung in das System christlicher Lehre (ibid. 1838, 1870):—Leitfaden der christl. Glaubenslehre (ibid. 1869):—Gedanken aus und nach der Schrift (Tübingen, 1868):—Ueber die wissenschaftliche Behandlung der christlichen Lehre (ibid. 1865):—Umriss der biblischen Seelenlehre (Stuttgart, 1871; Eng. transl. Outlines of Biblical Psychology, Edinburgh, 1877):—Erklärung der zwei Briefe Pauli an Timotheus (edited by Julius Lindenmeyer, Gütersloh, 1879), etc. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 87 sq.; Worte der Erinnerung an Dr. Johann Tobias Beck (Tübingen, 1879). (B. P.)

Beck, John (1), D.D., a German Reformed minister, was born in the borough of York, Pa., April 10, 1830. He graduated at Marshall College in 1848, and pursued the regular course of study at Mercersburg Theological Seminary until 1850, when he was licensed to preach. He first served the Funkstown charge, Md. In 1854 he accepted a call to the Third-street Reformed Church in Easton, Pa., where he continued to labor earnestly and faithfully until his death, April 19, 1877. He stood high among the ministry of his denomination, having filled various positions of trust and responsibility, and being at the time of his death the president of the Mother Synod. He was an able, though not a great, preacher. He possessed a broad, catholic spirit, and a modest, retiring disposition. His well-stored mind, consistent life, genuine good-humor, delicacy of feeling, warmth of affection, and unceasing pastoral care, rendered him an efficient servant of his Master. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 278.

Beck, John (2), a Moravian missionary, was born at Creuzendorf, Upper Silesia, June 7, 1706. He was converted in 1731; was cast into a dungeon of the castle of Suppau in 1732, because of his refusal to recant the religious principles which he had imbibed; and shortly after escaping therefrom he made his way to Herrnhut, Upper Lusatia. Here he found a congregation of the United Brethren, which he joined, and under its direction proceeded as a missionary to Greenland, March 10, 1734, arriving on Aug. 19. He afterwards paid several visits to his native country, at the first of which he was ordained a deacon of the Brethren's Church. In 1759 he returned from his last European visit to his station at New Herrnhut, where he labored till 1761, when he removed to Lichtenfels, at which place he died, March 19, 1777. Mr. Beck was a humble, earnest Christian, thoroughly devoted to his work, and successful in the accomplishment of much good among those whom he served in the Gospel. See The (N. Y.) Christian Herald 1821, p. 609, 641.

Beck, Matthias Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Kaufbeuren, May 23, 1649. He studied at Jena; was in 1679 deacon, and in 1696 pastor, of the Church of the Holy Ghost at Augsburg, where he died, Feb. 2, 1701. He is best known by his Targum seu Paraphrasis Chaldaica in 1 et 2 Librum Chronicorum cum Versione Latina et Notis (Augsburg, 1680-83); which A. Rahmer used in his Targum zur Chronik (Thorn, 1866). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 53; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 95; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Beck, Michael, a Protestant theologian and Hebraist of Germany, was born at Ulm, Jan. 14, 1653. After having studied at Jena, he devoted himself, under the direction of a rabbin who had become Christianized, to the study of the Oriental languages and of philosophy; and from 1674 he himself prepared lectures in philology, and, like most of the learned Germans, he travelled, resorting to Jena, then to Strasburg. On his return he was made professor of Hebrew. At the same time he undertook pastoral functions, which he performed under various titles at Munster and Erlung. He died March 10, 1712. Some of his principal works are, Disputatio de Judæorum Phylacteris (Jena, 1675, 1684):—Disputatio de Duplici Accentuatione Decalogi; de Accentuum Hebræorum Usu Musico, in the Thesaurus Disputationum Theologiæ, vol. i:—De Parenthesi Ebraea, published about 1707. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beck, Thomas J., a Baptist minister, was born in Buncombe County, N. C., Dec. 2, 1805; and was converted and united with the Rehoboth Church in Wilkes County, Ga., in 1833. His ordination in 1835 took place at New Providence Church in Warren County. The churches which he served during a period of twenty-seven years were in Warren, McDuffie, and several other counties of Georgia. He had, at the time of his death, the pastoral oversight of four churches. He died in Warren County, Ga., Sept. 2, 1862. "He was very successful in winning souls to Jesus, and building up and strengthening the churches he served; and, according to his talents and education, few have done more for the denomination in Georgia than he." See Baptist Encyclop. p. 92. (J. C. S.)

Becker, Carl, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 6, 1803, at Gusten, in Anhalt-Cöthen. He received his early education at the gymnasium in Bernburg, and in 1823 he entered the missionary institution of father Jänicke at Berlin. He then studied at Halle and Berlin, and for some years labored among the Jews in connection with the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. In 1844 he accepted a call to the pastorate at Pinne, in the duchy of Posen; and in 1849 he accepted a call to Königsberg, in the Neumark. He devoted the latter part of his life entirely to the mission among the Jews, and died Jan. 23, 1874, at Ludwigslust. He followed out the maxim of the great apostle, and became a Jew unto the Jews. His writings are given by Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 88. (B. P.)

Becker, Cornelius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 24, 1561, at Leipsic. In 1588 he was called as deacon to Rochlitz; in 1592 he accepted a call for the same position at St. Nicolai, in his native place, and in 1594 he was appointed pastor of the same Church. In 1599 he obtained the degree of doctor of divinity, and was appointed professor of theology. He died May 25, 1604. He wrote, De Auctoritate Ecclesie in Scripturis Interpretandis:—Analysis Psalms Secundæ:—der Psalter Davids gesungweis zugerichtet (Leipsic, 1602, and often). He also wrote some hymns, which are still in use. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, ii, 219 sq.; Weinrich, Christl. Leichenpredigten (Leipsic, 1610), vol. i; Wimmer, Ausführliche Liedererklärung (Altenburg, 1749), ii, 324–328. (B. P.)

Becker, Johann Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Rostock, Aug. 14, 1698. He studied at Jena, Halle, and Wittenberg; was in 1725 pastor of St. Nicolai, in his native place; in 1730, professor of ethics; in 1736 he was made doctor of divinity, and in 1743 professor of theology. He died in 1772. He wrote, Disputatum de Pathologia Sacra (Rostock, 1722):—De Angelorum Lapsurum ex Inferno per Christum Speranda Restitutione, ex Ebr. ii, 16 (ibid. 1736):—Utrum Potius in Voluntate an Vero in Intellectu Vitium sit Atheismus? (ibid. 1737). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Neues Gelehrtes Europa, ii, 618. (B. P.)

Becker, Johann Herrmann, a German theologian, brother of the preceding, was born at Rostock, Dec. 10, 1700. Besides theology he studied jurisprudence, at his native place, Halle, Jena, Erfurt, Leipsic, and Helmstädt. In 1734 he was appointed archdeacon of St. Mary's, in his native place; he accepted a call in 1746 as professor of theology and pastor of St. James, at Greifswalde; and in 1747 he was made doctor of theology. In 1751 he accepted a call to Lübeck, as pastor of St. Mary's; and he died April 7, 1759. He wrote, Fundamentum Prælectionum Physico-dogmaticarum (Rostock, 1725, 1736):—Anthropologia Physico-theologica (ibid. 1734):—Diss. Inauguralis Theol. de Fide Infantum Præsumpta (Greifswalde, 1747):—De Virtute Baptismi ad Salutem Vera Effectiva (ibid. 1749):—Theoria Jobæ Specimen, ad loca Job ix, 9, 28; xxxi, 32 (Lübeck, 1752):—De Gloria Apparitionis Filii Dei in V. T. utrum Audiat μορφή Θεού, Phil. ii, 6 (ibid.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Neues Gelehrtes Europa, vol. xii; Heinsius, Kirchen-Historie, vol. iv. (B. P.)

Beckham, James Christopher, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Orange County, N. C., Nov. 15, 1833. He embraced religion in 1846; received license to exhort in 1854; and in 1856 was licensed to preach, and admitted into the Arkansas Conference. In 1860 he located, and in 1865 re-entered the effective list. In 1867 failing health obliged his supernumeration, which relation he sustained until his decease, March 8, 1868. Mr. Beckham was an excellent minister, highly esteemed and successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1868, p. 271.

Beckhaus, Moritz Johann Heinrich, a German Protestant doctor of theology, was born at Düsseldorf, April 3, 1768. For a time he acted as pastor at Mühlheim, Gladbach, and Iserlohn, and in 1815 he was called as professor of theology to Marburg, where he died in 1829. He wrote, Ueber die Aechtheit der sogenannten Tauschformel, Matt. xxviii, 19 (Offenbach, 1794):—Ueber die Integrität der prophetischen Schriften des alten Bundes (Halle, 1796):—De Dictione Tropica N. T. Judicanda et Interpretanda (Marburg, 1819):—Bemerkungen über den Gebrauch der apokryphischen Bücher des Alten Testaments zur Erläuterung der newest. Schreibart (Leipsic, 1808). He also translated and edited with notes, Heringa, Ueber den Begriff der Unenblichkeit und den rechten Gebrauch der bibl. Kritik (from the Dutch, Offenbach, 1804). He likewise edited Müncher's Lehrbuch der christl. Kirchengeschichte (Marburg, 1826), and Lehrbuch der christlichen Dogmengeschichte (ibid. 1819). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 82, 86, 92, 110, 130, 587, 592; ii, 95; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 95. (B. P.)

Beckington (Bekyngton, or De Bekenton), THOMAS, LL.D., an English prelate, was born in the parish of Beckington, in Somersetshire, towards the close of the 14th century. He was educated at New College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. He was presented to the rectory of St. Leonard's, near Hastings, in Sussex, and to the vicarage of Sutton Courtney, in Berkshire. He was also prebendary of Bedwin, York, and Lichfield, archdeacon of Buckingham, and master of St. Catherine's Hospital, near the Tower, in London. About 1429 he was dean of the Court of Arches, and a synod being then held in St. Paul's, London, which continued about six months, Beckington was one of three appointed to draw up a form of law, by which to proceed against the Wycliffites. He was held in high favor by Henry VI, and was by him made secretary of state, keeper of the privy seal, and, in 1443, bishop of Bath and Wells. He died at Wells, Jan. 14, 1465. He wrote some works which have no present value. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Beckley, Hosea, a Congregational minister, was born at Berlin, Conn., in 1780. He graduated from Yale College in 1803; was ordained pastor in Dummerston, Vt., March 2, 1808; remained until Oct. 15, 1837; and died in 1843. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 326.

Beckmann, Bernhard, a German Protestant theologian, a native of Wesel, lived in the latter half of the 17th century, and wrote Methodus Conciliandi ac in Veritatem Religionis Christianæ, Concordiæ et Tolerantiæ Fraternali Instituendi Ecclesias Protestantium, etc. (Frankfort-on-the-Oder, 1663). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beckmann, Dothler, a German preacher and historian, was born in 1645, at Yundern, in Holstein. His principal work is Die Historie des Lebenslaufes unsers Herrn J.-C. aus den 4. Evangelisten. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beckwith, Andrew J., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Fredericksburg, Va., March 13, 1833. He was early impressed with religion, which he embraced at the age of fourteen; and in 1854 entered the Virginia Conference. In 1862, while stationed on King George Circuit, the advance of the Federal army drove him from his work, and he went to Florida to improve his health. He died Nov. 27, 1866. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 101.

Beckwith, Baruch B., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lyme, Conn., in 1805. He graduated from Williams College in 1827, and from Auburn Seminary in 1830, and spent a fourth year of theological study at New Haven, Conn. He became pastor at Athol, Mass., 1831–34; then at Castine, Me., 1837–42; and last at Gouverneur, N. Y., 1846–60, where he died, July 4, 1870. Mr. Beckwith was influential in the proceedings of the Presbytery and Synod. His mind was constantly busy. No one could fail to esteem him highly for his work's sake. See Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 463.

Beckwith, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Durham in 1796. He was piously trained; converted in early life; entered the ministry in 1814; became a supernumerary in 1827 at Pontefract, at Sunderland in 1830; in 1841 resumed the regular work; and died July 25, 1852. He was a sound theologian, an intelligent preacher, and a man tried by affliction. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1852; Carroll, Case and his Contemporaries, iii, 308.

Beckwith, John Hubard, A.M., a Congregational minister, was born at Acworth, N. H., Jan. 16, 1811. He was ordained at Middlesex, Vt., 1843, and dismissed in 1845. He was acting pastor at Johnson from 1845 to 1848. He was installed at Middletown in June, 1849, where he remained until Oct. 16, 1855. He then became acting pastor successively at the following places, viz.: at Irasburg, from December, 1855, to December, 1858; at Barton, from 1858 to 1859; at Bristol, from 1859 to 1860; at Raymondsville and Norfolk, N. Y., from 1862 to 1864; in 1864 he was chaplain of the Second United States Colored Infantry; at Evans's Mills, N. Y., from 1865 to 1867; at Washington, D. C., from 1868 to 1871; then, again, acting pastor at Parishville, N. Y., until 1872; at Massena, from 1873 to 1876; at Munnsville, from August, 1876, to October, 1877. He died at Chateaugay, N. Y., Nov. 9, 1877. He published Immersion not Baptism (1858, small 16mo; republished in 1876). (W. P. S.)

Beckwith, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1803. He entered the ministry in 1826, and was stationed at Pontefract, Spilsby, Boston, Brackley, Newport, etc. He died of cancer at Teignmouth, Devon, Jan. 9, 1844. His preaching displayed thought, and clear views of truth. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1844.

Beckwith, William W., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Watertown, N. Y., Aug. 13, 1830. He graduated from the Union Theological Seminary, New York city, in 1868; and died at Utica, N. Y., Oct. 13, 1876, being at the time a member of the Saginaw Presbytery. See Gen. Catal. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 132; Minutes of General Presb. Assembly, 1877.

Becmann, Christian, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Berne in 1580; and died March 17, 1648. Some of his principal works are, Origines Latine Linguae:—Exercitationes Theologicæ contra Socinianos.—Anatomia Universalis Triumphans:—Schediasma Philologicum:—De Usu Logicæ.—Comparationum Logicarum Libri IV. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Becquet, Antoine, a French Celestine, was born in Paris in 1634, and became librarian to the house of his order in that city. He died Jan. 20, 1730. He wrote Gallicæ Celestinatorum, Congr. Ord. Sancti Benedicti, Monasteriorum Fundationes, Virorumque Vitæ aut Scriptis Illustrium Elogia Historica, Serrato Ordine Chronologico (Paris, 1719, 4to). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bectoz, Claudine de, called "the Scholastic Sister," was a learned French nun, born about 1480, in the vicinity of Grenoble. She entered very young the abbey of St. Honorat, in Provence, of which she became abbess, and where she died in 1547. She was celebrated for her profound erudition and skill in Latin composition, evinced in the letters which she wrote; none of which, however, have reached our time. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beda. See BEATUS; BEDE; BEOÆDH.

Beda, NATALIS (or NOEL), a French theologian, was a native of Picardy, being born in the diocese of Avranches near the close of the 15th century. He was principal of the College of Montaign, at Paris, in 1502; and syndic of the faculty of theology about 1520. He was opposed to all and every kind of reform. In 1521 he obtained from the Sorbonne a condemnation of the writings of J. F. Stapulensis. He chiefly distinguished himself by his opposition to the wish of the king, Francis I., to obtain the sanction of the Sorbonne to the divorce of Henry VIII of England. So far did Beda carry matters, that he was arrested in 1536, condemned to make the amende honorable in the Church of Notre-Dame, and was sent prisoner to Mont Saint-Michel, where he died in the following year. He wrote against Erasmus, who answered in a rejoinder, entitled Supportationes Errorum in Censuris Natalis Bedæ; and in which he accused Beda of 181 lies, 310 calumnies, and 47 blasphemies. Beda also wrote, De Unica Magdalena (Paris, 1519):—Apologia pro Filiabus et Nepotibus Annæ (ibid. 1520):—Contra Commentarios Fabri in Evangelio Lib. ii (ibid. 1526):—In Erasmi Paraphrases (ibid.):—Apologia adversus Clandestinos Lutheranos (ibid. 1529). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v. (B. P.)

Bed'awi (plur. Bedawin, French Bedouin) is the Arabic term for a dweller in tents, in distinction from the fellahin, or fixed cultivators of the soil. See ARABIA.

Beddome, Benjamin, an English Baptist minister, was born Jan. 23, 1717, his father being also a Baptist minister. He was baptized in London in 1738, and in 1746 became pastor of a Church in Bourton-on-the-Water. Some time after this he had a severe illness, upon his recovery from which he wrote a hymn found in some collections, commencing,

"If I must die, oh, let me die Trusting in Jesus' blood!"

His ability as a preacher attracted the attention of the Church in London with which, on his conversion, he had connected himself, and they vainly endeavored to obtain his services as a successor to their pastor, who had died. Mr. Beddome remained in his pastorate at Burton till his death, Sept. 5, 1795. A volume of his hymns was published in 1818, with a preface by Robert Hall, who says, "The man of taste will be gratified with the beautiful and original thoughts which many of them exhibit; while the experimental Christian will often perceive the most sweet movements of his soul strikingly delineated, and sentiments portrayed which will find their echo in every heart." See Belcher, Historical Sketches of Hymns, p. 83-87. (J. C. S.)

Bede (a prayer). Bede-roll was a catalogue or list of the departed, who were prayed for every Sunday from the pulpit. Bedeman (or preclular) is a prayer-man, one who says prayer for a patron or founder, hence an almsman. In all the cathedrals of the New Foundation, there are several bedesmen on the Foundation, who wear the Tudor rose on their breast, and serve as bell-ringers and assistant-vergers. Beads of jet were regarded as having virtue to help, beads of mystill were mixed beads; they were sometimes of wood and sometimes of stone, and, in England, often called a pair of paternosters, or, by the common folk, preclure, or Avebeads. A belt of paternosters is ordered to be said at the death of a bishop in the English Council of Cealcythe, of the 9th century. Abbot Paul, who inhabited the desert of Sceta, according to Sozomen, recited the same prayer three hundred times a day, and counted them by means of an equal number of little stones, like the cubes used in mosaic work, which he kept in a fold of his robe, and cast away one by one. In a painting of the 11th century, representing the burial of St. Ephraem, the monks carry chaplets in their hands, or suspended at their girdles. Alan, archbishop of Mechlin, in the 16th century, says that such crowns lasted in England from the time of Bede until the 7th century, and were hung upon church-walls for public use. The famous lady Godiva, of Coventry, according to William of Malmesbury, bequeathed a threaded chain of jewels, used by her at prayer-time, as a necklace to St. Mary's image. A similar chaplet is mentioned in the Life of St. Gertrude, in the 7th century. Most probably Peter the Hermit, about 1090, introduced the fashion with the Hours of our Lady among the Crusaders, having seen the beads of the Mohammedans. The Indians use beads, and the Jews have a chaplet called Meah Berakoth. The ascription of the chaplet to Venerable Bede is no doubt due to the similarity of name; but St. Dominic, in 1230, may be regarded as the author of the permanent use of the beads. The Rosary is a modern name.

The Lady Psalter consisted of fifteen Paternosters, and a hundred and fifty Aves; the latter representing the Psalms of David, in place of which they were recited. The name of bede was transferred to the knobs on the prayer-belts, and when pilgrims from the East introduced chaplets of seeds or stone, to round beads strung upon a string, which were used in place of a girdle, studded with bosses or notched on the part which trailed upon the ground. "Hail Mary" was unknown till 1229 or 1237, and then was used simply in the Anglican Salutation (Luke i, 28-42). Urban IV, in 1261-64, added the rest of the words to "Jesus Christ;" but the prayer or invocation is barely three hundred years old. See BEADS.

Bede. Beside BEDE THE VENERABLE and BEOÆDH (q. v.), there were three others. (1) A name occurring in the pedigree of the kings of Lindisfar, as father to Biscop. See BENEDICTUS BISCOP. (2) BEDA MAJOR, a priest mentioned by Bede himself as present with St. Cuthbert at his death. His epitaph, written by his pupil Suting, is given by Mabillon, Analecta (ed. nov. p. 381). He fixes the date at A.D. 681, Feb. 9; but as Cuthbert died soon after this, in 687, the epitaph must belong to another Bede. (3) A monk contemporary with Charles the Great. Mabillon (Iter Italicum, p. 144), gives an epitaph recorded by Romanus as existing formerly in the Church of St. Peter at Rome; and Ware refers to Raphael of Volateria for the story that his tomb was at Genoa. A Life of Beda junior, who died at Genoa about 833, is given in the Acta SS. Boll. April, i, 867-873.

Bede, THE VENERABLE, Hymns of. At the end of his Ecclesiastical History of the English Nation, Bede gave a list of his numerous writings up to the year 731. In the list we find Liber Hymnorum Diverso Metro sive Rhythmo, and Liber Epigrammatum Heroico Metro sive Elegiaco. But both are lost, hence it is difficult to decide which of the eleven hymns generally ascribed to Bede really belong to him. "The longest of his hymns," says the author of Christian Life in Song, p. 140 sq., "is a comparison of the six days of creation with six ages of the world; the sixth day, in which Adam was created, corresponding to the sixth age, in which 'He by whom man was created himself became man'—when, as Eve was formed out of the side of the sleeping Adam, the bride of Christ also was raised to life through him who slept in death upon the cross. The seventh age was, Bede believed, to be the age of quietness, when Christ shall command the Sabbath, and keep it with his own; and the eighth age is to be sublime above all the ages, when the dead of the earth shall arise, and the just shall see forever the face of Christ, and be like the angels on the heavenly heights." The best-known of his hymns are:

"Hymnum canamus gloriæ,
Hymni novi nunc personæ,
Christus novo cum tramite
Ad patris ascendit thronum;"

or in Mrs. Charles's translation:

"A hymn of glory let us sing;
New hymns throughout the world shall ring;
By a new way none ever trod,
Christ mounteth to the throne of God."

This hymn treats of the ascension of Christ. Another is for the holy innocents, viz.:

"Hymnum canentes martyrum
Dicamus innocentium,
Quos terra flentes perdidit,
Gaudens sed æthra suscipit.
Vultum patris ter sæcula,
Quorum tæntur angeli
Ejusque laudant gratiam
Hymnum canentes martyrum;"

or in Dr. Neale's translation:

"The hymn for conquering martyrs raise:
The victor innocents we praise:
Whom in their woe earth cast away,
But heaven with joy received to-day.

Whose angels see the Father's face
World without end, and hymn his grace:
And while they chant unceasing lays,
The hymn for conquering martyrs raise."

Concerning this hymn, Dr. Neale remarks: "Although it stands in unfavorable contrast with the Salvete Flores Martyrum of Prudentius, it is somewhat strange that no part of it should have been introduced into any English breviary. It will be observed that the first and last lines of every verse are identical. This somewhat frigid conceit (Epanalepsis, as the grammarians call it) Bede seems to have borrowed from the Elegy of Sedulius, which is composed on a similar plan." Trench, in his Sacred Latin Poetry, gives the text of another of Bede's hymns:

"Salve tropæum gloriæ,
Salve, sacrum victoriæ
Signum, Deus quo perditum Mundum redemit mortuus;"

the English of which runs thus in Lyra Messianica, p. 225:

"Cross! whereon my Saviour bled,
Dying to redeem our loss,
Now with living trophies spread,
Welcome, welcome, happy cross!"

Bede's hymns were for the first time published by Cas-sander in his Hymni Ecclesiastici (Paris, 1556), in which he attributes eleven hymns to Bede. The last editor of the works of Bede, Dr. Giles, has not been able to find any MS. containing these hymns, and, though not excluding them, expresses (vol. i, p. clxxi) many doubts regarding their authenticity. (B. P.)

Bedee, THOMAS, a Unitarian minister, was a native of Sandwich, N. H. He graduated at Harvard College in 1798; was ordained, and installed pastor of the Church in Wilton, N. H., March 2, 1803; was dismissed Jan. 15, 1829; and died in 1848. He published some single sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 243.

Bede-house is an almshouse, so called because in ancient times the statutes by which such institutions were governed usually provided that the inmates should piously recite their beads daily for the well-being, whether alive or departed this life, of the founder or founders.

Bedel, a bidder, crier, or summoner. See BEADLE.

Bedel, ABRAM, a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about the year 1800. He became a member of the Church in Amherst, Me., from which he received a license to preach in 1824. He preached for some time as an itinerant minister, and in 1825 was successful in gathering the Church in Crawford, Me. He preached as an evangelist in this and neighboring towns till his ordination in 1832 as pastor of the First Church in Camden. In 1833 he removed to Gardiner, where he was pastor five years, 1833-38. On leaving this place he devoted himself to evangelistic work for several years. We have not learned the precise date of his death. See Millett, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 435. (J. C. S.)

Bedell. See BEADLE.

Bedell, Mahlon, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born Oct. 10, 1806. He was reared by pious parents, and experienced conversion early in life. While young he began to preach in connection with the South Carolina Conference. On the formation of the Georgia Conference he became one of its active members, and on its division joined the Florida Conference, in which he labored until near his decease, Nov. 28, 1865. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 32.

Bedell, William, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at West Plattsburg, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1820. He was converted in 1840, and immediately began to prepare for the ministry. He was licensed as an exhorter in 1842, a local preacher in 1844, and was admitted to the Troy Conference in 1848. His ministry of thirty-three years was within the bounds of the Troy Conference, and included seventeen different appointments. On Jan. 23, 1881, he was stricken down with paralysis, and remained apparently unconscious until his death, four days later. He was unselfish, possessing a rich Christian experience, diligent in his labors, and many were converted under his ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 93.

Bedera, (1) a hospital; (2) an ancient name for the dwelling-house or room of the chaplain to a religious community; (3) a residence for bedesmen.

Bederic, HENRY (surnamed Bury, from his birth-place, St. Edmundsbury), an English preacher and theologian, was an Augustine monk, and lived about 1380. He gave himself to preaching, and also wrote several works, among which are, Questiones Theologicae:—Commentarium in Magistram Sententiarum:—Sermones per Annum et de B. Virgine. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bederoll, Bedesman. See BEDE.

Bedford, Hilkiah, an English clergyman, was born in London, July 23, 1663. He was educated at Bradley, in Suffolk, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. For refusing to take the oaths at the Revolution he was ejected from his preferment in Lincolnshire, and he afterwards kept a boarding-house for the Westminster scholars. In 1714 he was fined one hundred marks and imprisoned three years, for writing, printing, and publishing The Hereditary Right of the Crown of England Asserted (1713, fol.); the real author of which was George Harbin, another nonjuring clergyman. Bedford translated An Answer to Fontenelle's History of Oracles, and The Life of Dr. Barwick; and published A Vindication of the Church of England (1710), and some other works. He died Nov. 26, 1724. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bedford, John, a distinguished English Wesleyan minister, was born at Rothwell, Wakefield, July 27, 1810. He was received into the ministry in 1831; was appointed assistant secretary to the General Chapel Committee in 1855; succeeded Wm. Kelk as general secretary in 1860; retired from office 1872; was appointed secretary to the Board of Trustees for Chapel Purposes in that year; was elected president of the Conference in 1867; and died at Chorlton-cum-Hardy, near Manchester, Nov. 20, 1879. Mr. Bedford's diligence and punctuality were unfailing. His energy was felt in all the departments of his service. He was a fearless and ready debater, sometimes appearing hard and exacting. For many years he was writer of the official Conference letters, and one of the assistant secretaries of the Conference. He published Letters on Doctrines and Systems of the Wesleyan Methodists (Bolton, 1842), against the reform movement in the Connection; and Funeral Sermons for the Duke of Wellington (Stockport, 1852) and Rev. Dr. Newton (ibid. 1854). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1880, p. 17.

Bedford, Thomas, an English nonjuring clergyman, son of Hilkiah Bedford, was educated at Westminster School and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was matriculated, Dec. 9, 1730. Being a nonjuror, he never took a degree; but, going into orders in his own party, officiated among them in Derbyshire, fixing his residence at Compton, near Ashbourne. He died at Compton in Feb. 1773. He edited Simeon of Durham's De Exordio atque Procursu Durehmensis Ecclesie (printed by subscription, 1732). He also published a Historical Catechism (2d ed. 1742). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bedford, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Norwich, Dec. 16, 1790. He was converted about the age of twenty; received his academic training at Old College, Homerton; and in 1820 was ordained pastor of the Independent Church at Narborough. Here he labored till 1860, and then retired to Great Snoring, Norfolk, where he died, Dec. 17, 1863. Mr. Bedford was noted for great liberality. His preaching was characterized by earnestness, fidelity, and an experimental acquaintance with Gospel truths. He excelled in letter-writing. He rarely lost an opportunity, either by voice or pen, of commending the Gospel of Christ. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 220.

Bedmar, ALPHONSO, marquis de, a Spanish cardinal, was born in 1572. He was at first ambassador of Philip III before the republic of Venice, and united, it is said, in 1618, with the duke of Ossone, viceroy of Naples, and with don Pedro of Toledo, governor of Milan, to destroy the state before which he represented his monarch. He collected the strangers in the city, and assured himself of their services by the power of his silver. The plan was to fire the arsenal of the republic and to seize the more important posts, but the conspiracy was discovered. He died Aug. 2, 1655. There is attributed to him a treatise, in Italian, against the liberty of the republic of Venice, entitled Squittinio della Liberta Veneta (Mirandole, 1612), and translated into French by Amelot of Houssaie (Ratisbon, 1677); but others, with more reason, attribute this to Velsler. The Library of Lyons contains a MS. of Bedmar in Italian. This is a recital made to Philip III, king of Spain, upon the ancient government, the revenues, the land and naval forces, the tribunals, the councils, the commercial and political reports of the republic of Venice. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bedrashi, ICDAJA. See PENINI.

Bedwell, WILLIAM, a learned English ecclesiast, was born in 1562. He was well-versed in the Oriental languages, and died May 5, 1632. He published, Commentarius Sal. Jarchi, Aben-Ezra et Dav. Kimchi in Prophetam Obadiam (London, 1601):—Description of Jotttenham High Cross, with an Ancient Poem called the Tournament of Jotttenham, by Ge. Pilkinton (ibid. 1631):—Specimen Dictionarii Arabici (1599). This work is also found in manuscript at the National Library of Paris. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bedwini, a Celtic bishop, whose name occurs in the stories about Arthur, is said to have lived at Cellwig. He is conjecturally connected with Bodmin. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 238; Whitaker, Cathed. of Cornwall, i, 45; ii, 234.

Bee, Saint. See BEGA.

Beebe, Abijah Pratt, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Jackson, N. Y., 1813. He graduated from Oneida Institute in 1837; studied theology in Union Theological Seminary for three years, graduating in 1840. He was ordained May 2, 1843; was stated supply and pastor at Oriskany, N. Y., from 1842 to 1845; was an invalid at New York Mills for three years from 1845; and was located at Elgin, Ill., but still an invalid, during 1848-49. He died at Rome, N. Y., Sept. 6, 1849. See Gen. Catal. of the Union Theol. Sem. p. 25.

Beebe, Alexander, LL.D., a distinguished editor in the Baptist denomination, was born at Newark, N. J., Sept. 29, 1783, and graduated from Columbia College, N. Y., in 1802. Shortly after, he became a law-student in the office of Ogden Hoffman, sen., his fellow-students being Washington Irving and James K. Paulding. Having been admitted to the law, he practiced his profession for a time in New York city, and then removed to Skeneateles, N. Y., where he practiced fifteen years, and, as a lawyer, advanced to a high position in his county. Soon after his conversion he retired from his profession, and in 1825 became the editor of the Baptist Register, which he conducted with great ability, retaining his connection with it until a short time before his death, in November, 1856. See Baptist Encyclop. p. 93. (J. C. S.)

Beebe, Edmund Murphy, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Springfield, Mass., April 24, 1805. He was converted at the age of eighteen; in 1829 he entered the New England Conference, and in it did valiant service until his death, March 19, 1845. Mr. Beebe led a pious, blameless life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 616.

Beebe, Warner, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Solon, Cortland Co., N. Y., about 1810. His father removed to Canandaigua, N. Y., in 1812, and to Liverpool, Medina Co., O., in 1823. The son was converted in 1825, licensed to preach by the Strongsville Quarterly Meeting in March, 1834, and ordained Dec. 11, 1835. He died at Liverpool, Oct. 6, 1854. Mr. Beebe is said to have been a man of much decision of character; diligent, faithful, and prompt in the discharge of his duties. During the twenty years he labored in the ministry, he sacrificed much and suffered many privations. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1856, p. 87. (J. C. S.)

Beech, Hugh, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Chesterton, near Newcastle-under-Lyme, June 3, 1787. He was converted in 1806, admitted into the ministry in 1810, and died in his last charge, Cheadle, Staffordshire, Feb. 22, 1856. He was cheerful, buoyant, generous, simple, beloved, an able preacher and faithful pastor. He conducted the singing in Conference for twenty years. See Life, by his son, Rev. John H. Beech (Lond. 1856); Minutes of the British Conference, 1856.

Beecher, Elijah Parkes, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Rensselaerville, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1810. He experienced conversion when about twenty-five, and in 1840 entered the Oneida Conference. After fifteen years of laborious service, he was transferred (1855) to the Wisconsin Conference. In 1865 he was appointed agent of the American Bible Society, which office he held with credit four years, and then retired from all stated service, but held himself ready for volunteer work whenever health and opportunity afforded a chance, until his decease, Nov. 3, 1877. Mr. Beecher was very earnest and enthusiastic, never allowing a winter to pass without gathering in many from the ranks of sin, through extra revival services. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 67.

Beecher, John Sydney, a Baptist minister, was born at Hinesburg, Vt., in 1820. Having completed his literary and theological education, he received an appointment as missionary to Burmah. In 1846 he commenced his labors in Arracan, where he remained for ten years. He then dissolved his connection with the Missionary Union. He subsequently came under the auspices of the Free Mission Society, and occupied himself in the work of preparing young men for the Christian ministry. On account of failing health, he left the field of his labor with the intention of returning to the United States, but died in England, Oct. 22, 1866. See Appletons' Annual Cyclop. vi, 579. (J. C. S.)

Beeck, Jan (1), a Flemish painter, was born at Looz, and was a monk of the Convent of St. Lawrence, near Liege, of which he became the abbot in 1509. He died in 1516. He painted most of the pictures in the church of his convent, and is considered, after the brothers Van Eyck, to be the most eminent among the ancient painters of Liege.

Beeck (or Belus), Jan (2), a Dutch Protestant theologian, lived in the middle of the 17th century. Among other works, he wrote Verantwoording voor de verdrukte Wuerheyt (Amsterdam, 1683). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beeck, Johann Martin, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Lübeck, Dec. 2, 1665. He studied at Wittenberg and Jena; and in 1693 was called as pastor to Kurlack, near Lübeck, where he died, Sept. 7, 1727. He wrote, Disputatio de Plagio Divinitus Pro- hibito Exod. xxi, 16:—Explanata Prophetarum Loca Difficiliora (1688).—Universa Christologia, in Notabili Titulo, Filio Hominis, quoad Oraculum Joa. i, 51 Demonstrata (Wittenberg, 1689). See Theiss, Hamburg. Gelehrten-Geschichte; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Beede, Hugh, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Sandwich, N. H., Dec. 9, 1807. He became a Christian in 1833; was licensed in May, 1840; and ordained as pastor of the North Sandwich Church in 1841. His successive pastorates after leaving North Sandwich were Tamworth, Upper Gilmanton, Meredith, and New Hampton. In 1851 the state of his health was such as to lead him to retire from the pastorate and devote his time to farming during the week and to preaching on the Sabbath. In this way he labored with the Second Church in New Hampton, and the Third at Holderness, until 1859, when he returned to his native town and purchased a farm, which was his permanent home. He died Jan. 27, 1879. See Morning Herald, March 19, 1879. (J. C. S.)

Becke, Henry, D.D., an English clergyman and political economist, was born in 1751. He was consulted in financial affairs by Mr. Pitt and Mr. Vansittart (afterwards Lord Bexley). He died in 1837. He published Observations on the Income Tax (1799), and A Letter on Peace with France (1798). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Beekman, Jacob T. B., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated at Union College, N. Y., and at New Brunswick Seminary, N. J., in 1825. He was licensed by the Classis of Philadelphia in that year; served as pastor in the Presbyterian Church at Middletown, N. J., during 1825-36; was without charge in 1836-47; and died in 1874, aged seventy years. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 174.

Beeks, GREENBURY C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Virginia, Nov. 7, 1809. He joined the Church in his boyhood; soon after with his parents moved to Brookville, Ind.; was early licensed to preach, and in 1836 was received into the Indiana Conference. His health failing shortly afterwards, he studied medicine, graduating at Indianapolis, and afterwards at Louisville, Ky., Medical College. For a few years he practiced his new profession, but his heart was not in his work, and in 1856 he again entered the itinerant ranks. In 1860 he entered the Union army as chaplain, and afterwards became surgeon, where he served till he was brought home sick. After recovering, he removed to Fort Wayne, where he practiced medicine eight years, then travelled in search of more vigorous health, first in Texas and then in Florida, where he died, Oct. 23, 1878. Mr. Beeks was a very careful, methodical man, an able preacher, a genial companion, and an ardent friend. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1897, p. 55.

Beeltha was a goddess of the Sabæans who is supposed to be identical with BAALTIS.

Beelzebub.

"A few months since a peasant man found near Ekron, five miles southwest of Ramleh, on the great maritime plain of Philistia, a stone seal about one inch square on the face, bearing a peculiar device, and which I purchased Ancient Seal, presumed to be a representation of Beelzebub.

for a trifle, not considering it of any great value. Since then many antiquarians, to whom impressions were sent, have pronounced the device an image of Beelzebub, the great Fly-god, and the only one ever discovered. He is represented as a man of the Assyrian type, with short beard and four wings. In his hands he holds two apes or monkeys, denoting, perhaps, his office as 'prince of devils' (De Hass, Travels in Bible Lands, p. 424).

Beeman, JACOB, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Kent, Conn., March 12, 1780, of pious Baptist parents. He joined the Methodists in the morning of life; was licensed to preach in 1808; and in 1809 entered the New York Conference, wherein he labored twenty-six consecutive years. He then retired from active service, and finally died of paralysis, Feb. 15, 1868. He won the highest esteem of all. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 99.

Beer, Bernhard, a Jewish writer, was born at Dresden in Saxony, July 20, 1801. Being the son of a wealthy family, he received an excellent education in the Bible and the Talmud, as well as in modern languages. In Mendelssohn's writings he found a great delight; and he regarded him as his example in life. He especially labored in behalf of his co-religionists, whose condition he tried to ameliorate. He founded societies for the benefit of his brethren, and contributed many valuable works to Jewish literature. In 1834 he took the degree of doctor of philosophy, and he was the first who preached in German in his native country. He died July 1, 1861. He wrote, besides a number of valuable contributions to different periodicals, מאמרים ירושלים, moral religious discourses (Leipsic, 1833):—Philosophie und philosophische Schriftsteller der Juden (translated from the French of Munk, with additions and notes, ibid. 1842):—Das Leben Abrahams nach Auffassung der jüdischen Sage mit erläuternden Anmerkungen (ibid. 1859):—Das Buch der Jubiläen und sein Verhältniss zu den Midraschim (ibid. 1856–57):—Abel, in Die Orient. vol. iv:—Aaron, in Wertheimer's Jahrbuch (Wien, 1855):—Leben Moses in the Jahrbuch für Geschichte der Juden und des Judenthums (Leipsic, 1863, 3 vols.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 96; Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, ii, 99 sq.; Frankel, Dr. B. Beer, ein Zeit- und Lebensbild, in his Monatsschrift, 1863, p. 41 sq., 81, 121, 174, 245, 285, 325, 365, 405; Wolf, Dr. B. Beer, eine biographische Skizze (Berlin, 1863); id., the preface to Beer's Leben Moses in the Jahrbuch für Geschichte der Juden (Leipsic, 1863), p. 3–10; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 91. (B. P.)

Beer, Friedrich Wilhelm, a Hungarian Protestant theologian, was born at Presburg, Jan. 4, 1691, and died in 1756. His principal works are: Diss. de Pseudo-Theologis (Jena, 1713):—Sciagraphia Epistolarum Paulinarum et Reliq. N. Testamenti:—Tractatus de Philosophia Practica:—Lineæ Physices. These last-mentioned works are in manuscript. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beer, Johann, a German visionary, born at Schweidnitz, in Silesia, raised quite a tumult on account of the spirits he claimed to have seen upon the Riesengebirg. He died in 1600, leaving Gewinn und Verlust himmlischer und irdischer Güter (Amst. 1639). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beer, Peter, a Jewish writer, was born Dec. 19, 1716, at Neubitschow, and died Nov. 9, 1838, as teacher of the Jewish High-school at Prague. He wrote, Israelitische Geschichte von der Schöpfung bis nach dem Exil (Prague, 1796, and often):—Geschichte der Juden von ihrer Rückkehr aus der babylonischen Gefangenschaft bis nach Zerstörung des zweiten Tempels (Wien, 1808):—Das Judenthum oder Versuch einer Darstellung aller wesentlichen Glaubens-, Sitten- und Ceremoniallehren heutiger Juden (Prague, 1809–10, 2 vols.):—Handbuch der mosaischen Religion (ibid. 1818):—Geschichte, Lehren und Meinungen aller bestanden und noch bestehenden religiösen Sekten der Juden und der Kabbala (Brünn, 1822–23, 2 pts.):—Leben und Wirken des Rabbi Moses ben Maimon (Prague, 1834). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 97; Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 521; Derenbourg, in Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift für jüdische Theologie, i, 97–123, 210–224, 414–427. (B. P.)

Beere, JOHN, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Weymouth, Dorset Co., in 1659, and professed his faith in Christ when a young man. At the age of thirty-four he entered upon the work of the ministry, confining his service chiefly to the country in which he lived. He was a faithful and acceptable preacher of the truth for ten years. He died July 5, 1703. See Piety Promoted, i, 359. (J. C. S.)

Beers, Daniel, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Fairfield, Conn., Jan. 24, 1787. He received license to preach in 1812; was ordained pastor of a Church at Lexington, N. Y., in 1813; served the Church at Madison, N. J., for a few months in 1829; and died June 24, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 291; Tuttle, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Madison, N. J., p. 68; Aikman, Hist. Discourse Concerning the Presb. Church of Madison, N. J. (1876), p. 21.

Beers, Ebenezer O., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Washington, Conn., June 24, 1818, of devout parents. He experienced conversion at the age of ten; became successively class-leader, exhorter, and local preacher; and in 1840 entered the New York Conference, in which he labored with zeal and fidelity until his death, Feb. 9, 1847. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1847, p. 123.

Beers, Hawley Baxter, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Cold Spring Harbor, L. I., April 23, 1810. He was powerfully converted in 1831, and in 1836 entered the itinerant ranks of the Indiana Conference. When that conference was divided he became a member of the North Indiana Conference. In 1866 his failing health obliged him to take the superannuated relation, which he sustained until his death, May 7, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 52.

Beers, Robert, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Concord, Pa., Feb. 13, 1806. He experienced religion in his twentieth year, and in 1835 joined the Baltimore Conference. In 1861, through illness, he was compelled to retire from active service, and taking a supernumerary relation, he remained such to the close of his life, Feb. 15, 1870. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 56.

Beersheba. The last person who has carefully examined this locality is lieut. Conder, who thus describes it (Tent-work in Palestine, ii, 94 sq.):

"The scenery was tame and featureless, with a single dark tell in front, and white marl peaks capped with flint to the west. . . . We ascended the tell or mound of Seb'a, which is two and a half miles east of the wells of Beersheba, and thence we had a fine view of the great boundary valley which limited our work on the south, joining the long ravine which comes down from Hebron, and running west in a broad, flat, gravelly bed, between high walls of brown earth. The pebbles were white and dry, yet water-worn, for, as we found in the following spring, a river will occasionally flow for hours along the wady bed. East of us were remarkable chalk-hills called el-Ghurrah, and on the west a low ridge shut out the maritime plain. To the north were the hills of Judah, dotted with lotus-trees; and to the south stretched the endless desert of the wanderings. . . . The desert of Beersheba is a beautiful pasture-land in spring, when the grass and flowers cover the gray mud, as in the Jordan valley; but in November it is very desolate. Not a tree exists near the wells, and only the foundation of a once flourishing town of the 4th century remains. . . . The sides of all the wells are furrowed with the ropes of the water-drawers; but we made one discovery which was rather disappointing—namely, that the masonry is not very ancient. Fifteen courses down, on the south side of the large well, there is a stone with an inscription in Arabic, on a tablet dated, as well as I could make out, A. H. 505, or in the 12th century. The stone must be at least as old as those at the mouth. . . . The wells have no parapets." See WELL.

Map of the Vicinity of Beersheba. (From the Ordnance Survey.)

Canon Tristram thus describes the ancient remains on the north of the wady (Bible Places, p. 22):

"Long lines of foundations mark the ancient city, or rather village—a very large, unwall'd place with a garrison. The ruins are about half a mile in extent, but scattered, and include the foundations of a Greek church, with apse, sacristy, and aisles. Only a fragment of the apse remains above the pavement, although in the 14th century some of the churches were still standing. . . . Among the ruins are the traces of a Jewish fortress—a circular tower or keep of double walls, each four feet thick, and with a like space between them. There are many fragments of pottery strewn about, with occasional bits of glass, and the squares or 'tesserae' of Roman mosaics."

Beeth, WILLIAM, a learned Englishman of the Dominican order, who lived at the commencement of the 16th century, wrote, Lecturae Scholasticae:—Commentarium in Libros Sententiarum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beg. See BECC.

Bega (Beza, Beya, Begga, or Bee), ST., a Cumbrian virgin of whom nothing is clearly known. According to Alban Butler (Sept. 6), she was an Irish virgin, an anchoress of the 7th century, and founded a monastery in Copeland. He also mentions a place in Scotland called Kilbees after her. According to the life of her seen by Leland (Col. iii, 36), after founding her monastery in Cumberland, she founded another north of the Wear; then went to Hert, where she becomes identical with St. Hein, and then to Tadcaster; winding up her career at Hackness, as identical with St. Begu. The Aberdeen Breviary contains lessons for two saints, with either of whom she might be identified.

(1.) St. Bega, venerated at Dunbar, who lived on the island of Cumbria, where she was visited by St. Maura, and dying, Sept. 3, was buried on her island. The rector of Dunbar, attempting to remove her remains, was driven back by a storm.

(2.) St. Begga, an Irish princess, who, married against her will, fled to Oswald and Aidan in England, and became the first abbess of nuns in England. She lived on a desert island, and in old age resigned her abbacy to St. Hilda, under whose rule she ended her days, Oct. 31. After four hundred and sixty years her remains were removed to Whitby. Here are perhaps some reminiscences of St. Hein. She was probably a local saint of the 8th century. The monastery bearing her name was founded as a cell to St. Mary's at York, in the reign of Henry I. Under the name St. Begha she is honored at Kilbagie and Kilbucho, in Scotland; but her greatest foundation was at St. Bee's, which takes its name from her. It was founded in A.D. 656. In treating of the Anglo-Saxon nuns, Montalembert, Monks of the West, deals with the difficulties connected with St. Begha, but does not decide whether the traditions do not really belong to two or more individuals.

Begagh, ST. See BEGHA.

Begas, KARL, a German painter, was born at Heinsberg, near Aix-la-Chapelle, Sept. 30, 1794. He studied first under Philippart, and then went to Paris, where he continued his studies under Gros. Among his earlier works was a Madonna della Sedia, which attracted the attention of the Prussian king, and gained for the artist the position of painter to the Prussian court. He died in Berlin, Nov. 24, 1854. Among his best works are, Henry IV. at the Castle of Canossa; The Sermon on the Mount; and Christ on the Mount of Olives.

Begault, GILES, a French preacher, was born in 1660. He was canon and archdeacon of his native city. His contemporaries compare him to Flechier for eloquence. He died at Nismes about 1715. He wrote, Panegyriques et Sermons sur les Mysteres, avec des Discours Académiques, des Compliments et des Lettres (Paris, part i, ii, 1711; part iii, 1717; part iv, v, 1727). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beg-bile, an Irish saint, son of Tigermach—commemorated Oct. 12—descended from Conall Galban, was related to St. Columba, and lived at the close of the 6th century. He was brother of St. Conan-dil.

Begelmir, in Scandinavian mythology, was the last of the ice-giants. He escaped destruction in the blood of Ymir, wherein all his brethren were drowned, by building a ship in which he and his wife took refuge. After the reconstruction of the earth, he repopled it.

Begeman, AUGUSTUS L. W., a German Reformed minister, was born July 14, 1810, at Bremerlehe, kingdom of Hanover, in North Germany, and emigrated to America in 1833. He was licensed to preach by the Classis of West Pennsylvania, at Pittsburg, and ordained to the ministry, April 30, 1834. From this time until 1836, he served several congregations in Ohio. He continued in this field of labor for four years, when he removed to Wayne County, O., and there took charge of nine congregations. In 1843 he preached at Columbus for a German congregation. His health failing him, he was obliged to give up his charge. He removed to Mansfield in 1845, where he continued about two years. He died of epilepsy at Columbus, Sept. 4, 1848. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 290.

Begghe, Str., duchess of Brabant, daughter of Pepin the Old, died in 692 or 698. She married Anchises, son of Arnould, bishop of Metz, and was mother of Pepin Heristal. On her husband's death she devoted herself to a religious life, and founded the monastery of Ardenne in 680. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Begging Friars. See MENDICANTS.

Begh (or Le Bègue), LAMBERT, priest of the diocese of Liege, is often recognized as the founder of the Béguines (q. v.). He preached with zeal against the disorders of the clergy, especially against simony, which particularly irritated the ecclesiastical body. Ralph, bishop of Liege, who carried on this vice to a scandalous extent, arrested Begh, and imprisoned him for a long time at the chateau of Rivogne; then conveyed him to Rome, in order to make it appear that he had been guilty of preaching without authority. Pope Alexander III, informed of these motives, received Begh honorably, and permitted him to return to his country, with all the necessary power to exercise freely the functions of his office. On his return from Rome, he assembled all the daughters and widows in order to form a religious order. These were called Béguines. They were first established at Neville, in Brabant, whence they spread into Flanders, Holland, and Germany. Begh died in 1177.

According to others, this person was a French so-called heretic, who lived near the close of the 13th century. He is said to have taught that man in this life is capable of perfection; by which he probably meant a state of entire Christian purity. He refused to worship the popish host, and, according to his enemies, opposed the practice of the popular acts of piety. His doctrines were condemned at the Council of Vienna in 1311. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Begha (also called Bez and Begagh), Str., a Saxon virgin, in order to avoid a marriage fled into Scotland, and received the veil at the hand of bishop Aidan. See BEGA.

Begu, a nun of Hackness, Yorkshire, for more than thirty years, is said to have had a supernatural intimation of the death of St. Hilda in 674. She has been sometimes supposed to be identical with St. Bega (q. v.).

Beguín, Daniel, a French Jesuit theologian, was born at Château Thierry, Oct. 14, 1608, and died March 19, 1696. He wrote, De Veritate Divinitatis Jesu Christi (Paris, 1680):—Les Vérités Fondamentales du Salut, en Forme de Méditations (ibid. 1686):—Retraite ou Exercices qu'il faut faire Tous les Mois pour se Disposer à Bien Mourir (Rheims, 1700). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beguín, Nicolas, a French theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, wrote Eucharistia, sive Dominicæ Cænæ Institutio et de Paschale Domini, adversus Misaliturgarum atque Calvinistarum Blasphemias atque Imposturas (Paris, 1564). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Behalok, in the mythology of India, was the second section of the infernal regions (Atal), the dark abode of evil dæmons.

Beham (or Böhém), Bartel (or Barthelemy), a German painter, and a very distinguished engraver, was born at Nuremberg about 1496. He was the elder brother of the eminent Hans Sebald Beham, and resided in Italy, where he studied under Marc' Antonio Raimondi at Rome and Bologna. The following are some of his best prints: William, Duke of Bavaria; Bust of Leonard van Eyck; Adam and Eve, with Death before the Tree; Judith Sitting on the Body of Holofernes; The Virgin Sucking the Infant, very fine; Susanna Brought before the Elders. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Beham, Hans Sebald, an eminent German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1500, and was instructed by his younger brother Bartel. He engraved on wood and copper. The following are some of his prints: Adam and Eve in Paradise; The Death of Dido; A Woman Sitting on a Lion; The Virgin Holding the Infant Jesus in her Arms, with a Parrot and an Apple. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Behemb, MARTIN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 16, 1557, at Lauban, in Upper Lusatia. He studied at Strasburg, and was appointed in 1581 deacon in his native city. In 1586 he became pastor of Trinity Church, and preached there for about thirty-six years. He died Feb. 5, 1622. His sermons on the passion of our Lord were published in 1614, under the title, Spectaculum Passionis Jesu Christi. In manuscript he left sermons on the Psalms, on which he preached for eighteen years, under the title Urim and Thummim. Behemb was also a fine hymn-writer, and some of his hymns are also translated into English, as, O Königaller Ehren, Herr Jesus (in Winkworth's Lyra Germ. ii, 41: "O King of Glory! David's Son!")—O Jesu Christ, mein's Lebens Licht (ibid. p. 276: "Lord Jesus Christ, my Life, my Light!") See Hoffmann, Lycei Laubani Rector (Lauban, 1707); Nöldeke's Biographical Sketch, prefixed to his edition of Behemb's Hymns in Schirk's Collection, ix (Halle, 1857); Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, ii, 227 sq. (B. P.)

Behesht, in Persian mythology, is the condition of blessedness in the abodes of Ormuzt, which the souls of the pious reach, while sinners are banished to the kingdom of Ahriman.

Behm, Ernest Leopold Friederich, a French Protestant theologian, who was born at Wolfenbüttel, June 8, 1700, and died Dec. 20, 1742, is the author of Commentatio de Heinrich Heineken (Lubeck, 1725):—Die Grundlehren des Christenthum (1729):—Interpretatio Locorum quorundam quæ in Luthero Aliisque Theologo Seculi Reformationis Nonnullis Difficultatem in Articulo Predestinatione Habere Videntur (Helmstädt, 1729). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Behm, Johann (1), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born June 23, 1578, at Königsberg, in Prussia. He studied at Leipsic; obtained the degree of doctor of divinity at Wittenberg in 1608; and accepted a call in 1609 as professor of theology to his native place, where he died, April 27, 1648. He wrote, Thema Theologicum de Æterni Filii Dei Divinitate Ebionitarum Blasphemias Oppositum:—Disputationes viii de Voluntate Dei:—Disputat. xz contra Osiandri Sententiam de Justificatione:—Dissertatio de Questione: An Petrus Fuerit Romanus Episcopus aut Pontifex Primus?—De Questione: An Marius Absque Omni Peccato Concepta, Nata et Mortua Sit?—De Servo Arbitrio:—De Vero V. T. Deo, Uno Eodemque cum eo qui Pater est Domini Nostri Jesu Christi:—De Terminis a Quo et ad Quem Iux Annorum Captivitatibus Babylonice:—De Generatione Filii Dei ab Æterno:—De περιχωρησει Duorum in Christo Naturarum Personali, etc. See Witte, Memoria Theologorum; Arnold, Historie der königsbergischen Universität; Hartknoch, Preussische Kirchen-Historie; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Behm, Johann (2), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, great-grandson of the preceding, was born at Preussisch-Holland, April 17, 1687. He studied at Jena; became an adjunct to the philosophical faculty at Königsberg in 1712; was in 1717 professor of Greek and theology; in 1733, member of Consistory; and died Feb.

17, 1753. He wrote, De Antiqua Ratione Compellendi Episcopos per Coronam (Königsberg, 1712):—De Lotione in Obeundis Sacris Gentilium Judeorum et Christianorum (ibid. 1715):—De Nimbo Sanctorum (ibid. 1716):—De Symbolo Lutheranorum; Verbum Domini Manet in Aeternum (ibid. 1717):—De Fidelium Paraclesi, in Heb. vi, 17 (ibid. 1745). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 515, 615, 638; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Behm, Michael, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, son of Johann (1), was born at Königsberg, Sept. 29, 1612. He studied at different universities, and received the degree of doctor of divinity in 1638; was in 1639 adjunct of the theological faculty in his native place, and in 1640 professor of theology. In 1645 he attended the colloquy at Thoren as delegate of his university. He died Aug. 31, 1650. He wrote, De Quæstione, utrum Jesus se ob Missionem in Mundum Joh. x, 36 Filium Dei Appellaverit?—De Gratia et Libero Arbitrio ac Hominis Conversione:—De Sacramento Baptismi:—De Sensu Vocis ἀναρχία. See Witten, Memor. theol. Dei (Francof. 1675), vi, 761–769; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 204 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Behme, David, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 2, 1605, at Bernstadt, in Silesia. When twenty-five years of age, he was appointed court-preacher to prince Henry Wenceslaw of Münsterberg, and pastor primarius at Vielgutt. In 1638 he was called as court-preacher of Oels and counsellor of Consistory at Bernstadt, where he died, Feb. 9, 1657. He is the author of some hymns, one of which, Herr nu lass in Friede, was translated into English by C. Winkworth, (Lyra Germ. ii, 280: "Lord, now let thy servant"). See Sinapius, Olsographia (Leipzig, 1707), ii, 487 sq.; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 56. (B. P.)

Behmenists, a sect of mystics which arose in Germany in the beginning of the 17th century, deriving its name from Jacob Behmen or Bahm (q. v.).

Behra, in the mythology of India, is the sea near Brahma's dwelling (Brahmaloga), which has the property of rejuvenating every one bathing there.

Behram, in Persian mythology, is the Ized of fire, the king of all beings, with a shining body, the assistant of Ardi-behesht against the Deos. Behram appears in all possible forms, and is represented as the all penetrating, enlivening, and fructifying power. Thus, in the form of the wind, he loosens the fetters of winter; as a bull, he crushes the evil with his power; as a ram (the noblest Oriental symbol), he is represented as adorned with golden ears and horns; as a lamb (a symbol of abundance), he represents the wealth of pastoral people; as a horse, symbol of swiftness. He is also depicted as a camel, and as the bird of Ormuzd. Finally, as a youth, with flaming eyes, continually in victorious battle against the evil, he is one of the mightiest genii on the side of light. Behram is also the planet Mars.

Behrendt, JOHANN FRIEDERICH, a German theologian, was born at Lubeck. He was well-versed in philology, in Roman antiquities, and in Latin poetry. He died June 16, 1757. His principal work is, Harmonia Systematis de Hodierna Animarum Creatione cum Creatoris Sanctitate et Peccati Originalis Propagatione (Berlin, 1744). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Behrens, MICHAEL, a German theologian, was born at Buxtehude, Sept. 22, 1657, and died at Wandsbeck, Jan. 5, 1728. His principal works are, Altar der Heyden, der Atheisten der Christen, etc. (Hamburg, 1692):—Die dreifache Welt der Christen, der Phantasten und der Begauberten (ibid. 1697):—Das Recht der Natur aus der Natur (ibid. 1708). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beier, HARTMANN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Sept. 29, 1516.

He studied at Wittenberg, where he formed a friendly alliance with Luther. He died Aug. 11, 1577. Besides his commentaries on the Bible, he wrote Quæstiones in Libellum de Sphære Joannis de Sacrobusto (Wittenberg, 1573). Also attributed to him is the book entitled Pro Fictitio Missæ Sacrificio Argumenta Erronea Sophistarum Pontificiarum, cum Refutationibus; published under the name of Andreas Epicurus (Magdeburg, 1551); translated into French (Lyons, 1564). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Beierlenk (or Beyerlinck), LAURENT, a Flemish theologian, was born at Antwerp in April, 1578. He studied at Louvain, entered the Jesuit order, and became professor of rhetoric in the College of Vaulx. For a short time he was curate of Herent, near Louvain, and taught philosophy in an adjoining monastery. He was next made assistant of the chief-priest at Louvain, and in 1605 was called to Antwerp as director of the seminary and chief canon of the city. He died there, June 7, 1627, leaving, among other works, Magnum Theatrum Vitæ Humanae: a farrago of theology, history, and philosophy, originally collected by Conrad Lycosthenes, and arranged by Theodore and James Swinger, in alphabetical order (Cologne, 1631, 8 vols. fol.):—Biblia Sacra Variarum Translationum (Antwerp, 1616, 3 vols. fol.):—Opus Chronographicum: from 1570 to 1612. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Beigwir, in Norse mythology, was the servant of the god Freyr, as also was Beyla, his wife. When Ægir spread a feast for the deities, at which Loke caused much dispute, both sought as much as possible to add to the joy of the feast.

Beiram, a Turkish or Persian word meaning feast, is the name applied to the two great Mohammedan festivals. The first of these, called generally the Greater Beiram, is the day following the Ramadan, or month of fasting. It lasts strictly for only one day, though the common people generally extend it to three, and is a period of great animation and enjoyment. What is called commonly the Lesser Beiram follows the first at an interval of sixty days. It is the feast of sacrifices, at which all Mohammedans imitate the offerings of animals which are then being made at Mecca to commemorate Abraham's offering of Isaac. It lasts four days, and is not of so sacred a character as the first Beiram. See Encyclopædia Britannica (9th ed.), s. v.

Beiram, Haji, a saint highly revered among the Turks, whose name was perhaps derived by corruption from the Persian word bahram. He was sheik, and founder of an order of dervishes which he called Beirami. He was born at Sal, a village near Angora, not far from the river Chouboukfehou, and died in 876. His tomb is a spot to which frequent pilgrimages are made. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beishwanr Atma, in the mythology of India, is the fire of the universe. It has its head in both worlds; the sun is its eye, the wind its breath, the ether its thought, the water its marrow, the earth its foot. It is, therefore, the all-penetrating soul of the world.

Beissar, in Oriental mythology, was the son of Kham (Ham), and the son-in-law of Essilimun, a mighty astrologer, who became superior to all those following a like profession. He saved himself and his whole family in Noah's ark. The most celebrated of his sons was called Mizraim, who was the progenitor of twenty-six Egyptian kings, and built Memphis.

Beissel, JOHANN CONRAD, a German minister, was born at Eberbach, in the Palatinate, in 1690. He studied at Halle, but, having joined the Dunkers, was obliged to remove to America, and came to Pennsylvania in 1720. He there became the founder of a religious community at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., over which he presided about thirty years. He established the new sect of Seventh-day Dunkers, or German Seventh-day Baptists. Among his publications are hymn-books in German and Latin, and ninety-nine mystical oracles. He died at Ephrata in 1768.

Beit-Allah (Arabic, the house of God), the appellation given by the Mohammedans to the Temple of Mecca, which is remarkable as containing the Kaaba (q. v.). The temple of Mecca forms a very spacious square, about a quarter of a mile in each direction, with a triple or quadruple row of columns. A number of steps lead down into the interior, in which stands the Kaaba or house of the prophet, and with it the black stone brought down by the angel Gabriel to form its foundation. In the Koran, Mohammed says, "We have established a house or temple as a means whereby men may acquire great merit." Such is the veneration in which Beit-Allah is held by the Mohammedans, that all sorts of criminals are safe within it, and the very sight of its walls from a distance imparts merit to a man. The ancient Arabians were accustomed to adorn this building by inscribing on the outside of it the works of their most distinguished poets, written in letters of gold or silk. The Mohammedans have always covered its walls and roof with rich brocades of silk and gold, formerly furnished by the caliphs, and afterwards by the governors of Egypt. The mosque or temple has nineteen gates, and is adorned in its interior with seven minarets, irregularly distributed. The Mohammedans, in whatever part of the world they may be, must pray with their faces towards the Beit-Allah at Mecca, which they call Keb-lah (q. v.)

Beit-Ghomdan was an ancient celebrated Arabian planet-temple in the city Sanaa, sacred to Venus.

Beja, Francisco Luis, an Augustine monk (surnamed Perestrello, probably from a village in Portugal of that name, where he was born), lived at the commencement of the 17th century, and wrote, Responsa Casuum Conscientiæ (Bologna, 1587; Venice, 1591):—Contractilius Libellarius:—Collegium Sacrum Bononiense:—De Venditione Rerum Fructuosarum ad Terminum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beja, Frey Antonio de, a Portuguese critic, was born in 1493. He entered into holy orders in 1517, and exercised a strange ministry, quite celebrated in his day, especially writing a work against astrologers, which was printed by Germam Galharde in 1523. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bejaranus (Bejarano, or Bexerano), PETRUS, a Spanish Dominican preacher, a native of Seville, lived at the commencement of the 17th century. Besides a volume of sermons, we have from him Resolucion de las Monedas y Especies de Perlas de la Isla Margarita (1600). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beka, SIBERT, a Belgian Carmelite friar, a native of Guekltre, lived about 1320. He was highly learned in philosophy, history, and canonical law. His principal work is a commentary on Thomas Aquinas. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bel (or Bellus), MATTHIAS, a Lutheran theologian and historian, was born at Otsova, in Hungary, March 24, 1684. He studied at Halle, and, after his return to his native country, he obtained the position of rector of the Protestant schools at Neusohl. He afterwards became historiographer of the emperor Charles VI. He died Aug. 29, 1749, being at the time a member of the London, Berlin, and St. Petersburg academies of sciences. His works, published in the Bohemian language, represent the translations of Arndt, Thomas à Kempis, and other ascetical works. He likewise prepared a translation of the N. T. He also wrote, in Latin, Prodromus Hungariæ Antiquæ et Hodiernæ (Nuremberg, 1723):—Notitia Hungariæ Noæ Historico-geographica (Vienna, 1735-42):—De Vetere Litteratura Illymo-Scythica Exercitatio (Leipsic, 1718):—Anplissimæ Historico-critica Præfationes in Scriptores Rerum Hungaricarum. See

Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bela, in Norse mythology, was a giant whom the god Freyr killed in a duel, by striking him on the head with the horns of a deer.

Belaksham (or Bilaksham), in the mythology of India, is an island beyond the Dead Sea. Its circumference measures 200,000 gossinei (about four miles); on it there grows a tree 1100 gossinei high; many high mountains and large streams traverse it; its inhabitants live one thousand years, are fire-worshippers, and their wives are made fruitful only by the look of the men. It is surrounded by bodies of sweet water.

Belamia is a vestment, probably a sort of tunic, mentioned in the second chapter of the Rule of Fontevrault, made by Robert d'Arbrissel.

Belanger, THIERRY, a celebrated French painter, was born at Nancy about 1596, and was a friend of Callot, Leclerc, Chasseul, and all those artists who threw so much éclat on the peaceful reign of Charles III, duke of Lorraine. He studied under Voult, in Paris. He painted in fresco the hall of the convent at Nancy, which was destroyed in 1718; The Twelve Cæsars, in colossal grandeur, for the Château de Morainville; a Conception of the Virgin in the Church of Notre Dame. His greatest works, however, are in the Church of the Minimes, at Nancy; among these are, a figure of Christ; The Virgin on her Death-bed, Surrounded by the Apostles and Cherubim; The Assumption of the Virgin—a very large painting. Belanger died at Nancy about 1660.

Belatucadr, in Celtic mythology, was the surname of the god of war, only known by an inscription "Marti Balatucadro."

Belbog (or Bolbog), in Wendian mythology, was the wise god of the good. At Julin he was worshipped, as also in Jitterbog, as an old man, dressed in white, crowned with laurels, with a palm-branch in his hand. Everywhere sacrifices were brought to him, in order that he might protect from the evil purposes of Tschernebog. Among the Russians he was called Bielbog, and had a temple in Kiew, where he was held to be the god of thunder.

Belcher, JOSEPH, a Congregational minister, graduated from Harvard College in 1690; was ordained at Dedham, Mass., Nov. 29, 1693; and died suddenly April 27, 1723, aged fifty-three years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 219.

Beldagon, a form of the deity or demiurgus Bel, as the creator of life from the waters. He was represented as a divine being, half man and half fish, and he was practically the same deity as Oannes, or Dagon (q. v.)

Belden, William (1), a Congregational minister, was born at Wilton, Conn., July 16, 1781. He first studied law, and was for a short time engaged in practice in Norwalk. He soon left this, and prepared himself for the ministry of the Gospel. In October, 1812, he was settled as pastor of the Congregational Church in Greenfield, where he remained until 1821, being at the same time engaged in teaching in the academy of that place. He went to Fairfield, and was there occupied a few years in teaching. In 1824 he went to New York city and opened a classical school, which he taught for several years. He was principal of one of the public schools, and subsequently an instructor in the Normal School in that city. These offices he continued to hold until 1853, when he resigned on account of advancing age. After 1858 he resided in Brooklyn. He died March 20, 1861. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1861.

Belden, William (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born at Weston, Conn., Aug. 20, 1811. He graduated at Union College in 1835, after which he entered the Union Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1839. He remained as a resident licentiate one year, and was ordained by the New York Presbytery in 1840. He accepted a call to Newark, N. J., and continued in this charge for two years. From thence he became a stated supply of the Church in Milford, Pa., which he occupied for two years, and resigned to accept the post of teacher in New York city in 1845. For twenty-seven years he labored unremittingly in this field, while at the same time he took an active interest in the various enterprises of the Church. He died at Dover, N. J., June 18, 1874. (W. P. S.)

Belejambe, PIERRE, a modern French engraver, was born at Rouen in 1752. He executed some fancy subjects, and a few prints for the collection of the Palais Royal. Among others are the following: The Circumcision; The Adoration of the Magi; and The Holy Family.

Belelli, FULGENCIO. See BELLELLI.

Belénus (Belinus, or Belis) was the surname of Apollo on two inscriptions at Aquileja. The name is perhaps related to the Cretian-Pamphylian Abelius; also to the Gallic Abellis, and to the Laconian word Bela, brightness, sun's brightness.

Belfield, JAMES F., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Manchester, Sept. 30, 1843. He united with the society in early life; was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield, during the governorship of that institution by Dr. Waddy; entered the ministry in 1864; and died at Rugeley, Stafford, July 19, 1879. He was conscientious and devout. He was failing in health and the shadow of death was ever before him. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 41.

Belforti, MICHAEL ANGELO, an Italian monk of the Order of Olivetans, who lived at Perugia in the early half of the 18th century, wrote, Panegirici Lirici e Morali (Milan, 1716):—Brevis Chronologia Cænobiorum, Virorumque Illustri Usu Congregationis Montis Oliveti (ibid. 1720). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belfour, HUGO JAMES (or JOHN), an English clergyman and dramatic writer, was born in 1802, and died in 1827. He published, under the pseudonym of St. John Dorset, two dramatic pieces entitled The Vampire and Montezuma. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Belfrage, HENRY, D.D., minister at Falkirk, in Scotland, who was born in 1774, and died in 1835, published, Practical Discourses for the Young (1817):—Practical Exposition of the Assembly's Shorter Catechism:—A Monitor to Families (1823); and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; McKerrow, Life of Henry Belfrage (1837).

Belfry is a bell-tower, or campanile, usually forming part of a church, but sometimes detached from it, as at Evesham, Berkeley, Chichester Cathedral, Walton, Norfolk, and Ledbury, Herefordshire, etc. At Lapworth, Warwickshire, the belfry is connected with the church by a covered passage. This term is also applied to the room in the tower in which the bells are hung. At Pembridge, in Herefordshire, there is a detached belfry built entirely of wood, the frame in which the bells are hung rising at once from the ground, with merely a casing of boards. See TOWER.

Belgrado, GIACOPO, a learned Italian Jesuit, was born at Udine, Dec. 16, 1704, and died April 17, 1789. He published a large number of scientific works, of which the greater part are in Latin. The principal of these are, Ad Disciplinam Mechanicam Nauticam et Geographicam, Acroasis Critica et Geographica (Parma, 1741):—De Lignorum Equilibrio Acroasis (ibid. 1742):—De Analyse Vulgaris Usu in Re Physice (ibid. 1761):—Theoria Cochleæ Archimedis (1767). At the age of eighty-one years, he gave a dissertation, full of new ideas, upon Egyptian architecture. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belgrave (Lat. Bellogravius), RICHARD, an English theologian, and monk of the Order of Carmelites, lived at the commencement of the 14th century, under the reign of Edward II. He wrote, Determinationes Theologicæ:—Questiones Ordinariæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Belhomme, HUMBERT, a learned French Benedictine of the Congregation of St. Vanne and St. Hidulphus, was born at Bar-le-Duc, Dec. 27, 1653. He was distinguished for his eloquence, being the first who preached in the Cathedral of Strasburg after its cession to France. In 1703 he was made abbot of Moyen-Moutier, and during his long superintendence of its affairs he rebuilt its structures, and collected the valuable library which was formerly there. He died Dec. 12, 1727. He wrote, Historia Mediani Monasterii (Strasburg, 1724, 4to):—also a Fragment of the Chronicle of Jean de Bayon; and some other historical pieces:—besides Remarks on some Decisions of the Rota concerning the Abbeys of St. Mihiel and Sènonex; published under the name of Dominique Doyen (Naples, 1700):—a small work concerning the Power of the Reformed Benedictines to Possess the Perpetual Benefices of their Order (without his name). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beli (in Hindû mythology). See BALI.

Beli (in Norse mythology). See BELA.

Beligatti, CASSIO, an Italian Capuchin, was born at Marcerata, in 1708. He remained as missionary for eighteen years in Thibet and in the kingdom of the Great Mogul. After his return, he edited, upon the invitation of cardinal Spinelli, prefect of the Propaganda, a Thibetian Alphabet (Rome, 1773); and two grammars, one of the language of Hindostan, the other of the Sanscrit idiom. He was the co-laborer of P. Giorgi, who in his celebrated work explained the MSS. found in Tartary in 1721. He died at Rome in 1791. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belin, Alphonse, a French theologian, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He wrote, La Vérité de la Religion Catholique, et la Fausseté de la Religion Pretendue Réformée (Nivers, 1683). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belin, Gabriel de, Sr., a French jurist and theologian, was born at Champagne in 1546. He entered the Order of the Cistercians, and was appointed abbot of Marimond. He died Sept. 14, 1590. He published in 1580 the Coutume du Bussigny. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belin, James L., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in South Carolina in 1788. He entered the South Carolina Conference in 1811, and labored zealously until his sudden death, May 19, 1859. Mr. Belin was a good, pure-hearted, experimental preacher. He was charitable and exemplary in life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1859, p. 150.

Belin, John Albert, a learned French prelate, was born at Besançon about 1610. He took the Benedictine vows at the Abbey of Faverney, Dec. 19, 1630. Having completed his studies, he was sent to the Abbey of Cluny, to the Priory of Charité-sur-Loire, then to Paris and other places, where he distinguished himself as a preacher. Having secured for the son of Colbert the vote of all the monks for the election to the Priory of Charité, he obtained of this minister the bishopric of Belley in 1666. He died in his diocese in 1677. He wrote, Les Emblemes Eucharistiques (Paris, 1647):—Les Fideles Pensées de l'Âne pour la Porter à son Devoir (ibid. 1660):—Pierre Philosophale (ibid. 1653):—Les Aventures du Philosophe inconnu à la Recherche et Invention de la Pierre Philosophale (Paris, 1664); an interesting work directed against the alchemists:—Preuves Convaincantes des Vérités du Christianisme (Paris, 1666). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beling, RICHARD. See BELLING.

Belingan. See BELLINGAN.

Belinuncia, in Gallic mythology, was a poisonous plant, possessing a magic effect, sacred to Belenus or Belinus, from whom its name. The Gauls poisoned their arrows and lances with it. It was also said to produce rain and stormy weather, if dug up by a virgin at midnight during the new-moon, while if gathered during the full-moon it produced aridity.

Belinus, Belis. See BELENUS.

Belisana, in Gallic mythology, was the discoverer of the arts, and worshipped by the Gauls. All accounts about her are doubtful, as also the account that she is represented as a maiden sitting on a tree-stump, on the famous eight-cornered pillar near Cussi la Colonne. She is thought to have represented Minerva.

Belit, an Assyrian goddess, analogous to the Accadian Nin-gelal.

Belknap, GILES N., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Randolph, Vt., May 13, 1811. He was converted in 1832; received license to preach in 1840; moved to Shiawassee County, Mich., in 1848, and in the same year entered the Michigan Conference. On account of ill-health he held a superannuated relation during 1857 and 1858. During the other years of his ministry he labored willingly and faithfully. He died April 13, 1866. Mr. Belknap excelled as a pastor. His preaching was direct, earnest, and full of pathos. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 157.

Bell. The body of a Corinthian or Composite capital, supposing the foliage stripped off, is called the bell; the same name is applied also to the Early English and other capitals in Gothic architecture which in any degree partake of this form.

Bell of a Capital.

Bell, Alexander (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1788. He was converted when seventeen years of age, under Rev. William Bramwell, and was called to the ministry in 1810. He died Feb. 3, 1851. He occupied some of the most important circuits, and was an eminently useful minister and a burning and shining light. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851; Wesleyan Centenary Takings, i, 334.

Bell, Alexander (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, entered, in 1855, the Pittsburg Conference, in which he did excellent service for twelve years, when he was disabled by an attack of apoplexy. He soon manifested alarming symptoms of insanity, and was removed to the Columbus Asylum, where he died, Nov. 18, 1867. Mr. Bell was an earnest, able, and acceptable minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 112.

Bell, Angus, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Scotland about 1827, of respectable, pious parents, who gave him a careful education. He spent several of his early years in marine life. Upon abandoning the sea he travelled through several of the Southern States, and finally settled at Evansville, Ind., where he was converted. Soon after he was licensed to preach, and labored as supply in various places in Indiana. In 1857 he entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1861 he was violently persecuted by secessionists, and his life was threatened; he therefore temporarily left his work. About this time he was attacked by hemorrhage of the lungs, and died Sept. 13, 1861. Mr. Bell was an excellent man, but subject to extreme elevations and depressions in his religious experience, though of unblemished character. He was somewhat eccentric, yet never offensive. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 8.

Bell, Ann Mercy, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London in 1706. For several years she was a teacher in a Friends' school in her native city. Her conversion took place in early life, and she was impressed that it was her duty to preach. Her ministry was at first in her own immediate vicinity, but gradually extended to many parts of England. It was not confined to persons in her own denomination, but reached the various sects of Christians. In 1753 she went to London, where she was much occupied in preaching in the streets and market-places, and "such was her ardor and love for the people that she frequently preached three or four times a day in different places." She died of apoplexy, Dec. 30, 1775. See Piety Promoted, iii, 105-106. (J. C. S.)

Bell, Benjamin (1), a Congregational minister, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Jan 21, 1752. He graduated from Yale College in 1779; was ordained pastor in Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 13, 1784; resigned his pastorate in March, 1790, and died in 1836. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 87.

Bell, Benjamin (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Montgomery County, N. C., Nov. 15, 1801. He experienced conversion in 1818; received license to preach in 1825, and in 1826 entered the South Carolina Conference, in which he was very successful, and only missed one year, and that on account of ill-health, until his decease, June 27, 1838. Mr. Bell was an able, devoted, ardent Christian gentleman. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1839, p. 663.

Bell, David L., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Kentucky. His father was a Baptist preacher. He was converted in 1841, and in 1842 entered the Arkansas Conference. In 1844 he was ordained deacon and transferred to the Texas Conference, where, soon after, from pecuniary embarrassment, he was obliged to locate. In 1849 he re-entered the active ranks, but was attacked by pneumonia on his return home and confined until his death, Jan. 25, 1850. Mr. Bell was an agreeable companion, a dauntless preacher, a conscientious Christian, and a faithful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1850, p. 299.

Bell (née Wynn), Deborah, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Bradford, Yorkshire, in 1689. She became a Christian when quite young, and at the age of nineteen began her ministerial work with modesty and timidity, but grew strong by experience. She visited many parts of England, Scotland, and Wales, and was twice in Ireland. In 1738 she made her last visit to several places in Hertfordshire, where, though very feeble in body, she "was strong in spirit, and proved a great comfort to the Friends where she went." She died Sept. 2, 1738. See Piety Promoted, ii, 258, 259. (J. C. S.)

Bell, Fielding, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Stafford County, Va., June 19, 1801. He graduated at St. Mary's College, Md., and in 1832 moved to St. Louis, Mo., and entered upon the practice of medicine. In 1839 he moved to Floydsburg, Ky., where he received license to preach, and in 1840 entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1860 he was transferred to the Louisiana Conference, and appointed to the Concordia Mission, where he labored until the work was broken up by the war. In 1865 he resumed his service, and was appointed to Waterproof and St. Joseph, where he continued until within a few days of his decease, which occurred Aug. 28, 1867. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 135.

Bell, Hamilton, a Presbyterian minister, was in May, 1740, taken on trial by Philadelphia Presbytery, and licensed Sept. 30. Having spent some time at Nottingham, he was received by Donegal Presbytery, Oct. 27, 1741, and April 7 he received a call to Nottingham, and was ordained Nov. 11, 1742. He was also invited to Donegal, to Lancaster, and to White Clay. The spring after being ordained, he was admonished, and in the fall suspended. In February, 1744, he published his renunciation of the presbytery in the newspapers. He appealed to the synod in May, 1744, and they appointed a committee to meet and determine the affair. It met at Donegal in June, and deposed him; and the synod approved the sentence in 1745. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Amer. 1857.

Bell, Henry, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in North Carolina, Feb. 28, 1799. He was converted in early life, but did not join any religious sect until about thirty-five years of age. He moved to Tennessee when about eighteen, was licensed to preach in 1841, spent eleven zealous, laborious years in the local ranks, and then, in 1852, entered the Memphis Conference, in which he served as health permitted, until his death, July 26, 1874. Mr. Bell had very limited educational privileges in early life, but by persistent personal application became a well-read man. He was plain, practical, and forcible in his preaching, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 64.

Bell, Hiram, a Congregational minister, was born at Antrim, N. H., Dec. 16, 1807. His preparatory studies were pursued at the Kimball Union Academy, and he graduated from Williams College in 1836. In 1839 he graduated from East Windsor Theological Institute. From 1840 to 1850 he was pastor of the Church in Marlborough, Conn. In the latter year he was installed at Killingworth, Conn., remaining there until 1864; and from May of that year until death, June 18, 1876, he was acting pastor of the Church in Westchester, Conn. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 409.

Bell, Jacob, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London, April 17, 1737 (O.S.), where he resided the most of his life. He became a Christian in early life, and his "first appearance in public testimony" was in 1774, when he was about thirty-seven years of age. In the discharge of his ministerial duties, he visited most of the meetings in Great Britain, also those in the Isles of Wight, Guernsey, and Jersey. He often held meetings among persons of other religious denominations. He died at Plaistow,

Essex Co., the place of his last residence, Dec. 19, 1806. See Piety Promoted, ii, 382-383. (J. C. S.)

Bell, James (1), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born in the north of Ireland, 1759. He was converted when after twenty. He was appointed to a circuit in 1790, and labored for thirty-seven years, chiefly as a missionary, preaching in the English and Irish tongues, oftentimes at fairs and markets, and exposed to much danger. When unable longer to fulfil the duties of the ministry, he retired to Dublin, where he still did missionary work. He died Dec. 8, 1844. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1845.

Bell, James (2), a Wesleyan minister in Canada, was born in the County of Wexford, Ireland, in 1810. He was converted in early life; came to Canada in 1831; entered the ministry of the then newly formed "Canadian Wesleyan Methodist Church" in 1834; retired from the active work in 1863; settled in London, Ont., in 1867; and died in that city, May 31, 1879. Bell was a mighty wrestler with God and an irresistible pleader with men. His whole soul sometimes seemed on fire; it flashed from his eyes, flamed from his tongue, and burned into the souls of those who heard him. He was a man of warm friendships and of uniform and unspotted integrity. See Minutes of London (Ont.) Conference (Toronto, 1879), p. 32.

Bell, John (1), an English Wesleyan minister, of Episcopal parents, was born at Hull, Oct. 19, 1788. He united with the Church at the age of fourteen, and was received as a probationer in 1811; he was sent to Newfoundland in 1816, and labored in St. John's, Island Cove, and Harbor Grace; returned to England in 1823; became a supernumerary in 1851, and died after much affliction, Oct. 26, 1855. He was a faithful pastor. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1856; Wilson, Newfoundland and its Missionaries (Cambridge, Mass., and Halifax, N. S., 1866, 12mo), p. 237.

Bell, John (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Accomac County, Va., in 1792 or 1793. He experienced conversion in his twenty-first year; soon was promoted to class-leader, exhorter, and local preacher; and in 1827 entered the travelling ministry. For two years previous to his decease he held a superannuated relation. He died Aug. 14, 1859. Mr. Bell did valiant work for the Church. He was humble, guileless, patient, courteous, and generous. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 56.

Bell, John (3), an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Stokesley, Yorkshire, Nov. 21, 1812. He was converted when twelve years old, entered the itinerancy in 1836 (Haslingden and Oakham circuits), and sailed for Antigua, W. I., Oct. 31, 1838. After a few months of earnest work, he was stricken with yellow fever, of which he died, Aug. 16, 1839. See Minutes of the British Conference; Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1841, p. 979.

Bell, John (4), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Cumberland County in 1681. He took up his residence in London in 1708, was a member of the Savoy meeting, from which he received a certificate approving him as a minister, and commending him to Friends in Holland, among whom he purposed to labor. For a time, he resided in Bradford, York County, and in 1715 removed to London, where he remained during the rest of his life, and died in 1761. He was the compiler of one volume of Piety Promoted. See Piety Promoted, iii, 205-206. (J. C. S.)

Bell, John (5), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London in 1774, and became a Christian in early life. Engaging in secular pursuits, he was greatly prospered in his business, and, as a "steward" of God, generously distributed the good things which came into his hands. He began to speak as a minister in 1797, and subsequently, at different times, in company with other ministers he made religious visits in different parts of England and Scotland.

He died Jan. 14, 1849. See Testimonies at Yearly Meeting, 1849, p. 28-31. (J. C. S.)

Bell, John Foster, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Lewistown, Pa., Oct. 16, 1844. He was converted at the age of thirteen; and in 1869 was licensed to preach and admitted into the Central Pennsylvania Conference, in which he labored with great energy and fidelity until his decease, March 5, 1878. Mr. Bell was a model young man, cultured in manner, mind, and spirit. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 37.

Bell, John W., a young Wesleyan missionary, died at Gambia, West Africa, of fever, accelerated by an imprudent journey through a dangerous swamp, Dec. 17, 1874. He had been but recently accepted by the Missionary Committee, and had scarcely entered upon the duties of his mission. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 35.

Bell, Richard, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Leeds, June 4, 1820. He was converted when eighteen years of age; entered the ministry in 1849; became a supernumerary in 1873; took up his residence at Beverley; and died Nov. 14, 1874. Mr. Bell had a cultivated mind; his preaching was attractive and edifying; he promoted the religious instruction of the young; and his amiableness of disposition and blamelessness of life secured the esteem and love of the people. Mr. Bell wrote, The Claims of the Bible (3d ed. Lond. 1857, 12mo):—The Human Mind (Leicester, 1860, 12mo):—The Great Possession (Lond. 1867, 12mo, pp. 460):—Existence after Death (ibid. 12mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 16; Osborne, Meth. Bibliography, s. v.

Bell, Robert (1), an Irish Methodist preacher, was born in 1815, in the County of Cavan. The Methodist preachers lodged and preached in his father's house, spoke kindly to the boy, and at the age of eighteen he was converted and joined the society. He began to preach soon afterwards, and entered the ministry in 1844. He died peacefully, Nov. 2, 1866. His preaching was earnest and powerful.

Bell, Robert (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Colne, Lancashire, July 11, 1806. He early became a Christian, and, showing unusual abilities as a public speaker, he was introduced by his pastor to Airedale College, where he made preaching his special study. His health was delicate, yet he settled at Stainland, and remained there eleven years, infusing new life into the people, and augmenting the Church both in numbers and in spiritual power. He subsequently labored at Sowerby Bridge, Brighouse, Salterforth, and Huddersfield. Here he died, Dec. 12, 1869. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 304.

Bell, Samuel, M.A., Ph.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Leeds, June 3, 1793. In his eighteenth year he became a member of the Church; in 1813 was admitted as student at Hoxton Academy, and at the close of his course was stationed at Wrexham. Here he preached five years; then removed to Lancaster, where he labored twenty-two years; and then went to Stockwell, near London, where he conducted an academy for young gentlemen sixteen years. He died July 22, 1861. Mr. Bell was a devoted Christian, a man of strict conscientiousness and great benevolence. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 222.

Bell, T. H. D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Coshocton County, O., March 7, 1836. He received a careful religious training; experienced conversion in his fourteenth year; spent two years at West Bedford Academy as a student, and then engaged in school-teaching. He was an unusual and remarkable teacher. In some of his schools nearly every scholar was converted through his prayers and example. In 1864 he was licensed to preach, and in 1866 entered the North Ohio Conference, in which he served the Church valiantly, and died in the midst of his labors, March 31, 1878. Mr. Bell was an excellent man, a faithful and useful preacher; tall and manly in form, genial in spirit, and a loving companion. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 37.

Bell, Thomas M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pennsylvania, July 4, 1832. He removed to Indiana in early manhood; experienced conversion at the age of eighteen; soon became class-leader; worked at his trade until the breaking-out of the civil war, when he enlisted and served three years; and in 1869 entered the North Indiana Conference. On account of his feeble health he was only able to labor six years. In 1875 he became superannuated, and died Sept. 2, 1878. Mr. Bell was brave and true in the army, and watchful and zealous in his ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 56.

Bell, Walter A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1830. He received a careful religious training, and spent most of his youth in Claysville, O. He was converted at his father's family altar. Being poor his literary advantages were very limited, and to remedy them he, after toiling hard all day, pushed his intellectual labors far into the night. He was duly licensed to exhort and to preach, and finally entered the Pittsburg Conference, in which he labored as his health permitted until his decease, April 22, 1859. Mr. Bell was a Christian gentleman of the finest sensibilities and most approved manners. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1859, p. 117.

Bell, William (1), a Scottish prelate, was elected to the see of St. Andrews in 1332, but did not succeed in obtaining a confirmation. So the see of St. Andrews was vacant until 1341. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 24.

Bell, William (2), D.D., an English clergyman, was born in the parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, London, Feb. 4, 1625, and educated at Merchant Taylor's School, and at St. John's College, Oxford. In 1648 he was ejected from the university by the republicans, and afterwards travelled in France. About 1655 he had a small benefice in Norfolk conferred upon him, but was not admitted by the triers. At the Restoration he became chaplain in the Tower of London. In 1662 he became vicar of St. Sepulchre's, London, and in 1665 prebendary of St. Paul's. In 1667 he was promoted to the archdeanery of St. Albans, and made one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary. In 1668 he became one of the lecturers of the Temple. He died July 19, 1683. His only publications were a few sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bell, William (3), a minister of the Church of Scotland, was born in 1704, and died Sept. 20, 1779.

Bell, William (4), a Universalist minister, was born at Windsor, Vt., June 16, 1791. He was strictly trained in Calvinism; removed to South Hampton, N. H., in 1797; attended school at East Kingston and Concord, N. H., and at Newburyport, Mass.; learned the printing and silver-plating business; and in 1818 removed to Charlestown, Mass., and embraced Universalism. He received a private theological training under the Rev. Hosea Ballou, and began to preach in 1824 at Haverhill, Mass. He spent the first ten years of his ministry in Salem and Washington, N. H., and Springfield and Woodstock, Vt., during which period he edited and published five volumes of The Watchman and Christian Repository. Thence he removed to Lansingburg, N. Y.; thence to Bennington, Vt.; thence to Milford, Mass.; thence to Lowell, where for a time he assumed the editorial labors of the Star of Bethlehem; and in 1849 to Boston, where, with the exception of three years spent in Charlestown, he remained until his death, April 30, 1871. Mr. Bell was not great in either natural endowments or acquirements, but a man of sound mind, amiable disposition, strong faith, and decided religious feeling. See Universalist Register, 1872, p. 130.

Bell, William (5), an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Lowth, Lincolnshire. His zeal and steadfastness when a local preacher, as well as his bodily vigor, induced the conference to send him—upon his entering the itinerancy in 1822—as a missionary on the River Gambia, West Africa. Shortly after his arrival he was assailed with a violent fever, which occasioned his death, March 15, 1822, aged twenty-seven. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1822.

Bell, William Gilmor, a Presbyterian minister, was born at West Alexander, Pa., Dec. 11, 1812. His preparatory education was obtained in his native town, and he graduated from Washington College in 1836. He went directly from college to Princeton Seminary, where he studied between two and three years. He was licensed by the Red Stone Presbytery in 1837, and ordained in 1840 by the Presbytery of Missouri, and on the same day installed pastor of the Church at Booneville, Mo., where he labored over fourteen years. During this period he had charge of a seminary for young ladies, which he organized in 1843, and presided over until 1858. After this he organized a Church at Union, fifteen miles from Booneville, and supplied it from 1848 to 1860. He then removed to Texas, and supplied the Warrensburg Church after his return. In 1869 he again removed to Texas, and engaged in the work of the American Bible Society, supplying the Georgetown Church. He next labored as a missionary, supplying various churches. In 1880 he was commissioned by the Board of Home Missions to labor at Fort Concho and vicinity, but was overtaken by sickness at Perkins Ranch, twenty-three miles west of Coleman, Texas, and died Sept. 23, 1880. See Neurological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 57. (W. P. S.)

Bell, W. W., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Greene County, Tenn., July 30, 1799. He professed religion when quite young, and was licensed by the Knoxville Presbytery in 1834. In 1855 he removed to the West and joined the Missouri Presbytery; later he joined the Kansas Presbytery, of which he was a faithful member until his death, March 11, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 234.

Bella, Ardellio della, an Italian Jesuit and preacher who lived at Spalatro, in Dalmatia, near the commencement of the 18th century, wrote Dizionario Italiano, Lutino, Illirico (Venice, 1728). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bella, Geronimo, an Italian theologian and poet, was born at Carra, in Piedmont, and lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He was prior of St. Andrews of Mondovi, chief-priest of Coni, doctor of civil and canon law, and vice-general of the Church of Salveas. He wrote, Il Genio Regale Appagato (Mondovi and Coni, 1646):—Il Sole Beneficio (ibid. 1647):—L'Aurora Opportuna (Coni, 1655):—Le Palme del Giacinto (ibid. 1664):—also some Panegyriques. These works of the poet breathe the spirit of the time. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bella, Stefano della, a Florentine engraver, was born May 18, 1610. He was the son of a goldsmith, and intended for that profession; but he soon manifested a genius for drawing, and was placed under the instruction of Cesare Dandini. He visited Paris in 1642, where he executed some plates for Heinrich, the uncle of Israel Sylvestre. He died at Florence, July 12, 1664. The following are some of his principal religious works: The Virgin Sucking the Infant Jesus; The Triumph of our Church; John the Baptist Getting Water with his Cup; The Virgin with the Infant Jesus on her Knee; The Holy Family; The Repose in Egypt, with St. Joseph Reading, Leaning against a Tree; a round plate of the Flight into Egypt, with the Heads of Angels. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bellah, James, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in North Carolina. At the age of twenty-two he was converted, and in 1816 entered the South Carolina Conference, in which for seventeen years he travelled and preached with zeal and usefulness, when failing health obliged him to desist from active service. He died in 1835. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 345.

Bellah, Morgan, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Oglethorpe County, Ga., Nov. 24, 1799. His vigorous mind never had the discipline of a thorough education, but by diligent study he became a useful preacher. He joined the North Georgia Conference in 1833 and labored faithfully within its bounds until 1869, when he was superannuated. He died in Barnesville, Ga., March 26, 1880. He was a practical, earnest preacher, a safe expositor, and a spiritual exhorter. His manner was dignified and serious, his spirit humble and meek, his life true, loving, and pure. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 193.

Bellaïse, Julien, a learned French Benedictine of the Society of St. Maur, was born at St. Symphorien, in the diocese of Avranches, in 1641. In concert with Lenourry and Jean Duchesne, he revised the manuscripts of St. Ambrose. His death prevented his completing a new edition of the Councils and Monuments of Normandy. He died at the Abbey of St. Ouen of Rouen, March 23, 1711. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellaïse, Hugues François Régis de, a French prelate, was born in 1732, and died at Paris, Sept. 20, 1796. He became bishop of St. Briec, and perished during the French Revolution. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellamy, Adey, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Framlingham, Suffolk Co., in 1739, and in early life made a profession of his faith in Christ. For many years he resided in London, where he was engaged in trade. He first appeared as a minister in the forty-first year of his age, "in which character he was well accepted by his friends." He was useful in his vocation, not only in his native land, but also in the island of Guernsey, where he made two religious visits, and in the south of France. In the year 1789 he removed to High Wycombe. He died peacefully, March 29, 1810. See Piety Promoted, iv, 11, 15. (J. C. S.)

Bellamy, David, a Baptist minister, was born in 1805. He became pastor of a Church in Skenateles, N. Y., in 1833, and subsequently of a Church in Manlius. Ill-health compelled him to retire from the pastorate in 1839. He entered the service of the American and Foreign Bible Society, and the more active life he led while travelling for the society so far restored him that he again resumed his ministerial work, and became pastor of the Church in Ithaca, N. Y., and subsequently of the Stanton-street Church in New York city, with which he remained until 1846. He then united with others in the formation of what is now the Calvary Church in New York, and became its pastor, sustaining that relation for about three years. Afterwards he was pastor successively of churches in Arcadia, Mt. Morris, and Rome, where he died, Oct. 1, 1864. See Appletons' Annual Cyclop. v, 618.

Bellamy, George, an English Wesleyan missionary, after preaching seven years in England, was sent as a missionary to the West Indies in 1817. Here four years of work and affliction was all he bore. He died in Demerara, Nov. 2, 1821. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1822.

Bellamy, Joseph, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at New Cheshire, Conn., in 1719. He graduated from Yale College in 1735, and soon after devoted himself to theological study. Two years after his graduation he was licensed to preach by the Association of New Haven County, Conn. For some time he supplied a small congregation in Bethlehem, then a parish in Woodbury. A revival followed his preaching in the latter place, and he was urged to become pastor of the church. Accordingly in the spring of 1740 he was duly ordained, and this pastorate continued until the close of his life, a period of fifty years. Soon after his ordination began the "great awakening," which extended through several years. Until 1742 he remained with his own people, but was so impressed with the magnitude of the work that, having procured a supply for his own pulpit, he went into different parts of the country, preaching everywhere with remarkable power. Not only in Connecticut, but in some of the neighboring colonies he aroused the people. It is said that he resembled Whitefield in respect to fervor, but exceeded him in logic. After being satisfied that these itinerant labors were no longer required, he devoted himself again to his parish work. Then he began the great undertaking of his life, as many think—his preparation for the press of the work entitled, True Religion Delineated. It was printed first at Boston, in 1750; was subsequently reprinted in Scotland; and its popularity was great, not only in Great Britain but in America. Somewhere about 1757 he received an invitation to become pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in New York city, which he declined. A considerable part of his usefulness consisted in preparing young men for the ministry, and he became distinguished as a theological teacher. He died at Woodbury, Conn., March 6, 1790. Besides the work already mentioned, Dr. Bellamy published a large number of sermons, essays, and letters. In 1811 his entire works were published in New York, in three volumes octavo. He is still considered one of the most distinguished and useful writers of his time. There was undoubtedly a great deal of the love of dominion in his nature, which made him appear impatient of contradiction. He was a mortal enemy to Antinomianism. He was considered one of the most powerful preachers of his day, exercising perfect self-command and freedom of utterance, accompanied with impassioned gesture. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 404.

Bellamy, Samuel, an English Congregational minister, was born at Lincoln, April 4, 1803. He was converted early in life, joined the Congregational Church, received his collegiate discipline at Huxton Academy and Highbury College, and was ordained to the pastorate at Leeds in 1828. On resigning his charge at Leeds, Mr. Bellamy preached successively at Clutton, Somersetshire, ten years; ten years at Sheffield; seventeen years at Buckingham; and finally retired to Sheffield, where he died, Nov. 23, 1877. Mr. Bellamy published The Betrayal, a sacred poem in five books; A Sermon on Baptismal Regeneration, and A Course of Lectures on the Prodigal Son. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 298.

Bellamy, Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Great Grimsby, Lincolnshire, England, in 1804. He was licensed and ordained by Black River Congregational Association in 1831. He labored in the ministry for thirty years in Copenhagen, Evans's Mills, Penfield, Alexandria, and Charlotte, all in the state of New York, and died May 1, 1867. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 75.

Bellange, Jacques, a French painter and engraver, was born at Chalons about 1610, and studied under Claude Henriot, a painter of Nancy, and Simon Vouet. As a painter, little is known of him. The following are his principal religious plates: The Annunciation; The Holy Family, with St. Catherine and St. John; The Adoration of the Magi; The Resurrection of Lazarus; Christ bearing his Cross; The Dead Saviour lying on the Knees of the Virgin Mary; The Martyrdom of St. Lucia. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellarini (and not Bellavini), GIOVANNI, an Italian theologian, a native of Castelnovo, entered the Society of Barbanites in 1575, and was frequently associated with St. Charles Borromeo, whom he highly esteemed. He taught theology at Pavia and at Rome, and founded the houses of his order, of which he was superior, at Novara and Spoleto. He died at Milan in 1630. His principal works are, Prælix ad Omnes Veritates Evangelicas cum Certitudine Comprobandas (Milan, 1626);—Doctrina Concilii Tridentini et Catechismi Romani de Symbolo Apostolorum (Rome, 1630);—Speculum Humane atque Divinæ Sapientiæ (Milan, 1630);—Mémorial des Confesseurs et des Penitents, tiré Principalement de la Doctrine du Concile de Trente et du Catechisme Romain (from the Italian by Remy, Paris, 1677). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellati, Antonio Francesco, an Italian theologian and preacher of the Jesuit order, was born at Ferrara, Nov. 2, 1665. He took the sacred habit at sixteen years of age, and passed his novitiate at Bologna, where he continued his studies till 1688, completing his vows in 1699. He was one of the most famous preachers of his time. He became rector of the college at Piacenza in 1712, and died March 1, 1742. A collection of his works was published at Ferrara in 1744, in four volumes—the first containing, Le Prediche (1744); the second, Orazioni e Discorsi (1745); the third, Trattati Sacri e Morali (1746); the fourth, Altri Trattati, Esortazioni Domestiche; altri Prediche, Lettere, e la Vita dell' Autore (1748). He was, of his kind, one of the best Italian writers of the 18th century. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bellator, a presbyter, and a friend of Cassiodorus, at whose request he wrote Commentaries on Ruth, appended by Cassiodorus to Origen's Exposition, to complete a comment on the Octateuch. He also wrote Commentaries on Tobit, Esther, Judith, Maccabees, and Wisdom, all of which have perished. He translated two books of Origen's Homilies on Esdras; and Huet regards him as the author of the extant Latin version of some of the works of that father. See Cassiodorus, De Inst. Div. c. i, 540, c. v, 542, etc.; Cave, Historia Literaria, i, 525; Sigebert, De Ill. Eccles. Script. c. 89.

Bellay, Eustache du, a French prelate, nephew of René, became the successor of Jean du Bellay as bishop of Paris, and governed his diocese with great wisdom. He showed much zeal at the Council of Trent in sustaining episcopal rights, and opposed the introduction of the Jesuits into France. He died at Bellay, in Anjou, in 1565, after having resigned his see. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bellay, René du, a French prelate, younger brother of Jean, was first counsellor clerk at the Parliament of Paris, and in 1538 received the bishopric of Grasse, which he afterwards resigned in favor of Benedict Taillecorne, tutor of the children of France. He took charge of the offices of the Church of Paris during the absence of his brother, Jean, who went as ambassador to London (1533-34). He was appointed bishop of Mans Sept. 27, 1535, and devoted his leisure to horticultural labors. He died in 1546. His garden at Tournay was, according to C. Gesner, the most beautiful not only of France, but of continental Europe. The introduction of tobacco into France is probably due to him. Two unpublished letters of this learned bishop are found, addressed to his brother the cardinal, preserved in the National Library; also Missale ad Usus Ecclesiæ Cenomanensis (Paris, 1541, 1546, 1548). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bell-clerks were two functionaries formerly attached to the pope's chapel at Rome. They probably derived their name from the duty being assigned them of ringing a bell when the pope was on a journey with the holy sacrament. While attending the pope on these occasions they were dressed in red, but at chapel their dress was purple and they wore surplices. It was necessary that one of them should be a priest, so that he could carry the sacrament from the horse to the place where it was to be used on a journey. It was their office to decorate the altar, light the wax tapers, cover the tables of the altar, prepare the seat for the officiating priest, arrange the benches and cushions in order, dress the assistant, take care of the censer, and present the wine and water to be made use of in the mass.

Bellefonds, LÉONARD GIGAULT DE, a monk of the 17th century, founded at Rouen the monastery of Notre Dame des Anges, of the Order of St. Benedict. His Euvres Spirituelles were published at Paris in 1719. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellelli, FULGENCIO (or FRANCESCO), a pious and learned Italian theologian of the Order of the Augustines, of whom he became general, was born in 1675 at Buccino, in the diocese of Couza (kingdom of Naples), and died at Rome in 1742. In his work De Inventionem corporis Augustini (Venice, 1728), he maintained, contrary to the opinion of Muratori, that the body of St. Augustine existed at Pavia and was transported in the 8th century. He published two other works on Augustine, De Statu Creaturæ ante Peccatum (Antw. 1711) and De Reparatione Naturæ post Lapsum (Rome, 1737, 2 vols.), the former of which was condemned by the Inquisition. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-lexikon, s. v.

Bellemère, GILLES DE, a French canonist and prelate who died in 1409, was successively bishop of Lavaur, of Puy-en-Vélay, and of Avignon. He left several works on jurisprudence (Lyons, 1548, 7 vols.; 1586, 6 vols.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellenden, ADAM, a Scottish prelate, was first minister at Falkirk in 1608, where he continued until 1615, when he was promoted to the see of Dunblane, and from there to the see of Aberdeen in 1635. Here he sat until 1638, when he was excommunicated with the rest of his order by the wild assembly at Glasgow. He went to England and died soon after. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 181-182.

Bellenghi (and not Bellenchi), FILIPPO MARIA ALBERTINO, an Italian prelate and learned Camaldule, was born at Forlimpopoli (and not at Forlì), Sept. 22, 1758. Having received the degree of doctor of theology and of canonical law at Rome, he was successively rector of the parishes of Faenza and Perugia, abbot of Sassoferrato and of Avellana. At last Bellenghi became procurator-general of his order, and Leon XII appointed him archbishop of Nicosia, and made him apostolic visitor of the orders of friars in Sardinia. He died March 2, 1839. Besides many of his works which remain in MS., we notice, De Veritate ac Divinitate Sacræ Magorum Historiæ, Dissertatio Historico-theologico-critica (Pisauri, 1786):—De Jesu Christi Reliquiis, Dissertatio Theologico-critica (Faventia, 1761):—Animadversiones in Sacrarum Reliquiarum Cultus Vetustatem, ac Prohibitum adversus Iconoclastas Protestantæ, aliosque Religionis Catholicæ Ritus Nuperos Criticos (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belleo, CARLO, an Italian theologian and poet, was a native of Ragusa, and died at Padua in 1580. He wrote, De Secundarum Intentionum Natura Tractatus (Venice, 1589):—De Multiplici Sensu Scripturæ Tractatus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belle-Perche, PIERRE DE, a French prelate and statesman, was born of very obscure parentage at Lucenai, in Nivernais. He was first doctor regent in civil law at Orleans, then counsellor of Parliament. Philip the Fair especially drew him into intimate relations with himself about 1296, and confided to him many important missions. Belle-Perche had charge of the negotiations of Flanders in 1300, then was sent to England, and afterwards to Rome. He negotiated for the treaty of peace of Amiens in 1302, between France and England. In 1303 he returned to Rome, and in 1305 was sent to the archbishop of Bordeaux, who became pope under the name of Clement V, and accompanied him to Italy. In 1306 his important services gained for him the bishopric of Auxerre and the title of chancellor of France. He was well-versed in canonical law, and was one of the principal counsellors of Philip the Fair, and took an important part in the enterprises of this prince, who passed a great part of his life in contest against the spiritual power. He died at Paris, Jan. 17, 1307. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellermann, CHRISTIAN FRIEDERICH, a Protestant theologian and scholar of Germany, son of Johann Joachim, was born at Erfurt, July 8, 1793. He was from 1818 to 1825 pastor of the Protestants of Lisbon; travelled in Portugal and Spain, and went to Naples in 1827 as chaplain of the Prussian ambassador; and returned to Berlin in 1835, in order to assume the pastoral charge of the parish of St. Paul. He died at Berlin, Feb. 6, 1874. His principal works are, Inhalt und über die ältesten christlichen Begräbnisstätten, und besonders die Katakomben zu Neapel mit ihren Wandgemälden (Hamburg, 1839):—Katechismus der christlichen Lehre (Berlin, 1842; 2d ed. 1854):—Inhalt und Verfasser der einzelnen Bücher der heiligen Schrift (ibid. 1848):—Luther auf der Coburg (ibid. 1853):—Bugenhagen in Braunschweig (ibid. 1854):—Melanchthon in Heidelberg (ibid. 1855):—Das Leben des Johannes Bugenhagen (ibid. 1859):—Ueber die reactionären Bestrebungen in der evangelischen Kirche (ibid. 1850). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 102. (B. P.)

Bellerophon (or Bellerophontes), in Greek mythology, was the son of the Corinthian king Glaucus and of Eurymede. He unintentionally killed his brother, and therefore fled to king Proetus, in Argos. But as the latter's wife became enamoured of him, and he did not favor her love, she accused him to her husband of evil intentions and violence to her person. The king did not care to avenge himself on his guest, but sent him with a letter to his wife's father, Jobates, king of Lycia, asking him to execute Bellerophon. Jobates likewise refused to kill him as a guest, but exposed him to dangers to which he might fall a victim. The deities stood by him because of his innocence, and sent him the winged horse Pegasus (q. v.), by the aid of which he subjected the Solymi, an Asiatic nation, the Amazons, and the Chimæra (q. v.). Jobates was so touched thereby that he gave Bellerophon his daughter Philonœ as a wife, and appointed him his successor. His end was not so happy as his life. The deities, out of envy; began to hate him, and threw him from his Pegasus; lame, he wandered about lonely and sad, in bitter anguish of heart fleeing the paths of men. Philonœ bore him three children, Isander, Hippolochus, and a daughter Laodamia. Mars slew the first in a battle; Diana robbed him of his daughter; but Hippolochus inherited his father's kingdom.

Bellerophon Slaying the Chimæra.

Bellet, CHARLES, a French ecclesiastical writer, was born at Quercy in 1702, and became prebendary of the Cathedral of Montauban. He had great success in preaching, but, being silenced through the enmity of the Jesuits, he gave himself to literary labors. His principal works are L'Adoration Chrétienne (Montauban, 1754);—Des Droits de la Religion (ibid. 1764). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bell-gable (Bell-turret, or Bell-cot). In small churches and chapels that have no towers there is very frequently a bell-gable or turret at the west end in which the bells are hung; sometimes these contain but one bell, sometimes two, and occasionally three, as at Radipole, near Weymouth. A few of these erections may be of Norman date, but the greater number are later; many of them are Early English, in which style they appear to have been very frequent. Besides the bell-gables above referred to, there is often found a smaller erection of very similar kind on the apex of the eastern end of the roof of the nave. This is for the sancte-bell (q. v.).

Bell-gable, Little Casterton, Gloucestershire.

Belli, Francesco (1), an Italian theologian and scholar, was born in 1577, at Arzignano, in Vicentin. He travelled in France and Holland, and died in 1644. He wrote, La Caterina d'Alessandria, a tragedy in verse (Verona, 1621, 1622, 1660):—L'Esequie del Redentore, Sacra Rappresentazione, in Prosa (Vienna, 1653):—Le Osservazioni di Fr. Belli ne' suoi Viaggi d'Olanda et di Francia (Venice, 1632). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belli, Francesco (2), an Italian theologian (perhaps brother of the preceding), of the Order of Franciscans, a native of Sciacca, in Sicily, lived about 1600. He wrote Libro della Verità Christiana, nel quale s'op- portano molte Figure dell' Antico Testamento Intorno à Misteri di Nostra Fide (Padua, 1601). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belli, Nicola, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Mazzara, in Sicily, and lived in the second half of the 17th century. He preached with success in many cities, and was superior of several houses of the Order of Hospital Priests, to which he belonged. He published two vols. of Panegyrics (Rome, 1669-72). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belli, Paolo, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Messina in 1588; joined his order in 1603; and died at Messina, Jan. 15, 1658. He wrote, Gloria Messanensium, seu de Epistola Deiparæ Virginis ad Messanenses (Messina, 1647):—Theatri Mamertini Descriptio Poetica:—Historia Dominicæ Passionis ex in Evangel. contexta (Venice, 1643):—Il Sacrificio d'Abramo (Rome, 1648):—Cappellanum seu Eleemosynarium Christi pro Sanctis Animabus Purgatorii (Messina, 1654, 1677). He also left (MS. in 2 vols. fol.) Millelogium Encomiasticon Marianum, Mille Titulis Totidemque Elogiis in Laudem B. Mariæ Virginis. See Mazzuchelli, Scrittori d'Italia (Brescia, 1753); Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v. (B. P.)

Bellièvre, Albert, a French prelate, elder son of Pomponne de Bellièvre, chancellor of France, was made archbishop of Lyons in 1599. During his episcopate the convent of the Church of Ste. Clare was founded by Louise de Langes. Having fallen into a state of imbecility in 1602, he resigned his office, and died in 1621. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellièvre, Claude, brother of the preceding, succeeded him as archbishop of Lyons in 1604. In 1606 he presided over an assembly of the clergy, and admitted into his diocese the fathers of the third Order of St. Francis, better known as Tercellians or Picpus. He died April 26, 1612. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belling (or Beling), RICHARD, son of sir Henry Belling, was born near Dublin, and became distinguished among the Confederate Irish Roman Catholics. He was secretary to the council established at Kilkenny in 1641, and was sent to Rome to solicit aid. He died at Dublin in September, 1677. During the usurpation of Cromwell he retired into France, where he composed Vindiciarum Catholicorum Hiberniæ libri 2, under the assumed name of Philopater Irenæus. The first book treats of the affairs of Ireland, from 1641 to 1649. The second contains the refutation of a letter written by Paul King, a Franciscan, concerning those affairs. John Poncius, also a Franciscan, wrote against this work of Belling, who replied to him. The authorship of this work is also attributed to Dr. Callaghan.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bellingan (or Belingan), JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Jesuit, rector of the House of the Professed, at Paris, was born at Amiens, Oct. 31, 1666, and died March 9, 1743, leaving, Requête Spirituelle sur les Vertus de Jésus-Christ (Paris, 1731, 12mo):—De la Connaissance et de l'Amour de N. S. Jésus-Christ (ibid. 1734, 12mo):—Requête Spirituelle pour Tous les États, à l'Usage des Personnes du Monde et des Personnes Religieuses (ibid. 1746, 12mo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellini, Jacopo, an old Venetian painter, was born about 1405, and studied under Gentile Fabriano, and is said by Ridolfi to have been one of the most reputable painters of his day. There are several of his works in the public edifices at Venice, which were highly esteemed at the time, especially in the Church of the Confraternity of St. John the Evangelist, representing different subjects from the lives of our Saviour and the Virgin. He died in 1470.

Bellini, Filippo, an Italian painter, was born at Urbino, and flourished about 1594. Among his principal works are, the Martyrdom of St. Guadenzio; fourteen pictures of the Works of Charity; The Marriage of the Virgin, in the Dome at Ancona.

Bellino (or Bellini), an Italian painter little known, of the Venetian school, lived about 1500. He painted the Madonnas which are ordinarily attributed to Gentile and Giovanni Bellini, the style of which he imitated perfectly. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellisomi, CARLO, an Italian prelate, was born at Pavia, Oct. 30, 1736. He was made cardinal in 1785 by Pius VI, and was sent, in 1801, by Pius VII to the Congress of Lyons, where he showed himself favorable to the project of forming the kingdom of Italy. Napoleon, in evidence of his satisfaction, sent him a snuff-box ornamented with his portrait. Bellisomi died Aug. 9, 1808. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellman, HENRY WISE, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Lycoming County, Pa., March 11, 1824. He experienced religion when about sixteen; soon afterwards received license to preach, and in 1849 entered the Baltimore Conference. His health failed in 1853, and in 1856 he took a local relation. He studied law and practiced it until 1859, when he again entered the itinerancy, and toiled cheerfully and with great energy until his decease, in 1860. Mr. Bellman was an earnest, faithful, exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 238.

Bello, MARCO, an Italian painter of the first period of the Venetian school, was a native of Argiveta, and lived about the middle of the 15th century. He painted The Circumcision of our Lord, at Rovigo. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellochio, PIETRO, an Italian theologian of the order of Reformed Franciscans, a native of Ancona, lived near the middle of the 17th century. His principal works are, Esercizi Spirituali (Venice, 1623):—Ammonizioni e Istruzioni per le Giovani Secolari che Desiderano Passare allo Stato Religioso (Rome, 1650). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellogranus, RICHARD. See BELGRANUS.

Bellōna, in Greek and Roman mythology, was the sister of Mars, or his nurse, or his wife, or daughter, the goddess of war. When Mars went to the battle-field, she prepared for him his wagon and his horses. Her temple in Rome was greatly celebrated; the senate assembled in it when transactions were carried on with ambassadors of an enemy. The priests of this goddess were foreigners. At their festivals they cut themselves with knives. The common people held them as holy men. Bellona had two other temples in the cities Comana in Pontus and in Cappadocia.

Bellonarii, the priests of Bellona (q. v.), who were employed in offering sacrifices to her mingled with a portion of their own blood. Hence March 24, the day consecrated to this goddess, was called the day of blood.

Belloni, GIOVANNI, an Italian theologian and jurist, was canon of Padua, and taught with honor moral philosophy in this place. He died in 1623. He wrote Discorso Incorso olle ninfe Najadi d'Omero, Impresa degli Ricourati Academia di Padova (Padua, 1601). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellostencz, JOHN, an Illyrian lexicographer and preacher, who died in 1675, wrote Gazophylazium Lingue Illyricæ:—Sermons, in the Illyrian language. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellows, Henry Whitney, D.D., an eminent Unitarian divine, was born in Boston, June 11, 1814. His ancestors were among the early colonists of Massachusetts Bay. The name is "said to be French in origin, and the French spelling to be Belles-eaux." Tradition assigns the same origin to the New England family of Ballou. Dr. Bellows's great-grandfather was the Bellows from whom Bellows Falls, Vt., takes its name. John Bellows, the father of Dr. Bellows, was an eminent merchant of Boston. Losing his mother at the age of seven years, he was sent to a boarding-school at Jamaica Plains, near Boston. After spending a year or two at this school, he was sent into the country at Walpole, where he remained a year. Subsequently he spent four years at the celebrated school conducted by Dr. Cogswell and George Bancroft, at Round Hill, Mass. He embodied his grateful reminiscences of this seminary in a paper contributed to The Harvard Register. He entered Harvard College in 1828. Dr. Hale says: "He was a delicate boy. I have heard him say that he was indisposed to the sports of boys, shy and timid, small for his age, extremely sensitive to blame, rather dreamy and solitary, homesick at school and at college." He was only fourteen when he entered college, but so well advanced was he that he had small occasion for study; and during two years he studied very little, but passed his days often in the practical pursuit of ornithology, in company with Mr. Nuttall, the naturalist, in the neighboring fields and marshes. After his entrance upon his junior year he read more and studied harder. He became also interested in religious matters, for which he had a natural proclivity. It is stated that when only seven years old he had resolved to be a clergyman. After graduation, Dr. Bellows occupied a year as an assistant in a school for girls kept by his brother John, at Cooperstown, N. Y., teaching French, German, Italian, Greek, and mathematics. He then entered the Divinity School at Cambridge, leaving it to go to Louisiana as the tutor of a young gentleman named Baldwin. His father, through commercial reverses, had lost his wealth, and the son desired to support himself. He returned to Cambridge in 1835, and completed the course at the Divinity School, supporting himself by teaching private pupils. After his graduation in divinity he went to take charge of a congregation at Mobile, Ala. As he proceeded to this station, he preached in various Southern cities. At Mobile his preaching met with considerable success, but Dr. Hale says that "the awful shadow of slavery frightened him away." Soon after his return to the North, Dr. Bellows was invited to become pastor of the First Congregational Church (Unitarian) in Chambers Street, New York. The salary offered him was not large, yet he accepted the invitation and went vigorously to his work. He was ordained in 1838, and kept his position until the day of his death, a period of forty-four years. During this time the Church, always growing, has removed, first to Broadway, and afterwards to the Church of Alt Souls. This success was attained only by hard work, by extraordinary devotion to the duties of his calling, and by a persistence which overcame every obstacle. As a pastor he had few superiors; in his pulpit work he was popular. He died Jan. 30, 1882.

Few men were more widely or more favorably known in New York than Dr. Bellows. He was eminently social, and his was a familiar and friendly face and speech at all times and upon all public occasions. He was naturally gregarious, and liked to feel himself near to the current of passing events and contemporary interests. When the War of the Rebellion broke out, Dr. Bellows suggested the Sanitary Commission, and he became its president. At first the Commission confined itself to distributing valuable tracts, but the scope of its operations was soon enlarged. It received generous gifts from wealthy citizens, while the poor gave their mite. It established hospital transports, wagons, ambulances, railway ambulance-cars. It aided the transference of the wounded soldier from the battle-field to the hospital. On the railroads it had its hospital cars, kitchens, dispensaries, and surgeons' cars. It had its sanitary and hospital inspectors. It cared everywhere for sick or needy soldiers, in or out of active service. It had Homes for the wives, mothers, and children of soldiers. It had "feeding stations" where the tired and hungry soldier could receive a gratuitous meal. It looked after the payment of pensions, back-pay, and bounties. It printed hospital directories. It supplied, whenever permitted to do so, our prisoners at Andersonville, Salisbury, and Richmond. Its medicines, cordials, and provisions were upon every flag-of-truce boat. In the camps, it extended its mercies to the Confederate prisoners-of-war. It expended $3,000,000 in money, and dispensed many millions' worth of supplies. Of this most useful and beneficent society Dr. Bellows was the persistent and active spirit. It is said that while travelling hither and thither in its behalf he never failed to preach on Sunday in the Church of All Souls, except when he went to California and brought back its gift of $1,000,000 to the Commission. So wide was the range of its work that its affairs were not fairly closed until 1878, when Dr. Bellows deposited its archives in the Astor Library. Civil-service reform and like subjects found a strong advocate in Dr. Bellows. He was one of the founders of the Union League Club, and one of the original members of the Century Club. He was also a member of various other associations, such as the New England Society, the New York Historical Society, the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and the Harvard Alumni Association. His labors in connection with the Unitarian Church in this country can hardly be overestimated. He was the first president of the National Unitarian Conference when it was formed in 1865, which position he held until 1879.

Dr. Bellows was the chief originator of The Christian Inquirer, a Unitarian newspaper published in New York and started in 1846. He devoted himself with great energy to the establishment of Antioch College, in Ohio. In 1853 he delivered the Phi Beta Kappa oration at Harvard College. He also delivered the annual sermon before the Divinity School at Cambridge. In 1857 he gave a course of Lowell lectures in Boston on the "Treatment of Social Diseases," which was published in book-form. The same year he delivered another series of lectures in the Academy of Music, New York, on the "Relations of the Theatre to the Public Interest," which was likewise printed in volume. In 1866 he was editor of The Christian Examiner, and kept this position until 1871. His Restatements of Christian Doctrine was published in 1860. After a journey abroad he published The Old World in its New Face (1868, 2 vols.). He also published a large number of pamphlets. His life has been too usefully busy to permit the production of many books. See N. Y. Tribune, Jan. 31, 1882; Duyckinck, Cyclop. of Amer. Lit. ii, 776.

Bellows, Thomas, an English Wesleyan preacher, died April 16, 1833, aged twenty-four, and in the first year of his ministry. He was "a young man of deep piety and good abilities." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1833.

Bellunello, Andrea, an old Venetian painter, was born at San Vito, in the Frioul, where he flourished in the latter half of the 15th century, and where he was considered the Apelles of the age. Lanzi says his masterpiece is a Crucifixion in the council-chamber at Udine, and that his works, though possessing merit for the age, have neither beauty of form nor color.

Belluti, Buonaventura, a Sicilian theologian and philosopher, of the Franciscan order, was born at Catana in 1599. He travelled for a long time, and taught philosophy at Cracow, and in several cities of Italy. He died May 18, 1676. He wrote several philosophical treatises in Latin, at first published separately, but afterwards republished in two vols., under the title, Philosophiæ ad Mentem Scoti cursus Integer (Venice, 1678 and 1727). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bellville, John Latta, a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Castle, Del., Dec. 21, 1800. His classical studies were pursued for four and a half years under his brother, while he at the same time aided his brother as assistant teacher in his school. He was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery in 1827, and in May following was commissioned by the Committee on Missions to labor in Dayton, O., and its vicinity. When he returned from Ohio he entered Princeton Seminary, and spent six months in study. Returning to Ohio, he was ordained by the Presbytery of Miami in 1828, and labored for two years as stated supply at Washington and Miamisburg. He first preached in a log school-house, and then in a cotton factory. He was installed pastor of the Washington Church in 1830, and labored with success for ten years. He preached at Middletown one Sabbath of every month. After the pastoral relation was dissolved, he accepted a call to the Bellfontaine Church, and labored with zeal and success until an attack of bronchitis compelled him to resign. His health was such that for two years he was wholly laid aside. After this he took charge of the academy at Centreville, Montgomery Co., O., where he taught four years, when his health again gave way, and he removed to Dayton, where he died, Sept. 21, 1880. See Neurological Report of Princeton Seminary, 1881, p. 27. (W. P. S.)

Belmeis (or Beaumes), Richard de (1), an English prelate in the reign of Henry I, was advanced to the see of London through the influence of Roger Montgomery, earl of Shropshire, and was consecrated July 26, 1108. He was three years warden of the marches between England and Wales, and lieutenant of the county of Salop. For a time he expended the entire revenue of his office in the building of St. Paul's cathedral; but subsequently directed his liberality towards the building of a convent of canons regular, called St. Osith de Chich, near Colchester. He died Jan. 16, 1127.

Belmeis (or Beaumes), Richard de (2), an English prelate in the reign of king Stephen, was nephew to the preceding. Before he came of age he was appointed by his uncle archdeacon of Middlesex. He became bishop of London in October, 1151, and died May 4, 1162, "leaving behind him a reputation for singular eloquence." According to Dr. Richardson, he was the writer of the Codez Niger, or Black Book of the Exchequer. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Belmen (Judith iv, 4). For this place lieut. Conder proposes the present Bel'ameh (Tent-work, ii, 335), which he likewise gives as the representative of Baalhamon and Ibleam (ibid. p. 335, 337); in the last case, at least, by a clear error for Jelâmeh.

Belo, Lorenzo, an Italian bishop and canonist, died in 1586. His principal works are, Tractatus de Mortuis Coemeterio Restituendis (Brescia, 1562; Venice, 1587) :—Opusculum de Potestate Pontificia, etc., in manuscript at the Library of the Vatican. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beloe, William, an English clergyman and author, was born at Norwich in 1756. His preliminary training was under Dr. Parr at Stanmore, and his subsequent education was at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1779. For a time he assisted Dr. Parr in a school at Norwich, and was afterwards curate and vicar of Eltham. Not finding his income sufficient for his support, he began to write for the periodicals of London. During the American Revolution he advocated the cause of the colonies, but was on the conservative side during the French Revolution; and in 1793, in conjunction with archdeacon Nares, he established the British Critic as the organ of High-church principles. In 1796 he was presented to the rectory of Allhallows, London-wall. In 1797 he became prebendary of Lincoln, and, in 1805, of St. Paul's. In 1804 he was appointed one of the assistant librarians to the British Museum. He died April 11, 1817. His literary works are numerous. Among them we note, his translation of Herodotus (1791):—Anecdotes of Literature and Scarce Books (1806–12, 6 vols. 8vo):—and The Sceptic, or Memoirs of a Literary Life (published posthumously, 1817). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Belomancy, in Greek religion, was a certain way of fortune-telling, by means of sacred inscribed arrows. They were either mixed together and then one drawn as a lot, or one was thrown into the air and the fortune told by the direction it took. See DIVINATION.

Belomo. See BELUOMO.

Beloochee Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. This dialect is spoken in Beloochistan, south of the Indus, on the Arabian Sea. A version into this dialect was commenced by the late Dr. Leyden. After his death it was transferred to the care of the Serampore missionaries, who availed themselves of the aid of the learned natives previously employed by Dr. Leyden. How much of the New Test. was translated we are unable to state, for the first three gospels were the only parts which were printed at Serampore in 1815. See Bible of Every Land, p. 74. (B. P.)

Belothūron (βελοθύρον) or Bemothūron (βημοθύρον), a Greek term for the veil in front of a church.

Belshar, WILLIAM, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1765. He was converted in early life, and united with the Church in Green Walk, Blackfriars. He pursued his studies at Bristol Academy, and was ordained pastor of the Church in the Pithay, Bristol. From this place he removed to Worcester, where he was pastor twenty years, at the same time teaching. Subsequently, for a short time, he was pastor at Henrietta Street, London, and then at London Street, Greenwich. He died in 1849. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1850, p. 40. (J. C. S.)

Belsta, in Scandinavian mythology, was the daughter of the giant Bolthorn, and the wife of Borr, the son of the first man.

Belsunce de Castel Moron, HENRI FRANÇOIS XAVIER DE, a French prelate, was born at the Château de La Force, in Perigord, Dec. 4, 1671. He entered the Jesuit order, and became grand-vicar of Agen, and finally bishop of Marseilles in 1709. He signalized his zeal and charity during the pestilence which desolated that city in 1720 and 1721. He died there, June 4, 1755. Millevoye has celebrated him in a poem entitled Belsunce, or La Peste de Marseille. The king, in order to recompense Belsunce, appointed him, in 1723, bishop of Laon; but he refused this in order to devote his life to the Church. He also refused, in 1729, the archbishopric of Bordeaux. He was indemnified by two rich abbeys, and the privilege of carrying to the grand-chamber of Parliament all the affairs concerning the benefices of his diocese. But to the close of his life Belsunce entertained, without doubt, a strong attachment for the Jesuits, and persecuted as Jansenists the faithful whom he had saved from the pestilence. This is the only blemish on his life, otherwise so glorious and virtuous. He published a large number of works, among which we cite L'Antiquité de l'Eglise de Marseille, et la Succession de ses Evêques (Marseilles, 1747–51). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beltis (or Belat), in Babylonian mythology, was the sister and consort of the deity Bel. She was the goddess of war as well as of nature, and was called "the Mother of the Gods." According to Herodotus, every woman living in Babylon was compelled to prostitute herself to a stranger in the Temple of Beltis once in her life. Her analogue was the Mytilta of Greek mythology. See BAALTIS.

Belton, JAMES S., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Newbury District, S. C., Sept. 7, 1833. He was converted in 1850; licensed to preach in the year following; graduated at Lagrange College in 1852; and in the latter part of the same year joined the Tennessee Conference, and was transferred to the Alabama Conference. After serving that conference one year he was appointed missionary to China, and in 1855 sailed for that distant land, where he labored two years, and then was compelled by ill-health to return home. He landed in New York and there died, March 17, 1856. He was lovely in character, diligent in labor, and extraordinary in piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1856, p. 708.

Beltrand, HERNANDO DOMINGO, a Spanish Jesuit sculptor and architect, was born at Vittoria, in Biscay, about 1500, and studied in Italy, where he became so skillful that Palomino Velasco did not hesitate to place him above the most famous artists of his time. He formed his style by studying Michael Angelo; and many statues of Christ, of natural grandeur, executed by Beltrand, appear worthy of being attributed to the illustrious master he had chosen. The Escorial and the Imperial College at Madrid, also the chapel of the same city, and the great altar of the College of Alcalá de Herarez, were decorated with these statues. He died in 1590. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beluomo (or Belomo), Angelo, an Italian theologian, who lived at Rocca-Contrada about 1625, wrote Theoricæ Justitiæ Aphorismis Comprobata (Firmii, 1625). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beluomo, Gotard, an Italian theologian of the Jesuit order, a native of Castiglione, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, wrote, Microcosmus Immobiles seu Compendium Universæ Philosophiæ (Mantua, 1655):—Initium Sapientiæ, Considerazioni per la Salute dell' Anima (Bologna, 1660):—Le Fiamme del Santuario, ossia Affetti Particolari nelle Meditazioni della Passione di G.-C. (Venice, 1627):—Il Pregio e l'Ordine delle Orazioni Ordinarie e Mistiche (Modena, 1678): See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belus, in Oriental mythology. The word signifies master among the Orientals, and is the surname of deities and kings. Thus the sun was called Belus among the Babylonians. See BAAL. There are three mythical persons known to us that carried this name: (1) Belus was the first king of Assyria, who founded the culture of this country. He dried up the swamps, led off standing waters, dug channels, and thus made the country habitable and fruitful. He fixed the standard of reckoning times and seasons, and had his observations engraven in burned tables of clay, and preserved in the so-called Babylonian tower. This Belus seems to be often identified with the god Baal. (2) The Egyptian Belus was a son of Neptune and Libya, the father of Danaus and Egyptus; also, as some affirm, of Cepheus and Phineus. He led a colony to Babylon, according to Diodorus, and may possibly be one and the same with the former Belus. (3) Belus was the father of Dido and Anna, as also of Pygmalion, among the Phœnicians.

Belvedere, FERDINANDO, an Italian theologian of the Franciscan order in the Marche d'Ancona, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, wrote, Simbolice Conclusioni (Ancona, 1628):—Discorsi Morali sui Precetti di Pittagora (Iesi, 1641). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belviso, GIOVANNI STEFANO, an Italian theologian, a native of Vercelli, who lived in the early half of the 16th century, wrote Libro Degli nove Viaggi che Fece la Virgine Santissima con Gesù (Vercelli, 1570). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belvisolti, LORENZO (called the venerable father Ignace), an Italian preacher, was born at Santia in 1686, and entered the Order of St. Francis in 1716. He devoted himself to preaching, and distinguished himself by his oratorical talents, his virtue, and his austerity of manner. He died at Turin in 1770. The municipal body of Turin demanded that he should be canonized. He wrote several treatises on practical religion, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Belvoir (fine view), a Frankish fortress mentioned in connection with the Crusades, as having been destroyed by Saladin after the capture of Safed in 1188, seems to be the Kaukab of the Arabian historians, and the present Kaukab el-Hawa ("meteor of the air"), on the heights west of the Jordan valley, between Beisan and the lake (Robinson, Bib. Res. iii, 178, 226).

Belzarbi was a form of the deity Bel, to whom a temple was erected at Babylon by Nabukudazur or Nebuchadnezzar.

Beman, NATHAN S. S., D.D., an eminent Presbyterian minister, was born at New Lebanon, N. Y., in 1785. He was educated at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1807. He afterwards studied theology, and became pastor of a Congregational Church in Portland, Me., in 1810. A few years after this he went as a missionary to Georgia, and gave especial attention to establishing educational institutions. In 1822 he became pastor of the first Presbyterian Church of Troy, N. Y., where he remained more than forty years. In 1831 he was moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, and became the leader of the New-school branch in 1837. He resigned his pastorate in 1863, and during the remainder of his life resided either in Troy or at Carbondale, Ill., where he died, Aug. 8, 1871. He published numerous single sermons, addresses, and essays, and a volume entitled Four Sermons on the Atonement. He was also one of the compilers of the Hymn-book of the New-school Presbyterians. He was widely known as an active temperance reformer, and as a member of various missionary organizations. The American Board owed its success largely to the influence and labors of Dr. Beman and his associates. See The Presbyterian, Aug. 26, 1871.

Bembo, PIETRO (Lat. Petrus Bembus), a celebrated Italian prelate and scholar, was born at Venice, May 20, 1470. He was son of a senator, who was distinguished for his learning. His father being sent as ambassador to Florence, young Bembo commenced his studies in that city, and afterwards continued them at home. His style was in accordance with that of the time. In order to study Greek, so much desired at that time in Italy, under a more highly renowned master, viz. the celebrated Lascaris, Bembo went to Messina, where he spent two years. He at length finished his course of philosophy at Padua. Choosing a literary career, Bembo assumed the ecclesiastical garb, that he might the better devote himself to study. Among the princes of Italy who especially favored him was Alphonso d'Este, duke of Ferrara, and through him he gained the friendship of the famous Lucretia Borgia. In order to advance his education he spent some years at the court of Urbino, which was another literary resort. In 1502 he commenced to write a little in the Italian language, and published in 1525 a work entitled Prose. In 1512 he attached himself to Julian de Medicis, whom he accompanied to Rome, and obtained soon after the commandery of Bologna from Julius II. Leo X, a pontiff more favorable to literature and art than Julius was, being on the throne, made Bembo his intimate secretary. The distinguished men, the cardinals Bibiena and Julius de Medicis, the poets Tebaldeo and Accolti, the artist Raphael, and the principal lords of Rome were the friends of Bembo. Many positions of ease and luxury were offered him. At the death of Leo X, his protector, the beautiful Morosina, who had borne Bembo several children, enabled him to erect at Padua a temple of the Muses; also a library, one of the most beautiful of the time, and made a collection of medals and monuments of antiquity, among which we notice the famous Isiac table. On the accession of Clement VII, Bembo returned to Rome to pay homage to the new pope; and on his return to Padua he accepted the position of historiographer of Venice, and traced the history from 1486 to 1530, which history was not published until four years after his death. It was written in Latin, but has been translated and published in Italian under the title Istoria Venetiana (Venice, 1552). This work naturally led to the appointment of Bembo as librarian. Being constituted cardinal by Paul III, he went to Rome, where he allied himself with one of the distinguished men of his time, the English cardinal Polus. Bembo now changed his course, renounced profane literature, and studied the fathers and theologians; and was successively made bishop of Gubbio and of Bergamo. He died Jan. 18, 1547. Many honors were bestowed upon him for his learning and merit. He was the chief of Ciceronians of his epoch. He was a purist in Italian as in Latin. In prose he wrote less his language than that of Boccaccio, and represented less his ideas than those of Petrarch. His works of various kinds were published under the title Opera di P. Bembo (Venice, 1729). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bement, WILLIAM, a Congregational minister, was born at Ashfield, Mass., April 5, 1806. He was a graduate from Dartmouth College, and at once, in 1828, became a teacher in Mobile, retaining that position until 1830, when he entered Princeton Theological Seminary. After studying at this institution for two years, he completed his course in the Yale Theological Seminary in 1833. From 1833 to 1850 he was the ordained pastor of the Congregational Church at East Hampton, Mass. He was installed March 5, 1851, at Elmira, N. Y.; from which he was dismissed Nov. 7, 1854, and continued to reside in that city until the close of his life. Becoming interested in educational matters, he was chosen superintendent of the public schools in Elmira in 1859, and held that position until 1866. He died in Manhattanville, N. Y., in August, 1876. He was a contributor to the New Englander and other periodicals. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 409.

Bemilucius, in Celtic mythology, according to some, was a national deity of the Gauls; according to others, it was a local surname of Jupiter. Near Flammigny, in Burgundy, there was found a statue which bore the name inscribed.

Bemis, STEPHEN, a Congregational minister, was born at Westminster, Mass., in 1774. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1798; was ordained pastor of the Church in Harvard, June 3, 1801; resigned his charge, June 3, 1813; and died Nov. 11, 1828. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 537.

Ben, in Norse mythology, was the god of the sea among ancient Angles and Saxons.

Benaglia, CYPRIANO, an Italian theologian, was born at Brescia, Aug. 28, 1676. He entered the Society of Monte Cassino; taught at Brescia, in 1699, mathematics and moral philosophy; was professor of canonical law at Padua in 1705, and filled several important offices in his order, especially that of prior. He died Feb. 28, 1750. He wrote, Examen Philosophiæ Novæ et Veteris (Brescia, 1699):—Praelectiones in Jus Canonicum; still in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benan Hasha, in Oriental mythology (the society of God). The Arabians understand by this all the deities which they worshipped previous to the founding of Islam by Mohammed.

Benard, DOMINIQUE LAURENT, a French ecclesiastic and theologian, was born at Nevers in 1573. Having become prior of the College of Cluny, he wished to revive the order of St. Benedict, which shortly after led to his conceiving the idea of a model congregation, of which Louis XIII confided to him the direction. Thus was founded the Order of Benedictines of St. Maur. He died April 21, 1620. He wrote, Règles des Abbayes et Monastères des Filles Religieuses de l'Ordre de Saint- Benoiſt., Traduites de Latin en François (Paris, 1608): — Parèneses Chrestiennes (Paris, 1616); and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benares, the holy city of the Hindûs, is the ecclesiastical metropolis of India, and the resort of pilgrims from all quarters. It is situated on the north bank of the river Ganges, in the province of Allahabad and presidency of Bengal. It may be said to form the grand depository of the religion and learning of Hindustan. This city is accounted so sacred that all who die within its precincts are assured of salvation, and for that reason it is a scene of extensive resort. There are said to be eight thousand houses in Benares occupied by Brahmins, who live upon the alms and offerings of the pilgrims. The banks of the river at this place are studded everywhere with shrines and temples, and in the city itself domes and minarets are seen in vast numbers. The greatest of these structures was levelled to the ground by Aurengzebe, who erected in its stead a mosque, which now forms the principal ornament of Benares. The houses of the mendicants are adorned with idols, while the principal streets are lined with mendicants of various Hindû sects, presenting every conceivable deformity. Some are seen with their legs or arms distorted by long continuance in one position; others with their hands clenched until the nails have grown through at the back. A stranger passing through the streets is saluted with the most pitiful cries from these swarms of beggars. Besides these there are many wealthy devotees, who have secured their wealth by dishonesty or oppression, or have come under political censure, who come to Benares to wash away their sins in the sacred waters of the Ganges, or expiate their crimes in gaudy ceremonies and extensive charity. Many thousands of dollars are given away by a single individual in the course of a year. Bulls are reckoned sacred among the Hindûs, and are numerous in the streets of Benares; no one being permitted to disturb them in their occupancy of any part of the city. Monkeys are also held sacred, and may be seen clinging to the roofs and projections of the temples.

There are three missions in Benares—the Church of England, the London, and the Baptist Missionary Society. The mission in connection with the Church of England was established in 1817, and has a church capable of holding three or four hundred persons, two normal schools for training Christian teachers, a large college, and several girls' schools. The mission of the London Missionary Society was founded in 1821, and is situated in the suburbs of the city. A substantial church was erected about 1846. The mission of the Baptist Missionary Society originated in 1817, as an outpost of the Serampore mission. It maintains an orphanage for the support and education of native children. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.; Encyclopædia Britannica (9th ed.), s. v.

Benary, FERDINAND, a Protestant theologian and Orientalist of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage, March 22, 1805, at Cassel. He studied Oriental languages at Halle under Gesenius. In 1829 he joined the Christian Church, and in 1835 received the degree of doctor of divinity at the Halle University in consideration of his work De Hebræorum Lexicatu; accedunt Conjectanea quædam in Velus Testamentum (Berolini, 1835). About this time he received a call as professor of Oriental languages from St. Petersburg, but he declined this offer at the wish of the minister Altenstein, who appointed him professor of theology at the university in Berlin, where he lectured on Old-Test. exegesis, Shemitic languages, and paleography. He died Feb. 7, 1880. (B. P.)

Ben-Asher, AARON ben-Moses. By way of supplement to the art. AARON BEN-ASER, we add the following. He was born at Tiberias in the beginning of the 9th century. He is noted for having placed the vowels and accents under the text of the Hebrew Bible known as the Asher-Codex (q. v.). His work on the accents, entitled ספר דקדוקי התנאים, has lately been edited by S. Bär and H. L. Strack under the title Die Dikduke Ha-Teamim des Ahron ben-Moscheh ben-Asher und andere alte grammatisch-massoretische Lehrstücke, etc. (Leipsic, 1879), and forms a very valuable contribution to the history of the text of the Old Test. (B. P.)

Benat Allah (daughters of God), in ancient Arabian mythology, was the name of a multitude of inferior deities of the feminine gender. Their characteristics are not certainly known.

Benatura is an Italian term for a Holy-water Stoup (q. v.).

Benazie (Lat. Benasius), BERNARD DE LA, a French theologian, was born at Agen in 1634, and died there April 5, 1723, as canon of the Church. He wrote a large number of antiquarian works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benbenaste, SAMUEL, a Spanish rabbi of the 13th century, wrote, besides his grammatical works, a translation in Hebrew of the book De Consolatione Philosophiæ, by Boëtius. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benbenista BEN-JACOB, an Italian rabbi who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, wrote Pulcherrima Inquisitio Animæ (Venice, 1685), in collaboration with some other members of his family. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. See BENVENISTE.

Benbenista, VIDAL, a Spanish rabbi, a native of the province of Aragon, lived in the early half of the 15th century. He was one of the sixteen Jews who took part in the controversy in the presence of pope Benedict XIII. He wrote and spoke Latin with elegance. A part of his argumentation is found in the Historia Judæorum of Gentius (p. 231). We also have from him a book entitled Message (Constantinople, 1517). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benbeniste. See BENVENISTE.

Bence, JEAN, a French theologian, was born at Rouen in 1568. He was one of the first priests of the Congregation of the Oratory, and a member of the Sorbonne, and was one of those who contributed the most, with the cardinal of Berulle, towards the establishment of this congregation in France. Bence died at Lyons, April 24, 1643. He wrote, Manuale in Sanctum Jesu Christi Evangelium (Lyons, 1626, 1682):—Manuale in Omnes D. Pauli Apostoli Epistolas; Idem in Septem Canonicas Epistolas (ibid. 1628–38, 1679–82). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Ben-Chayim. See ABRAHAM BEN-CHAYIM.

Bench-table (banc) is a line of stone seats occurring in churches, cloisters, and porches. Mediæval benches are found in England and France, but nowhere in Spain and Italy, where kneeling only was permitted, as in England even in the time of archbishop Arundel, when all persons sat on the floor in sermon-time. When permanent pews, or benches for the purpose of hearing sermons, were built in the 15th century, the bench-table disappeared. In the latter part of the 17th century the French began to use fixed seats.

Benoi (or Bencio), Francesco, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Acquapendente in 1512. He pursued his studies under the celebrated Anthony Muret, and devoted himself especially to Latin poetry and eloquence. His Latinity is pure and rich. He died May 6, 1594. He wrote, Annuarum Litterarum de Rebus Societatis Tomi Quatuor (Rome, 1589):—Quinque Martyres e Societate Jesu in India, Poema Heroicum (Venice, 1591; Antwerp, 1612):—Carminum Libri Quatuor, ejusdem Ergastus et Orationes Vingt Duæ (Rome, 1590). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Benci (or Bencio), Georgio, an Italian theologian, was born at Rimini, and entered the Company of Jesuits at Bologna in 1665. He was sent to Brazil in 1681, and died at Lisbon in 1708, leaving several works, among them, Œconomia Christiana, sive de Ratione Agendi cum Servis (Rome, 1705, 12mo):—De Probabilitate Quoad Intellectum (ibid. 1713, 4to).

Bend, JOSEPH GROVE JOHN, D.D., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in the city of New York about 1762. For a time he resided with his parents on the island of Barbadoes, and received an excellent commercial education, as well as some knowledge of the classics. For a while he was book-keeper in a counting-house. In July, 1787, he was ordained deacon in New York, and elected assistant minister, in December following, of Christ Church and St. Peter's in Philadelphia. In 1789 he was a delegate of the diocese of Pennsylvania to the General Convention which completed the independent organization of the Church in the United States. On June 17, 1791, he was elected rector of St. Paul's in Baltimore, Md., and on the same day was made a member of the standing committee of the diocese. A second Church was organized in 1796 under his charge, named Christ Church, to which an associate rector was appointed. He was one of the most active promoters of the Baltimore Library and of the Baltimore General Dispensary. The estimation in which he was held is manifest by his having been always elected a member of the standing committee, always a delegate to the General Convention, always a secretary of the Diocesan Convention and a member of its most important committees. He died in Baltimore, Sept. 13, 1812. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 353.

Ben-David. See BEN-EPHRAIM.

Ben-David, Abraham. See ABRAHAM BEN-DAVID.

Ben-David, Lazarus, a Jewish philosopher, was born at Berlin, Oct. 18, 1762. He studied philosophy and mathematics, and lectured on philosophy at the University of Vienna from 1793 to 1798. He then went to Berlin, devoting his time to literary pursuits, and died there March 24, 1832. He wrote, On the Object of Critical Philosophy (Vienna, 1796):—Philotheos, or, the Origin of our Perception (Berlin, 1802):—On the Religion of the Hebrews before Moses (ibid. 1812, 1872):—A History of the Jewish Calendar (1817):—On the Jewish Belief in a Future Messiah (1823):—besides a number of works relating to philosophy. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 101 sq.; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, xi, 151 sq.; Jost, Gesch. d. Judenth. u. s. Sekten, iii, 818. (B. P.)

Benden, ALICE, an English martyr, was brought before the judge in Cranbrook, in the county of Kent, Oct. 15, 1556, and asked why she would not go to church? She answered that she "could not do so with a good and clear conscience, because there was so much idolatry committed against the glory of God." For this simple and truthful answer she was sent to prison, where she lay nine weeks in stocks, with only a little bread and water to nourish her. She was finally relieved of her sufferings by burning, June 19, 1557. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 326.

Bendidēa, a Thracian festival held in honor of the goddess Bendis (q. v.), and celebrated with great mirth and revelry. From Thrace the Bendidēa were introduced into Athens, where they were celebrated annually on the 20th day of the Grecian month Thargelion.

Bendidēon was the temple erected to the worship of Bendis in the Piræus at Athens.

Bendis, in Greek mythology, was a goddess of the moon in Thrace, sometimes identified with Diana, sometimes with Proserpina. She had the surname Dilon- chos, "the goddess with the double spear," because she was represented with two spears in her hand. Her worship was extended from Thrace and Lemnos to the remainder of Greece. In the Piræus near Athens a yearly festival was celebrated June 4, called Eendideu.

Bendtsen (or Bendt), Bernhard, a Danish doctor of philosophy, and rector at Fredericksborg, was born there Feb. 3, 1763, and died Dec. 16, 1830. He is the author of Spec. Exercitatt. Crit. in Vet. Test. Libr. Apocryph. e Scriptis Patrum et Antiquarum Versionum (Göttingen, 1789), and other works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bendtsen, Frederic Carl, brother of the preceding, was a Danish theologian. From 1798 to 1809 he performed various ecclesiastical functions. He wrote, De Venia Peccatorum (Copenhagen, 1794):—Num Extat Diabolus (ibid. 1797). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bene, LEONE BEN-DAVID DEL, a Jewish writer, who died at Ferrara in 1677, is the author of כסאור לבריה רור, a philosophical dogmatic of Judaism, divided into eight sections, edited by De' Rossi (Verona, 1646). Basnage, in his History of the Jews (Engl. transl. by Taylor, p. 727), tells us: "He is accused of having taken it from his father, who also taught at Ferrara, and only changed the title; for he had entitled it The City of David—יְרֵי דָוִד." He put his name to it, and assumed the honor of it." See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 56; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 102. (B. P.)

Bene-berak. Lieut. Conder regards this as identical with the present Ibn-Ibrak (Tent-work, ii, 335), a village laid down on the Ordnance map at 4½ miles S. of E. from Jaffa; and Tristram coincides in this location (Bible Places, p. 51). It is the spot called Barak by Schwarz (Palest. p. 141).

Benedetti, Maria, an Italian priest and painter of the school of Modena, was born at Reggio about 1650. He was a pupil of Orazio Talmi, and excelled in ornaments and perspective. His best work is the vault of the Church of St. Anthony at Brescia. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benedetti, Zaccaria, an Italian poet and theologian, lived in the early half of the 16th century. He belonged to the Order of Carthusians, and wrote, Vita Sancti Brunonis, in verse (Paris, 1524):—Origo Ordinis Cartusiani (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benedetto. See BENEDICT.

Benedetto DA ROVEZZANO, an eminent Italian sculptor, was born at Rovazzano, near Florence, about 1480. In 1500 he executed the fine monument to Pietro Soderini and Oddo Altoviti, in the Church of the Carmine at Florence. He was employed conjointly with Sansovino and Boccio Bandinelli, on the works of sculpture in the cathedral of that city. In 1515 he was employed by the monks of Vallombrosa to erect a fine monument to the memory of St. Jean Gualbert, the founder of their order. This work took him ten years to complete. He died about 1550. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Benedicāmus Domīno (Let us bless the Lord), a liturgical form of words, said by the priest at the end of all the canonical hours, with the exception of matins. The response to it is always Deo gratias. It is also said at the end of the mass in those masses in which Gloria in excelsis is not said, and which are not masses for the dead, in which the corresponding form is Requiescat in pace. The custom of substituting Benedicāmus for Ite missa est in these masses is derived from the old practice of the Church, according to which after masses for the dead, or those for penitential days, the people were not dismissed as at other times, but remained for the recitation of the psalms, which were said after the mass.

Benedicite (Bless ye) is part [ver. 35 to the middle of ver. 66] of the prayer of Azarias in the furnace, which occurs between the 23d and 24th verses of Dan. iii in the Sept., but is not in the Hebrew. It is used in the lauds of the Western Church, both in the Gregorian, including the old English, and Monastic uses, among the psalms of lauds, on Sundays and festivals, immediately before Psa. cxlviii, cxlix, cl. It usually has an antiphon of its own, though in some uses the psalms at lauds are all said under one antiphon. The antiphonal clause, "Praise him, and magnify him forever," is only said after the first and last verses. Gloria Patri is not said after it, as after other canticles.

In the Ambrosian lauds for Sundays and festivals, Benedicite occurs with an antiphon varying with the day, and preceded by a collect which varies only on Christmas-day and the Epiphany. During the octave of Easter Hallelujah is said after each verse.

Benedicite also occurs in the private thanksgiving of the priest after mass; in the Roman office in full; in the Sarum the last few verses only.

In the Mozarabic breviary this canticle is found in the lauds for Sundays and festivals in a somewhat different form, with a special antiphon, and is called Benedictus. It begins at ver. 29; the antiphonal clause is omitted altogether till the end; and the opening words of the Benedicite proper are never repeated after their first occurrence.

In the offices of the Greek Church this canticle is the eighth of the nine "Odes" appointed at lauds. The antiphonal clause is said after every verse, and a supplementary verse is added at the end. This canticle is sometimes called from the nature of its contents the Benedictio, in the same way as the last three psalms of the Psalter are known as the Laudes.

Benedict. See BENEDETTI; BENEDICTUS; BENNOIT.

Benedict, Saint, an Italian solitary, is mentioned by pope St. Gregory in his Dialogues, who states that he lived a holy and regular life at a place some twelve leagues from Rome, and that the Goths endeavored to destroy him and his monastery by fire; but that himself, his monks, and the building were miraculously preserved. He is inserted in the Benedictine Martyrology, but there is no reason whatever to suppose that he belonged to that order. He lived about the time of St. Gregory.

Benedict (Lat. Benedictus Britannicus), a Dominican of BRESCIA, in Lombardy, who lived in the 15th century, left fifty-three sermons.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Benedict of GLOUCESTER, a monk of St. Peter's, in that city, probably flourished about 1130. He wrote the Life of St. Dubricius, archbishop of Caerleon, preserved in Cott. MS. Vesp. A. xiv; which Wharton, with some omissions, has published in his Anglia Sacra, ii, 654; and which is printed more fully in Dugdale's Monasticon (new ed. vol. iii, pt. i, p. 188).

Benedict, deacon of the Church of MENTZ (known also as Benedictus Lerite), lived about the year 840. He continued the collection of the capitularia of Charlemagne, which the abbot Ansegisus had commenced.

Benedict, abbot of PETERBOROUGH, in the 12th century, was educated at Oxford; took the monastic vows at Canterbury, where he became prior of the monastery of Christ Church, and in 1177 was made abbot of Peterborough. In 1191 he was made keeper of the great seal, and died on Michaelmas-day, in 1193. He wrote, Librum Unum Alterum de Vita et Miraculis Thome Cantuariensis, a great part of which is inserted in the Quadrilogus:—also De Vita et Gestis Henrica II, et Ricardi I, of which a good edition was published by Hearne (Oxford, 1735, 2 vols.).
XI.—14*

Benedict (or Benedetto) of VERONA, a Dominican, is probably the same as LORENZO of VERONA, also a Dominican, who was a celebrated preacher, about 1420, and who left Sermons on the Festivals, Creed, Decalogue, and Lord's Prayer.

Benedict, Amzi, a Congregational minister, was born at New Canaan, Conn., May 19, 1791. He graduated at Yale College, 1814; studied theology at Andover, and was ordained as a home missionary in 1818. He served successively the churches in Vernon, Conn., 1824 to 1830; Pomfret, 1831 to 1834; Manlius, N. Y., 1837 to 1841; Norwich, Conn., 1845 to 1846; Yorktown, N. Y., 1855 to 1856, when he was disabled by an accident to a steam-engine at Stamford, and died three weeks after in the house of a son-in-law in Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1856. For a time he was principal of a female seminary in New Haven. He was "a discriminating theologian, a diligent student, a sound and earnest preacher, an assiduous pastor, and faithful friend." Mr. Benedict published a work entitled A Biblical Trinity (1850). See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 379.

Benedict, Andrew D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Wisconsin, was a missionary in Warsaw, N. Y., for a number of years, until about 1856; soon after, he became rector in Delhi, N. Y., serving St. John's Church in that place. In 1864 he was rector of St. Luke's Church, Racine, Wis., and, after serving there for a short time, retired from active work, though still residing in Racine. In 1870 he was engaged in teaching, being a tutor in the college. The following year he was missionary at Oak Creek and Springfield, Wis. The year succeeding he was missionary at Wilmot and Springfield, in which service he continued until the close of his life. He died Oct. 4, 1874, aged fifty-six years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 145.

Benedict, David, D.D., the eminent historian of the Baptist denomination, was born at Norwalk, Conn., Oct. 10, 1779. Early in life he developed a taste for historical reading; which grew almost into a passion with him. He became a member of the junior class in Brown University in 1804, and graduated in 1806. He commenced at once, on leaving the university, to preach for the First Baptist Church in Pawtucket, R. I., where he was ordained, and where he remained for twenty-five years. While pastor of this Church, and it was his only pastorate, he busied himself in collecting materials from various quarters—not only from this country, but from other countries—which he subsequently incorporated into his History of the Baptists. He spent the remainder of his life chiefly in gratifying his love for historical investigations. He died in Pawtucket, R. I., Dec. 5, 1874. Dr. Benedict's published writings, in one form and another, are very numerous. Among the principal of them are the following: History of the Baptists (1813):—Abridgment of Robinson's History of Baptism (1817):—Abridgment of his Own History of the Baptists (1820):—History of all Religions (1824):—History of the Baptists Continued (1848):—Fifty Years Among the Baptists (1860). At different times during the last fifteen years of his life, he occupied himself in a thorough study of the history of the Donatists, having finished his task only a few months before his decease. Shortly after his death, the book was published. He also made considerable progress in gathering the materials for a compendium of Church history from the beginning of Christianity. A vast amount of papers prepared on various subjects of historical interest were in his possession at the close of life, which have found their way into the collections of different historical societies. (J. C. S.)

Benedict, Epenetus P., a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1795. He was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Patterson, N. Y., for forty years, and his ministry was attended with success. After his resignation, he continued to supply various pulpits until the close of his life. He died at Patterson, Aug. 15, 1870. See Presbyterian, Sept. 10, 1870. (W. P. S.)

Benedict, George, a Baptist minister, was born at Southeast, Dutchess Co., N. Y., April 15, 1795, but spent his childhood and youth in Danbury, Conn. He became a Christian at the age of twenty-two, and a member of the Second Baptist Church in Danbury, Sept. 21, 1817. He received a license from the Church of which he was a member, May 12, 1822, and Aug. 7, 1823, and was ordained pastor of the Church. Here he remained from 1823 to 1831, when he accepted a call to become the pastor of what was known as the Union Baptist Church, New York city. Success followed his labors, until in 1841 the number of the members of his Church was seven hundred and fifty-eight; he having himself baptized over six hundred of them. In February, 1841, the Church known as the Norfolk-street Church was constituted, with Mr. Benedict as its pastor. The same prosperity followed Mr. Benedict to his new field of labor, and a strong, efficient Church was built up under his ministry. The last two years of his life were years of lingering sickness. He resigned in July, 1848, and died Oct. 28, 1848. He was one of the most successful ministers of his denomination in the city of New York. See New York Chronicle, Nov. 1848. (J. C. S.)

Benedict, Henry, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Norwalk, Conn., in 1792. He was licensed to preach and ordained pastor of the Church in Westport, Conn. He was subsequently installed pastor of the Church in Lansingburg, N. Y., and successively filled the churches of Galway and Stillwater in the same state. From this last he was called to take charge of the Church in Covington, Ky.; and after remaining there some time, he was installed pastor of the Bowery Church, New York city, where he remained two years. He was then called to the Church at Portchester, N. Y., as its first pastor. He labored here until the infirmities of age compelled him to resign. He died at Saratoga Springs, July 18, 1868. (W. P. S.)

Benedict, Lewis, a Congregational minister, was born at Madison, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1815. In 1839 he graduated from Hamilton College, and in 1843 from Auburn Theological Seminary. The next year he was ordained at Whitewater, Wis. In Nov. 1845, he was installed pastor in Brockton, Ill., and remained six years. After supplying the pulpit in Aurora, Ill., for two years, he was installed its pastor in July, 1854, and held the position a little more than three years. From April, 1858, to Dec. 1859, he was acting pastor in Geneva; from Dec. 1859, to March, 1864, he held that office in Brimfield; from April, 1864, to Sept. 1870, the same at Lawn Ridge. The next three years he resided at Lake Forest, without charge, and subsequently at Aurora. He died Jan. 30, 1881. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 23.

Benedict, Noah, a Congregational minister, was born at Danbury, Conn. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1757; was ordained at Woodbury, Vt., Oct. 22, 1760; was a fellow of Yale College from 1801 to 1812, and died September, 1813. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 407; Index of Princeton Review.

Benedict, Stephen, a Baptist layman, the founder of the Benedict Institute, located at Columbus, S. C., was born at Milton, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Jan. 15, 1801. He removed to Pawtucket, R. I., in early life, and for twenty-five years was a deacon of the First Baptist Church in that place. He died Dec. 25, 1868. He left, by his will, $2000 to the American Baptist Home Society, which was appropriated to the purchase of the estate in Columbus, S. C., now used for the education of colored preachers. See Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 95. (J. C. S.)

Benedict, Thomas Newcomb, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Quincy, Ill., was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., in 1823. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary; and was rector in 1853 of a Church in Galena, Ill. Here he remained until 1859, when he removed to Ottawa, as rector of Christ Church. In 1866 he removed to Robin's Nest, as an instructor in Jubilee College, and held this position until 1869 or 1870, when he became rector of St. Luke's Church, Wyoming. About 1874, he was called to the rectorship of Trinity Church, in Geneseo, where he remained until his death, Sept. 25, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Benedict, Timothy, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Canaan, Conn., May 25, 1795, of devout parents, who gave him a careful religious training. At the age of nineteen he experienced conversion. He received license to preach in 1816, and in 1817 entered the New York Conference. Subsequently he became a member of the Troy Conference. In 1856 he removed to Illinois, where he remained until the close of his life, May 6, 1878. Mr. Benedict was a man of deep and uniform piety, modest and unassuming in manner, genial in disposition, a Christian gentleman. As a preacher he had few superiors. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 43.

Benedict, Traugott Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born July 3, 1756, at Anna-berg. In 1783 he was called as rector of the gymnasium at Torgau; and in 1814 to the same position in his native city, where he died, Oct. 25, 1833. He wrote Theodiceæ (part 1-10, Leipsic, 1823). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 426. (B. P.)

Benedict, William Uriah, a Congregational minister, was born at Stamford, Conn., Sept. 25, 1808. After pursuing his preliminary studies at the Aurora (N. Y.) Academy, he graduated from Williams College in 1829, and in 1832 from the Auburn Theological Seminary. In 1834 he was ordained pastor of the Church at Ira, N. Y.; remaining until 1839, when he became the acting-pastor at Sweden; and in 1841 he assumed the same relation in the Church at Richmond. From 1843 until 1850 he served the Church at Vermontville, Mich., and was at the same time principal of its academy. Here he resided, supplying, for various periods, the Presbyterian churches of Roxana and Sunfield; and also lived for five years at Olivet, being treasurer of Olivet College. He died in Vermontville, Mich., Oct. 18, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 420.

Benedicta, of Origny, Saint, Virgin, and Martyr, suffered with St. Romana of Beauvais, and ten other companions. Tradition says that these holy virgins were of Rome, and that the fame of the martyrdom of SS. Quentin and Lucien, and their companions, attracted them to Gaul, with the hope of meeting with a similar reward. When they arrived at the border of Celtic Gaul and Belgium, they parted; Benedicta and Leoberia went to Laon, and Romana to Beauvais; whither their companions betook themselves is unknown. Romana was put to death at Beauvais, and Benedicta at Origny, on the Oise, in the diocese of Laon. In the diocese of Beauvais the festival of St. Romana is observed on the 3d of October, and that of Benedicta on the 8th. The history of these saints is altogether uncertain, and it should be remarked that the Acts of St. Benedicta are the same as those of St. Saturninus, and that the history given of St. Romana is identical with that of St. Benedicta, except in the particular of her translation. See Baillet, iii, 112.

Benediction OF ABBOTS was formerly styled ordination. The second Council of Nicæa permitted abbots who had received the benediction to admit their own monks to the tonsure and to the four minor orders; but in after-ages they presumed so far as to extend the exercise of it to others than their own monks, so that the Council of Trent (sess. 23, can. 10) reduced it to its original terms. This benediction of abbots differs from ordination chiefly in two points: first, that it is done upon the request of the monastery, whereas ordination is conferred upon the demand of the Church ("Postulat Sancta Mater"); secondly, because it is not accompanied by any invocation of the Holy Spirit. See ABBOT.

BENEDICTION, APOSTOLICAL, is the salutation which the popes use at the beginning of their bulls, in these terms: "Salutem et apostolicam benedictionem."

BENEDICTION, NUPTIAL. Among the Jews special benedictions were in use, both for betrothal and actual marriage. A passage in Tobit (vii, 13, 14) indicates the close connection of the blessing with what we should term the marriage settlement. Certain heathen marriages being also accompanied with a benediction, it is but natural that the same custom should prevail in reference to Christian ones. St. Ambrose, writing against mixed marriages, says: "For since marriage itself should be sanctified by the priestly veil, and by benediction," etc. Turning to the Eastern Church, we find that Chrysostom never indicates the existence of a marriage liturgy, or the indispensableness of sacerdotal benediction. Two letters of Gregory Nazianzen show clearly that such a benediction was looked upon rather as a solemn accompaniment to Christian marriage than a condition of it. The work Sanctions and Decrees, a singular document included, by some authorities, among those of the 4th century, evidently represented the practice of the Greek Church. The second chapter forbids marriage with a person's nuptial paranymphs, with whom "the benediction of the crowns" is received. Benedictions are mentioned in other passages, but it is clear that the ceremony of the Greek ritual known as the benediction of the crowns, and not the Latin benediction of the marriage itself, is referred to. Justinian's legislation, minutely occupied as it is with Church matters, never once refers to the ecclesiastical benediction of marriage.

Probably between the 6th and 7th centuries the regular practice of an ecclesiastical benediction upon marriage, and the Greek ritual of marriage itself, became established. The canons of a council held in England towards the end of the 7th century, under archbishop Theodore, enact that "in a first marriage the priest should perform the mass and bless both" parties; implying, it would seem, the practice set forth by the Sanction and Decrees, of confining the blessing to the as yet unmarried party only, where the other has been married already.

In the Carolingian era, the priestly benediction entered into the civil law as an essential requisite of marriage; and the various spurious authorities from the annals of the Western Church were apparently invented for the purpose of carrying back to a remote period the ecclesiastical recognition of its necessity. By the first Capitulary of 802, none are to be married before inquiry be made as to whether they are related; "and then let them be united with a benediction." The reply of pope Nicolas to the Bulgarians, though belonging only to the latter half of the 9th century, preserves to us probably the practice of the Roman Church on this subject from an earlier period. It evidently indicates a different ceremonial from that of the Greek Church, and, although dwelling on the formalities of betrothal, speaks of no blessing but the nuptial one.

To sum up: (1.) There never was a period when the Christian Church did not rejoice to sanction the nuptial rite by its benedictions, and did not exhort the faithful to obtain them for their unions. (2.) But having a profound faith in the primordial sanctity of marriage in itself, many centuries elapsed before the pronouncing of such a benediction was held essential to the validity of marriage, when duly contracted according to the municipal law, and not contrary to the special ethical rules of the Church in reference to marriage. (3.) Hence the total absence of marriage liturgies from the early Christian rituals, extending to about the beginning of the 7th century; the genuineness of the one in the Gelasian Missal (end of the 5th century) being confessedly impugned by the absence of any in the Gregorian, a century later. (4.) It may, however, be admitted that by the end of the 7th century the priestly benediction of marriage had probably become the rule in both great branches (not yet divisions) of the Church; and in the course of the 8th and 9th centuries it hardened into a legal institution within the domains of the great usurpers of the West, the Carolingians, being now largely supported by supposititious Church authorities, carried back as far as the beginning of the 2d century. (5.) It is also possible that about this period a practice of sacerdotally blessing betrothals likewise grew up, and, promising to open a new source of income to the clergy and above all to the Roman pontiffs, was in like manner sought to be maintained by spurious authorities; but the date of this cannot be fixed earlier than A.D. 860, since pope Nicolas, in his reply to the Bulgarians, clearly speaks only of the nuptial benediction.

Benedictional. (1.) The name for an ancient Service-book, commonly containing those rites of benediction exclusively used by a bishop and given during mass. The Benedictional, properly so called, may be found in the well-known Exeter Pontifical of bishop Lacey. The rite of episcopal benediction during mass is not found in the Latin Church. (2.) A term for the Pontifical. See BENEDICTIONS.

Benedictions are an important element in ecclesiastical liturgy. See BENEDICTION.

I. Definition, etc.—Benediction, in contradistinction from the allied expressions, consecration, dedication, may be defined to be a certain holy action which, combined with prayer, seeks for God's grace for persons, and, in a lower degree, a blessing upon things, with a view whether to their efficiency or safety. To dedicate is to offer a place to God, to bless and sanctify it. To consecrate is to separate things, utensils, vestments, etc., from common use for divine worship, so that they become holy things.

Like many other points of ritual, the practice of benediction passed from the Jewish to the Christian Church. In the infancy of the former, under Aaron, we discover the existence of the blessing of the congregation by the priest after the morning and the evening sacrifice (Lev. ix, 22); and later notices may be seen in 1 Chron. xxiii, 13; Eccles. xxxvi, 17; xlv, 15; 1, 20. The actual form is prescribed in Numb. vi, 22 sq.; comp. Ps. lxvii, 1.

The benediction, ordinarily pronounced by priests (as, e. g. in the case of Zacharias, for whose blessing the people waited, Luke i, 21), would on occasions of special solemnity be reserved for the high-priest. Even the king, as the viceroy of the Most High, might give the blessing (comp. 2 Sam. vi, 18; 1 Kings viii, 55; 1 Chron. xvi, 2). It would appear that Levites had ordinarily, though not invariably, the power of giving the blessing. Comp. 2 Chron. xxx, 27.

The actual formula referred to above does not occur in the New Test., though our Lord is spoken of as blessing little children and his disciples (Mark x, 16; Luke xxiv, 50), besides the blessing on the occasion of the institution of the Eucharist (Matt. xxvi, 26). Still the general tenor and form of the blessing must have been similar, and the familiar "peace" of the benediction is probably a relic of the old Aaronitic form.

II. Minister of Benediction.—It will be obvious, from the nature of the case, that a benediction is imparted by a superior to an inferior (see Heb. vii, 7, where this is explicitly stated). Hence it is laid down in the Apostolic Constitutions, that a bishop may bestow the blessing, and receive it from other bishops, but not from priests; so, too, a priest may bless his fellow-priests and receive the blessing from them or from a bishop; the deacon merely receives and cannot impart the blessing. Thus, if a bishop be present, to him does the Benedictio super plebem appertain, and only in the absence of a bishop, unless special authority be given, is it permitted to the priest, whose blessing, however, is not held as of the same solemn import as that of the bishop.

The ancient Sacramentaries do not distinguish between episcopal and sacerdotal blessings; while in later times a minutely developed system has been formed. The benedictions were divided into solemnnes and communes, magnæ and parvæ, etc. The Benedictio solennis appears to have belonged strictly to the bishop, and to his representative in his absence; other benedictions the priest may confer in the presence of the bishop; but they can in no case be imparted by a deacon or layman. Benedictio parva and Benedictio magna are thought by some to be the blessings conferred by the priest and bishop respectively; others say, that the former is a private benediction, while the latter is a public and solemn one. From the 8th century abbots who were priests have possessed sundry episcopal rights, including that of benediction within the limits of their own cloisters.

III. Objects of Benediction.—Benedictions are of the following classes:

1. Personal, i. e. such as are in immediate connection with various holy offices, and specially liturgical. These include (a) general blessing; the one communicated to the whole congregation in the dismissal formula; or (b) special, as those at the eucharist, baptism, ordination, marriage, penance, extreme unction, burial. The old Latin Sacramentaries agree in placing a benediction in the mass after the Lord's Prayer, and before the Communion. Up to this point the congregation was prohibited from leaving, as e. g. by the Council of Agde (A.D. 506), and the first and third councils of Orleans. Besides this there was also a short benediction at the end of the service. This long benediction is not found in the Eastern ritual, at the corresponding part of which occurs what is known as the "Prayer of Inclination." Some of the Eastern liturgies give a long benediction after the post-communion prayers of thanksgiving; also the Nestorian liturgy of Theodore the interpreter closes with a similar benediction. At the end of the Ethiopic liturgy is a prayer of the people, of the nature of a benediction.

Of non-liturgical blessings appertaining to persons, the general blessing was properly, though not exclusively, the episcopal prerogative. It would seem that, especially on the entrance of a bishop into a place, his blessing was reverently besought by the people. This blessing was eagerly sought for even by princes.

2. Benedictions of Things.—We call attention to the distinction between benediction and the stronger term consecration, in that in the one regard is had but to the bestowal of certain grace or efficacy, whereas in the other, a thing is not only destined for a holy use, but is viewed as changed into a holy thing. Augusti brings out this distinction by a comparison of the phrases panis benedictus and panis consecratus; and the Greek Church recognizes the same difference. Similar is the distinction between benedictiones invocativæ and benedictiones constitutivæ, sacrativæ, destinativæ; the names of which show that the one invoke God's grace, the other dedicate permanently to his service.

Under this head may be enumerated, (1) Benedictio fontis, the blessing of the baptismal water, etc. See BAPTISM. (2) Benedictio aquæ lustralis. See HOLY WATER. (3) Benediction panis et vini, which substances when blessed bore the name of the saint on whose festival the benediction took place; as St. John's wine, St. Mark's bread, etc. See ELEMENTS. (4) Benedictio salis [see SALT], whether for admixture with holy water or otherwise. (5) Benedictio lactis et mellis. See MILK AND HONEY. (6.) Benedictio olei, whether for the catechumens at baptism or confirmation, or for the chrisma, or for the sick. See CHRISM; OIL. (7.) Benedictio incensi. See INCENSE. (8.) Benedictio cereorum, as for the special feast of Candlemas-day, Feb. 2. See CANDLE. (9.) Benedictio cinerum, of Ash Wednesday. See LENT. (10.) Benedictio palmarum, of Palm Sunday processions. (11.) Benedictio paschales, whether of Easter eggs or the paschal lamb or the Easter candles.

To these may be added an immense number of varieties of benedictions for almost every imaginable occasion, wherein the pious of past ages deemed that the Church could draw forth on their behalf from a rich store of blessing. Thus we may mention, in addition to those already cited, the following benedictions of things, occurring mainly in the Gregorian Sacramentary: (1) Of a house; (2) of clusters or beans; (3) on new fruits; (4) on all things you have wished; (5) of flesh; (6) of a well; (7) of cheese and eggs; (8) of fire; (9) of books.

IV. Mode of Imparting Benediction.—The Christian ritual was foreshadowed by the Jewish. In the commentary on Numbers and Deuteronomy known as Sifrey, we have further directions given: (1) the blessing is to be pronounced in the Hebrew language; (2) the imparters of the blessing is to stand, and (3) with outstretched hands; (4) the sacred name (Jehovah) is to be used; (5) the priest must face the people, and (6) speak in a loud voice.

During the conferring of the blessing the people must not look at the priest, for at the time the glory of God is supposed to rest upon him. Also, his hands are disposed so that the fingers go in pairs, forefingers with middle fingers, ring-fingers with little fingers, with the tips of the two thumbs and of the two forefingers respectively touching each other, thus arranging the whole ten fingers in six divisions.

The foregoing points afford a very close parallel to the usages of the Christian Church. That the imparters of the blessing should stand is but in accordance with the natural order of things, and this is a point universally observed, so that the Latin Church does but stereotype usage when in the ritual of Paul V this attitude is prescribed. As to the kneeling of the recipients of the blessing, we may find ancient evidence in the Apostolic Constitutions, where the injunction is prefixed to the benediction, "... and let the deacon say, kneel and be blessed."

The order of the Jewish ritual that the priest should face the people is paralleled (to say nothing of unvarying custom) by the rubric before the benediction in the mass in ancient Sacramentaries; and that to pronounce the blessing in a loud voice by the equivalent command constantly met with in Greek service-books.

The lifting up of hands is an inseparable adjunct of benedictions. An occasional addition is that of the laying-on of hands; see Apostolic Constitutions, where the benediction upon penitents is associated with this act. The feeling of the greater worth and power of the right hand is shown by its use.

With this natural and almost universal gesture, the act of benediction is usually represented in ancient art.

Thus the Lord extends his open hand over the dæmoniac in the bass-reliefs of a sarcophagus at Verona. In the Greek Church and in Greek paintings for the most part, the hand outstretched in blessing has the thumb touching the tip of the ring-finger, while the forefinger, the middle, and the little finger are erected. According to Neale, this method "is supposed to symbolize the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father alone; and according to others, to form the sacred name I H C by the position of the fingers." In the Latin manner of benediction the erected fingers are the thumb, Greek Gesture of Benediction.

the forefinger, and the middle finger, with the other two doubled down on the palm of the hand. The hand of the Lord is thus represented in some monuments when he works a miracle; e. g. in the healing of the man born blind. It is, however, only in comparatively modern times that the rite of benediction has constituted a distinction between the Greek and Latin churches. For instance, in the most Roman of monuments, the Vatican confessor of St. Peter, the Lord gives the blessing in the Greek manner; in the triumphal arch of St. Mark's Church, in the Latin manner.

Latin Gesture of Benediction.

On the other hand, the bass-relief of a Greek diptych represents St. Peter giving the blessing in the Latin manner, while St. Andrew blesses in the Greek manner.

V. Benedictionals.—It has already been shown that various early forms of benedictions are found interspersed in ancient Sacramentaries. In that attributed to pope Leo are found forms of blessing "for those ascending from the font," and "of milk and honey," as well as a "benediction of the font," which is possibly a later addition. It is, however, in the somewhat later Sacramentary of Gregory the Great that we meet with specimens of benedictions on a more extended scale, in some MSS., variously interspersed through the book, and in some given separately, forming the so-called Benedictionale. This is the case with the very ancient MS. of the Caesarean Library. Another of somewhat different form is from two MSS. of the time of Charlemagne now in the Vatican. The Liber Sacramentorum of Ratoldus, of the 10th century, also contains numerous benedictions, but the fullest benedictional is that found in two MSS. of the Monastery of St. Theodorik, near Rheims, written about the year 900. A large collection of benedictions is also to be found in the Pontifical of Egbert (archbishop of York, A.D. 732-66), published by the Surtees Society in 1853.

BENEDICTIONS, JEWISH. See SHEMONEH ESREH.

Benedictis, Ben. Tetius de (surnamed Capra), an Italian jurist and theologian who lived in the early half of the 15th century, wrote, Volumen Conclusionum Legalium super Decretalibus, Libri V:—Commentaria in Jus Canonicum:—Repetitiones in Canonico:—Volumen Conclusionum Regularium et Communium Opinionum et de Permutatione Beneficiorum (Venice, 1568):—Super Lecturas Testium Civiliu:—Consilia seu Responsa (ibid. 1576). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benedictis, Giovanni Battista de, an Italian theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Ostium, Jan. 20, 1620. He made enemies for himself by obstinately sustaining the principles of the Peripatetic philosophy and of the scholastic theology against the partisans of Descartes, and against the new doctrines of the Jansenists and their partisans. He died May 15, 1706. His principal works are, Analecta Poetica, ex iis quæ sparsim ab Aliis in Colleg. Soc. Jesu Neapoli Scripta Sunt (Naples, 1686, 1689):—Philosophia Peripatetica Tomis Quinque Comprehensa (ibid. 1687-92; Venice, 1723):—Lettere Apologetiche in Difesa della Teologia Scolastica e della Filosofia Peripatetica di Benedetto Aletino (Naples, 1694). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benedictis, Jacobus (or Jacoponus) de. See STABAT MATER.

Benedictis, Luigi Vincenzio de, an Italian theologian, a native of Modena, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He was of the Dominican order. His principal works are, La Sibilla di Loreto:—La Corsa della Nave Vittoria di Santa Chiesa, per la Con- quista dell' Arme Cristiane nell' Ungaria ed Arcipelago. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benedictus is the liturgical name for the song of Zacharias contained in Luke i, 68-79, so called from its first word. This canticle has been said at lauds in the Western Church from early times every day throughout the year, whatever be the service. The introduction of the custom is attributed to St. Benedict. It is said with a varying antiphon which is doubled, i. e. said entire both before and after the canticle, on double feasts; in the Roman, monastic, and other offices derived from a Gregorian or Benedictine origin, at the end of lauds, immediately before the collect, and occupies the same position at lauds which the Magnificat occupies at vespers. In the Ambrosian office it occurs, on the contrary, at the very beginning of the office, after the opening versicles. The Ambrosian rules, too, for the duplication of antiphons are different from the Roman. The Benedictus is also found elsewhere, e. g. in the Mozarabic lauds for the nativity of John the Baptist. In the Greek rite the Benedictus forms, together with and following the Magnificat, the last of the nine odes [see ODE] appointed for lauds.

The introductory part of The Song of the Three Children, which precedes the Benedictiones, or Benedicite (q. v) proper, is also known as the Benedictus from its opening.

Benedictus Britannicus. See BENEDICT OF BRESCIA.

Benedictus Cyprianus. See BENET.

Benedictus Fossatensis, abbot of the Monastery of St. Maur des Fossees, was one of the monastic reformers in the latter part of the 8th and beginning of the 9th century. He is sometimes confounded with Benedict of Aniane; but the latter is never styled "Fossatensis." The monastery over which he presided was the final resting-place of the relics of St. Maur, after frequent translations to escape the ravages of the Normans. Benedictus took an active part in the reformation of the monastery of St. Vaudrille, near Rouen.

Benedictus Levita. See BENEDICT OF MENTZ.

Benedictus Mediolanensis (Benedict of Milan) was a contemporary of Benedict of Aniane, and, like him, was instrumental in the restoration of the old Nursian rule. He was made abbot of the Monastery of St. Ambrose at Milan, A.D. 784, by Peter, archbishop of Milan; and his appointment was confirmed by Karl the emperor. See Bulteau, Hist. de l'Ordre de St. Benoist, v, 73.

Benedictus (originally Ambaruch), Petrus, a celebrated Maronite, was born at Gusta, in Phœnicia, in 1663, of a noble family, and sent to the Maronite College at Rome when but nine years old, where he made great progress in the Oriental languages; but returned afterwards to the East, and applied himself to preaching the Gospel there. The Maronites of Antioch sent him back to Rome as a deputy from their Church. Cosmo III, grand-duke of Tuscany, invited Benedictus to his court, heaped many honors and favors upon him, and made him professor of Hebrew at Pisa. Clement XI appointed him one of the correctors of the Greek press. He entered among the Jesuits at the age of forty-four, and his amiable temper, integrity, and skill in the Oriental languages procured him the esteem of all the learned. He died Sept. 22, 1742, at Rome. He published the first volumes of that excellent edition of St. Ephraim which has been continued and finished by Assemani. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benê-Elohîm, an expression which occurs only in Gen. vi, 2, 4 (Heb. beney' ha-Elohîm, בְּנֵי הָאֱלֹהִים, sons of God; Sept. viot τοῦ Θεοῦ; Vulg. filii Dei), and in Job i, 6; ii, 1 (Sept. οἱ ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ; Vulg. filii Dei); for the words so rendered elsewhere in the A. V. are somewhat different (Job xxxviii, 7, bene' Elohîm, בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים; Sept. ἀγγελοί μου; Vulg. filii Dei:—Hos. i, 10 [Heb. ii, 1], bene' ʾēl, בְּנֵי ʾֵל; Sept. υἱοὶ θεοῦ; Vulg. filii Dei:—Psa. lxxxix, 6 [Heb. 7], bene' elim, בְּנֵי אֱלִים; Sept. υἱοὶ θεοῦ; Vulg. filii Dei; A. V. "sons of the mighty"). Very remarkable, however, is the glimpse which we here get of the state of society in the antediluvian world. The narrative, it is true, is brief, and on many points obscure: a mystery hangs over it which we cannot penetrate. But some few facts are clear. The wickedness of the world is described as having reached a desperate pitch, owing, it would seem, in a great measure to the fusion of two races which had hitherto been distinct. Further, the marked features of the wickedness of the age were lust and brutal outrage. "They took them wives of all which they chose;" and "the earth was filled with violence." "The earth was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth."

"And it came to pass when men (the Adam) began to multiply on the face of the ground and daughters were born unto them; then the sons of God (the Elohîm) saw the daughters of men (the Adam) that they were fair, and they took to them wives of all that they chose. And Jehovah said, My spirit shall not forever rule (or be humbled) in men, seeing that they are [or, in their error they are] but flesh, and their days shall be a hundred and twenty years. The Nephilim were in the earth in those days; and also afterwards when the sons of God (the Elohîm) came in unto the daughters of men (the Adam), and children were born to them, these were the heroes which were of old, men of renown."

We will briefly review the principal solutions which have been given of the difficulties involved in this passage.

I. Sons of God and Daughters of Men.—Three different interpretations have from very early times been given of this most singular expression.

1. The "sons of Elohîm" were explained to mean sons of princes, or men of high rank (as in Psa. lxxxii, 6, bené 'Elyôn, sons of the Most High) who degraded themselves by contracting marriages with "the daughters of men," i. e. with women of inferior position. This interpretation was defended by Psa. xlix, 3, where "sons of men," bené adām, means "men of low degree," as opposed to bené ish, "men of high degree." Here, however, the opposition is with bené ha-Elohîm, and not with bené ish, and therefore the passages are not parallel. This is the interpretation of the Targum of Onkelos, following the oldest Palestinian Kabbala, of the later Targum, and of the Samaritan Vers. So also Symmachus, Saadia, and the Arabic of Erpenius, Aben Ezra, and R. Sol. Isaaki. In recent times this view has been elaborated and put in the most favorable light by Schiller (Werke, x, 401, etc.); but it has been entirely abandoned by every modern commentator of any note.

2. A second interpretation, perhaps not less ancient, understands by the "sons of Elohîm," angels. So some MSS. of the Sept., which, according to Procopius and Augustine (De Civit. Dei, xv, 23), had the reading ἄγγελοι τοῦ θεοῦ, while others had υἱοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ, the last having been generally preferred since Cyril and Augustine; so Josephus, Ant. i, 3; Philo, De Gigantibus; perhaps Aquila, who has υἱοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ; of which, however, Jerome says, "Deos intelligens angelos sive sanctos;" the book of Enoch as quoted by Georgius Syncellus in his Chronographia, where they are termed οἱ ἐργήτοροι, "the watchers" (as in Daniel); the book of Jubilees (translated by Dillmann from the Ethiopic); the later Jewish Hagada, whence we have the story of the fall of Shemchazai and Azazel, given by Jelinek in the Midrash Abchir; and most of the older fathers of the Church, finding probably in their Greek MSS. ἀγγελοι τοῦ θεοῦ, as Justin, Tatian, Athenagoras, Clemens Alex., Tertullian, and Lactantius. This view, however, seemed in later times to be too monstrous to be entertained. R. Simon ben-Jochai anathematized it.

Cyrril calls it ἀσώπρωτον. Theodoret (Quæst. in Gen.) declares the maintainers of it to have lost their senses, ἐμβρόντητοι καὶ ἄγαν ἡλίθιοι; Philastrius numbers it among heresies, Chrysostom among blasphemies. Finally, Calvin says of it, "Vetus illud commentum de angelorum concubitu cum mulieribus sua absurditate abunde refellitur, ac mirum est doctos viros tam crassis et prodigiosis deliriis fuisse olim fasciatus." Notwithstanding all this, however, many modern German commentators very strenuously assert this view. They rest their argument in favor of it mainly on these two particulars; first, that "sons of God" is everywhere else in the Old Test. a name of the angels; and next, that St. Jude seems to lend the sanction of his authority to this interpretation. With regard to the first of these reasons, it is not even certain that in all other passages of Scripture where "the sons of God" are mentioned angels are meant. It is not absolutely necessary so to understand the designation either in Psa. xxix, 1 or lxxxix, 6, or even in Job i, ii. In any of these passages it might mean holy men. Job xxxviii, 7, and Dan. iii, 25, are the only places in which it certainly means angels. The argument from St. Jude is of more force; for he does compare the sin of the angels to that of Sodom and Gomorrah (τούτους in ver. 7 must refer to the angels mentioned in ver. 6), as if it were of a like unnatural kind. That this was the meaning of St. Jude is rendered the more probable when we recollect his quotation from the book of Enoch where the same view is taken. Further, that the angels had the power of assuming a corporeal form seems clear from many parts of the Old Test. All that can be urged in support of this view has been said by Delitzsch in his Die Genesis ausgelegt, and by Kurtz, Gesch. des Alten Bundes, and his treatise, Die Ehen der Söhne Gottes. It must be confessed that their arguments are not without weight. The early existence of such an interpretation seems, at any rate, to indicate a starting-point for the heathen mythologies. The fact, too, that from such an intercourse "the mighty men" were born, points in the same direction. The Greek "heroes" were sons of the gods; οὐκ οἶσθα, says Plato in the Cratylus, ὅτι ἡμίθεοι οἱ ἥρωες; πάντες δὴπου γεγόνασιν ἱεροσχητες ἢ θεῶν Συναγῆς ἢ Συναγῶν θεῶν. Even Hesiod's account of the birth of the giants, monstrous and fantastic as it is, bears tokens of having originated in the same belief. In like manner it may be remarked that the stories of incubi and succubi, so commonly believed in the Middle Ages, and which even Heidegger (Hist. Sacr. i, 289) does not discredit, had reference to a commerce between dæmons and mortals of the same kind as that narrated in Genesis. Thomas Aquinas (pars i, qu. 51, art. 3) argues that it was possible for angels to have children by mortal women. This theory, however, must be abandoned as scientifically preposterous. Two modern poets, Byron (in his drama of Cain) and Moore (in his Loves of the Angels), have nevertheless availed themselves of this last interpretation for the purpose of their poems.

3. The interpretation, however, which is now most generally received is that which understands by "the sons of the Elohîm" the family and descendants of Seth, and by "the daughters of man (Adam)," the women of the family of Cain. So the Clementine Recognitions interpret "the sons of the Elohîm" as "homines justi qui angelorum vixerant vitam." So Ephrem, and the Christian Adam-book of the East; so also Theodoret, Chrysostom, Cyril of Alexandria, Jerome, Augustine, and others; and in later times Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, and a whole host of recent commentators. They all suppose that whereas the two lines of descent from Adam—the family of Seth who preserved their faith in God, and the family of Cain who lived only for this world—had hitherto kept distinct, now a mingling of the two races took place which resulted in the thorough corruption of the former, who, falling away, plunged into the deepest abyss of wickedness, and that it was this universal corruption which provoked the judgment of the Flood.

4. A fourth interpretation has recently been advanced and maintained with considerable ingenuity, by the author of the Genesis of the Earth and Man. He understands by "the sons of the Elohim" the "servants or worshippers of false gods" [taking Elohim to mean not God but gods], whom he supposes to have belonged to a distinct pre-Adamite race. The "daughters of men," he contends, should be rendered "the daughters of Adam, or the Adamites," women, that is, descended from Adam. These last had hitherto remained true in their faith and worship, but were now perverted by the idolaters who intermarried with them. But this hypothesis is opposed to the direct statements in the early chapters of Genesis, which plainly teach the descent of all mankind from one common source.

Whichever of these interpretations we adopt (the third, perhaps, is the most probable), one thing at least is clear, that the writer intends to describe a fusion of races hitherto distinct, and to connect with this two other facts: the one that the offspring of these mixed marriages were men remarkable for strength and prowess (which is only in accordance with what has often been observed since—viz. the superiority of the mixed race as compared with either of the parent stocks); the other, that the result of this intercourse was the thorough and hopeless corruption of both families alike. See SON OF GOD.

II. Who were the Nephilim?—It should be observed that they are not spoken of (as has sometimes been assumed) as the offspring of the "sons of the Elohim" and "the daughters of men." The sacred writer says, "the Nephilim were on the earth in those days," before he goes on to speak of the children of the mixed marriages. The name, which has been variously explained, only occurs once again in Numb. xiii, 33, where the Nephilim are said to have been one of the Canaanitish tribes. They are there spoken of as "men of great stature," and hence probably the rendering γίγαντες of the Sept. and "the giants" of our A. V. But there is nothing in the word itself to justify this interpretation. If it is of Hebrew origin (which, however, may be doubted), it must mean either "fallen," i. e. apostate ones; or those who "fall upon" others, violent men, plunderers, freebooters, etc. Some have observed that if the Nephilim of Canaan were descendants of the Nephilim in Gen. vi, 4, we have here a very strong argument for the non-universality of the Deluge.—Smith. But it can hardly be inferred from these casual references that the name is intended as that of a race. It is rather used in a general way in both passages for burly fighters. See NEPHILIM.

Benefiali, MARCO, a Roman painter, was born in 1684. He received the honor of knighthood from the pope, and died in 1764. In the Academy of St. Luke is a fine picture of Christ at the Well of Samaria; in the Church of Stigmata, The Flagellation; in the Palazzo Spada there is a saloon painted entirely by this artist, which is thought one of the finest works of his time.

Benefice COLLATIVE is (1) a benefice of which the patron may freely dispose, the nomination not needing the confirmation of any superior authority. Most benefices collative are in the gift of the bishop of the diocese. (2.) A benefice of that character to which a bishop is bound to give immediate institution, though in the gift of some independent patron.

BENEFICE COMPATIBLE is a benefice which the law will permit a clerk to hold in conjunction with another benefice.

BENEFICE CONSISTORIAL is a term used in the Latin Church to designate certain clerical positions of eminent rank and importance, which are customarily and formally filled up by the pope in solemn consistory.

BENEFICE DONATIVE is a benefice which is exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary, and the giving of which is completed by a deed under the hand and seal of the patron. Very few of such now exist.

BENEFICE ELECTIVE is a term used to designate a benefice to which the clerk in orders of it is elected. Such are generally in the gift of the two great English universities, or sometimes in that of the parishioners.

BENEFICE INCOMPATIBLE is a benefice which the law will not permit a clerk to hold, either in conjunction with another benefice, or with any other position or dignity ecclesiastical.

Beneficiary, in ecclesiastical usage, is the clerk in orders who receives the temporal benefit of an endowment.

Ben-Ephraim and Ben-David, the names of two Messiahs expected by the modern Jews. To evade the express predictions of the Old-Test. prophets concerning the mean condition of the Messiah, they confidently speak of looking forward to the appearance of two Messiahs; the one Ben-Ephraim, whom they grant to be a person of mean and afflicted condition in this world; and the other Ben-David, who shall be a powerful and victorious prince. See MESSIAH.

Benepacitum APOSTOLICUM is the name given to the papal approbation of and consent to the alienation of any property of the Church or other measure, and to the act or brief which contains such approbation.

Benesch, JACOB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died March 3, 1873, at Prague, is the author of a History of the Protestant Congregation of the Augsburg Confession (Prague, 1856). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 105. (B. P.)

Benet, a German martyr, was a citizen of Wetherising, in Germany, and was persecuted severely because she would not attend mass and repeat the idle ceremonies of the Romish Church. She suffered in 1558. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 467.

Benet (Beneti or Benedictus), Cypriano, was a Dominican monk of Aragon, and, according to some accounts, a doctor of the University of Paris. He flourished from 1490 to 1520, and left, Illustrium Virorum Opuscula (Paris, 1500):—De Sacrosancto Eucharistia Sacramento et de Ejusdem Ministro, ad Julium II:—De non Mutando Paschate (Rome, 1515, 4to):—De Prima Orbis Sede; de Concilio; de Ecclesiastica Potestate; de Pontif. Max. Auctoritate (ibid. 1512, 4to), etc.

Benet, Geronimo, a reputable Spanish painter, was distinguished for pictures of the Virgin and Christ. He died at Valladolid in 1700. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Benet, Thomas, an English martyr, was born at Cambridge, and was at the university made master of arts, and was thought by some to have been a priest. He was well learned, and of a godly disposition. In 1524, feeling disposed to go where he could worship in more freedom, according as his conscience dictated, he went to Devonshire, where he took charge of a school and did much towards instructing the children in the knowledge of Christ and his works. In 1525 he removed to Exeter, and started a school there for children; his spare time he devoted to the study of the Scriptures. But, as every tree and herb has its due time to bring forth its fruit, so did it appear by this good man. He saw daily the glory of God blasphemed, idolatrous religion so embraced and maintained, and that most false usurped power of the bishop of Rome so extolled, that he was so grieved in conscience and troubled in spirit that he could not be quiet, but uttered his mind to a number of persons. At one time he wrote his view, which was that the pope was Antichrist, and that we should worship God, not saints, and tacked it upon the doors of the cathedral church of the city.

These bills being found, there was a great ado made, and a great search was made for the heretic who dared do such a bold thing. After a long search he was found and taken to prison; afterwards tried and condemned to be burned, Jan. 15, 1531. The mild martyr, rejoicing that his end was so near, "as the sheep before the shearer" yielded himself with all humbleness to abide and suffer the cross of persecution. After he reached his place of execution, near Exeter, he made his most humble confession and prayer to Almighty God, and requested all the people to do as he had done. This done, he was tied to a stake and fire was set to him. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, v, 18.

Benetelli, LUIGI MARIA, an Italian theologian, was born Sept. 29, 1641. He belonged to the Franciscan order. After having studied at Padua, he taught philosophy and theology at Venice, and became censor of the inquisition. He also travelled in Germany, in company with Balthazar Stycher, and returned to preach in Italy. He especially devoted himself to making proselytes among the Jews. He died March 25, 1725. He wrote, Le Saeite di Gionatta, Scagliate a Favor degli Ebrei (Venice, 1703-4):—I Dardi Rabbicini in Franti, Risposta alle Opposizioni degli Ebrei contra le Saeite di Gionatta (ibid. 1705):—Trattato della Cabala, in the preceding work. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benevento, IMMANUELO DI, a Jewish grammarian and Cabalist of Italy, who flourished in the middle of the 16th century, is the author of ספר חרדים, a Hebrew grammar divided into four sections and one hundred and thirty-eight chapters (Mantua, 1557). He also edited תקוני זוהר, supplements to the Sohar (ibid. eod.); and ספר חרדים of Perez ha-kohen (ibid. 1558). See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 56 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 103. (B. P.)

Benfey, THEODORE, a German Orientalist, was born of Jewish parentage, Jan. 28, 1809, at Norten, near Göttingen. He was educated at the gymnasium at Göttingen; studied in the universities of Göttingen and Munich; and was appointed professor at Göttingen in 1834, where he worked and lectured till his death, June 26, 1881. "In Theodore Benfey," says a writer in the London Times, "we have lost the greatest Sanscrit scholar of our time; and, if one looks at his works and at the permanent results which they represent, one feels tempted to ask, Has there ever been any single scholar in Europe who, since the discovery of Sanscrit, has more advanced our knowledge of the language and literature of ancient India than Benfey?" His earliest work was the Griechisches Wurzel-Lexicon (1839-42), and the elaborate article on "India" in Ersch und Gruber's Encyclopädie. After that, Benfey was one of the first to contribute to the revival of Sanscrit philology which began with the study of the Veda. In 1848 he published his text, translation, and glossary of the Sāmaveda, and he also gave a complete translation of the first volume of the Rig-Veda. His grammars on the Sanscrit are well-known. In 1859 he published his Pantschatantra, or Fünf Bücher indischer Fabeln, Märchen, etc. (Leipzig, 2 vols.); in which he established on a safe basis, to the surprise of the world, not only the Indian origin of European fables, but, what was even more important, the Buddhist origin of Indian fables. We also mention, Die persischen Keilinschriften mit Uebersetzung und Glossar (Leipzig, 1847):—Ueber das Verhältnis der ägyptischen Sprache zum Semitischen Sprachstamm (ibid. 1844):—History of the Science of Language and Oriental Philology in Germany (Munich, 1869). He also edited Orient und Occident insbesondere in ihren gegenseitigen Beziehungen (Göttingen, 1860-65). His contributions to the Transactions of the Royal Göttingen Society and to the Journal of Comparative Philology are very numerous, and contain very valuable materials for the student of comparative philology. Benfey was a member of the academies at Munich, Berlin, Buda, and Göttingen, and was highly honored and esteemed by all who knew him. (B. P.)

Benga Version of the Holy Scriptures. The Benga is an African dialect, spoken by a people south of the Congo River. The gospels were originally translated each by a different missionary. Matthew was published by the Presbyterian Board in 1858, and the remaining gospels and the Acts by the American Bible Society at subsequent dates. In 1874, the Rev. R. H. Nassau, M.D., of the Gaboon and Corisco mission, was appointed to harmonize these versions and to prepare an edition embodying the results of improved scholarship and accuracy. In doing this, Matthew and Mark were entirely rewritten, and extensive corrections were made in the other portions. The new revised edition went through the press under Dr. Nassau's direction. Besides the four gospels, the book of Genesis and the Acts have also been published. (B. P.)

Bengali Version of the Scriptures. Among the Indian daughters of the Sanscrit none, except the Pali, approach so nearly the parent stock as the Bengali; and as for style and grammar, it bears the same relation to the Sanscrit as the Italian does to Latin. The commencement of the first Bengali version of the Scriptures may be dated from the year 1793, when Dr. Carey and his coadjutors quitted England to enter upon their labors in India. In 1801 he published the New Test. in Serampore, which was followed in 1806 by a second and in 1811 by a third edition. The Old Test. appeared between the years 1802 and 1809. A fourth and revised edition of the New Test. appeared in 1816, and in 1832 the eighth edition was committed to the press, shortly before the translator's death.

Another version of the New Test. was undertaken by Mr. Ellerton of the Church Missionary Society, which was printed in 1818 by the Calcutta Bible Society. Other editions followed. In the meantime, the attention of the Calcutta committee was drawn to the great improvements which have been made in the Serampore version of the New Test. by the critical revisions to which each successive edition had been subjected; and on a careful examination of Mr. Ellerton's version, it was determined by the committee either to subject it to a very minute and accurate revision, or to substitute some other version in its place. This led to the important measure of endeavoring to obtain what might be accounted a standard version of the Scriptures in Bengali. With this view, a sub-committee was formed in 1830, composed of the best scholars of the different denominations of Christians friendly to the Bible Society in Bengal. They were appointed to execute a version of the entire Scriptures, and agreed to submit their labors to the suggestions of other distinguished scholars. They began with the book of Genesis, and published it in 1833. In the meantime a third version of the Bengali Scriptures had been prepared by Dr. Yates, and his New Test. was published in 1833. This version was pronounced by competent judges "an able and excellent translation." The Old Test. was completed by Dr. Yates in 1844. In 1845 Dr. Häberlin offered to the Calcutta society a new version of the entire Bengali New Test., and two hundred and fifty copies of the Gospel according to Mark, and the same number of the Epistle to the Ephesians, were printed as specimens of this version, to test its value.

In 1845 an inquiry was instituted by the Calcutta society respecting the state of the Bengali versions, and the practicability of obtaining a version which they might consider their own. It was finally decided to reprint Dr. Yates's New Test., and an edition was published in 1847. Since that time Dr. Yates's translation of the New Test. has been revised by the Rev. J. Wenger, and editions of this revised version have been printed. The revision of the Old Test. was also undertaken by Mr. Wenger, and was completed in 1878. In addition to these three versions another was commenced by the Rev. R. P. Greaves, of the Church Missionary Society. His premature death, however, prevented his continuing the work. Only two of the gospels prepared by him had been printed, and another was complete. These translations were purely tentative, the object being to discover if it was possible to prepare a version which should be at once idiomatic and literal. The death of Mr. Greaves is the more to be lamented because he was a prominent member of a committee which had been appointed to consider the possibility of attaining greater uniformity in the renderings of religious terms among the Indian languages.

As it was deemed desirable to prepare a special edition of portions of Scripture for the use of that large section of the Mussulman population of Bengal who, while they read the Bengali character, speak a dialect of the Bengali language which is largely mingled with Persian and other foreign terms, the gospels of Luke and John, in Mussulman-Bengali, were issued from the Calcutta press at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in 1855 and 1856. Luke, the first issued of the Mussulman-Bengali version, was prepared under the care of the Rev. J. Paterson, who was followed by the Rev. S. J. Hill, of the London Missionary Society. Mr. Hill translated the Gospel of John and other portions of the Bible. In the report for 1858 we read:

"The propriety of rendering the Scriptures, or at least any further portions, into this mixed language having been called in question, your committee, aided by the opinion of missionaries resident in the districts where the dialect prevails, and where our books in it have been used, deliberated on the subject, and adopted the resolution, to maintain a supply of the publications already issued and ordered in the language, and to prepare also the two remaining gospels of Matthew and Mark, leaving it to future consideration whether any other parts of the New Test. should be added."

All that had been published in this mixed tongue were the four gospels and Acts, Genesis, Psalms, and Isaiah. In 1875 the work of translation was resumed again, and a sub-committee was appointed to prepare a new translation of Luke. This gospel was issued by the Calcutta Auxiliary in 1876, it being edited by the Rev. J. E. Payne, of the London Missionary Society. A number of copies were especially prepared to receive the criticisms of those best acquainted with the requirements of the Mussulmans of Lower and Eastern Bengal. See Bible of Every Land, p. 109 sq.

Linguistic helps have been prepared by Forbes, A Grammar of the Bengali Languages (Lond. 1861); Shama Churn Sircar, Introduction to the Bengalee Language (Calcutta, ed.); Yates, Introduction to the Bengali Language (edited by J. Wenger, ibid. 1847 and 1864); Carey, A Dictionary of the Bengalee Language (Serampore, 1825, 2 vols.; and an abridged edition, ibid. 1871). (B. P.)

Bengel, Ernst, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 12, 1735, at Denkendorf. For some time deacon at Tübingen, he was appointed in 1786 superintendent and preacher there, and died April 1, 1793. He wrote, Kurze Abhandlung über 1 Joh. 5, 7 (Tübingen, 1772);—Chronologische Harmonie-Tafel über die evangelische und apostolische Geschichte nach den Grundsätzen des seligen D. Bengels herausgegeben (ibid. 1785). He also edited the Novum Testamentum Gr. of J. A. Bengel (ibid. 1790). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 42; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 105. (B. P.)

Bengel, Ernst Gottlieb von, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 3, 1769, at Zavelstein, near Calw. He studied at Tübingen, and in 1792 was appointed assistant librarian at the theological seminary in that place. From 1792 he travelled in Germany for literary purposes, and in 1800 he was appointed deacon at Marbach. In 1804 he was called to Ellwangen, and in 1806 to a professorship in Tübingen. Here he remained for the remainder of his life, highly honored by the civic and ecclesiastical authorities, and died March 23, 1826. He published, Diss. Inaug. ad Introductiones in Librum Psalmorum Supplementa Quædam Exhibens (Tübingen, 1806);—Diss. Historico-theologica, quid in Augenda Immortalitatis Doctrina Religioni Christianæ ipsi hujus Conditores Tribuerint? (ibid. 1808);—Diss. Historico-theologica, quid Doctrina de Animarum Immortalitate Religioni Christianæ Debeat? (pt. i-vi, ibid. 1809-17);—Progr. Interpretatio Loci Paulini, Rom. ii, 11-26 (ibid. 1813);—Ueber das Alter der jüdischen Proselytentaufe (ibid. 1814);—Archiv für die Theologie und ihre neueste Literatur (ibid. 1814-21, 5 vols.);—Progr. Operis in Sacris Reformandis Peracti Indolet Religiosa Magis quam Politica Defenditur et Commendatur (ibid. 1817);—Observationes de Pauli ad Rem Christianam Conversione Act. ix, 1-16; xxii, 3-16; xxvi, 9-20 Narrata (ibid. 1819-20);—Diss. Symbolarum ad Solvendam Questionem, an Judæi Jesu et Apostolis Antiquiores iisque et Quales Naturam Divinam vel Humanam Saltem Majorem in Messia Apparituram Præstolati Sint (ibid. 1822-23);—Progr. de Logo Johanneo (ibid. 1824). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 70 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 11, 18, 81, 141, 474, 604; ii, 378. (B. P.)

Benger, JOHANN MICHAEL, D.D., a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1823 at Bockum, near Crefeld. In 1845 he was made priest and chaplain at Erkelenz; in 1847 he was appointed cathedral vicar and secretary to the archbishop Geissel at Cologne, and in 1848 professor at the clerical seminary there. In 1854 he joined the Congregation of the Holy Redeemer at Altötting, whose leader he became. He died Feb. 27, 1870, at Vilsbiburg, in Lower Bavaria, as rector of the Redemptorists. He wrote, Pastoraltheologie (Regensburg, 1861-63, 3 vols.);—Compendium der Pastoraltheologie (ibid. 1868). See Literarischer Handweiser für das kath. Deutschland, 1863, p. 399; 1868, p. 330; 1870, p. 152. (B. P.)

Ben-Gorion. See JOSEPH BEN-GORION.

Bengtson, JOHANN, archbishop of Upsal, was born in Sweden in 1417. He took the part of Christian of Oldenburg against Charles Canutson Bonde, proclaimed king under the name of Charles VIII, collected troops, fought against Charles, who withdrew to Dantzic, and obtained a bull of the pope in order to hold the reins of government until Christian should be called to the throne of Sweden. The archbishop having accorded an amnesty to the peasants revolting in the diocese of Upsal, Christian caused him to be arrested and conducted to Copenhagen. The dissatisfaction of the clergy and the complaints of the court of Rome were useless. Kettil, bishop of Linköping, and parent of Bengtson, armed the insurgent peasants, and demanded the liberty of the archbishop. Charles Canutson, taking advantage of circumstances, returned to Sweden, where he was proclaimed king in 1464. Seconded by Kettil, Bengtson again put Charles to flight. The two prelates were then masters of the government. Kettil having died, Bengtson was sole administrator, and he alienated himself by his harshness. Charles was recalled the third time, and maintained his position on the throne until his death. Abandoned by his friends, the archbishop retired to the isle of Oeland, and died in 1467. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benham, Hugo, a Scottish prelate, went to Rome, and was consecrated bishop to the see of Aberdeen in 1267. He consented to a charter of foundation by Alexander Cumin, earl of Buchan, for building a hospital at Turriff, a village in the shire of Aberdeen, in 1272. He died at Loch-Goul in 1279. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 108.

Benham, John B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Rome, N. Y., Sept. 20, 1806. He experienced religion at the age of sixteen, and, after spending a year at Cazenovia Seminary, was appointed as a missionary to the Indians of Upper Canada in 1828. In 1834 he returned and entered the Oneida Conference, and, after having filled several appointments, he was sent to take charge of the Liberia mission, Africa. He was naturally vigorous in body, but that unsalubrious climate soon undermined his constitution, and in two years obliged his return. He was enabled to do effective work for some time after coming back. He died at Newfield, May 1, 1868. Mr. Benham was a model minister in fidelity, zeal, and piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 127; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Benham, John Raymond, a Universalist minister, was born in 1812. He experienced religion among the Free-will Baptists; began preaching for them early in life; embraced Universalism in 1831, and for forty years was a zealous advocate of that faith in various parts of Canada. He died at East Brome, province of Quebec, April 19, 1876. Mr. Benham was an upright, faithful man. See Universalist Register, 1877, p. 109.

Benignus is commemorated in the old Roman martyrology on April 3 as a martyr at Fomi, in Scythia.

Benignus, a name appearing in both Scotch and Irish hagiography.

1. Dempster, at Aug. 9, 436, gives a Benignus, presbyter at Lesmahago, on the authority of the long-lost Collectanea of Gilbert Brown, abbot of Sweetheart. See Forbes, Kal. of Scott. Saints, p. 278.

2. Brother of St. Cethechus, and a disciple of St. Patrick, by whom he was made abbot of the Monastery of Drumlias, which he ruled for twenty years. Coigan (Acta SS. p. 788, etc.) doubts whether this Benignus may not be the Benignus who is venerated at Glastonbury, Eng. Some imagine that it was Benignus of Armagh who went to Glastonbury. See Ussher, De Brit. Eccl. Prim. (Dublin, 1639) p. 876; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, i, 318.

3. The most famous is St. Benignus (or Benen), son of Sescnen, and primate of Armagh (commemorated Nov. 9). Tradition says that when St. Patrick landed at Colp he came first to the house of Sescnen, and, in baptizing him and his house, gave to one of his sons the name of Benignus, whom he also took along with him. St. Benignus succeeded to Armagh A.D. 455, and in the lists of the Coarbs of St. Patrick is usually placed third after that saint. Most Irish authorities date the arrival of St. Patrick and the baptism of St. Benignus at A.D. 432. Benignus died in 468, and is counted the special apostle and patron of Connaught. See O'Connor, Rer. Hib. Script. ii, 109, 112; O'Curry, Lect. on Anc. Ireland, ii, 25, 46, 66; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 134.

Benignus, Saint, the apostle of Burgundy, is said to have been a pupil of Polycarp, who sent him to France to preach the Gospel there. He came thither, it is said, accompanied by St. Andochius, a priest, and St. Thyrsus, a deacon, about the beginning of the reign of Marcus Aurelius. They landed at Marseilles, and passed through Lyons to Autun; thence they proceeded to Langres, and, after preaching in the adjacent country, Benignus received the crown of martyrdom at Dijon, with his two companions, being thrust through by a lance, in 178. Some martyrologies place his death on the 2d or 3d of April; but the common belief assigns Nov. 1 as the day of his martyrdom. In 512 the Abbey of St. Benignus of Dijon was erected over these martyrs' tomb, which was richly endowed by Charles the Bold. See D'Achery, Spicilegium, i; Roget de Belloguet, Origines Dijonnaises (1851); Bougaud, Étude sur Saint Bénigne et sur l'Origine des Égl. de Dijon, d'Autun et de Langres (Autun, 1859); Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Beni-Israel (Heb. for Sons of Israel), a peculiar class of people found in India, who practice a mixture of Jewish and Hindû customs. They claim that their ancestors came from a country to the northward of India about sixteen centuries ago, and consisted of seven men and seven women who were saved from shipwreck near Chaul, about thirty miles southeast of Bombay. They found a refuge at a place called Navagaum, where they were permitted to settle, and from which, gradually increasing in numbers, they spread among the villages of the Konkan, particularly those near the coast. In that locality and also in Bombay, where they began to settle after it came into the possession of the English, their descendants are found in numbers variously estimated at from five thousand to eight thousand. They resemble in countenance the Arabian Jews, though they regard the name Jehudi, when applied to them, as a term of reproach. They are fairer than the other natives of the same rank, but they somewhat resemble them in dress. They have no sheudî like the Hindûs on the crown of their heads; but they preserve a tuft of hair above each of their ears. Their turbans and shoes are like those of the Hindûs, and their trousers like those of the Mussulmans. They give to their children each two names, one from the Hebrew scriptures, conferred on the occasion of circumcision, the other of Hindû origin, given about a month after birth.

The Beni-Israel all profess to adore Jehovah, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. Many of them, however, secretly worship the gods of the Hindûs, while open idolatry was formerly quite common among them. In their synagogues there is no Sepher-Torah, or manuscript of the law, as the Jews have; but they admit the divine authority of all the books of the Old Testament. From the Arabian Jews they have received the Hebrew Liturgy of the Sephardim, which they partially use in their religious services. The Pentateuch forms the standard of their religious law, though the divine statutes are but partially regarded. The weekly Sabbath is in some degree observed by about a third of the population. At six in the morning they assemble for worship in the masjid, where they remain for two or three hours, chiefly engaged in reciting prayers or parts of Scripture after the hazzan or reader, and practicing genuflections. Some of the more devout remain in the masjid for a longer time. The evening service, which commences about six o'clock, is best attended. It lasts for about two hours, and is frequently concluded by the persons present merely touching with their lips the cup of blessing.

Several facts have been thought to combine to indicate that the Beni-Israel belong to the "lost tribes" of Israel. The want of a MS. Sepher-Torah, or Book of the Law, places them in a situation unknown to any congregation of Jews throughout the world. The almost universal repudiation among them of the designation Jew, of which they doubtless would have been proud had they merited it; the distinctive appellation of Beni-Israel, which they take for themselves; the non-occurrence among them of the favorite Jewish names Judah and Esther, and the predominance of the name Reuben, as well as other names principally connected with the early history of the children of Israel, strongly indicate that they are a remnant of the posterity of the Israelitish tribes which were removed from their homes by the Assyrian kings.

Beni-Khaibir (Heb. for Sons of Keber), an Arabic tribe, supposed to be the descendants of the Rechabites (q. v.).

Benilda, Sr., was, according to tradition, the companion in martyrdom of St. Anastasius, a monk and priest of Spain, who suffered in 853, on the 14th of June. St. Benilda was put to death on the day following.

Benin, RELIGION OF. The country which bears the name of Benin is a large tract of coast in western Africa, extending upwards of two hundred miles, and presenting a succession of broad estuaries, now discovered to be all branches of the Niger, of which this country forms the delta. It is a country of great commercial importance. The king is not only an absolute despot, but a fetish or god in the eyes of his subjects; and all offences against him are punished in the most cruel and summary manner, not only as treason, but impiety. It is a crime to believe that he either eats or sleeps, and at his death numerous human victims are sacrificed that they may accompany him to the other world, and wait on him there. Every year three or four human beings are presented as votive offerings at the mouth of the river, with the view of attracting ships and commerce. Fetishism and Devil-worship are the leading forms of religion, although on great occasions they call upon the Supreme Being, whom they address as Canon. They place implicit confidence in fetishes or charms, which they wear about the body or hang from some part of their houses; and they have also their Fetissero, or fetish-man, by whose assistance they consult their fetishes on all important occasions. They worship the spirits of the dead, which they consider as taking a deep interest in all human affairs. They believe that these spirits reside in the woods, and hence when a person is in difficulty or danger he retires to the forest that he may implore the aid of the souls of deceased friends. They make offerings to the evil spirit to appease his wrath and prevent him from inflicting injury. They practice circumcision, and sprinkle the blood of animals on the door-posts of their houses, and upon all places where their fetishes are kept.

Bening, FRANÇOIS, a French Jesuit preacher of the 17th century, was born at Avignon, and is especially known for a funeral oration, published in 1616 at Avignon and at Lyons, under the title, Le Bouchier d'Honneur, où sont représentés les beaux Faicts de très-généreux et puissant Seigneur feu Messire Louis de Berton, Seigneur de Crillon, appendu à son Tombeau pour l'immortelle Mémoire de sa Magnanimité. This is a sample of his works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benisch, ABRAHAM, a Jewish rabbi, who was born in 1813 at Drosau, in Bohemia, and died in London, July 31, 1878, is the author of, Is the Moral Law of Divine Origin, and therefore Binding upon the Jews? (Lond. 1842):—Two Lectures on the Life and Writings of Maimonides (ibid. 1847):—Judaism Surveyed, being a Sketch of the Rise and Development of Judaism from Moses to our Days (ibid. 1874):—Bishop Colenso's Objections Critically Examined:—The Principal Charges of Dr. McCaul's Old Paths against Judaism (ibid. 1858):—The Question at Issue between Judaism and Christianity, and Israel's Mission (ibid. eod.):—בְּיָרִי הַלְלִיךְ: A Primer and Progressive Reading-book with an Inter-linear Translation, preparatory to the Study of the Hebrew Scriptures. Besides editing the Jewish Chronicle, he also published an English translation of Petachia's (q. v.) travels, and an English translation of the Old Testament. See Lippe, Bibliographisches Lexicon (Vienna, 1881), p. 32 sq. (B. P.)

Benish-Days, a name given by the modern Egyptians to three days of the week, which are devoted more completely to pleasure than the other four, and in which they feel less bound to observe religious duties. They are so called because the benish is worn more especially on these days, being a garment of common use, and not of ceremony. The Benish-days are Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Beniti, PHILIP, Saint, founder of the Order of Servites, was born at Florence at the beginning of the 13th century. He studied at Florence and Paris, and took his degree of doctor of divinity at Padua. After returning home he entered a chapel belonging to the confraternity of the Annunciata, in order to hear mass. He saw at this time a vision of the Blessed Virgin, who seemed to invite him to join her company, at the same time presenting him with the black habit of the Annunciata. He was received as a lay associate of the house, and after some time was sent to Sienna, where he entered the priesthood. Passing rapidly through all the offices of his order, he was created superior-general; and, upon the death of pope Clement IV, fled in order not to be elected his successor. After the election of Gregory X, Sept. 1271, he returned, and devoted himself to the extension of his order and to preaching. He passed through a great part of France, the Low Countries, Friesland, Saxony, and Upper Germany, where he established many houses of the Servites. At a general chapter at Borgo, Italy, he was constrained to take the generalship of the order; and at the Council of Lyons, 1274, he obtained the confirmation of the rules and statutes. He died at Todi, Aug. 22, 1285, and was canonized in 1671, by Clement X. His festival, which is one of obligation, is on Aug. 23. See Butler, vol. viii; Baillet, ii, 350.

Benivieni, DOMINICO, a Florentine theologian (surnamed Scotino, on account of his deep research in theology), was professor of logic at Pisa in 1479, and canon at Florence in 1491. He was on terms of intimate friendship with Marsilio Ficino and Jerome Savonarola. He died Dec. 3, 1507, leaving, Trattato in Difensione e Probazione della Doctrina e Profetie Predicate de Frate Jeronimo Savonarola nella città di Firenze (Florence, 1496):—Dialogo della Verità della Doctrina Predicata da Frate Jeronimo (Florence):—Trionfo della Croce (ibid. 1497):—Epistolæ V Morales, and Lucerna Religiosorum et Commentarii in Sacras Omnes Ecclesiæ Hymnos (unpublished). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ben-Jacob, ISAAC, a Jewish writer, who died at Wilna, in Poland, July 2, 1863, is best known as the author of a large bibliographical work, entitled Ozar Ha-Sepharim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum tam Impressorum quam Manuscriptorum (Wilna, 1880, 3 vols.). This work, which has been edited by Wilson, is a very important contribution to Hebrew literature, inasmuch as it contains the titles of 17,000 works, published till the year 1863. Written in Hebrew, the titles are given according to the Hebrew alphabet. For his other writings, see First, Bibl. Jud. i, 103 sq. (B. P.)

Benjamin, Saint, a deacon and martyr in Persia, was one of the most celebrated of those who suffered in the persecution commenced in 420 under Yezdegerd, and continued under Bahram, or Varanes (surnamed Gour, or the wild ass), his son and successor. Benjamin was first thrown into prison for having spoken boldly in defence of the true faith before the king. Here he remained two years, at the end of which time the ambassador of the emperor, Theodosius the younger, obtained his release under promise of certain conditions—viz. that the prisoner should never again speak to the people of the court of our Blessed Lord, nor of his religion. To these conditions, however, Benjamin refused to accede, and began to preach Jesus Christ to all persons as soon as he was released. This he continued for a year, when the king, exasperated, caused him to be arrested again, and proposed to him, as his only choice, death or apostasy. St. Benjamin hesitated not an instant, and the king, after exposing him to tortures fearful even to read of, caused him to be put to death. His festival is marked in some martyrologies on April 4. The Roman, however, places it on March 31. See Ruinart, p. 605; Baillet, i, 385, March 31; Butler, March 31.

Benjamin succeeded Tobias as sixth bishop of JERUSALEM. He is one of the fifteen enumerated by Eusebius (Hist. Eccles. iv, 5) before Hadrian's days "all of the circumcision."

Benjamin of Rome. See ROME, BENJAMIN OF.

Benjamin, a monk OF SCOTIS in the 4th century, of great repute for effecting miraculous cures (Pallad. Hist. Laus. 13; Sozom. Hist. vi, 29; Niceph. Hist. xi, 85).

Benjamin SEEB, ben-David, who lived in the 18th century, is the author of Shaare Benjamin (שְׁעָרֵי בְנִימִין), a dictionary to the Bible, Talmud, Midrash, and the writings of the Cabalists, etc. (Zolkiew, 1752). See Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 21; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 117. (B. P.)

Benjamin OF TUDELA. See TUDELA, BENJAMIN OF.

Benjamin, Eastburn, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New York, began his ministry as rector of Christ Church, Ramapo, N. Y., in 1862. In 1864 he was assistant minister of St. Ann's, New York city; in 1868 he officiated in New York without a regular charge; in 1870 was rector of the Church of the Holy Light, New York city, a position which he retained until 1872, continuing thereafter to reside in New York. He died Sept. 8, 1874, aged thirty-eight years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 145.

Benjamin, Judson, an American Baptist missionary, was born at Rodman, N. Y., Feb. 2, 1819, and was a graduate of Brown University in the class of 1846. He studied theology at the Newton Theological Institution one year (1846-47), and was ordained at Providence, R. I., Oct. 13, 1848, being under appointment as a missionary to Burmah. Sailing from Boston Oct. 21 of that year, he reached Tavoy, Burmah, April 9, 1849. He remained here about one year, and then removed, March, 1850, to Mergui, about ninety miles from Tavoy, which had become a missionary station in 1829. Here he devoted himself to the Salongs, collecting a vocabulary of twelve hundred words of their language, in which a Primer and Catechism were prepared. He was engaged in missionary work at this station nearly four years. He returned to the United States early in 1854, and died at Boston, Feb. 20, 1855. See The Missionary Jubilee, p. 238. (J. C. S.)

Benn, William, an English Nonconformist divine, was born at Egremont, in Cumberland, in November, 1600. He was educated at St. Bees, and at Queens College, Oxford. On leaving the university, he became rector of Oakingham, Berkshire, and afterwards chaplain to the marchioness of Northampton. In 1629 he obtained the rectory of All Saints, Dorchester, and continued in that capacity until Bartholomew's day, when he was ejected for nonconformity. "In 1654 he was one of the assistants to the commissioners for ejecting such as were called scandalous, ignorant, and insufficient ministers and schoolmasters." After his own ejection, he continued to preach occasionally, and was sometimes fined and imprisoned. He died March 22, 1680. He published an Answer to Mr. Francis Bampfield's Letter, in Vindication of the Christian Sabbath Against the Jewish (Lond. 1672), and a volume of sermons on Soul Prosperity (1683). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Benner, Johann Hermann, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 15, 1699, at Giessen, where he also studied. In 1729 he accepted the position as afternoon preacher; in 1731 he received permission to deliver theological lectures, and in 1735 was appointed professor of theology. In 1739 he received a call from the Göttingen University, but as his landgrave would not let him go, he was obliged to remain in his native place. In 1753 he was appointed superintendent, and in 1770 ecclesiastical counsellor. He died July 8, 1782. He published, Diss. de Majestate Christi Divina (Gissæ, 1732):—Diss. de Exultatione Mundi Suprema, ad Petri Sententiam Conformata 2 Petr. iii, 10, 12 (ibid. 1733):—Diss. de Baptismo Ephesinorum in Nomen Christi, e Pervulgata Sententia non Interpre- tando ad Actor. xix, 4 (ibid. eod.):—Diss. de Palo ex Carne Pauli Extracto 2 Cor. xii, 7 sq. (ibid. 1734):—Progr. quo de Illis, qui Loco Defunctorum Initantur 1 Cor. xv, 29 non Nihil Exponit, etc. (ibid. eod.):—Diss. Specimen Eloquentiæ Sacræ in Sermone Pauli, Materna Pietate Conciati Gal. iv, 19, 20 (ibid. eod.):—Progr. de Armis in Causa Christi Victricibus (ibid. 1735):—Diss. de Gemitu Ecclesiæ Suspirantis Libertatem Rom. viii, 19-23 (ibid. 1737), etc. See Döring, Die Gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 78 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bennet, Benjamin, a Baptist minister, was born in New Jersey in 1762. He received a public school education, studied theology, and was ordained as a minister of the Gospel at Middletown, N. J. Subsequently he was elected a representative from New Jersey to the Fourteenth Congress, and was re-elected to the Fifteenth Congress. His term of service continued from Jan. 15, 1816, to March 3, 1819. His death took place at Middletown, Oct. 8, 1840. See Poore, Congressional Directory, p. 280. (J. C. S.)

Bennet, George, at one time a Dissenting minister, subsequently in the Church of Scotland, published a work Against a Pretence of Reform (Lond. 1796):—and Olam Haneshenioth, or a View of the Intermediate State as it Appears in the Records of the Old and New Testaments, the Apocryphal Books, in Heathen Authors, the Greek and Latin Fathers (ibid. 1801). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bennet, James, a Scottish prelate, was chosen by the canons of St. Andrew's bishop of that see in 1328, and he obtained his episcopate by the collation of pope John XXII, before there was any account of the election. In 1329 he performed the office of setting the crown upon the head of David II, and soon afterwards was constituted chamberlain of Scotland. When Edward Baliol and his party prevailed, Bennet was forced to flee to Flanders, where he died, at Bruges, Sept. 22, 1332. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 23.

Bennet, John, an early English Wesleyan preacher, was a native of Derbyshire. He was converted under David Taylor, and commenced his itinerant labors in 1747. He labored in Derbyshire, Lancashire, and Cheshire, where he was impressed; his tact and bearing, however, soon gaining his release. On Dec. 26, 1752, he separated from the connection, taking a considerable part of the society with him, and formed an independent congregation at Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire. He died May 24, 1759, according to some, of leprosy. Bennet was a man of superior talents and education, attended the first conference, introduced the Scots into Derbyshire (Smith, i, 220), was one of the companions of Wesley (id. i, 239), and originated quarterly meetings (id. i, 250, 251). He married Grace Murray, to whom John Wesley made overtures of marriage. She lived in Christian retirement, near Chapel-en-le-Frith, and maintained a class-meeting in her house for many years, being partial to Methodist usages to the last. She died in 1803, aged eighty-nine. See Life and Times of Lady Huntingdon, i, 45; Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Smith, Hist. of the West. Methodists, i (see index, vol. iii); Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, i, 136, 224, 270, 352.

Bennet, R., an English Baptist minister, was born in the village of Beaulieu, Hants, in 1790, and was brought up to the trade of a shoemaker. His mind was awakened by the Spirit of God, and he finally met with Isaac Tinsley, through whose efforts he was converted. In 1813 he was baptized and joined the Church in Lymington; and in 1817 was one of twenty persons who were formed into a Church, at what was called Beaulieu Rails. In 1822 a prayer-meeting was started at Exbury, of which Mr. Bennet took the charge. Gradually he began to preach. At length a Church was formed at Blackfield Common, near by, and he was called to be its pastor, which position he held until his death,

May 16, 1857. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1857, p. 46, 47. (J. C. S.)

Bennet, Robert, D.D., an English Nonconformist divine, was educated at Oxford, and was presented to the rectory of Wadesden, Buckingham, where he continued till he was ejected for nonconformity in 1662. He afterwards settled at Aylesbury, where he preached privately to a small congregation, and from thence removed to Abington, where he died, April 6, 1687. He wrote "an excellent work," entitled A Theological Concordance of the Synonymous Words in Scripture (1657). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bennet, William Crosby, a minister of the German Reformed Church, was born on Long Island, N. Y., April 14, 1804. He came to Pennsylvania when quite young; studied at York, Pa., and was ordained in 1832, and sent as missionary to the Carolinas. After laboring there successfully for five years, he returned to the North, and exercised his ministry in several fields in Pennsylvania, principally in Cumberland County. He died in 1870. "He was a genial companion, and a warm friend. His appearance was venerable and dignified." See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Ref. Church, iv, 266-270. (D. Y. H.)

Bennett, Alfred, a Baptist minister, was born at Mansfield, Conn., Sept. 26, 1780. He was licensed to preach in 1806. In 1828 he accepted an appointment by the Board of Foreign Missions to visit churches and congregations, and he permanently gave himself to this work in 1832. He died May 10, 1851. An intellectual, well-balanced, and far-reaching mind gave him high rank among his denomination. He published a sermon entitled The Kingdom of Christ Distinguished from the Kingdom of Cæsar. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 535.

Bennett, Archibald, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Byron, N. Y., in 1807. He was converted at the age of twenty-two, and united with the Church in Byron. In 1840-41 he was especially interested in bringing about a union between the Free Communion and Free-will Baptists. In 1848 he moved to the West, and preached in several churches—viz. Paw Paw, Waverly, Jackson, etc., Mich., until the close of his life. He was engaged in about twenty revivals, witnessed over a thousand conversions, and baptized several hundreds. He died in Waverly, Oct. 22, 1869. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1870, p. 80. (J. C. S.)

Bennett, Asa, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated from New Brunswick Seminary, 1824, and was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick in the same year. His charges were, Schodack, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., 1824 to 1828; Ovid, Seneca Co., 1828 to 1838; Constantine, St. Joseph Co., Mich., 1843 to 1845. The date of his death is not known. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v.

Bennett, Charles E., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Rhode Island. His earlier years were devoted to the profession of music. Ordained by bishop Henshaw, he went to Crompton Mills under the direction of the Rhode Island Convocation. In the spring of 1849 he removed to Stonington, Conn., where he rendered gratuitous service to the rector of Calvary Church residing there. He died at Stonington, Conn., Jan. 26, 1850. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1850, p. 158.

Bennett, James, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born in London, May 22, 1774. He was designed for business by his father, but on his conversion, in his nineteenth year, he resolved to enter the Christian ministry, and preached his first sermon near Bath, in November, 1792. His ministerial preparation was received at Gosport, and in 1796 he accepted a call to Romsey, Hampshire, where he labored twenty-seven years. Mr. Bennett threw himself heartily into the great movements of the day, while at the same time he prosecuted his studies with untiring diligence. His talents soon attracted notice, and his influence was felt throughout the county. In 1823 he was invited to become the principal and theological tutor of Rotherham College, and to be the minister of Masborough Chapel. In 1815 he preached a sermon on "The Claims of London on the Zeal of Christians," maintaining that London ought to have the services of the best ministers that could be found; and shortly afterwards, on earnest and unanimous solicitation, he accepted the pastorate of Silver-street Chapel, in that city. His labors in the pulpit, on the platform, and for the press, were incessant, and such only as with a sinewy frame and marvellous health could have been accomplished. In 1840 he was chosen chairman of the Congregational Union, and in 1860 he retired from public life. He died Dec. 4, 1862. Dr. Bennett's life furnishes a noble example for the imitation of students for the ministry. Without early educational advantages, he reached an extent of real and useful scholarship which few ministers have possessed. He valued time aright. He lost no moments. He rose at five o'clock A.M. all the year round, and was incessantly and unweariedly industrious in his studies and public duties. He was an eminently devout man, and conscientious in all his labors. Dr. Bennett was a voluminous author; besides several sermons, preached on special occasions, he published, Life of the Rev. Risdon Darracott (the "Star of the West") (Taunton):—Lectures on the Evidences of Revelation:—Lectures on the History and Preaching of Christ (4 vols. 8vo):—and On the Acts of the Apostles (1 vol.):—The Congregational Lecture for 1841, on the Theology of the Early Christian Church:—The History of Dissenters, jointly with Dr. Bogue. He also wrote various smaller works, as well as tracts on controversial topics, in all of which the close thinker, keen logician, and terse writer are manifest. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 206.

Bennett, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wellington, Somersetshire, March 12, 1803. His father was a soldier, a man of vigorous mind, and a "Unitarian;" his mother was a pious "Evangelical." To the latter he attributed his early conversion to God. Although his early schooling was very limited, by diligent and prayerful self-culture he became an intelligent, earnest, and successful village preacher. His earliest formal connection with ministerial life was as a home missionary—sometimes walking more than thirty miles on Sunday. Subsequently he was pastor at Braunton a short time, and twenty-five years at Castle Hill, Northampton, when he resigned his charge, and, after living a few years at Slough, removed to Dalston, where he died, April 10, 1870. He was a laborious student; this, with his large-heartedness and his fidelity, made him an able minister of the New Testament. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 304.

Bennett, Leonard, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Dublin, Ireland, June 16, 1786. He experienced religion in 1806; landed in America in 1807, and entered the New England Conference in 1810. He labored faithfully until 1833, when he became superannuated. In 1841 he removed to Illinois, and died there in 1847. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1847, p. 126.

Bennett, Lucian S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Norwich, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1810. He experienced religion at the age of twenty, and in 1834 entered the Oneida Conference. Having spent eleven years upon laborious charges, and three as a superannuate, he died, Aug. 3, 1851. Mr. Bennett was a man of much feeling and great success in the ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 151.

Bennett, Moses G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Monmouth County, N. J., Jan. 29, 1820. He received the best Christian culture in early life; was converted at the family altar at the age of thirteen, and soon began laboring for the salvation of his associates and acquaintances. In 1845 he moved to Ohio, whither he appears to have fled to get rid of preaching. He even declined committing himself as a professor of religion, but was soon called out of his unfaithfulness by being asked by the pastor of the place if he ever enjoyed religion. From that time he resumed his Christian activity, and in 1847 entered the Ohio Conference, wherein he served, as health permitted, with zeal and fidelity until his death, March 8, 1857. Mr. Bennett was a man of indefatigable energy and impassioned eloquence. His social qualities were of the first order, and as a friend he was devoted. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 444.

Bennett, Perry, a Baptist minister, was born at Stonington, Conn., in 1824. He early evinced more than ordinary intellectual ability, and attained a high degree of scholarship without graduating from college. He was baptized in 1849, while principal of the academy at Wickford, R. I. In 1852 he was ordained pastor of the Church in Lebanon, Conn., where he remained two years; was pastor at Cold Spring, N. Y., one year; and in the spring of 1856 removed to Winchester, Ill., and was pastor five years; then went to Berlin, Sangamon Co., in which county he labored for thirteen years with great success. The last two years of his life he had charge of a school in Springfield, supplying, for most of the time, the pulpit of the North Church in that city. He died Sept. 5, 1873. See Minutes of Ill. Anniversaries, 1873, p. 15, 16. (J. C. S.)

Bennett, William, a Wesleyan minister in Nova Scotia, was born in England in 1770. He was sent out in 1800 as a missionary to Nova Scotia, there being at that time in the whole of British North America only three Wesleyan Methodist preachers besides himself. He travelled for twenty years and preached almost incessantly. "Among the sparse settlements of Cumberland County, in the forests of Hants, the valley of Annapolis, along the rocky southern shore, in the province of New Brunswick and in the rising towns, he watched over the flocks gathered by Black and the brothers Mann, and formed many new societies." He became a supernumerary in 1820; resided at Newport, N. S., until 1839; removed to Halifax in that year, was chaplain of the penitentiary, and died in that city, Nov. 6, 1858. Mr. Bennett was trustworthy and faithful to the interests of the Church. See Huestis, Memorials of Wesleyan Preachers in Eastern British America (Halifax, 1872), p. 19.

Bennett, William C., a German Reformed minister, was born on Long Island, N. Y., April 14, 1804. His early life was devoted chiefly to the missionary cause in the South. In 1834 he began his ministerial labors. In 1837 he came North and took charge of a congregation at Shippenburg, Pa., which he continued to serve until 1844. He died at Boiling Spring, Pa., April 12, 1870. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 266.

Benno (or Bennor), a German writer and prelate, lived in the second half of the 11th century. He was raised to the cardinalate by the anti-pope Guibert, who styled himself Clement III, and in return he wrote a satire on Sylvester II and Gregory VI. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bennu, in Egyptian mythology, was the sacred bird of Osiris, probably a kind of lapwing. From its being supposed to accompany the soul through its journeys in the lower life, it was gradually accepted as its emblem, the emblem of its resurrection. It was further also a symbol of a period of time, the great cycle of 1265 years, which gave rise to the Grecian fable of the phoenix.

Benoist (or Benoit), an English theologian and biographer, entered the Order of St. Benedict, was prior of the Monastery of Canterbury, and afterwards priest of Peterborough. In 1189 he assisted at the coronation of Richard I, and in 1191 he was elected guard of the grand seal. He died in 1193, or, according to bishop Nicholson, in 1200. He wrote, Life of Thomas à Becket:—History of Henry II and Richard I, from 1170 to 1192 (Oxford, 1735, 2 vols., ed. Hearne). The English considered this the best history of the epoch. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benoist, bishop of MARSEILLES in the first half of the 13th century, was one of the first Minorite Brothers, and also, it is said, a disciple of Francis of Assisi. In 1229 he was chosen arbitrator by the cardinal of San Angelo between the Marseillians and the Monastery of St. Victor. He wrote a treatise entitled, De Summa Trinitate, etc. (published by Baluze in his Miscellanies, vol. vi). He undertook two journeys to Palestine, one in 1239, the other in 1261. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benoist, canon of the Church of St. PETER, at Rome, lived near the middle of the 12th century, under pope Innocent II. He wrote a treatise entitled, De Ecclesiastico Ordine Totius Anni et Præcipue Apostolicæ Dignitatis et Totius Curie (Paris, 1689, in the Museum Italicum, ii, 118). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benoit. See BENEDICT; BENOIST.

Benoît D'Aniane, Saint, a reformer of monastic discipline, was born at Languedoc, about 750. He was the son of Aigulfe, count of Maguelonne, and was at first cup-bearer of Pepin and of Charlemagne. In 774 he retired to the Abbey of St. Seine, where the friars desired to make him priest, but he refused, and withdrew to his native place near Aniane. He constructed a small hermitage near the chapel of St. Saturnin, upon the river of Anian. The strictness and sanctity of the life of this hermit drew around him a large number of disciples, so that in 782 he added a new monastery to the one already constructed. Louis the Debonnaire placed him in charge of all the monasteries of the kingdom of Aquitania, and charged him to establish everywhere the rules of the founder. He died in 821, at the monastery near Aix-la-Chapelle. His chief work was, Codex Regularum (Rome, 1661; Paris, 1663), in three parts: the first containing the rules of the Oriental fathers, the second those of the fathers of the West, and the third those of the fathers of the Church, for the friars and nuns. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benoît, Jean (1), a French theologian, native of Evreux, entered the Dominican order about 1510, and afterwards taught, with great success, theology at Paris. Being appointed priest of the Valley of Ecoliers by Henry II, he introduced a new course of discipline. He was a distinguished mathematician and architect, and assisted, it is said, in the construction of the château of Anet. He died in 1563, leaving, Introductions Diaplecticæ (Paris, 1538). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benoît, Jean (2), a French historian and preacher of the Dominican order, was born at Carcassonne in 1632. Not unacquainted with French and Latin literature, he devoted himself particularly to an evangelical career, and preached with success in the principal cities of Midi. He died May 8, 1705, leaving, Problème de la Victoire et de la Paix, a poem (Paris, 1687):—Histoire des Albigeois et de Vaudois (ibid. 1691):—Suite de l'Histoire des Albigeois (Toulouse, 1693). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Benoît Michel, a learned French Jesuit missionary, was born at Autun, Oct. 8, 1715. He studied especially mathematics, astronomy, and physics, and departed for China in 1745. He executed several hydraulic works which the emperor Kien-Long intrusted to him, and made known to this prince the telescope, the pneumatic machine, the graving-tool, etc. These sciences aided him in accomplishing his object, which was the conversion of the people. At his death, which occurred Oct. 25, 1774, the Christians of Pekin mourned for him, and the emperor Kien-Long keenly lamented him. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bensaiten, in Japanese mythology, is the goddess of flowers and fruits, whose cherry-festivals are celebrated with plays, feasts, and dances, lasting a number of days.

Benser, THEODOR, a Lutheran minister, was born at Uelzen, in Hanover, July 9, 1848. He received his early education at a German gymnasium, came to this country in 1869, and after completing his academical studies at Watertown, Wis., he entered the theological seminary at St. Louis, Mo. In 1873 he accepted a call to Springfield, Ill.; went in 1875 to Davenport, Ia., and from thence in 1878 to El Paso, Ill. He died March 13, 1881, at Memphis, Tenn. (B. P.)

Bensi, BERNARDO, an Italian theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Venice, July 16, 1688. He was for a long time professor of ethics at Venice, and died in 1760. His principal works are, Praxis Tribunalis Conscientiæ (Bologna, 1742):—Dissertatio de Casibus Reservatis (Venice, 1743). This last work made quite a sensation, and the author was obliged to publish a refutation. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bensley, JOHN, an English Methodist preacher, a native of Norwich, was born Dec. 17, 1806. Brought up by his Methodist parents to love God, he was converted at fifteen, and soon afterwards was made a local preacher. He continued among the Wesleyans till the Warrenite disruption in 1834, when he united with the New Connection, and the same year entered their ministry, going out as a supply to Truro. He travelled nineteen years, in thirteen circuits, to the edification and delight of his hearers. He was a man of culture, mental power, and piety. His health failed in 1852, and he removed to Sheffield as a supernumerary, where he died of typhus fever, Nov. 1, 1853. See Minutes of the Conference.

Benson, Benjamin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Dec. 6, 1807. He embraced religion in 1827; received license to exhort in 1828, and in 1830 entered the Philadelphia Conference. He filled various appointments faithfully until 1836, when a pulmonary disease induced him to visit the South. He died at Cambridge, Md., in October, 1840. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1841, p. 154.

Benson, John Henry, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Boston, Mass., Aug. 10, 1797, and lived there and in New York city until he was twenty-three, when he went to the West. He experienced religion in 1825, and in 1828 was admitted into the Illinois Conference, wherein he labored diligently until his decease, Feb. 5, 1843. Mr. Benson was very highly honored and esteemed. He was amiable, but was never known to jest. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 423.

Benson, Martin, D.D., an English prelate, was born in Herefordshire in 1689. He became prebendary of Salisbury in 1720, archdeacon of Berks in 1721, prebendary of Durham in 1723, and bishop of Gloucester in 1734, and died Aug. 30, 1752. He published a Sermon before the House of Lords (1738), and Sermons (1736-40). See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bent, JOHN, an English martyr, was a tailor living in Urchevant, who was burned in the town of Devises, Wiltshire, for denying the sacrament of the altar, in 1532. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv. 706.

Bentham, James, an English clergyman, was born at Ely in 1708. He was educated at Cambridge, and after several rectorships he obtained a stall in the cathedral of that city, and published, at Cambridge, in 1771, The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Ely, from 675 to 1771. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bentham, Robert, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Dent, Yorkshire, in 1791. His parents designed him for the ministry of the Established Church, and gave him a liberal education. He was for a short time classical tutor in a private school. In 1812 he was admitted into the Methodist ministry, and labored for twenty-eight years. He died Sept. 15, 1843. He was an instructive preacher.

Bentis, in Slavonic mythology, was a deity of the Poles, to whose protecting care travellers commended themselves by sacrifices and promises.

Bentivoglio, GUIDO, an eminent Italian ecclesiastical statesman and historian, was born at Ferrara in 1579. He was educated at Padua, and then went to reside at Rome, where he was favorably received by pope Clement VIII, who made him a prelate. He was sent as nuncio into Flanders, and afterwards to France; and when he returned to Rome he was intrusted by Louis XIII with the management of French affairs at that court. In 1621 he was made a cardinal, and in 1641 bishop of Terracina. He was the intimate friend of pope Urban VIII, and on the death of that pontiff public opinion was directed to Bentivoglio as his successor; but before the election took place, he died suddenly in 1644. He wrote, an Account of the War in Flanders (1632-39):—a volume of Memoirs (1648):—and a collection of Letters (1631). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.

Bentley, Charles, a Congregational minister, was born at South Tyringham, now Monterey, Mass., April 1, 1799. He was converted at the age of eighteen, and immediately began preparation for the Christian ministry, maintaining himself at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. His first year of college life was spent at Williams, and the last three at Amherst, from which he graduated in 1824. After a year of theological study with Rev. Allen McLean, of Simsbury, Conn., he was licensed to preach in 1825, and in the following year was ordained pastor at Middle Haddam. Thence he removed to Granby, where he was installed in 1833, and remained for six years. For eleven years, from 1839, he was pastor in Harwinton; after which, in 1850, he was installed pastor in Green's Farms. His fifth and last pastorate was in Willington, and lasted for eight years, when he was constrained by the infirmities of age to resign his office, and soon after removed to Berlin, where he died July 23, 1869. Mr. Bentley was one of the most successful ministers of his day, and several very remarkable revivals occurred during his ministrations. For a number of years he was one of the trustees of the Theological Institute of Connecticut, and was otherwise deeply interested in the educational work of his church. See Cong. Quarterly, 1870, p. 56.

Bentley, Christopher, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Greenhow Hill, Pateley Bridge, about 1824. He was converted when young, joined the Methodist Society, and became a local preacher at seventeen. In 1844 he removed into the Bakewell Circuit, where his preaching made him very popular. In 1849 he entered into business, but in 1854 gave it up, and in 1855 was accepted as an itinerant minister in the Methodist Free Church, travelling in twelve circuits as an earnest, active, and successful preacher. He had a valuable library of old theology well studied. Going to Lancaster in 1877 in feeble health, his weakness increased, but he continued to preach on the Sabbath till his death by apoplexy, May 16, 1868. He was a genial, benevolent, godly man. See Minutes of the 22d Annual Assembly.

Bentley, Samuel N., a Baptist minister, was born at Upper Stearacke, N. S., July 4, 1822. He pursued his college studies at Acadia College, N. S., and took the full three years' course of theological study at Newton (1847-50). A little more than a year after he completed his theological studies, he was ordained, in November, 1851, and became pastor of the Church in Livermore, N. S., where he remained not far from five years (1851-56). From Livermore he removed to Halifax, N. S., where he was pastor three years (1856-59). He died Nov. 26, 1859. See Newton General Catalogue, p. 35. (J. C. S.)

Bentley, William (1), a Unitarian minister, was born in Boston, Mass., June 22, 1759. He graduated at Harvard College in 1777, and was immediately employed as an assistant in the Boston Grammar-school, in which he had been fitted for college. In 1779 he was preceptor of the North Grammar-school in Boston. In 1780 he was appointed Latin and Greek tutor in Harvard College, and held the office until 1783, devoting a portion of his time to the study of theology, with a view to entering the ministry. In September, 1783, he was ordained as colleague pastor with the Rev. James Dimon over the East, or second formed, Church in Salem, Mass. On the decease of his colleague in 1788, he became sole pastor, and continued so as long as he lived. In 1794, when the Salem Gazette was published, he aided by writing a summary of news for the paper. He was once elected chaplain to Congress, but declined the honor. In 1805 he was appointed to the presidency of the college established by Mr. Jefferson in Virginia. This he also declined. He had one of the largest libraries in the country, which he bequeathed to Meadville College, Pa., and to the American Antiquarian Society at Worcester, Mass. He died Dec. 2, 1819. He published a great many single sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 154.

Bentley, William (2), a Baptist minister, was born at Newport, R. I., March 3, 1775. He removed to Boston, Mass., at the age of fourteen, and joined the Baptist Church in 1791. He commenced preaching in 1806; served as pastor at Woburn and at Malden, and became a settled pastor at Tiverton, R. I. He was ordained at Salem, Mass., Oct. 9, 1807. He subsequently preached at Worcester, Mass., and at Wethersfield, Conn. He died Dec. 24, 1855. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 636; Baptist Encyclop. p. 96.

Benton, Byron, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Caldwell County, Ky., Dec. 18, 1812. He removed to Port Gibson, Miss., in 1820, and was converted there in 1827. He was a printer by trade, and assisted in publishing the Mississippi Christian Herald, at Natchez, and at the same time was editor and proprietor of the Natchez Courier. In 1837 he published the Southron, at Port Gibson. In 1838 he was licensed to preach and admitted into the Mississippi Conference. In its active ranks he travelled until 1842, when, on account of ill-health, he located. In 1845 he re-entered the conference, and remained as faithful as health would admit until his sudden death, June 28, 1851. Mr. Benton was a pure man, zealous, devoted, unostentatious, generous, and much beloved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1851, p. 363.

Benton, Carlendo N., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Franklin, Delaware Co., N. Y., Jan. 29, 1827. He was educated at the Union Theological Seminary of New York. He was licensed by Tioga Presbytery, and began his work as a missionary under the American Sunday School Union. He was ordained as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Appalachin, N. Y., in 1857. He was killed on the battle-field at Newbern, N. C., March, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 289.

Benton, George, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was rector of Christ Church, Rockfish, N. C., and died at that place, July 15, 1862, aged fifty-four years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 149.

Benton, Samuel Austin, a Congregational minister, was born at Waterford, Vt., May 3, 1807. He worked upon a farm until twenty-one years of age, but afterwards pursued academical studies and entered Amherst College, and subsequently Middlebury, where he graduated in 1836. After teaching two years in the academy at Randolph, Vt., he supplied the Church in Stafford ten months, and was ordained at Saxton's River, Vt., in 1840. From 1842 to 1855 he labored in Michigan, under the Home Missionary Society, and the eight years following was pastor at Anamosa, Ia. He then received a commission as chaplain of the 31st Iowa regiment, and remained in that service till the close of the war. He died in Barnet, Vt., Nov. 19, 1864. Mr. Benton was "a ready and powerful speaker, and his labors among the Western churches were greatly blessed." See Cong. Quarterly, 1866, p. 208.

Benton, Sanford, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Tolland, Conn., July 12, 1807. He was converted in early life, and in 1830 entered the New England Conference. From this time he devoted his time and talents to the work of soul-saving with a zeal and constancy rarely surpassed, until his decease, Nov. 25, 1862. Mr. Benton was emphatically an excellent man. His Christian life was uniform and untarnished. As a pastor he was laborious and devoted; as a preacher clear, earnest, pointed. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 59.

Benton, William Austin, a Congregational minister, was born at Tolland, Conn., Oct. 11, 1817. He spent two years in Williams College, and entered Yale in 1841. After graduation he taught for a time, and then began his theological course in the seminary in East Windsor, where he remained until 1846. Having given himself to the foreign missionary work, he was ordained May 18, 1847. In the following month he sailed as a missionary of the American Board for Syria and Palestine. Arriving in Beirut in October, he spent the winter in the study of Arabic, and in April, 1848, went to Aleppo, where he labored with zeal and success until February, 1851, when ill-health compelled him to return. Re-embarking for Syria in January, 1853, he established in April a missionary station at Bhamdun, on Mount Lebanon, where he continued until the spring of 1869. The remaining years of his life were spent in America. He died at Barre, Mass., Aug. 23, 1874. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1875.

Benus, an abbot among the monks of Tabenna, in the 4th century. He was famed for his gentleness (Palladius, Hist. Laus. 49; Rufinus de Mon. 2; Sozomen, Hist. vi, 28; Niceph. Hist. xi, 34).

Benveniste, a name common to a number of Jewish writers, of whom we mention the following. See also BENBENISTA.

1. CHAJIM, rabbi at Smyrna, was born in 1600 at Constantinople, and died in 1673. He is the author of ס' כנסת הגדולה, an extensive commentary on the Arba Turim of Jacob ben-Asheri (q. v.), published at Constantinople and Lvorno.

2. ISRAEL, who died at Constantinople in 1627, wrote ס' ביה רש"א, or a collection of fifty-two lectures on the Pentateuch, repentance, etc., edited by his son Abraham (Constantinople, 1678).

3. JOSHUA, a brother of Chajim, author of אוצר ירושע, or sixty-seven lectures on the Pentateuch, edited by S. Gabbai (Constantinople, 1677); שוקה ירושע, or a commentary on the Hagadoth of the Jerusalem Talmud.

4. MEYR, who wrote under the title of אורי אורי, emendations on the Midrashim, as Sifra, Sifre, Mechilta, Tanchuma, and Jalkut (Salonichi, 1565; Prague, 1624).

5. MOSES, author of פני משנה, or decisions on Jacob ben-Asheri's (q. v.) Arba Turim (Constantinople, 1671-).

1719). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, p. 106 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 56. (B. P.)

Benvenuto, GIOVANNI BATTISTA (called L'Ortolano), an Italian painter, was born at Ferrara about 1490, and studied a few years in his native city, after which he visited Bologna and became a pupil of Bartolomeo Bagnacavallo. One of his best pictures is the Virgin and Infant, with saints, in the Church of St. Niccolo, 1520; in St. Maria he painted a Nativity; and in St. Lorenzo the Adoration of the Magi. He died at Ferrara in 1525. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Ben-Zeb, JEHUDA LEB, a Jewish philologist, was born not far from Cracow, in 1766, and died at Vienna, Feb. 25, 1811. Having devoted himself entirely to the study of philosophy and philology, in which latter department he especially distinguished himself, he resorted in 1787 to Berlin, where, at the age of twenty-one, he published the work of Saadia Gaon (q. v.), אמנות הדת, or Religion and Philosophy, with a twofold commentary (Berlin, 1798). He then went to Breslau, where he remained about ten years, and published in 1796 his highly esteemed תלמוד לשון עברי, a Hebrew grammar, written in Hebrew, of which improved editions appeared at Vienna, 1806, 1818, 1825; Königsberg, 1859. Two years later (1798), he issued from the press חכמת יהושע בן-סירח, The Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach, in Syriac with Hebrew letters, a Hebrew and German translation, and a Hebrew commentary, of which improved editions appeared in Vienna, 1807, 1818, 1828, and 1844; and twelve months after, his מגלת יהודית, The Book of Judith, translated into Hebrew and German, with a Hebrew commentary (Vienna, 1799), of which another edition appeared in 1819. He then went to Vienna, where he published his famous school-book, בית הספר, composed of two parts (a) מסילת התלמוד, Method of Learning Hebrew, and (b) למוד משרים, Ethics, of which improved editions appeared in 1809, 1825, and 1842. All his labors were, however, preparatory for his great work, his אוצר השקשים, Hebrew Lexicon, which he published, taking Kimchi's lexicon for his basis, in 1797-98, in 3 vols. Improved editions of it appeared in 1804, 1807, 1816, 1839-40, and 1862-64, after the edition of M. Lettieris. He also wrote קדוש אל-מקראי, An Introduction to the Old Testament (Vienna, 1810, and since printed in the Vienna Bible Work, ibid. 1832-36, 19 vols.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 105 sq.; Steinschneider, Bibl. Handbuch, p. 20 sq.; Kitto, Cyclop. s. v.; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, xi, 133; Delitzsch, Zur Geschichte der jüd. Poesie, p. 106, 110; Kalisch, Hebrew Grammar, ii, 40; Benjakob, Ozar Ha-Sepbarim, i, 23, No. 458; ii, 287, No. 308; 293, No. 450; iii, 155, No. 613 (Wilna, 1880); Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 107. (B. P.)

Benzel, Henry, a prominent Swedish theologian, was born at Strengnas, Aug. 7, 1689. Having studied at Upsal and Altorf, he was in 1719 appointed professor of philosophy at Lund, was made in 1729 professor of Oriental languages, and in 1732 professor and doctor of theology. In 1738 he was appointed provost of Lund, and in 1740 bishop there. He succeeded his brother in the archbishopric of Upsal in 1747, and died May 20, 1758. He published, Syntagma Dissertationum in Academia Lundensi Habitarum (Leipzig, 1745), containing an account of his extensive travels and researches in the East. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v. (B. P.)

Benzel, Jacob, a Swedish theologian, was born Feb. 25, 1683, at Upsal, where he also pursued his theological studies. In 1718 he was appointed professor of theology at Lund, and was made in 1725 doctor of divinity; in 1731 he became bishop of Gothenburg, and in 1744 archbishop of Sweden and Finland. He died

June 14, 1747, leaving, Dissertatio de Palästina:—De Fatis Palästinae:—De Prædestinatione Æterna. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Benzelius, ERIC, a learned Swedish prelate, son of one who bore the same name, was born at Upsal in 1675. He was well versed in theology, languages, antiquities, and history. Returning from his travels in the principal countries of Europe, he became successively professor of theology, bishop of Gothenburg, of Linköping, and archbishop of Upsal, which position his father had formerly held. He died in 1743, leaving, Monumenta Sueco-Gothica:—Ulphilas Illustratus:—a work upon the history of Sweden, editions of several histories of the North Channel, and Cyclos Judaicus, translated from Moses Maimonides. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Beoædh (Lat. Beda or Beatus), bishop of Ardarna, in Roscommon, was the son of Olcan, of the race of Lugaith. He was a disciple of St. Patrick; being possibly the St. Beatus, bishop of Duncruithen, of whom St. Evinus writes in his Tripartite Life of St. Patrick. He died March 8, 524, and his bell "Ceolan-Beoædh," covered with gems and kept in a silver case, is said to have been preserved as a relic in the Church of Bailnag Cleirach. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 562-63, and Tr. Thaum. p. 156, c. 32; Kelly, Cal. of Ir. Saints, p. 89; O'Connor, Rer. Hib. Script. ii, 130; O'Donovan, Four Masters, i, 170, 171.

Beoan. There are several saints of this name, but only two of them can be treated in detail.

1. Bishop of Tithchuillim (now Feighcullen, County Kildare, Ireland, was a son of Nesson, of the race of Cathaoir Mór of Leinster. He was abbot of Ard-cuilin and of Feighcuilin (if they were not identical), and at the latter his feast is celebrated Aug. 8.

2. Bishop of Tamlacht-Menainn—commemorated Oct. 26. The Mart. Doneg., at this date, associates him with "Meallan," and locates them at "Loch Bricreun, in Uieath-Uladh" (Iveagh, County Down). The other martyrologies call him a Briton, but the writer of St. Fursey's Life says that the "two venerable men" (Beoan and Meldan) were of the province of South Munster (Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 455, 457; Reeves, Eccl. Antiq. p. 112-114). He is frequently mentioned in the Irish Life of St. Patrick, and Meldan, his companion, was "synedrus seu pater spiritualis" of St. Fursey. St. Fursey took their relics with him when he left Ireland, and deposited them in the chapel dedicated to Sts. Peter and Paul on the top of the hill of Cignes, at Peronne, in France. Beoan flourished in A.D. 590, but he must have died before 626, as he appears in St. Fursey's vision.

Beode. See BOETHIUS.

Beog (or Beococ), an Irish saint, commemorated Oct. 25, is most probably the St. Daboc who, when living in a "penal cave" on the island in Lough Derg, afterwards made famous as the scene of St. Patrick's Purgatory, saw a bright light in the north, and told his disciples that this represented the glory of St. Columba, afterwards to be born in that region. His Life is given by O'Hanlon, Lives of Irish Saints, i, 11-16.

Beoghn, abbot of Bangor, County Down, Ireland—commemorated as a saint Aug. 22—succeeded St. Comgall, A.D. 600; and died in 605. In the Four Masters (by O'Donovan, i, 201) is given a wild legend, in which Sts. Comgall and Beoan are engaged in the capture of a salmon, which proves to be Liban, the daughter of Eochaidh, who had been drowned in Lough Neagh. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 1-3; O'Connor, Rer. Hib. Script. ii, 149; Reeves, Eccl. Antiq. p. 55, 265, 376.

Beonna (Binna or Bynna), the name of several early English ecclesiastics. (1.) A Mercian witness to charters, about 730. (2.) A Mercian abbot, who attests charters from 767 onwards. He appears to have been abbot of Peterborough, and attended the great Council of Clovesho, of 808, in attendance on the bishop of Lichfield; and continued to sign charters until 805. It is just possible that he is (3) the Beonna who became bishop of Hereford in 823, and died in 830. His relics were, according to Hugh Candidus, preserved at Breton.

Beorchtyth (or Berthgyth), an early English abbess who addresses two letters to a man named Balthard, probably her brother, desiring to see him. If the Balthard in question be the Kentish nobleman of that name, Berthgyth would seem to have been in a German monastery. She was a daughter of the missionary abbess Chunihilt, aunt of Lullus, sent by Boniface into Thuringia.

Beorthwald. See BERTHWALD.

Beorwald, abbot of Glastonbury, early in the 8th century, has been confounded erroneously with Beorhtwald, archbishop of Canterbury. All that is known of him is in connection with St. Boniface. He is said to have taken part in a West-Saxon synod, in which Boniface was sent to the archbishop of Canterbury, to make certain inquiries, between 710 and 716 (Willibald, Life of Boniface). There is a letter of archbishop Brihtwald to Forthere, bishop of Sherborne, begging him to order Beorwald to release a captive girl, which he had refused to do at the archbishop's personal request. In the list of the abbots of Glastonbury given by William of Malmesbury, he appears twice, first as Beorhtwald the sixth, and again as Beorwald the seventh, abbot; but in the more ancient list he is placed fourth.

Berab, JACOB. See JACOB BERAB.

Berach (Lat. Veretus) was the name of several early Irish ecclesiastics. (1.) The abbot of Bangor, County Down, who succeeded Segán, son of O'Conn, in 663, and died of the great plague in 664. He is commemorated April 21. (2.) A better-known Berach was abbot of Cluaincáirphe, now Killybarry. Feb. 15 is the day observed in his memory, but the dates of his Acts are uncertain. He was the son of Nemnald, of the race of Dobhtha, and was born at Gortnaluchra, near Cloon, Feb. 15, 521. He was successively under St. Daiglo and St. Kevin, and the place of his monastery was pointed out by a stag which carried his baggage. The date of his death is uncertain, but it probably occurred before the close of the 6th century. St. Áengus counts him among the bishop-saints of Ireland.

Beraldini, PAULINO. See BERARDINI.

Berandine, GABRIEL, a French martyr, belonged to the Church of Geneva, in France. He was taken to Chambery, and put in prison for rebuking a priest, who in his sermon had abused the name of God. He first had his tongue cut off, and then was burned. This occurred in 1550. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 407.

Berandutius (or Beranduccio), MAURISCO ANTONIO, an Italian theologian and jurist, a native of Biseglia, in the kingdom of Naples, who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, wrote Somma Corona de' Confessori, dove si Trutta d' Agni Sorte di Restituzioni, Usure et Cambii (1591). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berard of CARBIO, in Umbria, Saint and Martyr, was one of the six monks whom St. Francis of Assisi sent from Italy into Spain, to convert the Moors. Berard (who knew a little of Arabic) was appointed the chief of the mission; they penetrated to Seville, where they preached in the mosque. The Moors, taking them for madmen, drove them from the mosque; but, when they tried to convert the prince, sent them to Morocco; where they were cast into prison, but, having escaped, they began again to preach in public. The king, having tried in vain to silence them, was greatly exasperated, and with his cimeter split open their heads, Jan. 15, 1220. Dom Pedro, infante of Portugal, brought their bodies to Portugal, and placed them in the Church of the Holy Cross, at Coimbra. Pope Sixtus IV canonized them Aug. 7, 1481; and their Life was written by the infante Dom Pedro mentioned above. See Baillet, i, 210, Jan.

Berardi, an Italian theologian of the Augustinian order, who lived at Savona, in the latter half of the 15th century, wrote, Commentaria in Omnes D. Pauli Epistolas:—Sermones:—Tractatus de Hæreticis sui Temporis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berardi, Carlo Sebastiano, a famous Italian canonist, was born at Oneglia, Aug. 26, 1719. He studied theology among the Piarists at Savona, received holy orders, and afterwards betook himself to the study of jurisprudence, especially of canon law. In 1749 he was appointed prefect of the Law-college at the Royal Academy; in 1754, professor of law at the University of Turin, and died in 1768. He wrote, Gratiani Canones, Genuini ab Apocryphis Discreti, Corrupti ad Emendatorum Codicum Fidem Exacti, Difficiliores Commoda Interpretatione Illustrati (Taur. 1752-57; Venet. 1777, 1783):—De Variis Sacror. Canonum Collectionibus ante Gratianum, printed with the foregoing:—Commentaria in Jus Ecclesiasticum Universum (Taur. 1766 sq.; Venet. 1778, 1789; Laureti, 1847):—Institutiones Juris Ecclesiastici (Taur. 1769). See Mazzuchelli, Gli Scrittori d'Italia, ii, 2, 910; Vallauri, Storia delle Università degli Studi del Piemonte, iii, 219; Schulte, Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des canonischen Rechts, iii, 1, 524; Möhler, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Berardi, Fabio, an Italian engraver, was born at Siena in 1728, and studied under Wagner of Venice. The following are a few of his principal religious prints: St. Seraphinus Worshipping the Cross; Isaac Blessing Jacob, and the Sacrifice of Gideon; Jacob and Rachel. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berardi, Timoteo, an Italian theologian of the order of Carmelites, a native of Genoa, was bishop of Noli in 1588, and died in 1616. He wrote, Declamationes Panegyricæ de Sacra Fide et de Romano Pontifice; also some small philosophical and theological treatises. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bérardier, DENIS (surnamed Fénelon), a French priest, professor, and member of the first national assembly, was born at Quimper in 1729. He was the son of a merchant of Quimper, and first pursued his studies at a Jesuit school at that place. At Paris, where he afterwards went, he studied philosophy and theology, and became doctor at the Sorbonne. At the time of the expulsion of the Jesuits in 1762, he was appointed by M. de la Chalotais principal of the College of Quimper, to which institution he presented a cabinet of natural sciences, very valuable for that epoch. The opposition which he encountered on the part of the Jesuits, it is said, led him to abandon Quimper. March 19, 1778, he was appointed principal; May 1, 1780, administrator; and in 1787 grand-master of the College Louis-le-Grand, at Paris. From this time he was found mingling with men, and in the memorable affairs of the epoch. He numbered among his pupils Luce of Lancinal, Camillus Desmoullins, and Maximilian Robespierre. Camillus saved his life Sept. 2, and still later, in 1793, he turned away from the dwelling of his master the dangers which were threatened by the rioters. As to Robespierre, he obtained at the close of his course of study, at the recommendation of Berardier, a gratuity of six hundred pounds. Berardier held his position in 1789, as assistant deputy of the clergy at the constituent assembly, when he opposed the civil constitution of the clergy. He signed the protestation against this act, and naturally refused the bishopric of Quimper, to which he was elected. He became grand-master of the College of Conformity, and died in 1794. He wrote, among other works, L'Eglise Constitutionnelle Confondue par elle-même (Paris, Crapart, 1792):—Les Principes de la Foi sur le Gouvernement de l'Eglise, etc. (ibid. 1791). This work had fourteen editions in less than a month, and some were entitled Les Vrais Principes de la Constitution du Clergé. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berardini (Bernardini or Beraldini), PAULINO, an Italian theologian of the Dominican order, was born at Lucca about 1515, and died at Naples in 1585. His principal works are, Quodlibeta Theologica:—Tabula sive Index Sententiarum in Commentario Thomæ Cajetani super Summam S. Thomæ de Aquino:—Chronica Ordinis:—Concordia Ecclesiastica contra tutti gli Heretici:—Difensione della Vita e della Dottrina del P. Geron. Savonarola:—Narrazione e Discorso circa la Contraddizione contra l'Opere di Geronimo Savonarola. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bérauld (or Béraud), Armand Bernard, a French theologian, who lived in the early half of the 18th century, wrote, Theses Theologicae (Paris, 1717):—Traité des Annates, etc. (Amsterdam, 1718). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bérauld (or Bérault), Michel, a French Protestant theologian, was born about 1535, at Maiss. About the year 1555 he left the convent of the Dominicans of his native place, and joined the Reformed Church. In 1560 he was received into the evangelical ministry, and ministered to the Church at Ladève from 1561 to 1562, and at Béziers from 1563 to 1564. Being driven away from the latter place, he went to Montauban. In 1573 he was at Puy-laurens, and in 1576 again at Béziers. Being obliged to leave this place a second time, he became pastor at Réalmont. In 1579 he was appointed pastor and professor of theology at Montauban, where he died, July 11, 1610. He took a very active part in the affairs of the Reformed Church, and presided at the national synods held at Montauban in 1594, at Montpellier in 1598, and at La Rochelle in 1607. Of his numerous works we mention, Athénagoras d'Athènes, Philosophie Chrestien, touchant la Résurrection des Morts (Montauban, 1582):—Brûre et Claire Défense de la Vocation des Ministres de l'Evangile, etc. (ibid. 1598):—Epistola Apologetica ad Plantavitium Pausum Semijesuitam (1608):—Disputationum Theologicarum Prima de Sacra Theologia (1608). See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bérault-Bercastel, ANTOINE HENRI DE, a French Jesuit, was born Nov. 2, 1722, at Brieg, near Metz; and died as canon of Noyon in 1794. He is the author of a popular Church history—Histoire de l'Eglise (Paris, 1778–90, 24 vols.)—comprising the period from the founding of the Church to the year 1721. This work has often been reprinted, with corrections and a continuation, by Guillon (Besançon and Paris, 1820–21, 12 vols.); by Pelier de Lacroie (Ghent, 1829–33, 18 vols.); by count Rubino (Lyons and Paris, 1842, 16 vols.). The fifth edition, coming down to the year 1844, was published by Henrion (Paris, 1844, 18 vols.). It was also translated into Italian and German. See Funk, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Berber Version OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES. The whole of the interior of Northern Africa is inhabited by the Berbers, representatives of the ancient Libyan race. They are divided into several distinct nations, of which the principal are the Amazigh or Berbers of Northern Atlas; the Shellahs, who inhabit the southern part of the same mountain chain; the Kabyles of the Algerine and Tunisian mountains; and the Tuarick tribes of Siwah, Sokna, and the Western desert.

A translation of the first twelve chapters of St. Luke into the Algerine-Berber (or Showiah) dialect of the Berber language spoken by the Kabyle tribes was published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1833, from a MS. which included the four Gospels and the book of Genesis, and which was purchased by the society of Mr. Hodgson, American consul at Algiers. This is the only part hitherto published. See Bible of Every Land, p. 403. (B. P.)

Bercarius. See BERTHARIUS.

Berchan (Lat. Berchanus and Barachianus). Several of this name are found in Irish hagiology, of some of whom but little is known. Of this class are Berchan of Cluain-Aedha-Aithmet, in Luighne, commemorated June 5; Berchan of Cluain-caoi, May 24; Berchan of Inis-rochla, in Loch Erne, Nov. 24; and Berchan, son of Neman, brother of St. Sedna of Killaine. Of those better known are:

1. OF CLUAIN-SOSTA—commemorated Dec. 4. The Mart. Doneg. calls him "bishop and apostle of God, of Cluainsosta, in the Failghe." He was the son of Muiredhach, of the race of Cairbre Righfoda; and was called also Ferdul-leithe (the man of two portions), as he spent half his life in Alba, and the other half in Erin. The Scotch calendars place this saint's day on April 6, and make him bishop in the Orkneys. Camerarius says that he was celebrated in the province of Stirling, and passed his youth in the monastery of St. Columba, near there. He has several places in Scotland named after him, and his grave was said to be in Inishmore, in Galway Bay. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 715, n.; Forbes, Kal. of Scot. Saints, p. 279; O'Curry, Lect. on Anc. Ireland, iii, 66.

2. OF ECHDRUM—celebrated May 7. From the dates and other circumstances this Berchan seems to be the Becanus of the race of Colla-Dachrioch, whom Colgan gives (Acta Sanctorum, p. 782–83) as brother of St. Cairnech and St. Rouan.

3. The Irish calendars, under April 10, give Berchan as one of the saints specially venerated in Egg (or Eig), in the Hebrides of Scotland, and this may be the Berchan who was so troublesome to St. Columba on account of his inquisitive disposition. See Colgan, Tr. Thaum.

4. ABBOT OF GLAS NAOIDHEN, in Fine Gall—celebrated Oct. 12—is more generally known as Mob-hi-Clairenech (of the flat face), and the place of his dedication is now Glasnevin. He was of the race of Finn Fuathairt, and Uanfinn, daughter of Finnbarr, was his mother. "The extraordinary universal plague through the world, which swept away the noblest third part of the human race," broke up his monastery at Glasnevin about A.D. 544 (or 545). In Archdall's Monast. Hibern. p. 119, there is mentioned among the canons regular of St. Augustine, "Glasena-Oidheau, St. Mobyus, alias Mobyteus."

Bercharius (or Bererus), Saint, a French ecclesiastic, was born in the 7th century, in one of the provinces of Aquitaine. He was educated by St. Nivardus of Rheims, and retired into the monastery of Luxeuil, in Burgundy, where St. Walbertus was abbot. After many years thus spent he returned to Rheims, and St. Nivardus built, at his request, the monastery of Hautvilliers, of which Bercharius was appointed the first abbot, and united the rules of St. Columbanus and St. Benedict. In 673 St. Nivardus died, and subsequently Bercharius founded two other monasteries in the forest of Der—one, for men, called Montier-en-Der, and another, for nuns, called Peulle-Moutier—which no longer exists. Bercharius left Hautvilliers, and became abbot of Montrendé; he then went on a pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem. Having been compelled to punish one of his monks, named Daguinus (his godson), the wretched man stabbed him in the night; he died on Easter-night, A.D. 676. His festival is marked on the 16th of October, the day of his translation. See Mabillon, Sæc. Ben. par. ii; Baillet, iii, 262, Oct.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Berchère, CARL le Gouz de la, a French theologian, was born at Dijon about 1647. He was successively bishop of Lanaur, archbishop of Aix, of Alby, and of Narbonne, where he died, June 2, 1719. He wrote, Statuts Synodaux de Lanaur (Toulouse, 1679) :—Harangue au Roi Louis XIV in 1791, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bercheure (or Berchoire; Lat. Bercherius or Bercorius), PIERRE, a learned French Benedictine, a native of St. Peter du Chemin, near Maillezaïs in Poitou, was born about the beginning of the 14th century. He was prior of the monastery of St. Eloy, which at that time belonged to the Benedictines. He died at Paris in 1362. He wrote Reductorium, Repertorium et Dictionarium Morale utriusque Testamenti, etc. (Strasburg, 1474; Nuremberg, 1499; Cologne, 1631-92). This is a kind of encyclopædia in which the author treats of theology, physics, medicine, anatomy, geography, and astronomy. A translation of this work by Richard Leblanc was published at Paris in 1584. Bercheure also translated into French, by order of king John, the Roman History of Livy. This translation, of which several fine manuscripts are to be found in the Imperial Library, was published under the title Les Grandes Décades de Titus-Livius, etc. (Paris, 1514-15). He composed several other works which have been lost. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Wetzler u. Welte, Kirchenlexikon, s. v.

Berchmann, JOHANN, a German theologian of the Jesuit order, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, is revered as a saint. He wrote Hyperdulia Mariana, a work published by Canisius (Munich, 1631). His Life, represented as a model, and written in Italian by Virg. Ceparì (Rome, 1627), was translated into Latin by Herm. Hugo (Antwerp, 1630); into French by Cachet (Paris, 1630); into Spanish by Jos. Olzina. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berchorius. See BERCHEURE.

Berchthun is the name of two early English prelates.

1. A bishop of LICHFIELD, the thirteenth in the ancient lists, succeeded Cuthfrith, whose death is placed in some MSS. of Florence in 767. Little or nothing is known of his history, but he is mentioned by Matthew Paris in his Lives of the Offus. He is there made archbishop of Lichfield and confounded with bishop Humbert, who lived a half-century later. See Wharton, Ang. Sac. i, 429.

2. Otherwise styled Brihthunus, deacon of John of Beverley, bishop of YORK, was abbot of John's monastery of "Inderaunda," or Beverley, when Bede wrote. According to the fragments of the history of Beverley preserved by Leland (Collectanea, iii, 155), he died May 15, 733; but, according to Capgrave, his death occurred in 740. He was buried at Beverley near his master.

Berchtold, count LEOPOLD DE, a German philanthropist and traveller, was born in 1738. He was versed in eight different languages; travelled in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and exposed himself in Turkey to great danger in order to study the means of preventing and of curing the pestilence; was a zealous propagator of vaccination, and consecrated his whole immense fortune to the relief of the evils of humanity, and to found establishments of beneficence. In 1805 he collected offerings of wheat in order to maintain the inhabitants of Riesengebirge, who were a prey to famine. At the battle of Wagram, the chateau of Buchlovitz served as an asylum for the sick and wounded. Berchtold died of typhoid fever developed in this improvised hospital, in 1809. He wrote, An Essay to Direct and Extend the Inquiries of Patriotic Travellers (Lond. 1789); translated into French by P. de Lasteyrie (Paris, 1797) :—Courte Methode pour Rappeler à la Vie toutes les Personnes Atteintes de Mort Apparente (in German, Vienna, 1791); the author translated this work into several languages. He also published the Tables, in which artisans find excellent advice concerning the preservation of their health. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bercka, ARNOLD, a German theologian, lived at Cologne in the early half of the 17th century. He wrote Liber Vita, sive Veteris et Novi Testamenti Glossarium et Compendium, una cum Indice Historiarum in Omnibus Libris Novi et Veteris Testamenti (Cologne, 1661), which is found in manuscript in the library of the Jesuits at Dusseldorf. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berckelmann, Johann Justus, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Rostock, Oct. 3, 1678. He studied at Helmstädt, and after having acted as pastor at several places, in 1721 was appointed general superintendent at Hildesheim, and in 1726 for the same office at Osterroda. In 1735 he was deposed from his office, and had to leave the country. He died at Nordhausen, Feb. 22, 1743. He published Evangelische Glaubens- Lebens- und Gewissenslehre. See Heinsius, Kirchen-Historie, pt. iii; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Berckelmann, Theodor, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 9, 1576, at Neustadt, in the principality of Calenberg. He studied at Helmstädt, and in 1609 was professor of theology there; in 1616 he was made doctor of theology; in 1625 abbot at Amelunxborn; and in 1630 general superintendent of Göttingen, where he died, July 30, 1645. He wrote, Isagoge Theologica:—Dissertationes Biblicæ:—Commentarius in Epistolam ad Galatas. See Kuss, Memoir. Theodori Berckelmanni (1733); Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Berckenmeyer. See BERKENMYER.

Bercta. See BERTHA.

Berctgils (also Bonifacius), a Kentish man, was appointed by bishop Honorius of Canterbury the third bishop of the East Angles, with his see at Dunwich. The year of his consecration was probably 652, and he ruled for seventeen years. See Bede, Hist. Eccl. iii, 20; iv, 5; Flor. Wig., M. H. B., p. 530; Wharton, Ang. Sac. i, 403.

Berdini, VINCENZO, an Italian theologian of the order of the Minorites, a native of Sarteano, near Siena, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He wrote, L'Antidote Spirituale sopra la Peste (Sienna, 1630):—Storia dell' Antica e Moderna Palestina, ossia il Viaggio di Gerusalemme (ibid. 1633; Venice, 1642):—Centuria Terza de' Precetti, Politici e Morali (Sienna, 1634):—Centuria Seconda de' Precetti Christiani (ibid. 1642). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bére (or Ber), LOUIS, a Swiss Catholic theologian, was born at Basle at the close of the 15th century. In 1526 he was a doctor in theology at Paris, and one of the four presidents of the conferences upon religion held at Baden. He retired to Fribourg when the Protestants held control at Basle, and there died, April 14, 1554. He wrote, De Christiana Præparatione ad Mortem (Basle, 1551):—Quorundam Psalmorum Expositio (ibid. eod.):—Num quid Christiano Homini Ingruente Pestilentia Funere Licet (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berëa (1 Macc. ix, 4). Lieut. Conder (Tent Work, ii, 335) proposes to identify this place with Bireä, which, however, has long since been settled as the site of Beeroth.

Berectus (Beretchert, or Beriktus) is the name of a Scottish and an Irish ecclesiastic of early date:

1. A saint by this name is mentioned by Wion. He is said to have died in 720, and is commemorated Feb. 24. See Forbes, Kal. of Scott. Saints, p. 279.

2. On Dec. 6 the Irish hagiologists place Beretchert, or Berectus, of Tulachleis, now Tullylease, County Cork. He is given as brother of Sts. Gerald, Balanus, and Hubrit. The Bollandists (Acta SS. Feb., ii, 833 sq.), in their Life of St. Berach, would identify Berectus with him. The Four Masters gives the death of "Berichtir of Tulachleis" Dec. 6, 839.

Berecynthia, in Greek mythology, was the usual surname of Cybele, from the mountain-range Berecynthus, in Phrygia, where she was principally worshipped.

Berefellars were seven persons in Beverley Minster who acted as rectors of choir; their amesses were probably lined with bear-skin, or fells, whence their name.

Beregazai, PETER, a Protestant Hungarian theologian, lived at Grosswardein, Hungary, near the close of the 16th century. He wrote, Adversaria de Controuersis hoc Saeculo de Religione Motis (Basle, 1587):—Opuscula Varia de Calendario Gregoriano (ibid. 1590). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berelius, GEORGE, a Swedish Protestant theologian, was born at Calmar in 1641, and died at Upsal in 1676. He wrote, Disp. de Insectis:—De Amplificanda Republica:—De Indulgentiis Papalibus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beren (or Jura), in the mythology of India, was the hunter who killed Krishna without being aware of it; for the god, sleeping under a tree, had forgotten to cover up the bright signs of his divinity on the soles of his feet, and thus Jura, aiming at this mark, robbed Vishnu, in the highest incarnation, of his life.

Bérenger, RAYMOND, a native of Dauphiny, celebrated grand-master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, rendered himself illustrious by his valor, and was raised to the dignity of grand-master in 1365. In concert with the king of Cyprus, he destroyed the Egyptian privateers that infested the sea in the vicinity of the islands of Rhodes and Cyprus. He then went into the midst of the siege before Alexandria, took it after two very deadly assaults, burned all the buildings which were in the port, pillaged the city, and terminated the expedition by the sacking of Tripoli, Syria. In 1371 Urban V sent him to the isle of Cyprus to appease the troubles caused by the death of the king, Peter. Bérenger held two general chapters in order to re-establish the discipline of his order. This was at first very difficult, but his reforms were at last approved in an assembly convoked at Avignon by pope Urban V. Bérenger did not assist at this assembly on account of his advanced age. He died at Rhodes in 1373. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berengosius, abbot of St. Maximin of Treves, who lived at the commencement of the 12th century, wrote De Laudibus et Inventione Sanctæ Crucis, de Mysterio Ligni Domini. These sermons were published in the Biblioth. Patrum, vol. xii (Lyons, 1677). The commentary upon the Apocalypse which was found under the guise of anonymous at the end of the works of St. Ambrose is attributed to Berengosius. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berenguer, PEDRO JUAN MORALES, a Spanish theologian who lived at Valencia in the early half of the 17th century, wrote Universal Explicación de los Misterios de Nuestra Santa Fe (Valencia, 1608). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berenice, in Greek mythology, was the daughter of king Ptolemy Philadelphus of Egypt and of Arsinoë, who was married to her brother Ptolemy. When the latter went to Syria to war, Berenice, who loved him dearly, vowed her hair to Venus in the event of his safe return, and placed it in the temple of Aphrodite Zephyritis. On the following day it was missed, and the Samian astronomer Conon affirmed that it had been placed among the stars. There may be found by the name of "hair from the head of Berenice" a group of stars near the tail of the Lion in the northern heavens, from 170° to 203° in a straight ascension. Its stars are all of or below the fourth magnitude, and many nebulous mists. Berenice herself was adored as an Egyptian goddess in the city of Memphis under Ptolemy V.

Berent, SIMON, a German theologian of the Jesuit order, was born in Prussia about 1585. He became confessor of prince Alexander of Bologna, and accompanied him in his travels in Germany and Italy. He had also a knowledge of music. He died in Brunsberg, May 16, 1649, leaving Opera duo Musicalia Litaniarum de Nomine Jesu et Lauretanarum de B. Virgine (1638, 1639). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berentz, CHRISTIAN, a German Reformed minister, was born at Baltimore, Md., in 1794. He was licensed to preach and ordained in 1829. In 1830 he was located at Johnstown, Cambria Co., Pa., where he labored until 1842, and then removed to Hillsborough, Highland Co., O. After a few years he went to Grandview, O., where he resided without a regular charge until his death, March 23, 1879. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 343.

Beres are monks of Mingrelia in the Caucasus. They are initiated or admitted into the body by having a calot, or leathern cap, put upon their head, and from that time they are bound to abstain from animal food, and to receive their instruction from the other Beres. They read mass in the Georgian language. They very frequently fast, and should they omit so important a duty they imagine that the guilt of such a sin can only be removed by a second baptism. They prohibit the eating of every kind of flesh, claiming that our Lord never tasted animal food during his whole life, and that he celebrated the paschal supper with fish only. The Beres are usually dressed like laymen, with this difference, that they let their hair and beard grow. They are also trained up from childhood to abstinence.

The name of Beres is also given to Mingrelian nuns of different kinds. Some are young women who have renounced marriage; others are servants, who, after the death of their masters, become Beres along with their mistresses; others are widows who never marry again, or in some cases divorced wives; while many have embraced the life of a Bere from poverty. All these nuns of Mingrelia are dressed in black, and have their heads covered with a black veil. They are not confined in convents, and may quit the religious life without being chargeable with any breach of vow.

Beresford, JAMES, an English clergyman and writer, was born in 1764, and died in 1840. He published, Sermons, etc. (1809-15):—The Miseries of Human Life; or, The Last Groans of Timothy Testy and Samuel Sensitive, etc. (1806-7, 2 vols.):—Bibliotheca, or Book of Wisdom (1812):—and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Beresford, JOHN GEORGE, D.D., an eminent Irish prelate, was born at Tyrone House, Dublin, Nov. 22, 1773. He was the second son of the right hon. George De la Poer Beresford, second earl of Tyrone. After leaving Eton School, he went to Christ Church, Oxford, and took the degree of B.A. in 1793. At the age of twenty-six he was appointed dean of Clogher, which office he held until 1805, when, March 24, he was consecrated bishop of Cork and Ross. In 1807 he was translated to the see of Raphoe, and to that of Clogher in 1819, and to the archbishopric of Dublin in 1820. He succeeded to the archbishopric of Armagh in June, 1822, and became chancellor of the University of Dublin in 1851, having held the position of vice-chancellor for more than twenty years. In 1850 the see of Clogher again came under his jurisdiction. He died July 19, 1862. His liberality was conspicuous. On Armagh cathedral he spent nearly £30,000, and in one year he expended £1100 in stipends to poor curates. For many years he wholly supported the fever hospital of Armagh, with its forty patients, and it was no uncommon thing for him to disburse £1000 in a single year in private charities. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 155.

Beresith (בְּרֵאשִׁית, in the beginning), the name given by the Jews to the book of Genesis, because it opens with this word in Hebrew.

BERESHITH is also the second part of the Jewish Cabala, and is so called from the first word which occurs in the book of God.

Beresith Rabba is the title of a midrash or commentary on Genesis, composed in Palestine in the 6th century. The last five chapters, commencing with the section וְיָרִיחַ (Gen. xlvii, 12 sq.), hence also called Vaichi Rabba, are more modern, probably of the 11th century. A careful examination of this midrash proves that its author made use of Bar-Sira or Ben-Sira, Mishna, Tosephta, Sifre, Sifri, Mechilta, Seder Olam, the Onkelos Version and Jonathan Targum, etc. This midrash is now accessible to students in the German translation published by A. Wünsche, in his Bibliotheca Rabbinica (Leips. 1880). Besides Zunz, Gottesdienstliche Vorträge, p. 174-179, 254-256, see especially the prize-essay of M. Lerner, Anlage des Bereschith Rabba und seine Quellen, published in Berliner and Hoffmann's Magazin für die Wissenschaft des Judenthums, 1880, iii, 157 sq.; iv, 197 sq.; 1881, i, 30 sq. (B. P.)

Beresovsky, MAXIMUS SOGNOVITCH, a Russian composer of sacred music, and first reformer of the ecclesiastical chant in Russia, was born in 1795 in the city of Glouchkoff, which was also the birthplace of another great musician, M. Bortniausky. Beresovsky studied at first at the ecclesiastical academy of Kieff. Being called, on account of his fine voice, to the chapel of the empress Elizabeth, he was there the object of general admiration. He was sent, at the expense of the crown, to perfect himself in singing and composition, at Bologna, with Martini, the most celebrated professor of the epoch. He spent nine years at Bologna, where he became master of the chapel and member of the Academy. On account of harsh deceptions which awaited him on his return to Russia, he obtained neither the consideration nor employment he had anticipated. He died of chagrin two years after. The compositions of this predecessor of Bortniausky are numerous and breathe a profound sentiment, and are simple as well as expressive. His reforms were welcomed throughout all Russia. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beretchert. See BERECTUS.

Berezat, in Zendic mythology, was a holy mountain in the centre of the earth, from whose side flowed the sacred river Arvanel.

Berezeseng, in Persian mythology, is one of the five kinds of fire which is distributed in all creations of Ormuzd, even in the earth, in mountains, and in naphtha springs. It was this fire mainly whose cultus spread over a great part of Asia, and of which rays penetrated to India, Thibet, Mongolia, and Turkey. Baku, with its naphtha springs, seems to have been the central place of devotion for the fire-worshippers.

Berg, Franz, a German canon and professor of theology, was born in 1753 at Frickenhausen-on-the-Main. He received holy orders in 1777, and acted for some time as priest. In 1785 he was made professor extraordinarius and in 1790 ordinarius of theology at the Würzburg University. About that time he published his De Clemente Alexandrino ejusque Morali Doctrina (Würzburg, 1779), and his Oratio Aditalis de Origine Rituum Ecclesiasticorum, qui circa Aquam Versantur (1786). In his lectures he maintained that "Christianity was but a mere human work, the teaching of Jesus that of a wise man." His ambition led him to write against Schelling and Kant. His own philosophical system he laid down in his Epikritik der Philosophie (1805), in which he criticises the philosophical process and the science of knowledge. He died in 1821 at Würzburg. See Schwab, Franz Berg, geistlicher Rath und Professor der Kirchengeschichte zu Würzburg (1869); Krug, Encyklop.-philosoph. Lexikon, 1827, vol. i; Stein, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Berg, Gustav Dittmar, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 19, 1798, at Vollage, near Münster, and died July 19, 1837, as doctor and professor of theology at Breslau. He wrote, Ueber das Eheband. Eine dogmatisch-kirchenrechtliche Abhandlung, etc. (Münster, 1829) :—Die christkatholische Lehre von dem Bittgebete (ibid. 1831) :—Ueber die Verbindlichkeit der kanonischen Ehehindernisse in Betreff der Ehen der Evangelischen (Breslau, 1835) :—Ueber die Erforderlichkeit der priesterlichen Ehe-Einsegnung zum Sacrament der Ehe (ibid. 1836). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 460, 497; ii, 22; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 107. (B. P.)

Berg, Joachim von, a German man of state and a philanthropist, was born at Herndorf, March 23, 1526. He was the most celebrated member of a family which still exists in Silesia. He was learned in theology, history, law, and politics. On his return from his travels in the Netherlands, England, France, Switzerland, Italy, Hungary, and Poland, he performed the functions of ambassador in the different cities of Europe. In 1571 he returned to his own country, and consecrated, by testament, all his property towards creating a capital which should be used for the education of the children of his compatriots. He died March 2, 1602. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berg, Johann Peter, a Protestant theologian and Orientalist of Germany, was born in Bremen, Sept. 3, 1737, and died March 3, 1800, at Duisburg, as doctor and professor of theology and of Oriental languages. He was a man of vast learning, and was well versed in Oriental languages, especially the Arabic, and he introduced into the University of Duisburg an exact translation of the sacred books. He wrote, Specimen Animadversionum Philol. ad Selecta V. T. Loca (Leyden, 1761) :—Reformationsgeschichte der Länder Jülich, Cleve, Berg, etc. (Hamm, 1826, edited by Tross). He also took part in the publication of some works of his friends, under the title: Symbolæ Literariæ Duisburgenses, ad Incrementum Scientiarum a Variis Amicis Amice Collocæ, ex Haganis Factæ Duisburgenses (vol. i, pt. ii, 1783; vol. ii, pt. i, 1784; pt. ii, 1786). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 196, 205, 796; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Berg, Joseph Frederick, D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, and a son of Rev. Christian Frederick Berg, of Denmark, was born at Grace Hill, Antigua, W. I., June 3, 1812. He was educated in the Moravian institutions at Fulbic, England, in 1816-25. In 1825 he came to the United States, and was placed in the Moravian school at Nazareth, Pa. He was made teacher of chemistry at Nazareth in 1829, when only seventeen years old, and while he was pursuing theological studies. In 1831 he was licensed, and was ordained and installed as pastor of the German Reformed Church at Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 2, 1835-37. From 1837 to 1852 he was pastor of Race-street German Reformed Church, Philadelphia, and while here he also studied medicine in Jefferson College, and received the degree of M.D. He served the Second Reformed (Dutch) Church of Philadelphia from 1852 to 1861. At this time he was elected professor of didactic and polemic theology in the New Brunswick Seminary, in which capacity he labored until his death, which occurred July 20, 1871. In addition to his other labors, he was professor of evidences of Christianity at Rutgers College from 1862 to 1867. As a preacher he was successful.

He did not so much aim to captivate his audience with glowing rhetoric or oratory, as to instruct them. His style was solid, logical, persuasive, and instructive. Although he had no relish for controversy, yet in this, as in whatever he undertook, he was a master. As a pastor, Dr. Berg was greatly beloved by his people; as a professor, he fully met the expectations of his friends and justified the wisdom of those who selected him. He wrote, The Tree and its Fruits (1837):—Ancient Landmarks (1838):—Christian Landmarks; or, The Centenary of the German Reformed Church (Phila. 1840):—The House of God and the Family Altar (1840):—Lectures on Romanism (eod.; several editions):—The Confessional (1841):—Papal Rome (eod.):—a series of pamphlets published anonymously, entitled A Voice from Rome, Rome's Policy towards the Bible, The Pope and the Presbyterians (1844):—History of the Holy Robe of Trèves (1843), an oral controversy with a Catholic priest:—The Old Paths; or, A Sketch of the Order and Discipline of the Reformed Church before the Reformation (1845):—A Plea for the Divine Law against Murder (1846):—Mysteries of the Inquisition, etc. (eod.):—Reply to Archbishop Hughes on the Doctrine of Protestants (1850):—Exposé of the Jesuits (eod.):—The Inquisition; Church and State, or Rome's Influence upon the Civil and Religious Institutions of our Country (1851), a prize essay:—Jehovah Nissi; or, Farewell Words to the First German Reformed Church (Phila. 1852):—Vindication of the Farewell Words (eod.):—The Bible Vindicated against the Aspersions of Joseph Barker (1854):—Translation of Dens' Moral Theology (1842, 1856):—Prophecy and the Times; or, England and Armageddon (1856):—The Stone and the Image; or, The American Republic the Bane and Ruin of Despotism (eod.), an exposition of the fifth kingdom of Daniel's prophecy:—The Saint's Harp; or, Hymns and Spiritual Songs (eod.):—Abaddon and Mahanaim; or, Dæmons and Guardian Angels (eod.):—Cause and Cure of Financial Distress (1857):—The Olive Branch, a Conservative View of Slavery (eod.):—Loyalty; or, Christian Obligation (1859):—Paganism, Popery, and Christianity; or, The Blessing of an Open Bible:—The Second Advent of Christ not Pre-Millennial (eod.):—The Evangelical Quarterly (1860-62, 3 vols.):—Valedictory Sermon before the Students of Rutgers College (1862):—History and Literature of the Heidelberg Catechism, and its Introduction into the Netherlands (1863), a translation of Von Alpen:—System of Didactic Theology (in MS.):—besides several books for children. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 174; Presbyterian, July 29, 1871; Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 488.

Bergalli, CARLO, an Italian scholar and theologian of the order of Conventual Minorites, a native of Palermo, distinguished himself as a preacher, and taught philosophy and theology in the convents of his order. He died at Palermo, Nov. 17, 1679, leaving De Objecto Philosophiæ (Perugia, 1649). Davidiade, an Italian epic poem, is also attributed to him. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bergantini, GIUSEPPE HYACINTH MARIA, an Italian theologian, brother of Giovanni Pietro, of the order of Servites, was born at Venice, Oct. 10, 1690. His principal works are, Annus Sacer, per Cujus Dies Singulos eorum Pia Recolitur Memoria, quorum Triumphis Sacra Servarum Mariæ Familia Coronatur (Inspruck, 1729):—Venetorum Ducum Imagines e Tabulis Prætorii Expressæ:—Fra Paolo Sarpi Giustificato, Dissertag. Epist. di Giusto Nuve (Cologne, 1752):—I Lette Salmi Penitenziali Litteralmente Spiegati (Venice, 1758). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bergelmer, in Norse mythology, was the son of Aurgelmer, a powerful mountain giant. Long before the creation of the world this mighty god lived, until the earth was overflowed by Ymer's blood, and the entire Rhimthusian generation perished. He alone saved himself in a boat, and with his wife subsequently peopled the earth again. The analogies with Noah are obvious. See FLOOD.

Bergen, George Providence, a Presbyterian minister, was born Jan. 1, 1820, in Mercer County, Ky. He graduated from Centre College in 1846, and from Princeton Seminary in 1849. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, April 26, 1848. Returning to Kentucky, he engaged to fill, for a few months, the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Covington. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Church at Springdale, O., by the Cincinnati Presbytery, May 1, 1850. He was released from his pastoral relation here in April, 1857. In the same year Mr. Bergen was urged by the Board of Domestic Missions to go, under its commission, to Omaha, Neb. He accepted the position offered. He began the erection of a church here, but financial difficulties prevented his finishing it. After two years he returned to Ohio, and in 1859 settled at Bellefontaine, and remained over four years in charge of a flourishing Church in that town. He next removed to Mt. Pleasant, Ia., and established a boarding-school for young ladies, which proved to be highly successful. He removed to Birmingham in 1863, and established a prosperous school for both sexes; and at the same time he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church of Birmingham, where he continued until his death. A few years before his death he supplied the Church at Libertyville. He died April 11, 1876. Mr. Bergen was a pioneer of education, and has left two institutions of his planting in active operation in Iowa. His preaching was full of sound doctrine, simple in style and fervent in manner. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 40.

Bergen, John G., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Hightstown, N. J., Nov. 27, 1790. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1808; was tutor in that institution, 1810 to 1812; became pastor at Madison, N. J., in 1812; had sixteen years of great success; and finally removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1828, where he became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, and where he died, Jan. 10, 1872. "He was a man of power and influence; cheerful, earnest, courageous, consecrated, and everywhere honored. So long and faithfully did he labor in the West, and much of the time in pioneer work, that he came to be known as the 'Old Man of the Prairie.'" See Aikman, Hist. Discourse concerning the Presb. Church in Madison, N. J., p. 14-21; Tuttle, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Madison, N. J. (N. Y. 1855), p. 52; Presbyterian, Feb. 3, 1872.

Berger, Christian Gottlieb, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 20, 1764, at Geithain, and died Feb. 24, 1829, as doctor of philosophy and superintendent at Eisleben. He wrote Kurze Beschreibung der Merkwürdigkeiten die sich in Eisleben und in Luther's Hause daselbst, besonders auf die Reformation und auf Luther beziehen (Eisleben, 1817, 1827). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 803. (B. P.)

Berger, Daniel (1), a Prussian engraver, was born at Berlin in 1744, and studied under his father. In 1787, he was appointed professor of engraving in the Academy of Berlin. The following are some of his best prints: The Virgin and Child; The Virgin Mary. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Berger, Daniel (2), a minister of the Evangelical Association, was born in Berks County, Pa., April 16, 1797. He entered the itinerancy in 1834, and was in the effective work twenty-seven years. In 1861 he located, and remained thus up to the time of his death, at Orwigsburg, Schuylkill Co., Pa., April 12, 1880. See Evangelical Messenger, April 27, 1880.

Berger, Jacob, a Lutheran minister, was born at Westerloo, Albany Co., N. Y., 1799. In his twentieth year he became a student of the Hartwick Seminary, where he made a public profession of religion, and united with the Lutheran Church. He graduated from Union College in 1824, and took a course in theology in 1825; was licensed and ordained the following year, and commenced his ministerial labors at Ghent, N. Y. He subsequently organized a Church at Valatie, and became an assistant to the Rev. F. J. G. Uhl; and thus Churchtown was added to his charge. There he labored with much zeal until his death, March 11, 1842. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 172; Evangelical Review, viii, 210.

Berger, Joachim Ernst, a German Protestant theologian, was born in 1666 at Gramzow, and died in 1734. His principal works are, Von der Spöttery mit der Sünde (Berlin, 1702):—Das verdeckte Evangelium (ibid.):—Entdeckte Jungensünden (ibid. 1704):—De Bibliis Hebraicis (ibid. 1708):—Diatribes de Libris Rarioribus eorumque Notis Diagnosticis (ibid. 1726). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berger, Johann Gottfried Immanuel, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born July 27, 1773, at Ruhland, in Upper Lusatia. He studied at Göttingen, was in 1802 appointed first preacher at Schneeberg, and died May 30, 1803. He wrote, Aphorismen zu einer Wissenschaftslehre der Religion (Leipsic, 1796):—Versuch einer moralischen Einleitung in das Neue Testament (Lemgo, 1797–1801):—Versuch einer praktischen Einleitung in das Alte Testament (Leipsic, 1798–99, 2 vols.; the third was edited by Augusti, ibid. 1806):—Geschichte der Religionsphilosophie (Berlin, 1800):—Reinhard's Vorlesungen über die Dogmatik mit Zusätzen (Amberg and Sulzbach, 1801). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 85 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 281, 300; Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 109. (B. P.)

Berger, Paul, a German Protestant theologian and Hebraist, was born at Rosenberg, and lived in the early half of the 18th century. His principal works are, Disp. de Montibus Charizim et Hebal (Wittenberg):—Disp. de Primæva Antiquitate Litteraturæ Hebrææ (ibid. 1700):—De Ubertate et Perspicuitate Lingue Hebrææ (ibid.):—De Montibus Sinai et Horeb (ibid.):—De Montibus Hor et Nebo (ibid.):—De Cabalismo Judaico-Christiano Detecto (ibid. 1706). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berger, Pierre (1), a French martyr, was taken at Lyons, in 1553, and examined by the bishops. He was burned with five others for praying to God. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 412.

Berger, Pierre (2), a French theologian, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, wrote, La Piété de l'Eglise Catholique envers Dieu (Paris, 1630):—La Suffisance de la Communion sous une Espèce avec la Réfutation de George Cassandre (ibid. eod.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berghamsted, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Berghamstedense). This place is now Berkhamstead, in Hertfordshire. A council was held there in 696, by Wiltred, king of Kent, who attended in person; there were also present, Brihtwald, "chief bishop of Britain," and Tobias of Rochester, together with some of every order in the Church, and many laymen. Twenty-eight laws, called the "Dooms of king Wiltred," were published:

1. Declares the Church to be free from taxes.
2. Inflicts a fine of fifty shillings for a breach of the protection of the Church or king.
- 3 to 6. Relate to sins of uncleanness.
7. Suspends from his ministration a priest guilty of committing fornication, neglecting to baptize the infirm, or being drunk.
10. Fines the master eighty shillings, who shall make his slave work after sunset on Sunday till sunset on Monday.
- 11 and 12. Enact penalties against slaves and free servants who work on the Lord's day.
- 13 and 14. Enact penalties against those who make offerings to devils.
15. Declares, that if a man give flesh to his slave to eat on a fast-day, the slave shall be free.
17. Declares the word of the bishop and of the king to be valid without an oath.

18. Orders the heads of monasteries, priests, and deacons, to purge themselves on their own veracity, by saying before the altar, in their holy vestments, "I say the truth in Christ; I lie not."

19–24. Relate to different cases of purgation.

28. Orders that a stranger, who leaves the road, and does not scream, or blow a horn, shall be considered as a thief.

See Johnson, Eccles. Canon.; Wilkins, i, 60; Labbe, Concil. vi, 1576.

Berghfordense, CONCILIUM. See BURFORD, COUNCIL OF.

Bergibau, a martyr during the Reformation, was a German by birth, and did much for the good of the Gospel in Germany. He suffered martyrdom in 1545, by having powder put to his breast and then set on fire. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 386.

Bergimus, in Celtic mythology, was a god of the Cenomanes, only known by a few inscriptions. As these inscriptions were found near Bergamo, it is thought that this city received its name from him.

Bergius. See BERG.

Bergman, Christopher F., a Lutheran minister, was born at Ebenezer, Ga., Jan. 7, 1793, and educated exclusively under the care and direction of his learned father. In 1824 he was licensed and solemnly set apart to the work of the ministry, and took charge of the church which his father had so long served, in his native place. He died March 26, 1832. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 163.

Bergman, John Ernest, a Lutheran minister, was a native of Peritsch, in Saxony. He entered the University at Leipsic in 1776, where he graduated; was ordained by the evangelical seniors of the Lutheran Church, in the duchy of Augsburg, July 19, 1783. Mr. Bergman arrived in this country in 1785, and went immediately to a congregation, then without a pastor, in Georgia, where he labored in connection with three other charges in the neighborhood, which he served until he died, Feb. 25, 1824. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 77; Evangelical Review, ix, 13.

Bergmuller, JOHN GEORGE, a German painter and engraver, was born at Durkheim, in Bavaria, in 1688, and studied under Andrew Wolff. Some of his works are to be seen in the churches at Augsburg, where he resided. He is chiefly known by his engravings. He died in 1762. The following are his principal religious prints: The Baptism of Christ; The Transfiguration, the Resurrection, and the Ascension; The Conception; The Virgin Mary Caressing the Infant Jesus; The Death of St. Joseph; Christ on the Mount of Olives.

Bergne, SAMUEL B., an English clergyman, was born in 1805. While a minister of the Poultry Chapel, London, in 1853, he was elected secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in the place of Rev. George Brown, who had in turn succeeded the Rev. Joseph, one of the original secretaries, and also one of the principal founders of the society. During the twenty-six years of Mr. Bergne's secretaryship every department of the work was doubled; an increase in which he found constant joy, and to which he, according to the testimony of the committee, contributed more largely than any other, though none could be more unwilling to receive the credit. He died in London, July 18, 1880. See Bible Society Record, Oct. 1880. (W. P. S.)

Berhtwald (Brightwald, or Beorhtwald), an early English prelate, according to Bede, was originally abbot of Reculver, and a man well instructed in ecclesiastical and monastic discipline. A charter of Hlothari, king of Kent, is preserved, dated at Reculver in May, 679, in which lands in Thanet are bestowed upon him and his monastery (Kemble, Cod. Dipl. i, 20); and he is also mentioned in a spurious charter of 689 as an abbot of Kent. The Glastonbury writers claim him as an abbot of that monastery, but they have confounded him with Beorwald. He was chosen archbishop of Canterbury, July 1, 692, and went to Lyons for consecration, which he obtained from Godwin, June 29, 693. In the same year he attested an act of Oshere, king of the Hwiccas, done in a Mercian Witenagemot; in 696 he took part in the legislation of Wihtred, king of Kent, at the council of Berghamstede (or Bersted); and between that year and 716 he obtained, in a council at Baccancelde, or Bapchild (q. v.), the famous privilege of Wihtred, which secured the liberties of the Kentish monasteries. In 705, at the command of the pope, he attended the council at Nidd, at which Wilfrid was reconciled. The same year he held the synod at Brentford, for the pacification of Essex and Wessex. The division of Wessex being accomplished, he consecrated Alhelm as bishop of the new see of Sherborne; in 706 he attested a charter founding the monastery of Evesham; between 709 and 712 we find him writing to Forthere, bishop of Sherborne, to obtain the release of a captive girl from Boerwald, abbot of Glastonbury. In 716, in a council at Clovesho, he obtained a confirmation of Wihtred's privilege. Bede records his death, Jan. 13, 731, and mentions that he was buried near his predecessor, within the Church of St. Peter, at Canterbury. The Life of St. Egvín, ascribed to him, belongs unquestionably to a later Berchtwald.

Berhut, in Mohammedan mythology, is an unscaleable high wall, which is said to be in Arabia, in the region of the strait Bab el-Mandeb. It was built by the prophet, in order to separate the faithful (Moslems) from the unfaithful (Giaours).

Beriktus. See BERECTUS.

Bering, Joachim, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stralsund in 1574. He studied at Frankfurt, Rostock, and Wittenberg, and died Sept. 19, 1627, as doctor and professor of theology, and pastor of St. Mary's, at Greifswalde. He wrote, Dissertationes de Jesu Christo Θεωσώπρω:—Dissertationes anti-Photinianæ. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bering, Johann, a German Protestant theologian, son of the preceding, was born at Greifswalde, March 23, 1607. He studied at his native place and in other universities, and died as doctor and professor of theology, and pastor and vice-superintendent, Jan. 16, 1658. He wrote, Collegium anti-Calvinianum:—De Sacra Scriptura:—De Fide Infantum:—De Mystero S. Trinitatis:—De Adoratione Christi Θεωσώπρω:—De Manducatione et Bibitione Spirituali:—De Omnipræsentia Carnis Christi:—De Descensu Christi ad Inferos, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Beringer, Diephold, a German fanatical peasant, known also by the name of Peringer der Schuster, and of the country of Wöhrd, lived at the commencement of the 16th century. He made a great uproar at the time of the Reformation, by denouncing the pope. He preached for the first time at Wöhrd, in 1524. Being banished from Nuremberg on the complaint of the archduke Ferdinand, at the council held in that city, he fixed his residence at Kitzingen, in Franconia. It is believed that he perished in the War of the Peasants. His sermons were collected and published, and some have reached several editions. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beringer, Joachim, a Protestant German theologian, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He took the name of Ursinus, and called himself also Sal-muth, the name of his father. His principal works are, Speculum Jesuiticum, Pontificum Romanorum erga Imperatores Germanicos Perfidiam, Insolentiam ac Tyrannidem Representans (Hamburg, 1608):—Jesuitici Templi Stupenda:—De Idololatria Invocatione et Salutatione Angelica:—Idea Pii Principis in Ecclesiæ Reformatione (ibid. 1612):—Apologia pro Christianis Gallis Religionis Reformatæ (Geneva, 1598). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berkeley, George, LL.D., an English clergyman, son of bishop Berkeley, was born Sept. 28, 1733 (O. S.). He removed with the family to Ireland in his infancy, where he was instructed by his father in the classics until he was nineteen years of age, and then went to Oxford, and was educated at Christ Church. In 1758 he became vicar of East Garston, Berks, and in 1759 was removed to the vicarage of Bray, in the same county. Through the kindness of archbishop Secker, he became chancellor of Brecknock, rector of Acton in Middlesex, and prebendary of Canterbury. He subsequently received other preferments, and died Jan. 6, 1795. "He was the charitable divine, the affectionate and active friend, the elegant scholar, the accomplished gentleman." He published some single sermons, and his widow published a volume of his sermons in 1799. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Berkeley, Gilbert, an English prelate of the 16th century, was a native of Norfolk, being descended from ancient barons of that name. He was consecrated bishop of Bath and Wells, in the first year of the reign of Elizabeth, and sat in that see twenty-two years. He died in 1581, and was buried in his own cathedral. See Godwin, Catalogue of Bishops; Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 447.

Berkenmyer, William Christopher, a Lutheran minister, was born at Bodenteich, Germany, and was thoroughly educated in his native land. He received and accepted a call from the Amsterdam Lutheran Consistory, to take charge of a congregation in New York. He was ordained by the Consistory of Amsterdam, May 25, 1725, and immediately commenced his pastoral labors. He was pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church, corner of Broadway and Rector streets, New York city, being the successor of Rev. Justus Falkner, who was called to this pastorate in 1703. Mr. Bergenmyer resigned in 1732. Under these two ministers the Dutch Lutheran Church in New York city prospered greatly. The log building was taken down, and a substantial stone edifice with belfry and bell was erected on the same site, collections for that purpose having been sent from Hackensack, Albany, London, Amsterdam, etc. He is said to have divided his time between New York and Albany, where he continued to labor until the close of his life in 1751. In 1728 he published a work entitled, Getrouwe Herderen wachter-stem aan de Hoogen Needer Duitsche Lutheriaanen in dese Gewesten, een-stemmig te Zyn, etc. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 14; Quar. Rev. of Evang. Luth. Church, vii, 272.

Berkhan, Georg Heinrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 30, 1747, at Bofzen, in Brunswick. He studied at Helmstädt and Göttingen, and was in 1775 appointed provost of St. Laurence at Schöningen, near Helmstädt. In 1778 he was called to Magdeburg, and in 1787 he succeeded Götze as pastor at St. Catharine's, in Hamburg, where he also died, Dec. 7, 1795. His publications, consisting mainly of sermons, are given by Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, s. v. (B. P.)

Berkholz, Christian August, a Lutheran minister of Germany, who died at Riga in 1870, is the author of, Christlich-evangelische Religionslehre (Riga, 1843):—Hermann Samson, Rigascher Oberpastor (ibid. 1856):—Das Buch Hiob (1859):—Die Offenbarung Johannis (ibid. 1860):—Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kirchen und Prediger Riga's (ibid. 1868):—Mittheilungen und Nachrichten für die evangelische Geistlichkeit Russlands (ibid. 1854, 1862, begründet von C. Chr. Ullmann, vol. i-ix; fortgesetzt von Berkholz, vol. x-xviii):—Zeugnisse des christlichen Glaubens von der evangelisch-lutherischen Geistlichkeit in Russland (ibid. 1851, 2 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 113; ii, 889, 1489. (B. P.)

Berky, ABRAHAM, a German Reformed minister, was recommended to the Synod in 1826. He prepared himself for the ministry at Carlisle Seminary, Pa.; afterwards became a member of the "Free Synod," in 1834, and labored in Berks County, and in Philadelphia as agent of the Sunday-school Union. His last place of which mention is made was Michigan, where he passed over to the Reformed (Dutch) Church, and remained until he died, Aug. 1, 1867. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 485.

Berlage, ANTON, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1805 at Münster. He studied theology at the universities of Bonn, Tübingen, and of his native place, received holy orders in 1832, and at the same time the degree as doctor of theology from the Munich University. In 1834 he commenced his academical lectures, was in 1835 professor extraordinarius and in 1836 ordinarius of dogmatics in his native place, and died there, Dec. 6, 1881. He wrote, Apologetik der Kirche, oder Begründung der Wahrheit und Göttlichkeit des Christenthums (Münster, 1834):—Katholische Dogmatik (ibid. 1839-64, 7 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 113; Literarischer Handweiser für das kathol. Deutschland, No. 45, col. 201. (B. P.)

Berland, PIERRE, a French prelate, known to this day at Bordeaux under the name of Pey-Berland, was born about 1375, and was the son of a poor laborer of Medoc. He commenced by keeping the flocks, and advanced by his own merit so as to secure a place in history. He distinguished himself while a child by his precocious talents, his love of study, and his piety. It is supposed that the young shepherd was sent to a school at Bordeaux, where he studied the classics. From thence he went to a university at Toulouse, where he took the degree of bachelor of canonical law. On his return, in 1409, he became secretary of the archbishop and canon of the cathedral. After a trip to the Holy Land, he became rector of Soliac, and acquired a great reputation by his ability and moral character. The see of this great province became vacant in 1430, and Pierre Berland was appointed to fill the position. In 1440 he constructed at Bordeaux the grand tower of the Church of St. Andrew, which still bears the name of Pey-Berland. In 1441 he contributed largely to the municipal foundation of the University of Bordeaux, the legal existence of which was definitely confirmed by Louis XI in 1472. He also established at his own expense the College of St. Raphael, in which he established twelve scholarships for the benefit of poor pupils. The invasion of the French troops, who came to recover Guyenne in the name of Charles VII, and accomplish the expulsion of the English, brought to this prelate matters of serious importance. The capital was finally, however, surrendered to the representatives of Charles VII. The archbishop of Bordeaux still played a part, though less important, in the revolt of 1453, raised by the English, and which terminated in the submission of Guyenne. Bowed under the weight of years, he resigned his see in 1456. He died soon after, Jan. 17, 1457, in the enjoyment of public veneration and regarded as a saint, and was buried with great honor in the cathedral. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berlendi, FRANCESCO, an Italian theologian of the order of the Theatines, was born about 1678, and died at Venice, June 21, 1746. His principal works are, Cabalomachia, sive Artis Cabalisticæ Oppugnatio:—Delle Oblazioni all' Altare Dissertazione Storico-teologica. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berlin, Isaiah. See PRI.

Berlin, Jacob, a German rabbi of the 18th century, is the author of זכרון יצחק, or a commentary on the Pentateuch (Fürth, 1770). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 109; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 57. (B. P.)

Berlin, Peter, a German Protestant theologian, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, wrote Tractatus de Modo Disputandi Veterum et de Ratione Controversiarum Theologicarum Dijudicandi (Basle, 1616). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berlin, Solomon Jesse, a Lutheran minister, was born at Greensburg, Pa., May 29, 1831. His preparatory study was at Saltsburg Academy, and after graduating from Pennsylvania College in 1858, he took the theological course in Gettysburg Seminary. In 1859 he was tutor in Pennsylvania College, and in 1860 was licensed to preach. The latter year he supplied the Altoona congregation; during 1861-62 he was pastor in Williamsburg, Pa.; 1862-65 in Duncansville, Pa.; and in 1865 he was principal of the Bedford (Pa.) Academy. About two years, until 1867, he was pastor in Williamsport, Md.; and subsequently served in the same relation at Tremont, Pa., until his death, which occurred Feb. 8, 1868. See Pennsylvania College Book, 1882, p. 257.

Berlinda, Saint, of the 7th century, was the daughter of a nobleman, Odelard, who lived at Meerbeeke, near Mirore, in Brabant, in the reign of Dagobert. She had gifts of intellect, unlike many saints, but like many female saints she had beauty; but was disliked by her father. Being disinherited, she retired to the monastery of Moorsel, near Alost, where she lived in penitence and prayer. On the death of her father, Berlinda returned to Meerbeeke, where, being retained, she continued her life of austerities until her death, Feb. 3 (her festival day), 690. Miracles were said to be wrought at her tomb; her coffin was petrifed. A church was built to her honor, and her relics were enshrined May 2, 728. She has remained in great honor at Meerbeeke, is invoked against cattle-diseases, and pilgrims pray before a wooden image of the saint beside a cow. According to a popular saying, Berlinda protects trees transplanted on her festival. She is mentioned in the martyrologies of Wyon, Menardus, Ferrarius, and Molanus in his addition to Usuardus. There is an ancient Life (anonymous) published by Bollandus.—Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 50 (sub Feb. 3).

Bermann, HEINRICH AUGUST WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Wechselburg in 1767, and died as doctor of theology and superintendent at Penig in 1832. He wrote, Commentatio Historico-theologica in Locum i Petri iii, 15 ad Recolemdam Memoriam Traditam ante hos Trecentos Annos Augustanae Confessionis Accommodata (Penig, 1830). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 114; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 270. (B. P.)

Bernachus (or Brynach), Saint, of Wales, in the 5th century, was said to have been the instructor of Brychan, king of Brecknock. His life is given in the Cotton MS. Vesp. A. 14 of the 12th century, and is printed in W. T. Rees's Lives of the Cumbro-Briton Saints (1853). The details are fabulous: the saint comes from Brittany to South Wales, and his disciple, St. Clether, retires to Cornwall, to lead there the life of a devotee. The Life dates his death April 7; but other authorities give his festival as March 9 or July 7. R. Rees (Welsh Saints, p. 156) enumerates several churches named after Brynach in or near Pembroke or Brecknock. Another account makes Brynach contemporary with Maelgwn, and if so he must be placed in the first half of the 6th century. See Haddan and Stubbs, i, 158; Hardy, Cat. of Materials, i, 91.

Bernal, AUGUSTIN, a Spanish theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Magallon (Aragon) in 1587, and died at Saragossa, Sept. 13, 1642. His principal works are, Disputatio de Divini Verbi Incarnatione:—

De Sacramentis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernaldus. See BERTHOLDUS.

Bernard. See BEMO; BERTRAM; BERUS.

Bernard, master of the school at ANGERS, and disciple of St. Fulbert of Chartres, flourished in the 11th century, and is said to have died about 1054. He wrote, A Relation of his Journey to Notre Dame of Puy-en-Velay:—A Treatise on the Miracles of St. Faith, Virgin and Martyr.

Bernard OF ARRAS, a French theologian of the Capuchin order, lived in the early half of the 18th century. His principal works are, Le Grand Commandement de la Loi, exposé selon les Principes de Saint Thomas (Paris, 1734):—L'Ordre de l'Eglise, selon Saint Thomas (ibid. 1735):—Le Ministère de l'Absolution, selon Saint Thomas (ibid. 1740). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard OF AUGSBURG, a German chronicler and theologian, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He wrote, Exegesis Rerum Augustanarum quæ suo Tempore ab 1646 in Urbe Augustana Contigerunt (Augsburg, 1653):—Scala Cæli, Gradibus Pietatis Meditationum Distincta (ibid. 1662). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard OF AUVERGNE, a French theologian and preacher of the Dominican order, a native of Gannat, lived in the latter half of the 13th century. His principal works are, Lectura super Libros Sententiarum:—Contra Dicta Henrici de Gandano, quibus Impugnat S. Thomam:—Contra Godefr. de Fontibus:—Contra Jacobum de Viterbio Eremitam, eadem de Causa:—Sermones. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard OF BOLOGNA (1), a famous canonist, was born at Parma in the beginning of the 13th century. He studied at Bologna, where he also became professor of canon law, and where he died in 1266. He is known as the author, or rather collector, of the Glossa Ordinaria (see GLOSSES AND GLOSSATOIRES) to the decretals of Gregory IX. (B. P.)

Bernard OF BOLOGNA (2), an Italian theologian and biographer, a native of Bologna, lived near the middle of the 18th century. His principal works are, Manuale Confessoriorum Ordinis Capuccinorum (Venice, 1737, 1740, 1745):—Institutio Theologica (ibid. 1746):—Calculus Chronologicus Sacre Scripturæ:—Dissertatio de Æra Communi. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard, a French monk and traveller, originally OF CHAMPAGNE, lived in the latter half of the 9th century. He made, between the years 858 and 867, a voyage to Palestine, of which he gave a concise, interesting, and well-written history, which is preserved among the MSS. in the Library of St. Rémy at Rheims, and was printed by Mabillon in the Acta Sanct. Ord. Bened. iv, 523–526. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard OF CLAIRVAUX's Hymns. By way of supplement, we add the following. There are five hymns which are ascribed to him: the so-called Rhythmus de Contemptu Mundi:—"O miranda vanitas! O divitiarum!"—Rhythmica Oratio ad Unum Quodlibet Membrorum Christi Patientis; addressed to the feet, knees, hands, side, breast, heart, and face of the suffering Christ. The last part ad faciem, commencing, "Salve caput cruentatum," has been beautifully rendered into German by P. Gerhard, "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden;" and from the German again into English by J. W. Alexander, "O sacred Head, once wounded." The others are: Oratio Devota ad Dominum Jesum et B. Mariam Matrem ejus:—Summe Summitu Patris Unice:—"Prosa de Nativitate Domini":—"Lætabundis exultet fidelis chorus":—"Jubilus Rhythmicus de Nomine Jesu":—"Jesu dulcis memoria" (often rendered into German and English). These hymns are given in Mabillon's collection of St. Bernard's works (Paris, 1690), ii, 896 sq. (2d ed. 1719, ii, 909–922; new ed. 1851, 1852). For English renderings, comp. Miller, Singers and Songs of the Church, p. 28. (B. P.)

Bernard OF CLUGNY (or CLUNY), a French monk, was born at Morlaix, in Brittany, in the 12th century, and is said to have been of English parentage. We know nothing of the incidents of his life; his poetry is his best memorial. He is the author of the famous poem De Contemptu Mundi, comprising about three thousand lines. The greater part, however, is a bitter satire on the fearful corruptions of the age; but, "as a contrast to the misery and pollution of earth, the poem closes with a description of the peace and glory of heaven, of such rare beauty as not easily to be matched by any mediæval composition on the same subject." It is written in a dactylic hexameter, divided into three parts, between which a cæsura is inadmissible. The hexameter has a tailed rhyme, and feminine leonine rhyme between the two first clauses, thus:

Tunc nova gloria || pectora sobria || clarificabit:
Solvit enigmata || veraque sabbata || continuabit:
Patria luminis, || inscisa turbinis, || inscisa litis
Cive replebitur, || amplificabitur || Israelitis.

From this specimen it will be seen that it would be difficult to adopt the measure of the original in any translation; and Dr. Neale, who has translated the larger part of this poem into English, remarks concerning his own rendering:

"I have deviated from my ordinary rule of adopting the measure of the original; because our language, if it could be tortured to any distant resemblance of its rhythm, would utterly fail to give any idea of the majestic sweetness which invests it in Latin. Its difficulty in that language is such that Bernard, in a preface, expresses his belief that nothing but the special inspiration of the Spirit of God could have enabled him to employ it through so long a poem."

As must naturally be expected, this hymn has never been entirely translated into any language. Parts of it have been rendered, especially those referring to the celestial city. Best known is the one commencing in the English translation with "Jerusalem the golden," and found in many hymn-books. The student of hymnology is referred to the following works: Trench, Sacred Latin Poetry (Lond. 1864), p. 304 sq.; Neale, Mediæval Hymns (ibid. 1867), p. 68 sq.; Duffield, The Heavenly Land, from the "De Contemptu Mundi" (N. Y. 1867); The Seven Great Hymns of the Mediæval Church (ibid. 1866), p. 1 sq.; Coles, Latin Hymns with Original Translations (ibid. 1868), p. 7 sq.; Miller, Singers and Songs of the Church, p. 29. (B. P.)

Bernard, priest and sacristan OF COMPOSTELLA, a Spanish theologian and canonist, lived in the 13th century. His principal works are, Diplomata Summorum Pontificum, et Antiquorum Hispaniæ Regum; found in the fourth volume of Hispania Illustrata:—the third compilation of the Decretales: a commentary upon the first books of the Decretales. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard (or Bernhard) OF COMO, an Italian theologian of the Dominican order, a native of Como, lived at the commencement of the 16th century. His principal works are, Lucerna Inquisitorum Hæreticæ Prævaritatis (Milan, 1566):—Tractatus de Strigibus (Venice, 1596). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard OF ENGLAND (surnamed the Sage), an English traveller of the Benedictine order, lived in the latter half of the 10th century. The account of his journey which he made in the Holy Land, in 970, is found in Mabillonii Acta Sanct. Bened. vol. i. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard (or rather Bernardino CARVAJAL), a Spaniard of the province OF ESTREMADURA, flourished about 1492, and was bishop successively of several sees, and lastly of Siguenza, and cardinal. He was among those cardinals who convened the Council of Pisa in 1511, on which account pope Julius II deposed him from the cardinalate; but Leo X restored him, and made him cardinal bishop of Frascati, and titular patriarch of Jerusalem, where he died, Dec. 13, 1523. His Oratio ad Cardinales was delivered in 1492, on the election of the pope (Rome, 1492). He also wrote, Oratio ad Sirtum IV et Cardinales, in die Circumcisionis Dominice, A.D. 1484:—Homilia in Exaltatione S. Crucis. See Cave, Historia Literaria, ii, App. p. 215.

Bernard, abbot of FONT-CHAUD, a French theologian of the order of Premonstrants who lived at the commencement of the 12th century, wrote Traité contre les Vaudois (Ingolstadt, 1614; also found in Bibliotheca Patrum Lugdunensis). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard, Saint, bishop of HILDESHEIM, in Lower Saxony, where he was born between 950 and 953, was nephew of Adalberon, palatine count. He was first sent to Osdag, bishop of Hildesheim, to be educated, who made him exorcist of his church; and subsequently Willigis, archbishop of Mentz, ordained him priest. He also studied under Tangmar, canon and primicerius of Hildesheim, to whom was confided the direction of the school dependent upon this chapter. He made rapid progress not only in sacred literature, but in painting, sculpture, architecture, silver-working, mosaic work, the setting of diamonds, and the copying of MSS. After his ordination he was charged with the instruction of the emperor Otho III, who was then seven years of age. At the death of Theophane, the empress mother and regent, he exercised his functions without control, and took part largely in the affairs of the government. Being appointed bishop of Hildesheim in 993, he occupied himself especially in embellishing the cathedral. He accompanied the emperor Otho to Italy, relented towards the Tuscans and Romans, and improved his taste for art by viewing the monuments of Rome. On his return he sought more than once to decorate the church at Hildesheim with all the elegancies of art. He had a long dispute with archbishop Willigis concerning the territories of the Abbey of Gandesheim, which gave occasion for the assembling the councils of Yodi, Rome, and Frankfort, in the years 1001 and 1002. In 1021 he took the vows in the Abbey of St. Michael. He died Nov. 20, 1023, and was canonized in 1093. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard (or Bernhard) of LUXEMBURG, a Flemish theologian of the Dominican order, was born at Strassen, near Luxembourg, and studied at Cologne, where he also joined his order. In 1507 he was made licentiate of theology at Louvain, and in 1516 doctor of theology at Cologne. For some time he acted as court-preacher and confessor to William duke of Jülich, and as inquisitor-general of the Cologne diocese. He died as prior of the Cologne convent, Oct. 6, 1535. He is the author of, Catalogus Hæreticorum Omnium Pæne, qui ad hæc usque Tempora püssim Literar. Monumentis Prodiit sunt, Illorum Nomina, Errores et Tempora quibus Vixerunt Ostendens (Paris, 1524; Cologne, 1525):—Opusculum de Jubileo, sive Peregrinatorum ad Urbem Romam (Cologne, 1525):—Sermones de Diabolica Collocatione VII Viliorum Capitalium et Virtutum Spiritualium:—De Ordinibus Militaribus et Armorum Militarium Mysteries (1527). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Quétfet Échard, Script. Ord. Pr. ii, 93; Pople, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bernard (Dupifer), of the monastery of MELCH in Austria (monachus Molicensis), wrote, about 1362, The History of St. Gotholmus; published by Lambecius, in the second volume of his Bibl. Vindob. p. 618, and by Pezsius, in the first volume of the Script. de Rebus Austr.

p. 109. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, App. p. 70; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 531.

Bernard (surnamed Syggerius), priest of MONTE CASSINO, was at first a monk of the monastery of Savigny, in the diocese of Lyons, and became in 1256 chaplain of pope Innocent IV. He was afterwards priest of St. Honoratus, in the isle of Lerins; then in 1263 he was elected priest of Monte Casino, at the desire of Urban IV. His merit secured for him the privilege of accompanying Charles I of Anjou in his journey through Italy. He died in 1282. Among his works we notice Speculum Monachorum (divided into three parts, published at Venice and Cologne in 1520). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard of MORLAIX. See BERNARD of CLUGNY.

Bernard of OSIMO, an Italian theologian of the Capuchin order, a native of Osimo, in the vicinity of Ancona, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He wrote, Tractatus de Passione Domini, in Varias Meditationes per Hebdomadem Distributus (Venice, 1589). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard of PARENZO (Bernardus Parentinus), a Dominican, originally of Béarn, who flourished about 1342. All that is known of him is, that he studied at Paris in 1336, taught theology at Albi in 1340, and was nominated professor of theology at Toulouse in 1342. He wrote Lilium Missæ for the use of the clergy (Paris, 1517, 1531, 8vo), and a series of Sermons. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, App. p. 42; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 536.

Bernard (or rather Bernardo CIRCA, and by some named BALDI), bishop of PAVIA, and of Faenza; collected the Constitutions of the popes, made after the Decretum of Gratianus, particularly those of Alexander III and Lucius III, ending with Celestinus III. He died in 1213. His work is in Ant. Augustin's Collectio Veterum Decretalium.

Bernard DES PORTES, the founder of the Carthusian house of that name, quitted the Benedictine monastery of Ambournay in 1115, to found the Chartreuses-Des-Portes, which was reckoned the third of that order. He governed his new community, as prior, until 1147, when his great infirmities obliged him to resign, and he died in 1152. Three of his Letters remain, and are given by Chifflet. See Bibl. Patrum, xxiv, 1501.

Bernard THE SAXON, a German theologian of the Benedictine order, lived in the 11th century. The writings which he directed against the emperor Henry IV, in the contentions of this prince with the pope, are extremely violent. He is the author of some other works, which are not well known to us. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard, archbishop of TOLEDO, the main promoter of the Gregorian papal system in Spain, was born at Agen, in France, near the close of the 11th century. For a time being he served as a soldier; he then entered the order of the Benedictines, and when Gregory VII endeavored to introduce his church reforms into Spain, Bernard was appointed abbot of the monastery of Sahaguna in Castile, in 1080, where he greatly promoted the claims of the papal see. His influence, however, was widened when Alfonso VI elected him archbishop of Toledo, while pope Urban II appointed him primas of the Spanish Church, when he invested Bernard with the pallium at Rome in 1087. All bishoprics were now given to adherents of the pope (to Benedictine monks whom he had brought along from France), and without any regard the papal system was now introduced. These proceedings caused not only the resistance of the king, but also of a part of the Spanish clergy; and the archbishop of St. Jago de Compostella went even so far as to contest Bernard's primacy. The introduction of the Roman liturgy in place of the Mozarabian was mainly Bernard's work. At one time his martial character would have placed him at the head of a Castilian army, as he intended to undertake a crusade to Palestine, but pope Paschalis II forbade him and all Spaniards, under pain of the interdict, taking any part in crusades to the East. Bernard presided at the Council of Leon in 1091, assisted at that of Nismes in 1096, and finally at that of Gironne in 1097, as legate of the holy see. He died in 1125. He wrote four Sermones upon the anthem Salve, Regina Misericordie, which, published under the name of St. Bernard, had always been attributed to this saint in all the editions of his works until Mabillon proved the error in the edition which he gave in Paris in 1690. They are given in Bernardi Claravall. Opera V (Paris, 1719). See Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Aschbach, in Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchenlexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bernard of Trilia, a French pupil of Thomas of Aquinas, was born at Nismes in 1240. He was professor of theology at Montpellier about the year 1286, then at St. Jacob in Paris, and died at Avignon in 1292. He wrote De Ente et Essentia; Utrum Intellectus Creatus Producat Rem Intellectam in esse Intelligibili? Utrum Anima in Tantum Possit Elevari per Gratiam, ut Essentiam Dei Videat; Questiones 18 de Cognitione Animæ Conjunctæ Corpori. See Hauréau, De la Scolastique, ii, 253; Bach, in Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bernard (or Bern-Hart), Saint, bishop of Vienne, in Dauphiny, was born in 778, of a noble family in the Lyonnais. When he was eighteen years of age, his parents sent him to the court of Charlemagne, and, against his own inclinations, married him. When he was twenty-five years old he obtained his wife's consent to leave her, and enter the monastery which he had founded at Ambournay, in Bresse. He was elected to the office of abbot, but he had not held it more than three years when Wolfhart, bishop of Vienne, died, and the electors, listening to the voice of a child of twelve years old; who cried loudly in the assembly that God had chosen Bernard for bishop, declared that their choice had fallen upon him. He, however, refused, until a positive command from pope Leo II compelled him to accept. He acted with those who had taken upon themselves to depose Louis-le-Debonnaire, and upon his restoration Bernard was compelled to flee into Italy, with Agobardus of Lyons, but was subsequently enabled to return to his see, where he endeavored to expiate his fault. He founded the monastery of Romans, and died in 842. His festival is marked on the 23d of January, which was the day of his funeral, and is believed to have been the day after that of his death. See Baillet, Jan. 23.

Bernard, Allen R., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Fluvanna County, Va., Oct. 9, 1795, of pious parents, under whose careful training he was early led to Christ. In 1816 he entered the Virginia Conference, with which he labored until his death, June 16, 1866. Mr. Bernard's life was a living commentary on the truth he preached. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 7.

Bernard, Andrew, an Augustine monk, was born at Toulouse, and was poet-laureate successively to Henry VII and Henry VIII of England. He is also supposed to have been the royal historiographer, and preceptor in grammar to prince Arthur. All the pieces remaining, which he wrote in the character of poet-laureate, are in Latin. Among them are an Address to Henry VIII for the Most Auspicious Beginning of the Tenth Year of his Reign:—A New-year's Gift for 1515:—Verses wishing Prosperity to his Majesty's Thirtieth Year. He wrote also some Latin hymns, a Latin Life of St. Andrew, and various other Latin prose works—particularly Chronicle of the Life and Achievements of Henry VII to the Taking of Perkin Warbeck. He was living in 1522. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bernard, Christopher David, formerly a Jewish rabbi at Barr in Poland, who joined the Church in 1712 at Heilbronn, was professor of Hebrew at Jena and Tübingen. He is the author of a Hebrew grammar, entitled הנהגת דוד, "the booth of David." It was published with a German translation and a preface by Chr. M. Pfaff (Wittenberg, 1722). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 112; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 22; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. iii, 974 sq.; iv, 964; Delitzsch, Wissenschaft. Kunst. Judenthum, p. 304; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sepharmim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum (Wilna, 1880), ii, 420, No. 344; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bernard, Claude (also called Le Pauvre Prêtre and Le Père Bernard), was born of a noble family of Dijon in 1588. He studied law and theology. Originally of licentious frivolity, he suddenly became converted, and devoted himself entirely to the service of the sick and poor. He is said to have sucked out ulcers in the hospitals, etc. He died in 1641. He had not been dead four weeks before a hundred miracles had been counted which were said to have been performed by him in Paris, and afterwards they became innumerable. See Gieseler, Ecclesiastical History, v, 178; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Bernard, De Linton, a Scottish bishop, was a native of the southern part of Scotland, and was brought up in the Church. He was the famous abbot of Arbroath in 1311-12, and succeeded to the see of the Isles about 1328. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 302.

Bernard, Edward, D.D., an English clergyman, a learned critic and astronomer, was born at Perry St. Paul, Northamptonshire, May 2, 1638. He graduated from St. John's College, Oxford, in 1659; filled the chair of astronomy at Oxford for a time in the absence of Sir Christopher Wren, and in 1672 became rector of Cheam in Surrey. In 1674 he became Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, and remained in that chair until 1691, when he was presented to the rectory of Brightwell in Berkshire. He died Jan. 12, 1696. He visited Holland three times in the course of his learned investigations. His works are of interest especially in science and criticism. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bernard, Hermann Hedwig, was born of Jewish parents at Uman in Russia, in 1785. In 1830 he was appointed teacher of languages at Cambridge, England, and died Nov. 15, 1857. He is the author of The Main Principles of the Creed and Ethics of the Jews Exhibited in Selections from the Yad Hachazakah of Maimonides, with a Literal English Translation, etc. (Cambridge, 1822). (B. P.)

Bernard, Jean, a French Dominican preacher, was born in 1553 at Linicourt, near Bapaume, and died in 1620. He was the author of several ascetic treatises. The lovers of books value a work which he culled from various authors, entitled, Le Fouet Divines Jureurs, Parjureurs et Blasphémateurs du Très-saint Nom de Dieu, etc. (Douai, 1608). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard, Nicholas, D.D., an eminent English divine of the 17th century, was educated at Cambridge, and received the degree of M. A. from Oxford University, July 15, 1628. He became chaplain to archbishop Usher in 1626, and soon after, by his favor, dean of Ardagh. In 1642 he returned to England and became rector of Whitechurch, in Shropshire; and after the declaration of the royal cause was made chaplain to Protector Cromwell, one of his almoners, and preacher to the Society of Gray's Inn. He died at Whitechurch in 1661. He published, The Whole Proceedings of the Siege of Drogheda (London and Dublin, 1642):—A Dialogue between Paul and Agrippa (Lond. eod.) :—The Life and Death of Dr. James Usher, late Archbishop of Armagh, etc. (1656); and other works, including letters and sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bernard, Roger, an English martyr, was a laborer who dwelt in Framsdon, Suffolk. He was taken and cast into prison because he would not go to church to hear the unsavory service. He was burned with three others at Bury, Norwich, in 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 157.

Bernard, Samuel, a Parisian painter and engraver, was born in 1615, and studied under Simon Vouet. His merit procured him a professorship in the Royal Academy of Painting at Paris. He died in 1687. The following are some of his sacred works: The Crucifixion; The Virgin Mary with the Dead Christ; The Ascension; The Flight into Egypt. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernard, Thomas, an English martyr, suffered martyrdom by burning in 1541, for teaching the Lord's Prayer in English. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, v, 454.

Bernardi, Arnold, a French theologian of the Dominican order, a native of Cahors, who died in 1334, wrote among other works, Postilla super Apocalypsia :—Lectura et Sermones super VII Psalmos Penitentiales. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardi, Giovanni, a Benedictine monk of St. Clement of Pescara, lived in the latter half of the 12th century. He was educated in the Abbey of St. Clement of Casario, or of Pescara, the history of which he gave under the title, Chronicon S. Clementis Casanriensis, sive Piscariensis Abbatie, divided into three parts, commencing with the emperor Louis II, founder of the monastery of Pescara, in 854, and concluding in 1182. D'Achery published this history in vol. v. of his Spicilegium (Paris, 1661). Duchesne and Ughelli also published it, but anonymously. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardin OF BUTI, an Italian preacher of the Order of Minorites, was born in Milan, and lived in the latter half of the 15th century. He was one of the great preachers of his time. His principal works are: a collection of Sermons sur la Sainte Vierge, entitled Mariule (Strasburg, 1496), together with a Quadragesimale, and reprinted with the addition of other sermons (Brescia, 1588) :—Curéme (Strasburg) :—Recueil de Sermons pour toute l'Année, et sur différentes Matières (Haguenau, 1500) :—Traité pour la Défense des Monts-de-piété (Milan, 1503). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardin (or Bernhardin) OF PARIS, a French theologian of the Capuchin order, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. His principal works are: Le Communion de Jésus-Christ (Paris, 1658) :—De l'Amour Céleste de la Sainte Vierge (ibid. 1659) :—Le Sainteté de Dieu exprimée en Jésus-Christ (ibid. 1674) :—De la Sainteté des Prêtres (ibid. 1675) :—Instructions pour les Missionnaires (ibid. 1677) :—Le Religieux, ou le Chrétien en Solitude (ibid. 1682). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardin OF PEQUIGNY (Lat. a Piconio), a French theologian, was born about 1633 at Pequigny, in Picardy. He taught theology successfully in the Capuchin order, to which he belonged, and died at Paris in 1709. He wrote, Pratique Efficace pour bien vivre et bien mourir (Lyons, 1701; in German, Friesburg, 1878) :—Re-traité Spirituelle (ibid. eod.) :—Triplex Expositio in Evangelio (Paris, 1704, 1706) :—Triplex Expositio in Epistolas D. Pauli (ibid. 1704, 1726). This book, one of many of this kind, merited the eulogy bestowed upon it by Clement XI. The fifth edition of an abridgment of this work by the author appeared in 1820. See Hoe-fer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bernardin OF ROME (surnamed the Small), an Italian theologian and preacher, was born at Feltri about 1420. He was of the order of Minorites. Sixtus IV and Innocent XIII employed him in some important affairs. His eloquence was admirable. Bernardino of Butis, his fellow-laborer, attributed to him miraculous power, and claimed that there were millions of angels in the air as he preached. But the grandest proof which he gave of his charity was the erection of the loan bank for the relief of the poor, which the Jews crushed with usury. He died at Pavia in 1494, leaving a small treatise On the Manner of Confession (Brescia, 1542); and some sermons in Italian (Venice, 1532). See Dupin, Hist. Eccles. Writers, iii, 76; Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, App. p. 195; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardin (of Carpentras), Henri André (called the Father), a French monk, was born at Carpentras in 1649. While very young he entered the order of the Carmelites, or, according to some authorities, the Capuchins. He taught successively philosophy and theology, and died at Orange in 1714. He wrote, Antiqua Priscorum Nominum Philosophia Evidentibus Demonstrationibus, cum Vera Scientiæ Methodo Restituta (Lyons, 1698). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardin, Théophile, a learned French Jesuit, was born at Sedan in 1569. After having taught classics and moral and dogmatic theology in his order, he was called to assume the direction of the House of Tournay, then the College of Arras. He died Aug. 15, 1625. His works, which bear evidence of deep piety, are entitled, Le Chemin de la Vertu Tracé aux Divers États (Tournay, 1615) :—Cynosure, or Étoile des Chrétiens pour Tirer vers le Port d'Heureuse Éternité (Rouen, 1616), several times translated and republished under the same, or different titles :—Le Pratique des Bonnes Œuvres (1616) :—De Religiosa Perseverantiæ Præditiis, Libri XI (Antwerp, 1622), republished in 1683, under the title of Speculum Perfectionis Religiosæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardini, PAULIN. See BERARDINI.

Bernardino CARVAJAL. See BERNARD OF ESTREMADURA.

Bernardino (de' Busti) OF MILAN. See BERNARDIN OF BUTIS.

Bernardo CIRCA. See BERNARD OF PAVIA.

Bernardon, GUILLAUME, a French ecclesiastical writer, was born at Chalons upon the Saône. Before taking orders, he was advocate. He died Aug. 15, 1628, leaving, De l'Indifférence sur le Devoir des Ecclesiastiques, et de la Residence qu'ils doivent aux Charges où ils sont appelés (Lyons, Pillehotte, 1622; 2d ed. Paris, 1625) :—Du Concours et de la Residence des Curés, et de la Pluralité des Bénéfices (Paris, 1625). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernardus DE TRILLIA. See BERTRAND.

Bernays, JACOB, a very prominent German philologist and critic of the 19th century, was born in the year 1824, and was the son of a rabbi of Hamburg. He was educated first at the Johanneum, the famous grammar-school of his native city, and afterwards at the University of Bonn, then illustrious by the presence of Brandis, Welcker, and Ritschl among its professors. On leaving Bonn, he became for a short time Bunsen's secretary and literary coadjutor. In 1853 he was appointed to a post in the Rabbinical seminary at Breslau; and in 1866 he became extraordinary professor and first librarian at Bonn, where he died on May 26, 1881, at the early age of fifty-seven. Of his writings we mention, Die Herakleischen Briefe (Berlin, 1869), a treatise in which he was able to show that even the epistles fathered by some sorry forger on Heraclitus may be made to cast a new light on the moral and religious condition of society in the first century :—The- ophrasto's Schrift über Frömmigkeit (Breslau, 1866):—Ueber die Chronik des Sulpicius Severus (ibid. 1861):—Dialoge des Aristoteles (Berlin, 1863):—Ueber das Phoklydeische Gedicht (1856):—Lucian und die Kydiker (Berlin, 1879):—Phokion u. seine neueren Beurtheiler (1881); and last, but not least, his learned and fascinating Life of Scaliger (1855), in which he showed that he felt the full meaning of the Huguenot movement. (B. P.)

Bernd, ADAM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Breslau, March 31, 1676. He studied at Leipsic, where he also was appointed preacher of St. Peter's in 1711. In 1728 he published a treatise, Einfuss der göttlichen Wahrheiten in den Willen und in das Leben der Menschen, in which he showed an inclination towards Romanism. In consequence of this he was suspended from his office, which he resigned, and received an annual pension till his death, Nov. 5, 1748. His writings are enumerated in Jöcher's Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Berndt, JOHANN CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Breslau, June 26, 1795. In 1824 he was appointed deacon at St. Mary Magdalen of his native city, in 1834 archdeacon there, and died in 1845. He wrote, Psalmus CLI, Apocryphus Annotationibus Illustratus (Breslau, 1818). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 234; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 115. (B. P.)

Berner (or Bernerus), a Benedictine monk of St. Remy, in Rheims, lived in the middle of the 10th century. He distinguished himself by the severe chastity of his manners; and in 948 he conducted to Humblieres, in Vermandois, a colony of monks of his convent, and cleared up the solitary country. He wrote there two small treatises: Vita Sanctæ Hunegundis Humolariensis I. Abbatissæ:—De Translatione Corporis Sanctæ Hunegundis (inserted in the Acta Ord. Bened. by Mabillon). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Berner, JOHANN BENJAMIN, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Greitz, Sept. 9, 1727, and died May 12, 1772. His principal works are, Kurzgefasste Abhandlung von dem Kreuzestode unsers Heylundes (Schleitz, 1760), transl. from the Latin of Richter:—Die selige Beschäftigung des Glaubens mit dem Begräbniss Christi (Zeulenroda, 1761):—Der gläubige Paulus in Trübsal und in Aengsten (Schleitz, 1762):—Neue Proben göttlicher Güte an armen Kindern und Waisen (Greitz, 1770-72):—Lebenslauf des Selig. D. Luthers, in Versen:—Predigten. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berners (or Barnes), JULIANA, prioress of Sopenwell Nunnery, near St. Albans, England, daughter of Sir James Berners, who was beheaded in the reign of king Richard II, was born about 1388. She was celebrated for her beauty, her spirit, and her passion for field-sports. To her is attributed the Treatyse perteynyng to Hawkyng, Huntynge, and Fysshynge with an Angle; also A right noble Treatyse on the Lygnage of Cot Armour, endynge with a Treatyse which specyfeth of Blazynge of Armys (fol. 1496). See Encyclop. Britannica (9th ed.), s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bernet, Jacques, a French prelate, was born at St. Flour, Sept. 4, 1770. He completed his studies at the Seminary of St. Sulpice. The closing of this ecclesiastical establishment, which took place in August, 1792, obliged him to go to a hospital in order to recover from an illness which had attacked him. In order to obtain resources he became teacher at Meaux. His ordination was accompanied by circumstances which the time alone will explain, and which necessitated its being performed privately. He was sent to establish the Catholic religion in the parish of Antony, where he encountered a fierce Jacobin, whom he conquered by his firmness and energy. After the anti-religious reaction which took place in 1797, the oath of haine à la royauté having been exacted of the priests, the young Levite quitted his parish and went to Orleans to found an establishment for religious education. He did not return to his vocation until after the publication of the Concordat and the re-establishment of the religion in 1802. Being vicar of a parish in Orleans, he was called upon by the authorities of the place to pronounce a eulogy upon Joan of Arc. Called, after the restoration, to the royal house of St. Denis as first chaplain of the Daughters of the Legion of Honor, he performed these functions for several years, although rendered difficult by the want of discipline throughout the establishment. He left this position in order to become rector of the parish of St. Vincent de Paul. He was consecrated bishop of Rochelle Aug. 12, 1827, promoted Oct. 6, 1835, to the archbishopric of Aix, and was made cardinal by Gregory XVI in the consistory of Jan. 19, 1846. He died at Aix, July 5, 1846. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bernet, Johann Jacob, a Protestant German theologian, was born in 1800. In 1837 he was called as pastor of St. Leonhard to St. Gallen, in Switzerland, and died in 1855. He wrote, Johann Kessler, genant Athenarius, Bürger u. Reformator zu St. Gallen (St. Gallen, 1826):—Das Buch der Andacht und der häuslichen Gottesverehrung (ibid. 1844, 2 vols.):—Predigten für das Christenthum an die Agrippiner unter den Christen (Berlin, 1834, 2 vols.):—Gedanken über Einführung einer kirchlichen Bibelübersetzung (Zurich, 1845):—Predigten (St. Gallen, 1853, 2 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 115 sq. (B. P.)

Bernetti, TOMMASO, an Italian ecclesiastical and statesman, was born at Fermo, Dec. 29, 1779. After having pursued his studies with success in his native city, he became secretary of the tribunal of the Rota. In 1808 he accompanied cardinal Brancadoro to France, and was one of the three who refused, April 2, 1810, to appear at the marriage of Napoleon with Marie Louise, and who were called les cardinaux noirs because the emperor had prohibited the purple and the insignia of the cardinalship. He was banished to Rheims with Consalvi, and remained there five years. In July, 1813, he had the wisdom to send on to Houthem St. Gerlac, to his friend Van der Vrecke, the autograph letters of Pius VII to the emperor of Austria and the nuncio Severoli at Vienna. These letters were delivered, and the pope received replies which were favorable. Pius VII made his entrance into Rome May 24, 1814. Bernetti followed the pontiff. He made a treaty with marshal Bianchi, and vanquished the Neapolitan army, in order to re-establish order and peace in the pontifical states. Returning to Rome, he was appointed assessor of the committee of the war. In 1826 he was chosen by Leo XII to represent the court of Rome at St. Petersburg. On his return to the capital of the Christian world, he was sent as legate to Ravenna. On Jan. 29, 1827, he received at the hands of Leo X the insignia of the cardinalship. On June 17, 1828, he was called to succeed cardinal Della Somaglia as secretary of state, and was employed in important negotiations between Rome and the other courts of Europe. He co-operated especially at the conclusion of the Concordat with the Netherlands, June 18, 1827, at the accession of Pius VIII, and went as legate to Bologna. He continued these functions until Gregory XVI succeeded Pius VIII, when he was appointed pro-secretary of state. He had charge of directing the demarcation of the Roman states on the side of the Two Sicilies, and was made vice-chancellor of the Roman Church, which position he filled zealously and well. The storms which assailed the pontificate of Pius IX did not spare Bernetti. Being threatened by the revolutionists, he left Rome and retired to Naples, and finally joined Pius IX at Gaeta. He did not return to Rome, but went to Fermo, and died soon after, Dec. 29, 1779. He was considered one of the more remarkable and brilliant among the statesmen of the epoch. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernhardi, JOHANN HEINRICH, a German Protestant theologian, was born in 1685, at Wolfhagen, in Hesse, and died Feb. 21, 1729. His principal works are, Disputatione de Usu et Utilitate Philosophiæ et Historiæ in Jurisprudentia (Hanover, 1719):—De Genuina ac Solida Doctoris Theologici Sapientia (Duisburg, 1725):—De Rationabilitate Mysteriorum Salutis (Hanover, 1726). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bern-Hart, Saint. See BERNARD.

Bernhold, JOHANN BALTHASAR, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 3, 1687, at Burg-Salach, in Franconia. He studied at Altdorf, Jena, and Wittenberg. In 1709, on presenting a dissertation, De Obligatione Suppliciorum Propositiones Morales, he received the degree of doctor of philosophy. In 1714 he was appointed deacon at Pfedelbach, and rapidly advanced as professor, member of consistory, and court-preacher. In 1725 he accepted a call to Altdorf as professor of theology, and in 1732 he was also appointed to the chair of the Greek language. He died Feb. 26, 1769. He wrote, De T. Fl. Clemente (Altdorf, 1725):—Diss. de Partiali Jejunii Exemplo Johannis Baptistæ (ibid. eod.):—Theses de Saluberrima Evangelii Doctrina, ex 1 Cor. xv, 1-4 (ibid. eod.):—Diss. de Michaële, Archangelo Uno (ibid. 1726):—Diss. de Gloria Petri (ibid. 1727):—Compendium Theologiæ Polemicæ Disp. xxii (ibid. 1732):—Diss. de Protevangeliis Paradisaico, ad Gen. iii, 15 (ibid. eod.):—Diss. super Jes. ii, 2, de Letabili Gentium sub N. T. Conversione (ibid. 1734):—Diss. Biblicæ ἀκριβοῦς Specimen de Homine Exteriore et Interiore, ex 2 Cor. iv, 16 (ibid. 1738):—Diss. de Voto per Jephthachum Nuncupato (ibid. 1740), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 87 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 343, 646; ii, 3. (B. P.)

Bernicè (or Berenice), Saint, is supposed by many to be the same with St. VERONICA.

Bernice, the daughter of St. Domnina (q. v.) and sister of St. Prosdocha, martyrs of Antioch.

Bernier, ÉTIENNE ALEXANDRE, a French prelate, was born at Daon, a district of Mayence, Oct. 31, 1762. He was rector of St. Laud at the period of the Revolution. He refused the oath required by the constituent assembly, and became one of the directing members of the insurrectional government. The abbot Folleville, known under the name of the bishop of Agra, was president of the council, but the abbot Bernier was the veritable head. His predictions, which exalted Brittany, gained for him the title of apostle of Vendée, but it soon appeared that he was working for his personal advantage. He finally sought, in the midst of peril, to return to the army of Charette. He became the friend and ally of Stofflet, and the first days of their union were noted by the assassination of Bernard of Marigny, whose ability and talent overshadowed that of Bernier, and the latter was chosen by Stofflet to negotiate peace with the republican government. At length Bonaparte expressed his desire for peace with Vendée, which was accordingly arranged, and Bernier was shortly after made bishop of Orléans. He died Oct. 1, 1806. He is supposed to be the author of the words and music of Reveil des Vendéens. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernières-Louvigny, JEAN DE, a French theologian, was born in 1602 at Caen. Guided in his spiritual life by P. John Chrysostom, a monk of the third order of St. Francis, it was by his advice that Bernières built at Caen a house called the Hermitage, in the exterior court of the Convent of the Ursulines, which had as its foundress and superior his sister, Jourdainne of Bernières. He did not go forth from this except to perform the duties of his charge, and consecrated his time to prayer, to good works, and to the spiritual direction of some of his friends with whom he lived in community. The weakness of his eyesight obliged him to dictate to an ecclesiast his numerous works, which he composed wholly in the spirit of Christian obedience. He died May 8, 1659. He wrote, L'Intérieur Chrétien (Paris, 1659; published with some additions at Rouen); this book, which reached twelve editions in eleven years, was edited anew at Paris by the widow Martin in 1674:—Les Œuvres Spirituelles de M. de Bernières de Louvigny, were published by his sister Jourdainne of Bernières:—La Vie de la Foi de la Grâce:—De la Raison et de ses Degrés. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernini, Giovanni Lorenzo (called Il Cavaliere Bernini), an Italian artist whose renown filled all Europe in the 17th century, was born in Naples in 1598. Richly endowed by nature, and favored by circumstances, he rose superior to the rules of art, creating for himself an easy manner, the faults of which he knew how to disguise by its brilliancy. At ten years of age he was the astonishment of artists. Pope Paul V wished to see the prodigy, and when he was brought into his presence, he desired him to draw a figure of St. Paul, which he did in half an hour—so much to the satisfaction of the pontiff that he recommended him to cardinal Barberini, a great connoisseur and patron of the arts. His first work in marble was the bust of the prelate Montajo, which was so striking a resemblance that some one said, "It is Montajo petrified." At eighteen he produced the Apollo and Daphne, in marble—a masterpiece in grace and execution, which he himself, towards the end of his life, declared one of his best works. He did work for Gregory XV, and in 1644 cardinal Mazarini, in the name of the king of France, offered him a salary of 12,000 crowns to enter the service of that monarch, but he declined the invitation. His reputation extended more and more, and Charles I of England engaged him to execute a statue for 6000 crowns. About this time Bernini erected the palace of Monte Citorio, and the beautiful monument to the memory of his benefactor, pope Urban VIII. He also built the Palace Odescalchi, the Rotunda della Riccia, and the House of Novices for the Jesuits. He set out from Rome for Paris, and it is said that never did an artist travel with so much pomp, and under so many flattering circumstances. The king made him a present of 10,000 crowns, gave him a pension of 2000 and one of 400 to his son, and a command to execute an equestrian statue of himself (Louis XIV). This work he finished in four years. He died at Rome, Nov. 28, 1680. The following are some of the most remarkable of his religious works: the great altar of St. Peter's, in bronze and gilt; the four colossal statues of St. Chrysostom, St. Athanasius, St. Augustin, and St. Ambrose, cast in bronze; the belfry of St. Peter's; the basso-relievo in the portico of St. Peter's, representing Christ saying to Peter, "Feed my sheep." He built the chapel in the Church of S. Maria della Vittoria, dedicated to St. Teresa, with a fine marble statue of that saint; the principal part of the Barberi palace; the celebrated Chigi palace, built for the cardinal Flavio Chigi, nephew of pope Alexander VII. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bernini, Giuseppe Maria, an Italian Capuchin missionary, was born in Piedmont, at Carignano. He went to the Indies in order to study the manners, customs, and religion of the natives, and to translate their sacred and literary monuments into his own tongue. He died in 1753, leaving Notizie Laconiche di Alcuni Usi, Sacrifici ed Idoli nel Regno di Neipal, Raccolte vel Anno 1747—a manuscript work preserved in the Library of the Propaganda at Rome, and in the museum of the cardinal Borgia. The Dialogues, in the Indian language, are also preserved among the manuscripts of the Propaganda. The translation of the Adhiatma Ramayana contains the deeds of Rama. He wrote also Mémoires Historiques (Verona, 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernis, FRANÇOIS JOACHIM DE PIERRE DE, a celebrated French ecclesiastic, was born at St. Marcel of Ardeche, May 22, 1715. Being of one of the more ancient families of Languedoc, he was, as younger brother, designed for the ecclesiastical profession. He was a brilliant student at the College of Louis the Great, then at the Seminary of St. Sulpice. Despairing of obtaining a benefice, he went out into the world at the age of nineteen, with the title of abbot, without fortune, but full of confidence. His agreeable manners and pleasing appearance aided him in winning his way, and his parentage gained for him an entrance to the best circles of society. In 1744 he was elected member of the French Academy. In 1748 he left the chapter of the counts of Brionde, in order to enter that of the counts of Lyons. He was made ambassador to Venice. Called to France, he entered the grand council and became minister of foreign affairs. Having assisted in the alliance of France and Austria, he was reproached, but afterwards justified in the matter. Madame de Pompadour, who had formerly been his friend, and had secured for him a lodgment at the Tuileries and 1500 francs pension from the king, having become his enemy, he preferred to retire to the Abbey of Vic-sur-Aisne, near Soissons. Bernis was elected commander of the order of St. Esprit during his ministry. Pope Clement XIII made him cardinal in spite of the hatred which Madame de Pompadour bore for him, and he was afterwards made archbishop of Albi after the death of Madame de Pompadour. In 1769 he was sent as ambassador to Rome, and there sought the destruction of the Jesuit order. He was the Nestor of the political circles, and the king of Naples secured his presence under such circumstances as to render his counsel of great value, and he was loaded with honors on all sides. Gustavus III of Sweden held an intimate correspondence with him up to the time of his death. Refusing the oath which was at that time exacted of ecclesiastics, and which he believed incompatible with his former vows, he was obliged to resign his position, and his annuity of 400,000 pounds; but so highly was he honored for this, that a pension was obtained for him from the king of Spain. He died at Rome, Nov. 1, 1794. His family and the French legation made for him a mausoleum, from the model of that of the cardinal Orsini, and his body was carried to Nismes. Another monument was erected in the Church of St. Louis at Rome, containing his heart and entrails. Besides the letters of Bernis to Paris Duverny, a small volume has been collected of his Euvres Mêlées en Prose et en Vers. His style is simple, but not wanting in elegance. His poem of Lu Religion, which has reached several editions, is as noteworthy for the principles expressed as for the talent. His nephews—among whom we mention M. the viscount Raymond of Bernis, superior officer of the cavalry, born in 1815—have in their possession the memoirs and various unpublished articles of this illustrious cardinal. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Berno, the first abbot of CLUNY, made his profession of the monastic state in the Abbey of St. Martin, at Autun, whence he removed to that of Baume (or to St. Benoit d'Aniane). He was appointed abbot of Baume, and subsequently of Cluny, about 910 (or 913). He also had charge of the monastery of Déols, or Bourg-Dieu; and, in the following year, of Massay, in Berry. He was thus, at one time, superior of seven abbeys, which were committed to him in opposition to his own wishes, on account of his reputation for sanctity, that he might restore them to a proper state of discipline. Nothing is known of his private life; but he died peaceably on the 1st or 13th of January, 927, and was buried at Cluny. Some martyrologies give him the title of blessed, others call him saint. See Baillet, Jan. 13.

XL—15*

Berno (or Bernard) of REICHENAU (also styled Quod-vult-Deus) was originally a Benedictine monk of Fleury-sur-Loire (others say of St. Gall in Switzerland), and was in 999 deputed to the Council of Orleans. In 1008 (or 1014) he was appointed abbot of Reichenau, an abbey located upon the lake of Zell, near that of Constance. He restored the pristine glory of this abbey, which was lost under his predecessor Immo. He was known as an excellent musician and poet, and was well acquainted with the literature of his time. He enriched the library of his abbey by collecting old works, by manuscripts made by his monks, and by new works which were written by him and the learned inmates of the monastery. Under his guidance the school at Reichenau revived its old fame, and students flocked to it from great distances. He also reformed the music of the Church. In 1013 he accompanied the emperor, Henry II, to Rome. The privileges of Reichenau were confirmed in 1016 by the emperor, and again in 1032 by pope John XX. He died Jan. 7, 1045, leaving, De Officio Missæ (Cologne, 1568; Venice, 1572; Paris, 1578; also found in the Magna Bibl. tom. xviii):—Qualiter Adventus Domini Celebretur (in Gez, Anecdota, iv, 69 sq.):—Dialogus cum Gerungo Monacho (ibid.):—Vita S. Udalrici Augustani Episc. (in Surius, July 4):—Vita S. Megiradi Ep. et Mart. (in Mabillon, Acta Ord. Bened. iv, par. ii, p. 68):—a book upon song, entitled Libellus Tonarius, seu de Regulis Symphoniæ et Tonarum, which he dedicated to Pilgrim, archbishop of Cologne. At the Pauline Library at Leipzig were to be found at one time manuscripts upon mathematics, astronomy, and music, by Berno. During the time of Berno, the manner of keeping the four days' fast was various, and he accordingly wrote a dialogue entitled De Quatuor Temporibus Jejuniis, per sua Sabbata Observandis, ad Aribonem, Archiepiscopum Maguntinum; also another addressed to Aribon, entitled De Quatuor Adventus Dominicis. These works are likewise to be found in the Thesaurus Anecdotorum Novissimus of Bern. Gez (Augsburg, 721, vol. iv). See Gerbert, Scriptores Ecclesie de Musica, tom. ii; Hefele, Ueber den wissenschaftlichen Zustand Alemanniens im 9, 10, und 11 Jahrhundert, in the Tübinger theol. Quartalschrift, 1838; Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Ceillier, Hist. des Aut. Eccles. xx, 206 sq.; Laudon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bernold (or Bernoul). See BERTHOLDUS.

Bernoulli, EDUARD, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in the year 1795. He studied at Tübingen from 1815 to 1818, and was appointed pastor in 1819 at Benwil-Holstein and Lampenberg, in the Basle canton. In 1839 he connected himself with the famous missionary institution at Basle, and became one of its leaders. For more than thirty years he thus labored for his Master, till bodily infirmities obliged him to retire in the year 1873. He died July 6, 1875. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 117. (B. P.)

Bernstein, Christian Andreas, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Domnitz, near Halle, where he also pursued his theological course. In 1695 Francke appointed him teacher at the royal pædagogium, which position he occupied till 1699, when he was called to assist his father in the ministry at his native place, but he died there in the same year, Oct. 18. He is the author of some hymns, two of which were translated into English—viz., Mein Vater zeuge mich, dein Kind, by Jacobi, in Psalmodia Germanica, "My father, form thy child according to thine Image" (p. 125); and Zuletzt geht's wohl dem, der gerecht auf Erden, in Hymns from the Land of Luther, "At last shall all be well with those, His own" (p. 150). See Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iv, 365 sq.; Dreyhaupt, Beschreibung des Saal-kreises (Halle, 1751), ii, 897. (B. P.)

Bernstein, Georg Heinrich, a famous German Orientalist, was born Jan. 12, 1789. He was at first professor at Berlin, and after 1821 at Breslau; and died at Lauban in Silesia, April 5, 1860. He published, De Harklensi Novi Testamenti Translatione Syriaca Commentatio (2d ed. Vratislav. 1854):—Ankündigung und Probe einer neuen kritischen Ausgabe und neuen Uebersetzung der Syrischen Chronik des Gregor Bar-Hebraeus (Berlin, 1847):—Das heilige Evangelium des Johannes. Syrisch mit Harklensischer Uebersetzung, etc. (Leipsic, 1853). Of his Lexicon Lingue Syriacæ only the first part was published in Berlin in 1857. He also contributed largely to the Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft. See Nowack, Schlesisches schriftsteller Lexicon; Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, s. v.; Gosche, Wissenschaftlicher Jahresbericht, 1859–61, p. 8; Zenker, Bibl. Orientalis, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bernten, Heinrich, a German theologian of the order of Cistercians, was abbot of the convent of Marienrode, at Hildesheim, and died in 1463, leaving Chronicon Marienrodense ab Anno 1410 ad 1454; which is found in the collection of Leibnitz. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bernuini (1), a nephew of Wilfrid, and a clerk to whom he commended the Isle of Wight, giving him the priest Hiddila to preach to and baptize the people, about 686. See Bede, Hist. Eccles. iv, 16; Flor. Wig. M. H. B. p. 537. (2.) An English priest to whom Alcuin writes, professing his attachment to Offa and the English. The letter was probably written during a coolness between Charles and Offa, the cause of which is obscure, and the date of the letter, although fixed by Froben at 793, is very uncertain.

Bernward, Saint. See BERNARD.

Bero (or Beron) was a Valentinian heretic of the 3d century, who admitted two natures by confusion in our blessed Lord, but only one operation. He maintained that the divinity was passible, and the humanity capable of the same operations as the Word. This opinion compelled him to maintain also that the Word was made man by a change of his divinity into the nature of man, and that the man had been made God by a change of his humanity into the nature of God. St. Hippolytus refuted this heretic and his followers in his book, On the Divinity and Incarnation of Jesus Christ, against Bero and Helico (or Helice). See Canisius, Lect. Antiq. v; Ceillier, Hist. des Aut. Ecclés. ii, 347.

Bero, Agostino, a famous Italian canonist, was born at Bologna in 1474, where he also died as professor of canon law, Sept. 13, 1554. Among his pupils were the popes Pius IV and Gregory XIII. Panziroli calls him "monarcha legum," but also "vir fuit magis laboriosus quam subtilis." He wrote, Lectura sive Commentaria in 1, 2, 3 et 5 Libr. Decretalium:—Questiones, Responsa et Consilia. See Guido Panziroli, De Clavis Legum Interpretibus 3, 49; Bumaldo, Minervulus (Bonon. 1641); Schulte, Lehrbuch des kanonischen Kirchenrechts (3d ed.), p. 111; Daller, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Beroalde (or Berould), MATHIEU, a French theologian and historian, was born at St. Denis, near Paris, at the commencement of the 16th century. He was tutor of Hector Fregose in 1550, and was appointed bishop of Agen, when he ardently embraced Calvinism. In 1558 he was governor of Theodore Agrippa d'Aubigne, with whom he was obliged to leave Paris and retire to Montargis. Afterwards he taught Hebrew at Orleans, where he was attacked by the pestilence, from which he recovered. He was in 1573, at Sancerre, besieged by the Marshal of Chatré, where he rendered himself useful to the inhabitants by his counsels. After a sojourn at Sedan, where he gave lessons in history, he retired to Geneva, where he taught philosophy in 1576, in which year occurred his death. He wrote, Chronicon Scripturæ Sacræ Autoritate Constitutum, et quinque Libris Absolutum (Geneva, 1575). In the Bibliotheca Classica, Draud mentions also G. Mercatoris et Mathei Beroaldi Chronologia, ab Initio Mundi ex Eclipsibus et Observationibus Astronomicis Demonstrata (Cologne, 1568). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Beroldus, librarian of the Duomo, or cathedral-church, of Milan, lived about 1123, and left the most ancient collection of the Rites of the Liturgy of St. Ambrose.—Landon, Ecclés. Dict. s. v.

Beroniciānus, bishop of Tyre, was appointed on the deposition of Cyrus by the dominant party at the council of Ephesus, A.D. 431. At his request, Cyril wrote to the Oriental bishops, urging on them the necessity of their anathematizing Nestorius. See Baluze, Nov. Coll. p. 889; Cyril, Ep. ad Aristolaum.

Berr, Isaac, of TURIQUE, a French philanthropist, was born at Nancy in 1743. He was one of the first who spoke in favor of the Jews, at the commencement of the revolution. He demanded with eloquence their rights as citizens and the establishment of a school of religious instruction. He appeared at the bar of the constituent assembly at the head of a deputation of coreligionists, and was listened to while he spoke in favor of his brethren. In 1807 he raised between himself and the abbot Gregory a debate, in which they both showed remarkable gentleness and moderation. M. Berr was one of the men who contributed most to the organization of the Israelitish worship in France. He died at his native place, Nov. 1828. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berr, Michel, of NANCY, the first Jewish lawyer in France, was born in 1780, and died July 4, 1843. He translated into French בְּרִינְיָ בֵּרֶךְ, or Examen du Monde (Metz, 1808):—Les Huit Chapitres de Maïmonide (Paris, 1811). He published, Abrégé de la Bible (ibid. 1820):—Le Rubbinisme et les Traditions Juives (ibid. 1832):—Mémoire sur la Prophétie de Balaam (ibid. ed.).—Notice sur le Prophète Élie (Nancy, 1839):—Notice Biographique sur le Comte Pastoret, avec les Remarques sur l'ouvrage: Moïse, considéré comme Législateur et Moraliste (ibid. 1841), and other pieces. See Firsi, Bibl. Jud. i, 113. (B. P.)

Berretini, Pietro (called Da Cortona), an illustrious Florentine painter and architect, was born at Cortona in 1596. He studied under Baccio Ciampi in Rome, when quite young, but gained more advantage from the study of the works of Raffaele and Caravaggio. While yet young, he painted two pictures, representing the Rape of the Sabines and a Battle of Alexander, which gained him so much celebrity that pope Urban VIII commissioned him to paint a chapel in the Church of St. Bibiena, which he did with success. Cortona made the tour of Lombardy, went to Venice, and, in returning, visited Florence, where he was engaged by the grand-duke Ferdinand II to paint the saloon and four apartments in the Palazzo Pitti, where he represented the Clemency of Alexander to the Family of Darius, the Firmness of Porsena, the Continence of Cyrus, the History of Massinissa, and other subjects. Disgusted by the intrigues of some artists, who were jealous of his reputation, he left Florence abruptly, before he had finished his works, and could never be persuaded to return. His principal works at Rome are the saloon in the Barberini and a gallery in the Pamphili, the cupola and vault in the tribune of the Chiesa Nuova, and the Conversion of St. Paul at the Capuccini. As an architect, he erected a number of important edifices.

He died in 1669. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Berretoni (or Berreti), NICOLÒ, an Italian historical painter, was born at Montefeltro, near Macerata, in 1637, and studied under Carlo Maratti and Cantarini. One of his best pictures is an altar-piece in the Church of St. Maria de Montesanto at Rome, representing a subject from the life of St. Francis. He was elected an academician at Rome in 1675, and died in 1682. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berrian, WILLIAM, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in 1786. He graduated from Columbia College in 1808, was ordained deacon in 1810, and became assistant minister of Trinity Church, New York city, in 1811, and rector in 1830, a position which he retained until his death, Nov. 7, 1862. He is the author of, Historical Sketch of Trinity Church (1847):—Works of Bishop Hobart (1833, 3 vols.); and several popular religious works, for which see Drake, Dict. of Amer. Biog. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Berrill, EDWARD, an English Congregational minister, was born at Castle Mills, Bedford, Nov. 6, 1796. His advantages for early education were very limited, mostly confined to his own private reading. About the age of eighteen he joined the Church, and shortly afterwards began preaching in the surrounding villages. He commenced business as a builder in Bedford, in which he was greatly successful, but about 1840 he relinquished his trade and devoted himself entirely to the ministry. He preached successively seven years at Byfield, six years at Market-Deeping, and twelve years at Wollaston, Northamptonshire, when deafness and other infirmities compelled his resignation. He died April 7, 1875. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 317.

Berriman, JOHN, an English clergyman, brother of Dr. William Berriman, was born in 1689, and educated at St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford. After taking orders, he was for many years curate of St. Swithin and lecturer of St. Mary, Aldermanbury; but in 1744 he was presented to the rectory of St. Albans, which he retained until his death, Dec. 8, 1768. He published, Eight Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lecture (1741); and some single sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. v. 141; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Berrow, CAPEL, an English clergyman of the 18th century, published a volume of Sermons (1746):—A Pre-existent Lapse of Human Souls Demonstrated from Reason, etc. (1762):—Deism not Consistent with the Religion of Nature and Reason (1780). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Berruguette, ALONSO, an eminent Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect, was born, according to Palomino, at Parados de Nava, in Castile, in 1480. He studied some time under Michael Angelo. He was the contemporary of Andrea del Sarto. The emperor Charles V appointed him one of his painters, and employed him in many considerable works at Madrid, in the palace of the Prado, and in the Alhambra of Granada, which established his reputation. As a sculptor he was very distinguished. He executed a bass-relief of the Transfiguration in the choir of the Cathedral of Toledo, also a statue of St. Leocadin in that city, and a number of bass-reliefs in the choir of the Church of Sillas. As an architect, he erected the gate of San Martino, at Toledo; the palace of Alcala, belonging to the bishop of Toledo; and a great portion of the Cathedral of Cuenca. He died at Alcala (others say Madrid or Toledo) in 1561 (or 1545). See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berry, Cornelius, an English Congregational minister, was born at Romsey, Hants, July 23, 1788.

Being favored with a Christian education, he early gave himself to the service of God. In 1806 he entered Homerton College. At the close of his course he preached a short time at Ware, Herts. He was ordained in 1811 over the parish at Hatfield Broad Oak, Essex, where he labored fifty-three years. He died Sept. 8, 1864. In the character of Mr. Berry, fidelity, prudence, and kindness were especially prominent. His preaching was full of Gospel truth, practical in its aim, and devout and loving in its spirit. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 224.

Berry, Francis W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Canada in 1842. He was converted while young, and received license to preach in his seventeenth year; entered the Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., at the age of twenty; and subsequently entered the Detroit Conference. In 1865 he was admitted into the Minnesota Conference. He died Feb. 19, 1866. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 213.

Berry, Henry D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Camden, S. C., May 3, 1825. He experienced religion in 1839, became class leader at the age of seventeen, received license to preach in 1854, and was admitted into the Mississippi Conference. He died Oct. 26, 1867. As a declaimer Mr. Berry had few superiors, and as an humble, patient, and faithful pastor he excelled. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 140.

Berry, John A., M.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, joined the Church in 1842; entered the North Ohio Conference in 1854, and labored with great ability and success until 1859, when he was appointed agent of the Ohio Wesleyan Female College. A severe spinal affection soon compelled him to resign the agency. He afterwards preached for a year and a half at Mount Gilead Station. The remaining four years of his life were spent in retirement and great suffering. He died in December, 1863. Mr. Berry was emphatically a practical man, hence his success. Brief as was his career, yet hundreds were converted through his instrumentality. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 131.

Berry, John Calvin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Belmont County, O., March 11, 1833, of pious United Presbyterian parents, who gave him a careful religious training with the ministry in view. He had a fair academical education, and studied some time at the Ohio University at Athens. He was converted in 1857, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church; was licensed to exhort in the same year, to preach in 1861, and in that capacity served the Church some time, acting meanwhile as day-school teacher, and later as agent of the American Bible Society in eastern Ohio. In 1867 he went to Missouri, and acted as supply until the following spring, when he joined the St. Louis Conference, and in it served diligently seven years, when failing health obliged him to become supernummate. His last days were spent in Des Moines, Ia., where he died April 19, 1877. Mr. Berry was a faithful, spiritual, earnest worker. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 73.

Berry, John F., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Twiggs County, Ga., in 1837. He experienced conversion in 1853; received license to exhort in 1857, to preach in 1858, and in the same year entered the Georgia Conference. On Sept. 5, 1866, he was instantly killed by a flash of lightning. Mr. Berry possessed many excellent traits of character. He was unassuming, diligent, amiable, and eminently pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 25.

Berry, Joseph, an English Congregational minister, was lineally descended from colonel Berry, one of Cromwell's officers. He was educated at Homerton College, and began his public ministry when twenty-one years of age at Carrs-lane Chapel, Birmingham. He removed from there to Warminster, where he was ordained, Aug. 8, 1804. In 1829 he removed to Hackney, where he died, Aug. 2, 1864. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 222.

Berry, Philip, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, died in Richmond, Va., Feb. 2, 1857, being at St. Peter's Church, New Kent County, Md., whither he had removed in 1856. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1857, p. 143.

Berry, Robert Taylor, a Presbyterian minister, was born July 6, 1812, at Berryplain, King George Co., Va. His classical education was obtained under the tuition of Thomas H. Hanson, in his celebrated school at Fredericksburg, Va. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he spent about a year in a mercantile house in Shepherdstown, Va., and then entered the law office of his brother in Fredericksburg. After his admission to the bar, he removed to Baltimore, Md., and was there successfully engaged in the practice of his profession; but, turning his attention to the Christian ministry, he entered Princeton Seminary in 1835. Being received as a candidate by Winchester Presbytery, he was licensed May 30, 1838; and after laboring as a missionary in Warren and Rappahannock counties, Va., he was ordained April 18, 1840, and soon after dismissed to the Presbytery of the District of Columbia, having received a call to the Bridge-street Church, Georgetown, over which he was installed Oct. 3, 1841. His health becoming broken, he was compelled, Aug. 28, 1849, to relinquish work. In April, 1850, he returned to Winchester Presbytery, and was settled as stated supply in Martinsburg, Va. Here he remained until September, 1858, when his continued feeble health induced him to seek a home in a milder climate, and for eighteen months he supplied the Church at Canton, Miss.; but, declining its call, he returned to Virginia in April, 1860, and resumed his labors as his strength would permit in the field where his ministry began. In the spring of 1876 he removed to Winchester to reside with his youngest son, where he died, Nov. 2, 1877. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1878, p. 38. (W. P. S.)

Berry, Thomas C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was a native of Maryland. He removed to Louisville, Ky., in 1862, and there in 1864 was converted, united with the Church South, and in 1868 entered the Louisville Conference. He entered the work heartily and with great energy, and thus continued, leading many to Christ, until a short time previous to his death by paralysis of the brain, in 1874. Mr. Berry was a close student, possessed a fine memory, and was taking rank among the first preachers of his conference. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 80.

Berry, Thomas J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Virginia, Ill., Jan. 30, 1841. He enlisted in the 114th Illinois Volunteers in 1862; was wounded June 10, 1864; held prisoner at Mobile, etc.; exchanged in 1865; graduated at the Garrett Biblical Institute in 1870, and at the Northwestern University in 1872; joined the Des Moines Conference in 1870; preached at Carlisle, Corning, Des Moines, and Indianola; was elected president of the Simpson Centenary College in 1878, and representative to the General Conference of 1879; and died at his college in 1880. In all his life-work he exhibited the same completeness of character. He was modest and sympathetic, firm and true. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 253.

Berryman, NEWTON G., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was converted in early life, and began preaching in Kentucky before he was twenty. Subsequently he went to Illinois, and joined the Illinois Conference. In 1870 he entered the Western St. Louis Conference, and in it spent the remainder of his life. He died of an accidental injury in the latter part of 1871. Mr. Berryman as a man was social and kind; as a Christian, consistent and pious; as a preacher, clear and forcible. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 732.

Berserker, in Norse mythology, were mighty combatants—heroes who played a great part in Scandinavian legends. Starkadder, a giant with twelve hands, married Alfild, surnamed the All-beautiful. Her son, Arngrim, was the first to receive the name of Bersek (i. e. without armor), because, being of supernatural strength, he always went to battle without any armor; his fury made up for the absence of it. He killed king Swafur-lam, married the daughter of the murdered king, and became the father of twelve sons, all of whom had the same fury in battle as their father. They also received the name of Barseker or Berserker. The inherited fury sometimes reached such dimensions that they would slay their own men, not recognising them through madness. The gods employed them in the most fierce and bloody contests. They were even more feared than the Trolles, Bergriesen, and Gnomes, and other dreaded spirits. They would yell and bite with their teeth like wolves, often cutting into the swords and shields of their enemies, and demolishing everything within reach of their hands. Their downfall was brought about by their own madness. One of them, Hiornart, desired to marry the daughter of the Swedish king Zegbug, and asked his brothers to help him battle for her; but the Swedish army was so strong that the fury of the Berserker gave out before one part of the army had been slain, and thus the other part of the army was victorious and slew every one of the Berserker.

Berserkers, the name given to persons in Iceland who were supposed, when in a state of frenzy and excitement, to be supernaturally inspired. They pretended to keep up a familiar intercourse with spirits, and gave forth their inspired effusions in rugged, uncouth rhymes.

Bersey, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan minister, was born near St. Austell, Cornwall. Being converted in his twenty-fourth year, he was appointed to a circuit in 1809. In 1845 he retired to Plymouth as a supernumerary. He died in that city June 7, 1857, aged seventy-eight. He was very useful in the conduct of financial affairs. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Bersted, COUNCIL OF. See BERGHEMSTEAD, COUNCIL OF.

Berstuk, in Slavonic mythology, was a forest-god of the Wends and Slavs, also called Zlebog (angry deity). He was thought to be a half-man with the feet of a goat, and was placed among the evil or black deities.

Berta, Saint. See BERTHA.

Bertaire. See BERTHARIUS.

Bertaut, JEAN, a French bishop and poet, was born at Caen in 1552. He was the son of François Bertaut, originally from the parish of Donnai, and his father wished to take charge of the education of his son, who became familiar with the Greek and Latin authors; he assumed the style of French poetry by reading the works of Ronsard and Desportes. The early essays of the youth charmed the court of Henry III. This prince accorded to him the charge of counselling the Parliament of Grenoble, which he afterwards resigned. He greatly aided the cardinal Du Perron, with whom he had been a disciple, according to the Gallia Christiana, at the conversion of Henry IV, who in 1604 gave him the rich abbey of Aunay, in the diocese of Bayeux. At that time Marie de Medicis, mounting the throne, espoused Henry IV, and chose Bertaut for first chaplain. At length in 1606 he was appointed bishop of Séez. The year following he assisted at the baptism of the Dauphin (Louis XIII) at Fontainebleau, and in 1610 carried the body of Henry IV to St. Denis. He was the uncle of Madame de Motteville, author of Mémoires upon queen Anna of Austria, whom Voltaire has often eulogized. Bertaut had, while very young, composed some light poems which had met with considerable success, and when he was raised to the episcopacy he sought to suppress them, but this was impossible. His early writings possessed a charm and harmony which well merited the praise bestowed upon them. The Recueil de Quelques Vers Amoureux, published in 1602, contained several very remarkable pieces. Many of his poems were translated into Greek and Latin. He died June 8, 1611. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bertel (or Bertels), JEAN, a Flemish theologian and chronicler, was born at Louvain in 1559. At the age of seventeen he assumed the Benedictine garb at Luxemburg, and was for nineteen years abbot of the monastery. In 1594 he was transferred to the Abbey of Echternach. The Dutch made him prisoner in 1596, and a large consideration was required to obtain his release. He died at the Abbey of Echternach, June 19, 1607, leaving, In Regulam D. Benedicti Diavolgi Vigin-ti sex: — Catalogus et Series Abbatum Exteracensium (d'Echternach) (Cologne, 1581). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bertelli, Cristofano, an Italian engraver, was born at Rimini, in the duchy of Modena, about the year 1525. He executed a few plates, among which are: The Portrait of Ottavio Farnese, Duke of Parma; The Conversion of St. Paul; The Virgin and Infant with St. Augustine, St. Sebastian, and St. Helena, with St. Joseph Sleeping; The Different Ages of Man.

Bertelli, Ferrando, a Venetian engraver, born about 1525, executed some plates after the Venetian painters and others, of which are the following: a print entitled Omnium Fere Gentium (Venice, 1569); Christ Curing the Sick (Farinati piux. F. Bertelli ex. 1566); The Crucifixion, after Giulio Romano; Venus and Cupid, after Titian, etched by F. Bertelli (Nic. Bertelli, exc. 1566); Specchio della Vita Humana (in Venezia per F. Bertelli, 1566). See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertelli, Luca, a Venetian engraver, is said to have been a print-seller in the second half of the 16th century. Among his works, after the great Italian masters, are: A Bust of Hippolita Gonzaga, Daughter of Ferdinand; The Israelites Tormented by Serpents; The Baptism of Christ; The Flagellation; The Descent from the Cross; The Four Evangelists. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertha (or Bercta), wife of Ethelbert, king of Kent, was the daughter of Caribert, king of Paris, by his wife Moberga. At the time of their marriage Ethelbert was still a heathen, but she was allowed to enjoy the exercise of her own religion, and to be attended by a bishop. It was partly, no doubt, by her influence that Ethelbert was induced to receive the Roman mission and be baptized. Pope Gregory, in 601, addressed a letter to Bertha, complimenting her highly on her faith and knowledge of letters, and urges her to make still greater efforts for the spread of Christianity. He also ascribes the conversion of the English mainly to her, and compares her to the empress Helena (St. Gregory, Epist. xii, 29; Haddan and Stubbs, Councils, iii, 17, 18). The date of her death is unknown. She was buried in the porch of St. Martin, in the church of Sts. Peter and Paul. Elmham (ed. Hardwick, p. 110) says that she took part in the foundation of the Monastery of St. Augustine, at Christmas, 604; but the latest trustworthy trace of her is St. Gregory's letter of 601.

Bertha (or Berta), Saint, abbess of Blangy, in Artois, was the daughter of the count Rigobertus and Ursana, and was born about 650 in Artois. When twenty years of age she married Siegfroi, with whom she lived twenty years. Upon his death she retired to the monastery which she had built at Blany, diocese of Terouanne. In this monastery she built three churches, and, having resigned the office of abbess to her daughter Deotila, retired into a cell, where she remained until her death in 725, at the age of seventy-nine years. Her monastery was burned by the Normans in 895, and was restored by the Benedictines in 1032. Her festival is marked July 4, the day of her death, and Oct. 11, the day of her translation. See Hist. Litt. Franc. vi, 129; Parenty, Histoire de S. Berthe et de l'Abbaye de Blangy (Arras, 1846); Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Jul. ii, 47.

Bertha is a name common to several other saints.

1. Martyr and abbess at AVENAY, lived in the 7th century, and belonged to a noble family. She was at first married to St. Gumbert, but by mutual consent they separated, and built the abbey at Avenay near Rheims. She was killed by her step-sons. See Major, Vie de Sainte Berthe (Rheims, 1700); Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Maji, i, 112; vii, 539.

2. OF BARDI, was born about the beginning of the 12th century, of a noble family. In 1153 she was sent as superior to Cavriglia in the diocese of Fiesole, in order to reform the monastery there. She died in 1163. See Soldan, Relazione della Vita di S. Berta de Bardi (Florence, 1730); Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Mart. iii, 492.

3. OF MARLAIS, widow of the count de Molenbais, was the first abbess of the monastery of Marquette in Flanders, and died in 1247. See Hist. Litt. Franc. xxi, 585.

4. OF HASSEL, who lived in the 13th century at Fahr, predicted count Rudolph of Hapsburg's election to the imperial throne, when he gave his horse to the priest. See Stadler, Heiligen-Lexikon, i, 470; Kaulen, in Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchenlexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Berthac, LOUIS, a Flemish Dominican, was born at Bruges in 1620, and died Aug. 12, 1697. He left, Origo Plagarum Christianum Orbem Devastantium (Bruges, 1658, 8vo);—Medicus Christianus Delegens Sanguineis Lachrymis Deplorandam Ferrei hujus Sæculi Cæcitatem, etc. (Antwerp, 1665);—A Life of St. Louis Bertrand (ibid. 1671).

Berthaire (or Berchaire), a priest of the Church of Verdun, who lived at the commencement of the tenth century, is the author of Commentariolus de Verdunensibus Episcopis, Dadoni ejusdem Urbis Episcopo Nutriti suo Oblatur, published by D'Achery, vol. xii of his Spicilegium, p. 251. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 66.

Bertharius (or Bertaire), Saint, a French prelate, descended from the royal family, became a monk of Monte-Casino, and about 857, owing to his high reputation, was, by the common consent of the monks, chosen to succeed the abbot Bassatius. At this time Italy was exposed to the cruel incursions of the Saracens, and to protect his abbey from their attacks Bertharius surrounded it with a wall and other fortifications. He made repeated journeys into France to obtain aid from the emperor Louis-le-Debonnaire against these barbarians. In 879 he went to Rome, when he induced pope John VIII to reinstate in his see Landulphus, bishop of Capua, who had been expelled in a sedition of the people. In 884, as he was celebrating mass at the altar, during a siege of his abbey by the Saracens, he was killed by the barbarians, who struck off his head. He is honored as a martyr on the day of his death, Oct. 22. He wrote, Questiones in utrumque Testamentum: — Conciones ad Monachos, in Divorum Natalitiis Habita: — De Medicinâ, lib. 2; and another, De Grammaticâ: — Contrariorum in Speciem, Locorum utriusque Testam. lib. 2, given in the Bibl. Patrum, under the name of Julianus of Toledo (Basle, 1530, Cologne, 1532). He wrote other works, but the last mentioned alone has come down to our time. See Cave, Historia Literaria, ii, 45; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertheau, CHARLES, a French Protestant divine, was born at Montpellier in 1660. He studied philosophy and divinity partly in France and partly in Holland, and was admitted a minister in the synod held at Vigan in 1681; the next year he was chosen pastor of the Church of Montpellier; but was soon promoted to one of the churches of Paris. He was expelled from the latter city at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1686. He was one of the ministers of the great church at Charenton, near Paris, which was capable of containing 14,000 persons, and which was levelled to the ground—the work of demolition commencing on the very day of the revocation, and being completed in five days. Bertheau went to London, and became in 1687 minister of the Walloon Church in Threadneedle Street. This church, which was the oldest Huguenot church in the city, was established not far from A.D. 1546. It was regarded as the cathedral church of the Huguenots. We are told that "thither the refugees usually repaired on their arrival in London, and such of them as had temporarily abjured their faith before flying, to avoid the penalty of death or condemnation to the galleys, made acknowledgment of their repentance and were received into membership. During the years immediately following the revocation, the consistory of the French Church met at least once every week in Threadneedle-street chapel for the purpose of receiving such acknowledgments or 'reconnaissances.' At one of the sittings in May, 1687, not fewer than 497 members were again received into the Church which they had pretended to abandon." It was at this most important period in its history that Bertheau became one of the ministers of the Church, holding office forty-four years. Associated with him for a part of this time was the celebrated Saurin, afterwards minister at the Hague, of whom it is said that "nothing can give an idea of the effect produced by his inspired voice, which for twenty-five years resounded beneath the vaulted roof of the temple at the Hague, unless it be the profound veneration and pious worship with which the memory of the great author, continually revived by a perusal of his writings, has remained surrounded in Holland." Bertheau died Dec. 25, 1732. He left two vols. of Sermons in French (1702-30). See Smiles, Huguenots, p. 399; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Berthelot, GREGOIRE, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Vannes, was born at Berain in Barrois, Jan. 20, 1680. He became engaged at the age of seventeen in the Abbey of Munster, in Alsatia. He devoted himself with ardor to the study of ecclesiastical antiquities, and was finally considered worthy of the position of librarian of the Abbey of St. Leopold of Nancy, where facilities were afforded to him for improvement. Unfortunately he formed a friendly alliance with M. de Talennes-Conseillon, who was a Jansenist and favored the Jesuits by certain writings, and who, in order to escape the storm which threatened him, fled to Holland. Among his writings which were condemned we mention, Mémoires de Port Royal:—Instructions du Cardinal de Noailles, etc. Berthelot was also sent into exile to the Abbey of St. Mihiel, where he died, March 31, 1745. He was the author of Traité Historique et Moral de l'Abstinence des Viandes, et des Révolutions qu'elle a eues depuis le Commencement du Monde jusqu' Aujourd'hui (Rouen, 1731); a learned work, and full of interesting research. We might mention the titles of a number of his works, the MSS. of which are lost. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Berthet, JEAN, a French theologian, was born at Tarascon in 1622. After having taught the classics with success, also philosophy and theology in the various Jesuit colleges, he was again sent abroad, by order of Louis XIV, to hold consultation. He then entered the house of the Benedictines, and died at Oux in 1692. He wrote, Traité Historique de la Charge Aumônier de France:—sur l'Ordre Teutonique:—sur l'Abbaye de Cluny:—sur les Droits du Roi au Comte d'Arignon et au Comtat Venaisien:—sur les Indes Orientales:—sur la Langue Italienne:—sur la Chronologie, etc. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Berthgyth. See BEORCHGYTH.

Berthilde (or Bertilie), Saint, first abbess of Chelles, was born in 628, of one of the first families of the Soissonnais. She took the veil at Jouarre, where she was for a long time prioress. St. Bathilde, queen of France, widow of Clovis II, caused her to withdraw in 656, in order to make her abbess of the convent of Chelles, of which that princess was the foundress. The high reputation which the abbey soon obtained under her rule attracted thither strangers from distant parts, especially from England; and even men repaired thither, for within the precincts of the abbey was established a small community of priests. Berthilde died there, Nov. 5, 702. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Berthod, ANSELME, a French ecclesiastic of the order of St. Vannes, was born at Rupt (in the Franche-Comté), Feb. 21, 1733. He took the vow of the order of St. Benedict, Sept. 8, 1752. His superiors confided to him the direction of the library of Besançon, which contained a quantity of important documents for the history of Belgium—autograph letters of the cardinal of Granville, and of the emperors and kings of Spain. Berthod sent to the Academy of Besançon, of which he was a member in 1769, several extracts from this rich collection. About 1770 he applied himself to a very difficult work. He undertook to classify a large number of testaments of the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries, which were lying in disorder in the archives of the bishopric of Besançon. After he had completed the arrangement of these, they were found very useful to the families of Burgundy, Alsatia, and Switzerland. This gained for him a reputation, and the minister of state, Berlin, appointed him to search through Europe for the manuscripts necessary to clear up certain obscure points in the history of France. In this work he was very successful, but after Berlin had retired from the ministry, in 1780, the work was abandoned. Berthod employed his time in writing commentaries upon the rule of St. Benedict, and a breviary for the use of the order. In 1782 he was appointed grand-prior of Luxeuil, and the year following general visitor of the congregation of St. Vannes. As he was looking to the highest dignities of his order, the emperor Joseph II designated him, upon the presentation of the counsellor of Kulberg, for the successor of Ign. Hubens, one of the hagiographers charged with the continuation of the Acta Sanctorum. But his election was not pleasing to the people, and he was not well received. In effect, many of the Benedictines of this period approved the five propositions of Jansenius. In order to dissipate certain suspicions, he published a very orthodox profession of faith. It is believed that these difficulties so wore on him as to shorten his life. He died at Brussels, March 19, 1788. He wrote several short treatises upon l'Histoire des Comtes de Bourgogne, etc.; published in the Mémoires de l'Académie de Besançon. Those which have not been published are preserved in the archives of the Academy. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berthold of MAISBERCH, a German theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 15th century, was of the Dominican order, and wrote, Commentaria in Librum Elementorum, of Proclus:—Commentaria in Tres Libros Meteororum Aristotelis. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berthold, CHRISTIAN, a German theologian and chronicler who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, was parish recorder at Lubben in Lusatia, and wrote, Die schöne biblische Historia von dem heiligen Königlichen Propheten David und seinem Sohne Salomo, spielweise dargestellt—a comedy in verse (Wittenberg, 1572):—Kleine Kaiser-chronica (1579). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertholdus (Bernaldus, Bertoul, Bernoul, or Berthold; whom Dupin calls Bertulphus, or Bernulpus), a German theologian and historian, was priest at Constance, and lived in the latter half of the 11th century. He was a most bitter enemy of his prince, the emperor Henry IV, against whom he did not scruple to employ both the pen and the sword. He continued the Chronicle of Herman Contracte, by giving a history of his own time from 1054 to 1100. His works are entitled, Bertholdi Historia Rerum suo Tempore per Singulos Annos Gestarum (Frankfort, 1570, 1585):—De Vitanda Excommunicatorum Communionem de Reconciliatione Lapsorum, et de Conciliis, Decretorum, Decretatum, ipsarumque Pontificum Romanorum Auctoritate (Ingolstadt, 1612):—Bernoldi Apologeticus pro Gregorio VII, seu Tractatus de Sacramentis Excommunicatorum juxta Assertionem SS. Patrum, in vol. v of the Grand Pontifical Library of Jo. Thomas Rocaberti (Rome, 1698):—also some small treatises in favor of Gregory VII, published by the Jesuit Gretser (Ingolstadt, 1609). See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 146; Dupin, Hist. of Eccles. Writers, ii, 249; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertholet, François, a French theologian, was born Feb. 27, 1814, at Aigle in Switzerland. He prepared himself for the ministry at the Academy of Lausanne, and in 1837 went as vicar to Grion. In 1843 he went back to his native place, with a view of performing ministerial functions there independently. Being obliged to leave this place, he accepted a call from the evangelical society of France, and went to Sens, where he remained from 1845 to 1849. In the latter year he went to Lyons, where he remained till 1854. Being obliged to give up this place on account of its climate, he accepted a call to Geneva, where he labored for about eight years, when he was obliged to retire to the Alps to recruit his shattered constitution. On his journey, however, he died, July 2, 1862. He was a very popular preacher, full of zeal and love for his Master and the salvation of the souls committed to his charge. He published, Exhortation Pastorale adressée par le Pasteur d'une Pavoise de Montagne à ses Pavoisiens (Lausanne, 1843):—Deux Exhortations Pastorales adressées à mes Anciens Pavoisiens (1844):—Ephèse et Laodicée (Paris, 1865):—Le Culte de la Louange et le Culte de la Vie (Toulouse, 1859):—L'Amour de Dieu pour le Monde (Lausanne, 1857):—Méditations sur quelques Sujets de l'Ancien Testament Etudié à la Lumière de l'Evangile (1857, 1865). See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bertholet, Jean, a French Jesuit, known principally by his history of the duchy of Luxemburg, was born at Salm in Ardennes, near the close of the 17th century. He entered the Jesuit order, and was appointed to a chair of elocution. For more than fifteen years he performed the functions of preacher, then gave his attention to history, and wrote a very important work entitled L'Histoire Ecclésiastique et Civile du Duché de Luxembourg et du Comté de Chini (Luxemburg, 1741-43, with plans and maps). He was criticised for the manner in which he obtained some of his material. He died at Liege in 1755. He also wrote Histoire de l'Institution de la Fête-Dieu (1746). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertholf, Guiliam, was the pioneer Dutch preacher and "the itinerant apostle of New Jersey." He came to this country from Holland with the early emigrants who settled at Hackensack, N. J., as their catechist, schoolmaster, and vorleser, or precentor. So well did he fill these offices, that he was sent back to Holland in 1693 to receive ordination and installation as the pastor of the churches of Hackensack and Acquackanonck. In 1694 he returned, and immediately began his ministry. He was the first regularly installed pastor of the Dutch churches in New Jersey, and for fifteen years was the only preacher in the Dutch language. His ministry covered a large section of country. He organized the Church at Raritan (Somerville), N. J., about 1700, and introduced the Rev. Theodore J. Frelinghuysen as the pastor in 1709. He also founded the Church at Tarrytown, N. Y., about 1697, and officiated regularly or occasionally in many surrounding churches in New Jersey. He was very successful as a winner of souls, large additions being made to his churches. He was noted for a calm, persuasive eloquence, for his evangelical spirit, and for his efforts to promote the independence of the Church in this country from foreign control. His labors ended in 1724. See Annals of the Classis of Bergen, by B. C. Taylor, D.D. (W. J. R. T.)

Bertholf, Thomas, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in New York state, July 12, 1810. In 1832 he became missionary to the Cherokee Nation. He labored among that people until his death, June 28, 1867. Mr. Bertholf was a man of good sense, and was received everywhere as a zealous, faithful missionary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 178.

Berti (or Barzi), PAULIN, an Italian theologian, a native of Lucca, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, was of the Dominican order, and was appointed general preacher about 1612. He wrote, Thesaurus Scientiarum Omnium (Venice, 1613). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertille, Saint. See BERTHILDE, Saint.

Bertin, Saint, a native of Constance, in Switzerland, was born about 597 of a noble family. He went with two companions in 633 to seek St. Omer at the abbey of Luxeuil. Bertin, elevated to the priesthood, in this retreat exercised himself in all the virtues; and in 1639 he went to Terouane, near St. Omer, and became bishop of that place. There he spared neither time nor labor to instruct the people and to strengthen them in the faith. St. Bertin had for a long time the direction of 150 friars; but at length, enfeebled by age and infirmities, he yielded to a successor, first Rigobert, then Orlefrý, both of whom were his disciples. He died priest of Sithieu, at St. Omer, Sept. 5, 709, and was interred in the Church of St. Martin. His name was given to the monastery over which he had held control, and he is commemorated on Sept. 5. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bertin, JEAN, bishop of VANNES, was born at Périgueux in 1712, and consecrated in 1746. He endeavored, in common with most of the French bishops, to obtain the observance of the bull Unigenitus, and came in for his share of the displeasure of the parliament. He was condemned to pay a fine of six thousand francs, and the temporalities of his see were seized shortly after. He continued, however, firmly to do what he considered to be his duty, and died in 1774.

Bertini, VICENTO, an Italian theologian and apostolic visitor, who died at Montalcino in 1643, wrote, Sacræ Palestinæ Descriptio (Sienna, 1633, and in Italian at Venice, 1642):—Questionum Politicarum et Moralium Centuria I, Libri IV (Florence and Sienna, 1637, 1640):—De Præceptis Christianis Centuria II (Sienna, 1642):—De Præceptis Politicis et Militaribus Centuria III (ibid. 1643). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertinore, OBADIAH DA. See OBADIAH DA BERTINORE.

Bertling, Ernst August, a German doctor of theology, was born Dec. 1, 1721, at Osnabrück. He commenced the study of law, and went to Göttingen and took up theology. In 1744 he became master and in 1745 assessor of philosophy. In 1748 he was made extraordinary professor and in 1750 ordinary professor of theology at Helmstädt, was called in 1753 to Dantzic as rector of the gymnasium and pastor of Trinity Church, and died Aug. 10, 1769. He published, Disputatio de Gradibus Prohibitis Secundum Jus Naturæ (Jena, 1743):—Disputatio de Jure Gentium Voluntario (Göttingen, 1745):—Theologische Berichte von neuen Büchern und Schriften (Dantzic, 1764 sq.):—Deutliche und mit den eigenen Worten orthodoxer Theologen ausgefertigte Vorstellung was die lutherische Kirche von der Kraft des heil. Geistes lehre und nicht lehre (1756):—Unterricht vom päpstischen Jubeljahre und vom Ablass, zur wahren Einsicht und Beurtheilung des von Benedict XIV. auf das Jahr 1750 ausgeschriebenen Jubeljahrs (Helmstädt, 1749). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 8, 448, 458 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bertling, Karl Friedrich Theodor, a German theologian, son of the preceding, was born at Dantzic, Nov. 6, 1754. He studied at Leipsic and Göttingen, was appointed in 1782 deacon at St. John's, in his native place, and in 1795 at St. Mary's. In 1801 he was advanced as first pastor and senior of the ministry, and in 1816 he was made member of consistory. In 1824 the University of Greifswalde honored him with the doctorate of divinity. He died June 16, 1827. Of his writings nothing seems to have been published. (B. P.)

Bertoldus, a monk of Mici, or St. Mesmin, who lived in the 9th century, wrote the Life of St. Maximinus, abbot of Mici, which he dedicated to Jonas, bishop of Orleans. It is given by Mabillon in his Acta Ord. Bened. i, 591. See Cave, Historia Literaria, ii, 17.

Bertoldus (surnamed Borback), an impious wretch, who appeared about 1359, taught (1) that Jesus Christ, in dying, had carried his impatience even to the length of despairing of salvation, and had heaped maledictions on the head of his mother and on the earth which drank in his blood; (2) that a layman, illuminated, could preach more effectually than the Gospel; (3) that a devout person might receive as much grace by eating ordinary food as by receiving the blessed sacrament.

Bertolotti, Giovanni Lorenzo, a reputable historical painter of Genoa, was born in 1640, and died in 1721. He studied under Francesco Castiglione. Ratti praises a picture by him in the Church of La Visitazione, at Genoa, representing the Visitation of Mary to Elizabeth. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertolotti, Giuseppe, an Italian theologian and miscellaneous writer, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He wrote, Rimedi all' Terrore della Morte (Bologna, 1632):—Descrizione dell' Ornato di Pittura che si Ammira nella Cappella di S. Antonio di Padona, nella Chiesa di S. Petronio (ibid. 1662). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berton, William, D.D., an eminent English divine, flourished about 1381, in the reign of king Richard II, and was some time chancellor of the University of Oxford. He is noted for his opposition to the doctrines of Wycliffe, having appointed censors to examine his opinions. He also wrote against Wycliffe the following works: Determinationes contra Vicilevum:—Sententia super Iusta ejus Condemnatione:—Contra ejus Articulos.

Bertonio, Luigi, an Italian missionary of the Jesuit order, was born at Fermo in 1555. He entered the Jesuit order in 1575, and went to the Indies in order to labor for the propagation of the faith. He died at Lima, Aug. 3, 1625, after a sojourn of forty-four years, thus terminating a life remarkable for its sanctity and beneficence. He wrote in Spanish some works on piety and upon the language of the country which he had visited. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertotti, Ottavio (called Scamozzi), an Italian architect, was born at Vicenza in 1726. He published an edition of the works of Palladio, which possesses great merit. He designed and erected several churches and public edifices at Vicenza, and at Castel-Franco, in Trevigiana. Bertotti was so highly esteemed that the marquises Capra, executors of Scamozzi, awarded to him the use of the property of that nobleman, which he had left in his will, with the obligation of assuming his name, to the one who should rank as the first architect of his native city. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertou, Saint. See BERTULPHUS.

Bertoul, Saint. See BERTHOLDUS.

Bertoul, Joseph, was a German missionary of the 16th century. He was prior of the Convent of the Trinity, at Arras; and travelled in Hungary, and there redeemed from the hands of the Turks a large number of Christian slaves. He wrote, Iter Hungaricum:—Novus Artesia Typus in Tabula Expressus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertram (Bertrand, or Bernard), a German Dominican of the 15th century, illustrious by his learning, piety, and skill in business, was made titular bishop of Tiflis, in Georgia, and died at Coblenz, Jan. 20, 1387. He left numerous works; among them, Tractatus de Schismate Urbani VI et Clementis VII Pseudo-Pontificis:—De Illusionibus Dæmonum:—Sermones.

Bertram, Joachim Christoph, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1730 at Sennen. He studied at Halle. In 1758 Franke appointed him as his amanuensis; in 1775 he was assistant librarian, and in this position, which he occupied till 1791, he prepared the catalogue of the University library. He died June 2, 1806. He edited the writings of his teacher, S. J. Baumgarten, viz.: Erläuterungen der christlichen Aelterthümer (Halle, 1768):—Ausführlicher Vortrag der biblischen Hermeneutik (ibid. 1769). He also published, Geschichte des symbolischen Anhangs der Schmalkaldischen Artikel (Altdorf, 1770):—Literarische Abhandlungen (Halle, 1781-83):—Beitrag zur kritischen Geschichte der Augsburgischen Confession (ibid. 1784). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 100 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 105, 329. (B. P.)

Bertram, Johann Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 7, 1699, at Ulm. He studied at Halle, and in 1729 was called as court-preacher, scholar, and superintendent of the theological seminary at Aurich, in East Frisia. He died June 18, 1741. He was a pronounced enemy of philosophy in general and of the doctrines of Wolf in particular, and engaged in long controversies, especially with Reinbeck. He published, Erläuterte und vertheidigte Ostfriesische Reformations- und Kirchengeschichte (Aurich, 1733):—Historischer Beweis dass Ostfriesland zur Zeit der Reformation der evang.-lutherischen und nicht der reformirten Kirche beigetreten sei (Oldenburg, 1732):—Bescheidene Prüfung der Meinung von der Präexistenz menschlicher Seelen in organischen Leibern (Bremen, 1741):—Commentatio de Singularibus Anglorum in Eruditionem Orientalem Meritis (with an Appendix, entitled De Vera Mediæ Aevi Barbarie, in the Miscellanea Lipsensia, vol. xi):—Parerga Ostfriesica, quibus Continentur Dissertationes de Rerum in Ecclesia et Republica Frisicæ Orientalis Scripturibus Gestarum (Brunswick, 1785). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 430, 796; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bertram, Johann Georg, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born at Lüneburg, Aug. 31, 1670. He studied at Helmstädt and Jena, was in 1695 military chaplain, in 1697 pastor at Giffhorn, and from 1716

pastor of St. Martin's at Braunschweig, where he died Aug. 2, 1728. He wrote, Dissert. de Avenione, qua Ratione ad Pontificatum Romanum Perveneris (Jena, 1693):—Diss. Theolog. de Conscientia Anxia et Dubia (ibid.):—Das Leben Ernst, Herzogs zu Braunschweig und Lüneburg (Braunschweig, 1719):—Das Evangelische Lüneburg, oder Reformations- und Kirchen-Historie der Stadt Lüneburg (ibid. eod.):—Epistola Gratulatoria de Nummis Hussitibus (without date). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bertram, William, a Presbyterian minister, presented to the Synod, in 1732, testimonials from the Presbytery of Bangor, Ireland, of his ordination, and, having declared his full assent to the confession and catechism, was received, and joined the Donegal Presbytery. He accepted a call to settle at Paxton and Derry, and was installed Nov. 15, 1732, at Swatara. In 1735 he complained of "the intolerable burden" he was under with the two congregations, and desired to confine himself to one, so in 1736 he was released from Paxton. He died May 3, 1746. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Amer. 1857.

Bertran (Berti-Chramnus, or Bertrannus), bishop of MANS, was born of a noble family of Poitou, about the middle of the 6th century, and devoted himself to the service of God in the city of Tours, where, it is said, he received the clerical tonsure from St. Germanus, bishop of Paris, who took him away with him and educated him. Bertran afterwards received priest's orders, and became archdeacon of the Church of Paris about 576. At the end of ten years he was chosen to succeed Baldegisilus, bishop of Mans. Gontrannus, king of Orleans and Burgundy, made use of him in matters of state (Greg. Turon. ix, 18). He devoted himself to the good of his diocese, built or repaired many monasteries, churches, and hospitals; and in the year 615 he made his celebrated testament (given by Mabillon in the Analecta) by which he appointed the Church his heir; among other arrangements, giving to the Basilica of St. Vincentius, where the body of St. Germanus, his early preceptor, was buried, the town of Bobanis, near Estampes, and much property to the Abbey of Couture, which he had founded and dedicated to Sts. Peter and Paul, near Mans. He also left legacies to the king, and to his nephews, and gave liberty to all his slaves. He was three times driven from his diocese, was present in various councils, and died June 30, 628. In the Gallican Martyrology his festival is marked February 3. See Baillet, July 3.

Bertrand LE BLAS, a martyr of the Reformation period, was a German by birth, and went to Wesel for the cause of religion, where, on Christmas-day, he took the cake out of the priest's hand, and stamped it under his feet, saying that he did it to show the glory of God. Bertrand was taken before the governor, and asked whether he repented of the act. He answered that if it were a hundred times to be done, he would do it. Then he was twice put to the pin-bank, and tormented most miserably. He had a ball of iron put in his mouth, and his right hand and foot burned between red-hot irons. Then his legs and arms were bound behind him with chains, and he was let flat down on a bed of red-hot coals. This occurred in 1555. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 393.

Bertrand, a monk of CHAISE-DIEU (Casa-Dei), in Auvergne, in the 12th century, wrote a History of the Life and Miracles of Robert, the Founder, which Labbe has given in his Bibliotheca Nova MSS. ii, 637; and which is also printed in the Acta Sanctorum, 24 Apr. iii, 326.

Bertrand, Saint, bishop of COMINGES, in Gascony, was born about the middle of the 11th century. He embraced the ecclesiastical state very early, and was made, first, archdeacon of the Church of Toulouse, and shortly after bishop of Cominges, in which capacity he showed himself alike the physician, guide, and pastor of his flock. He restored the Church of Cominges, and is considered the patron of the city. He also built a cloister for the clerks and canons, and gave them a rule. He died on the 15th or 16th of October, about 1126, having held the see about fifty years. His principal festival is made on the 15th of October. See Baillet, Oct. 15.

Bertrand DE COMPS, sixteenth grand-master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, was elected in 1236, and addressed, in 1237, a citation to the Knights of England to join their brethren in Palestine. They accordingly abandoned their house of Clarkewille at London, and aided in gaining Jerusalem for the Christians. He died in 1241. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertrand (or, according to some, BERNARDUS DE TRILLIA), of the diocese of NISMES, a Dominican; flourished about the close of the 13th century. He composed a commentary on Peter Lombard's Book of Sentences, and postils on several books of Scripture are attributed to him. None have been printed.

Bertrand, Élie, a Swiss clergyman and naturalist, was born at Orbe in 1712. He was pastor of that village in 1739, preacher at Berne in 1744, private counsellor of the king of Poland, and member of the academies of Stockholm, Berlin, Florence, Lyons, etc. He cultivated the natural sciences, on which he wrote many works, besides a few religious books, for which see Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bertrand (or Bertrandi), Jean (1), a French prelate, was born in 1470. Originating from one of the more ancient families of Toulouse, he was appointed capitoul of that city in 1519, second president of Parliament in 1533, and in 1536 first president. The favor of Anne of Montmorency made him, in 1538, third president of the Parliament of Paris, of which he became first president in 1550. After the disgrace of chancellor Oliver, the favor of Diana of Poitiers made him guard of the seals. Having become a widow, he entered the ecclesiastical profession, and was first bishop of Cominges, then archbishop of Sens, and finally cardinal, in 1557, at the recommendation of Henry II. He died at Venice in 1560, on his return from Rome, where he had assisted at the election of pope Pius IV. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bertrand, Jean (2), a French martyr, for the religion and Gospel of Christ was apprehended and examined by Denis Barbes, councillor of Blois, and burned at Blois in 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 424.

Bertrand, Jean Élie, a Swiss preacher, was born at Neuchâtel in 1737. He first settled at Berne, where he was appointed first pastor of the French Church, but he afterwards obtained the professorship of belles-lettres at the Academy of Neuchâtel. He co-operated, in 1770, in the founding in that city of the typographical society, and in the inspection of its publications. The Academy of Sciences at Munich, and the Society of Natural Curiosities, admitted him to membership. He died at Neuchâtel, Feb. 26, 1779. He wrote, Sermons sur les Différents Textes de l'Écriture Sainte (Neuchâtel, 1773, 1779):—Morale de l'Évangile, ou Discours sur le Sermon de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ sur le Montagne (ibid. 1775):—Sermons pour les Fêtes de l'Église Chrétienne (Yverdon, 1776):—Descriptions des Arts et Métiers (Neuchâtel, 1771, 1783):—an edition of Eutropius, Breviarium Historiæ Romanæ, from the MSS. in the Library of Berne, 1762 or 1768. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertrand, Pierre, a French prelate and theologian of the former half of the 14th century, a native of Annonay, taught civil and canonical law at Avignon, Montpellier, Orleans, and Paris, and was canon and dean of Puy-en-Velay, counsellor-clerk at the Parliament of Paris, chancellor of queen Joan of Burgundy, bishop of Nevers, and, later, bishop of Autun. His merit gained for him numerous friends among the scholars who frequented the court of the pope at Avignon, and the court of the kings of France. He played an important part in the conference held at Vincennes in 1329, where Philip of Valois presided, in which the question was the circumscribing of the civil and ecclesiastical jurisdiction in disputable matters. The result of this was a promise of reformation on the part of the clergy. The contests which were then going on between France and England did not allow the king to see to the execution of this agreement. The oratorical talent which Bertrand showed on this occasion, in response to Peter of Cugnieres, advocate of the king, gained for him, in 1331, the hat of the cardinal, which was given to him by pope John XXII. He founded at Paris the College of Autun, called also the College of Cardinal Bertrand. He died at Avignon, June 24, 1349, leaving, Libellus adversus Petrum de Cugneris (Paris, 1503, 1513); the best edition is that given by Brunet in 1731:—Tractus de Origine Jurisdictionum, sive de Duabus Potestatibus, etc. (ibid. 1551). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bertrand, Severin, a French theologian and scholar, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, was priest at Ferté Bernard, and wrote, Oraison Funèbre de Madame la Duchesse de Guise, Anne d'Este (Paris, 1607):—La Rhétorique Royale Française (ibid. 1615). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bertron, SAMUEL READING, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 17, 1806. He was prepared for college in Philadelphia; graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1828, and entered Princeton Seminary the same year, where he remained two years and a half, not completing his course because of ill-health. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Oct. 20, 1830, and ordained by the same Presbytery, April 22, 1831, as an evangelist. For about two years (1831-33) he labored as supply on Second street below Catharine street, Philadelphia. Next he accepted an agency for the American Sunday School Union, and went to Mississippi. He did not continue this long, but began preaching at Pinckneyville, teaching meanwhile at Brandon Academy, then a very popular institution. He was never an installed pastor. In the spring of 1834 he became a resident of Port Gibson, Miss. Mr. Bertron took a lively interest in establishing Chamberlain Hunt College, in Port Gibson, and was elected its president. He died Oct. 7, 1878. See Neurological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1879, p. 27.

Bertulphus, Saint, third abbot of Bobbio, in Italy, sprang from a good family in France. He lived for some time at the court, from which life he was withdrawn by the example of his relative St. Arnoldus of Metz. He retired to Arnouldus at Metz, and after undergoing with him a course of discipline for some time, entered the monastery of Luxeuil about 620, under the abbot Eustasius. Here he attracted the attention of St. Ataluis, abbot of Bobbio, who requested the privilege of taking Bertulphus into Italy. This was granted; and about 624 Bertulphus was removed to Bobbio, and upon the death of St. Ataluis was elected abbot. In 627 Probus, or Proculus, bishop of Tortona, endeavored to submit the abbey of Bobbio to himself; but Anowaldus, king of the Lombards, had such veneration for the abbot of Bobbio that he refused to meddle in the question, and suffered the latter to make his appeal to Rome. Pope Honorius exempted the abbey of Bobbio from all episcopal jurisdiction, and made it dependent solely on the holy see. Bertulphus lived twelve years after his return from Rome; and having governed his monastery thirteen years, died August 19, 640, or 641. Neither the ancient martyrologies nor the modern Roman ones make mention of him; in that of the Benedictines his festival is marked August 19.

Berus. See BAEHER; BIR.

Bervanger, MARTIN DE, a Roman prelate and philanthropist, was born at Sarrelouis, May 15, 1795. He was at first vicar in his native city. After having concurred in the work of St. Joseph founded by the abbot Larenbruck, he created the institution of St. Nicholas, intended for the instruction of children who were obliged to live by their own labor. This work, inspired by Christian charity, was at first very small. The first establishment of this kind was in 1837, in an attic in the suburbs of St. Marceau, attended by seven children, who made good progress. It required a great deal of patience and labor to bring the institution to a successful issue. This work of M. de Bervanger remains, and is one of the most useful imaginable. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Berwyn (or Gerwyn), a Welsh saint, a son of Brychan who is said to have settled in Cornwall, but is difficult to identify, unless he is the same as St. Garonus, a hermit who preceded St. Petrock at Bodmín. Another account (Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 142) makes Gerwyn a son of Brynach by Brychan's daughter.

Beryllians, a sect of Christian heretics which sprang up in the 3d century. They were followers of Beryllus, bishop of Bostra (q. v.).

Berytus (or Beirút). We extract the following additional particulars descriptive of this place from Porter's Handbook for Syria, p. 388 sq.

"The town is at the present time the most prosperous in Syria, though only ranking third in point of size. It is assuming a European look, with its bustling quay and crowded port, and large warehouses and shops, and beautiful suburban villas. All this prosperity is owing to foreign influence; the European mercantile firms having infused some life into the natives. The principal article of export is raw silk, the trade in which is rapidly increasing in extent and importance. In fact, Lebanon is gradually becoming one vast mulberry plantation. Beirút is every year increasing, and is at this moment, as far as foreign commerce is concerned, the first town in Syria. A large proportion of its imports are for the Damascus markets, it being now the port of that city. . . . The making of the great road across the double range of Lebanon to Damascus has contributed very materially to the prosperity of Beirút. The road was constructed by a French company, but is now managed by the Turkish government.

"The situation of Beirút is exceedingly beautiful. The promontory on which it stands is triangular, the apex projecting three miles into the Mediterranean, and the base running along the foot of Lebanon. The southwestern side is composed of loose, drifting sand, and has the aspect of a desert. The north-western side is totally different. The shore-line is formed of a range of irregular, deeply indented rocks and cliffs. Behind these rocks the ground rises gradually for a mile or more, when it attains the height of about two hundred feet. In the middle of the shore-line stands the city—first a dense nucleus of substantial buildings, then a broad margin of picturesque villas, embowered in foliage, running up to the summit of the heights, and extending far to the right and left. Beyond these are the mulberry groves covering the acclivities, and here and there groups of palms and cypresses.

"The old town stands on the beach, and often during a northerly gale gets more of the sea-water than is agreeable. The little port, now in a great measure filled up, lies between a projecting cliff and a ruinous insulated tower called Burj Fanzar, which bears, like the rest of the fortifications, many a mark of British bullets. The old streets are narrow, gloomy, and badly paved; but some of the new streets are wide, and better adapted for a rapidly advancing commerce. Many of them are passable for carts and carriages. The houses are substantially built of stone; and a few of the villas in the suburbs possess some pretensions to architectural effect. The view commanded by the higher houses is magnificent, embracing the bay of St. George, the indented coast stretching away northwards far as the eye can see, and the ridge of Lebanon with its wild glens, dark pine-forests, clustering villages, castle-like convents, and snow-capped peaks.

"The antiquities in and around Beirút accessible to the traveller are few and of little interest. A number of columns of gray granite scattered here and there through and around the town; some foundations, pieces of tessellated pavement, and excavations in the rock, probably the remains of baths, half a mile along the shore to the westward; a group of sarcophagi about the middle of the south-western shore of the promontory; and the ruins of an aqueduct at the base of the mountains on the east, which once brought a supply of pure water from Nahr Beirût to the city—such is about a complete list of the antiquities. Almost every year shows that there are many others far more important buried beneath the soil and rubbish. Old tombs are frequently laid open by excavation, sometimes containing sarcophagi of pottery, with lachrymatories and other articles of glass.

Map of Beirût.

"The cause of education has received a great stimulus since the establishment of the American Mission in 1823. Their schools have created a taste for information and literature: and their admirably conducted press has done much to gratify it, by the issue not only of religious books, but of excellent elementary treatises on the various sciences. The director of that press, Dr. Van Dyck, is one of the most accomplished Arabic scholars in the world.

"The college established in 1863 by the liberality of English and American philanthropists is an admirable institution, and will serve largely to advance the cause of education not in Beirût merely, but throughout Syria. It is founded on a large and liberal basis, and proposes to give complete collegiate training in languages, literature, science, and medicine. It is at present under the able presidency of Dr. Bliss, formerly an American missionary."

There is also a prosperous mission-school for girls, a boarding-school for boys, a medical school, a Prussian Institute of Deaconesses, and a beautiful chapel for English as well as Arabic Protestant service. The city is supplied with water from the Nahr el-Kelb by a modern aqueduct. See Thomson, Land and Book, i, 39 sq.; Ridgaway, The Lord's Land, p. 726 sq.; Schaff, Through Bible Lands, p. 373 sq. See SYRIA, MISSIONS IN.

BERYTUS, COUNCIL OF, was held A.D. 448, as is supposed, in September, to hear a charge preferred against Ibas, bishop of Edessa, by nine of his clergy, which was twofold: first, that he had said, "I envy not Christ being made God, having been made so myself as much as he," which he denied indignantly; and next, that he had called St. Cyril a heretic, which he averred he never had after the reconciliation between John of Antioch, his own superior, and St. Cyril. To refute this, his letter to Maris of subsequent date was adduced in evidence, containing a narrative of the whole controversy between Nestorius and St. Cyril. He rejoined by producing a testimonial in his favor addressed to Eustathius, bishop of Berytus, and Photius, bishop of Tyre, two of his judges, and signed by upwards of sixty presbyters, deacons, and subdeacons of his diocese. His acquittal followed, which, having been reversed at Ephesus by Dioscorus of Alexandria the year following, was confirmed in the tenth session of the Council of Chalcedon, where the acts of this council are preserved. His epistle to Maris, indeed, was afterwards condemned at the fifth General Council.

View of Beirût and Vicinity from the South. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

Bes (or Besa) was a warlike and savage deity of Arabian origin. When introduced into Egypt he was regarded as a form of Typhon, or Baal. He was represented as a short man with deformed legs, and a hideous face with a protruding tongue; with his right hand he generally brandished a sword over his head, over which was a high crown of erect feathers curving outwardly; around his loins was a panther's skin, the tail hanging down between his legs. Besa was also the special god of dancing and of the female toilet, and hence his figure continually occurs on mirrors and perfume-bottles. His analogue has been thought to be the Siva of the Hindûs.

Besas was a soldier martyred at Alexandria with St. Julianus (q. v.).

Bescape, CARLO, an Italian prelate, was a noble Milanese, born in 1550, to whom St. Charles Borromeo gave a canonry in his cathedral. In 1578 he resigned this appointment and entered among the Barnabites, of which order he became general; afterwards, in 1593, he was created bishop of Novara. He wrote many works, most of which still remain in MS.; among those published are, De Metropoli Mediolanensi (Milan, 1595, 1628 fol.):—De Vita et Rebus Gestis Caroli Borromæi (Ingolstadt, 1592; Brescia, 1613; Italian translation, Bologna, 1614):—Novania, seu de Ecclesia Novanensi (Novara, 1612):—Historia Ecclesiæ Mediolanensis (ibid. 1615).

Beschi, CONSTANTINO GIUSEPPE, an Italian missionary of the Jesuit order, landed in 1700 in the city of Goa, learned the Tamouli language, the Sanscrit, Telougan, Hindustan, and Persian, and attained the dignity of divan or counsellor of Shenda-Sahib, nabob of Trichinopoly. He founded two churches, and applied himself diligently to the conversion of the idolaters, with great success. In 1740, Morary Rao, at the head of the Mahrattas, having conquered Trichinopoly, and made Shenda-Sahib prisoner, Beschi fled to Holland. He died in 1742. He published Grammatica Latino-Tamulica (1738; new ed. 1813; also in English, Madras, 1822). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beschitzi, ELIAS, a Karaite of Adrianople, who died in 1491, is the author of אֵלִיָּהוּ, i. e. "the mantle of Elijah," a ritualistic work, which is highly esteemed among the Karaite Jews. It was completed by his brother-in-law Caleb Afendopulo, and was printed at Constantinople in 1531. A new edition was published by Firkowitz (Eupatoria, 1835; latest edition, Odessa, 1870). (B. P.)

Beschitzi, MOSES, a great-grandson of Elias, a learned Jew, was born at Constantinople about 1554. Educated by his father, a learned rabbin, he studied Greek, Arabic, and Spanish, visited the principal synagogues of the East, and sustained victoriously several disputes against the rabbinites. Although not yet eighteen years of age at the time of his death in 1572, he left, according to the rabbin Mardochee, more than two hundred and forty-five works, which were mostly destroyed in the fire at Constantinople. Among those which escaped we notice מִשְׁנֵה אֵלִיָּהוּ, i. e. "the rod of God," in which he treats of the differences between the Karaites and rabbinites, tradition, the Decalogue, and the six hundred and thirteen precepts. A fragment of this work was published in Dod Mordechai (Vienna, 1830). See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico, s. v. (Germ. transl.), p. 58; Wolf, Notitia Caracorum, p. 63, 93, 146; Id. Bibl. Hebr. i and iii, No. 237, 1519; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 114; Id. Gesch. des Karaerthums von 900 bis 1575 (Leipzig, 1865), p. 304-322; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Ben-Jacob, Thesaurus Librorum Hebraeorum (Wilna, 1880), i, No. 332; ii, No. 1032; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bescna, priest, and chaplain to St. Patrick. "The priest Bescna, sweet his verses, the chaplain of the son of Alprann," is given in the list of St. Patrick's household in the Four Masters, A.D. 448. Colgan (Tr. Thaum. p. 188, n.) says he was called in Irish Cruimher (priest) Bescna, and would wish to identify him with the "Cruimher of Domb-nach-mor," given in Mart. Doneg. at Nov. 11.

Besenbeck, CASPAR JACOB, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1760 at Erlangen. In 1790 he was con-rector at the gymnasium in Altstadt-Erlangen, and in 1813 he was called as professor of the gymnasium at Baireuth, where he died, March 22, 1815. He published, Die Religion des Christen (Fürth, 1803):—Lazarus oder über das Unstatthafte der natürlichen Erklärungen der Wundergeschichten im Neuen Testament (Erlangen, 1810):—Ueber die Dreieinigkeit Gottes (Bamberg, 1814; 2d ed. 1818). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 392, 398, 421. (B. P.)

Besenbeck, GEORG, a German Protestant theologian, was born Jan. 3, 1731, at Erlangen, where he also pursued his theological studies. In 1751 he was appointed collaborator and in 1758 con-rector at the gymnasium there. He died Nov. 7, 1762. He published, Beiträge zu der exegetischen Gottesgelehrtheit (Erlangen, 1754-57, 2 vols.):—Grundrisse erbaulicher Betrachtungen über auserlesene Stellen aus dem Propheten Jeremias (ibid. 1756):—Progr. de Stylo Gentium Doctoris Pauli ad Omnium Dominum Captum Accommodato (ibid. 1759):—Progr. de Fervido Christianorum Deo et Justitiæ sub Libertatis Lege Serviendi Studio (ibid. 1760):—Progr. Finit Domini ad Jacobi V Comm. XI Celebratus Domino nostro Jesu Christo Vindicatus (ibid. 1761):—Neue Beiträge zur exegetischen Gottesgelehrtheit (ibid. 1761-66, 2 vols.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 102 sq. (B. P.)

Beshen (existing in all things) was, according to the Indian Brahmins, the second of those beings which God created before the world. He is supposed by them to preserve the world in its present state, and to pass through several incarnations: in the first assuming the body of a lion, then of a man, and in the tenth and last will appear as a warrior and destroy all religions contrary to that of the Brahmins. He is the second person of the Trinity, and has some ascribed qualities that apply to Christ.

Beskovius, JACOB, a German theologian, who was born in Bohemia, and died July 26, 1624, wrote Commentaria Rerum Gestarum, of Surus; translated into the Bohemian language. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Besley, HENRY, an English Congregational minister, was born at Barnstaple in 1784. He was converted very early in life; at the age of fourteen began his ministerial preparation in the theological seminary at Axminster, and received his first appointment at Sydling, Dorsetshire, in 1804. After about three years' labor at this place, an equal number on the island of Guernsey, and a short time at Ilminster, Somersetshire, he took the oversight of the Church at Ilfracombe. Here for thirty-three years he labored faithfully and successfully. Resigning his charge in 1844, he passed the remainder of his days in less conspicuous Christian work. He died May 24, 1860. Mr. Besley's preaching combined doctrinal, experimental, and practical views of divine truth.

His happy tact in spiritual conversation, large correspondence on topics of the highest importance, and his zealous efforts to promote the benefit of religious institutions, made him extensively useful. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 201.

Besley, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at Barnstaple, Dec. 3, 1796. At an early age he removed to Exeter, where he was for some years chorister in the cathedral. He next went to Bristol, where he became connected with a business house. Here he was converted and gave himself to various forms of Christian labor, especially to preaching in cottages and visiting the sick. He soon began a regular course of ministerial preparation, with his brother, the foregoing. At the close of his studies Mr. Besley received a call from the Church at Wincanton. Here he was ordained, and spent five years of earnest labor. He next removed to Buntingford, where he labored for thirty-six years. At the close of this period, because of personal and family afflictions, he resigned his charge and returned to his native county, where he labored as often as opportunities and health would permit, and died June 26, 1877. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 306.

Besli, JEAN, a celebrated French advocate, was born at Fontenay-le-Comte in Poitou, in 1572, where he died May 18, 1644, leaving, Evêques de Poitiers, avec les Preuves (Paris, 1647, 4to):—Præfatio ad Petri Tutebodi, Sacerdotis Sieracensis, Historiam de Hierosolimitano Itinere (in Duchêne, tom. iv). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Besodner, PETRUS, a Transylvanian theologian, pursued his studies at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, and died at Hermannstadt in 1616. He wrote Bibliotheca Theologica, hoc est, Index Bibliorum Præcipuorum Eorundemque Hebræorum, Græcorum et Latinorum, in Certis Classibus ita Digestorum ut Primo Introita Adparere Possit, qui in Numero Rabbiorum, Patrum Lutheranorum Pontificiorum aut Zuinglico Calvinianorum Contineantur (Frankfort-on-the-Oder, 1608). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Besodun (or Beston), JOHN, D.D., a learned English divine of the 15th century, was prior of the monastery of Carmelite friars at Lynn in Norfolk. It is probable that he studied first at Cambridge and then at Paris. He was sent as a delegate to the council held at Sienna, Italy, in 1424, under pope Martin V. He died at Lynn in 1428. His writings include Compendium Theologiæ Moralis:—Ordinariæ Questiones:—Super Universalibus Holocothis:—Sermones in Evangelia:—Sermones in Epistolas:—Lecturæ Sacræ Scripturæ:—Rudimenta Logices:—De Virtutibus et Vitiis Oppositis:—Epistolarum ad Diversos Libri Duo. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v., Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Besold, HIERONYMUS, a German theologian, went to Wittenberg in 1537, and was there a guest with Luther. Afterwards he went to Nuremberg, where he formed a friendly alliance with Melancthon. There he performed various ecclesiastical functions, and, following the example of Luther, married. He died Nov. 4, 1862. He wrote Enarrationes Lutheri in Genesin Collectæ per Hir. Besoldum, cum Pref. Phil. Melancthonis (Nuremberg, 1552). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Besozzi, Hyacinthe, a French theologian of the order of Theatines, was born Feb. 14, 1626, and died in 1699. He wrote, Orazioni Sacre e Discorsi (Milan, 1652, 1655):—Primizie, Ossia IX Panegyria (ibid. 1663):—Orazioni III in Lode di San Antonio di Padona (ibid. 1682):—La Monarchia Catholica, Discorso in Lode della Casa d'Austria (ibid. 1777). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Besozzi (or Besuzzi), Innocento, an Italian theologian, was born at Brescia in 1662, and died April 10, 1782. He wrote, Theologiæ Scholasticæ Prælec- tionibus Accommodatæ, partes iv (Brescia, 1703-4), a work published anonymously:—Anatome Conversations Amatoriæ pro Disciplina Juvenum Conjugia Quærentum Concinnata (ibid. 1704). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bessa, BERNARDINUS DE, a Franciscan who lived about 1270, and was the companion of St. Bonaventura. He composed a chronicle of the generals of his order, an abridgment of the Legend of St. Francis, etc.

Bessarion (or Bisarion), an Egyptian monk in the 4th century. Very many sayings and wonders are recorded of him.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antig. s. v.

Bessé, PIERRE, a French preacher, was born at Rosiers, in Limosin, near the middle of the 16th century. He was doctor at the Sorbonne, principal of the College of Pompadour, canon chanter of St. Eustace, preacher to king Louis XIII, and preacher and chaplain to Henry of Bourbon, prince of Condé. His sermons gained for him a high reputation for eloquence; his Leut was reprinted ten times in as many years. He died at Paris in 1639. He wrote, Des Qualités et des Bonnes Mœurs des Prêtres:—Triomphe des Saintes et Dévotes Confrairies:—La Royale Prêtrise:—Le Démonstrateur Chrétien:—Le Bon Pasteur:—L'Héracle Chrétien:—Concordantia Bibliorum (Paris, 1611). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bessel, GOTTFRIED VON, abbot of the Benedictine abbey of Gottwich, in Austria, was born Sept. 5, 1672, at Buchheim, in the electorate of Mentz. In 1714 he was made abbot of Gottwich, and in the year following rector of the University of Vienna. In 1718 his monastery was burned down, but the valuable library was saved by his exertions, and shortly after he began to rebuild the abbey. He died Jan. 20, 1749. Bessel wrote, the learned Preface at the head of two letters of St. Augustine, addressed to St. Optatus, of Milevi, which Bessel discovered and published:—De Panis Parvulorum qui sine Baptismate Decedunt (Vienna, 1733):—Chronicon Gotwicense (Tegernsee, 1732, fol.). This last work is but a preliminary of the Annals of Gottwich; it is a sort of treatise on the diplomata and MSS. of Germany, after the manner of Mabillon's great work, De Re Diplomaticâ. It is said, however, that the true author was Francis Jos. de Hahn, afterwards bishop of Bamberg, of whom Bessel speaks in the Preface as his fellow-laborer. See Biog. Universelle, iv, 394.

Besseritz, JOHANN SIGISMUND, a German Lutheran theologian, who lived in the early half of the 18th century, wrote Spermalogia Nicheniana (1702), a work directed against Nichenk. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Best, John Williams, an English Congregational minister, was born at Hexham, Northumberland, in July, 1846. He was converted in early life, in 1866 entered Lancashire Independent College, and in 1871 was ordained pastor at Cheadle Hulme, a suburb of Manchester. Here he labored but six weeks, when a severe attack of hemorrhage caused his death, Jan. 15, 1872. Mr. Best was very brilliant and promising, and greatly esteemed and dearly loved by all who knew him. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 315.

Best, Thomas, M.A., an English divine, was born June 23, 1787. He was educated at the Free Grammar-school, Birmingham, and Worcester College, Oxford. He was curate successively of Uttoxeter, Staffordshire; and Chipping Campden, Gloucestershire; and afterwards removed to the incumbency of Sheffield, where he remained forty-eight years. He died March 10, 1865. Mr. Best was conspicuous for his industry, self-denial, and devotedness to the Church. See Christian Observer, June, 1865, p. 475.

Bestard, a Spanish painter, lived at Palma about the end of the 17th century. He executed for the convent of Monte Leon at Palma a grand composition, representing Christ in the Desert, attended by Angels. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bester, BENJAMIN F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Washington, D. C., March 24, 1822. He removed in early youth to Peoria, Ill., where he was converted in 1841. He received license to preach in 1844, and in 1847 entered the Rock River Conference. He went to his work with a warm, zealous heart, and labored faithfully until his death, Jan. 5, 1850. Mr. Bester was a close student, a good preacher, and a diligent pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1850, p. 489.

Bestla, in Norse mythology, was the daughter of the Jote Baulthor, the wife of Bör, and by him mother of Odin, Wile, and We.

Beawetherick, PAUL MOYLE ROBINS, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Bodmin, Cornwall, Sept. 6, 1837. He was blessed with a godly mother, was converted in February, 1856, and joined the Bible Christians. His genuine piety and ability introduced him to the ministry in 1857, on which the blessing of God rested. He preached in the Helstone and Penzance circuits, his third location being in the Isle of Wight, where he died, April 7, 1861. A Memoir of him was published.

Beswick, George M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Kentucky, Oct. 11, 1811. He received a careful religious training, experienced religion in his fourteenth year, was licensed to preach at eighteen, and at twenty entered the Indiana Conference. From 1831 to 1838 he travelled circuits in different parts of the state, and afterwards filled many of the best appointments in the Conference. He died in 1854. Mr. Beswick was firm and decided, yet persuasive and respectful, a bold, original thinker, and a talented preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1854, p. 447.

Beswick, Philip J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Harrison County, Ind., Dec. 20, 1818. He received license to preach in 1840, and the next year entered the Indiana Conference. In 1848 he was transferred to the North Indiana Conference, and in 1852, by division of the Conference, he became a member of the North-west Indiana Conference. In 1855 he was made professor of Greek in Fort Wayne College, and in 1856 re-entered the itinerancy. His health failed in 1863, and, taking a superannuated relation, he sustained it until his decease, Aug. 15, 1879. Mr. Beswick was a man of marked excellence and usefulness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 24.

Betancos, DOMINGO DE, a Spanish missionary, was born at Leon near the close of the 15th century. He first studied law at Salamanca, then went to Rome, and established himself in a convent of the Benedictine order, which he soon left in order to take refuge on the small island of Ponca, situated four or five leagues from Naples. This island was for a long time inhabited by hermits, who lived in caverns. Betancos abode there for five years in absolute seclusion. He finally abandoned the ascetic life and came forth, and was ordained priest at Seville, and in 1514 went to Hispaniola, at the time when bishop Geraldini intended to chastise the Indians. Betancos was a witness of the cruelties which so rapidly depopulated St. Domingo. He learned the language of the Indians, taught them, and befriended them. About this time Mexico offered a vast field for labor. He resolved to go, and arrived there with some of his brethren June 23, 1526. Here he founded, for the honor of the Benedictine order to which he belonged, the province of Santiago. In 1528 he went to found another convent in Guatemala, about the time that the independence of the convent was threatened by the house of St. Domingo. Betancos embarked for Europe in 1531, to maintain the rights of his brethren at Rome. He obtained his request, and returned immediately to America. In 1535 he was elected canonically as provincial. This was the most glorious epoch of his career. The New World afforded intellectual culture to the Indians, whom he was seeking so zealously to aid. He sent T. Domingo of Minaya to Rome to plead the cause of the Indians. In 1537 he obtained of Paul III the promulgation of the bull which called upon Christians to recognize the Indians as their brothers, and by this act their cruelty was condemned. He spread this famous bull throughout America, and refused the bishopric of Guatemala, and in monastic humility performed the functions of provincial. At length he set out on his return to Spain, with a monk named Vicenot of Las Casas. He landed at San Lucas in July, 1549. The month following he expired in the convent of St. Paul, at Valladolid. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beteswamy (god of Sport), a Baaga deity, was supposed to inhabit the forests of the Neilgherries in Hindustan.

Bethabara. Lieut. Conder thinks he has recovered this site in the present ford Abarah, about a mile north of the place where the stream el-Jalûd falls into the Jordan opposite Beisan (Tent-work, ii, 64 sq.); but he gives no decisive reason for the identification beyond the correspondence in name and the vicinity to Galilee, which he contends is required by the note of time in John ii, 1.

Betham, Edward, B.D., an English divine of the 18th century, was educated at Eton School and at King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow in 1731. He afterwards became rector of Greenford, in Middlesex, and preacher at Whitehall. His benefactions were very large as compared with his fortune. He gave £20,000 to the Botanical Garden at Cambridge, endowed a charity-school in his own parish in 1780, and gave other gifts of importance. He died in 1783.

Betham, John, D.D., an English Roman Catholic divine, chaplain and preacher to king James II, died in 1701. He published, Annunciation: a Sermon on Luke i, 31 (1686):—and Catholick Sermons (2 vols. 8vo). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bethany IN JUDEA. We glean the following additional particulars on this interesting Scripture locality. Bethany is mentioned in connection with Beth-phage, "house of figs." We also know that palm-trees were plentiful in the environs of Bethany (John xii, 13) and on the Mount of Olives (Neh. viii, 15); while they were sufficiently rare in Palestine to give to each locality where they were found a distinctive name (comp. Gen. xiv, 7; Deut. xxxiv, 3; Judg. iv, 5).

The village of Bethany is unquestionably ancient, though it was probably so small, and its situation so retired, that it never came into notice until the time of our Lord. Bethany stands on the border of the desert. Beyond it there is not, and apparently never was, any inhabited spot. It seems as if excluded from the world of active life, and one would suppose, from the look of its inhabitants, that they had given up industry in despair. The view from it is dreary and desolate. Olivet shuts out Jerusalem and the country westward; and the eye roams eastward down the bare, gray, "wilderness of Judea" into the deep valley of the Jordan, and then up again to the long wall of the Moab mountains on the distant horizon. The houses are massive and rude, built chiefly of old hewn stones.

The leading, and indeed the only, road from Jerusalem to Jericho runs past Bethany. It is one of the dreariest in all Palestine, and it is now, as it was in the time of our Lord, one of the most dangerous (Luke x, 30). The road does not proceed direct from the Holy City to this village; it winds round the south side of the Mount of Olives; thus making the distance as nearly as possible fifteen furlongs (John xi, 18). It was up that road through the wilderness from Jericho Christ came to raise Lazarus; and on it, without the village, the weeping sisters met him (comp. x, 40 and xi, 1-20). It was along that road to Jerusalem he went in triumphal procession, and from the palm-trees in the adjoining fields the multitudes cut down branches (Mark xi, 1-11; John xii, 13). A steep and rugged footpath leads from Jerusalem to Bethany over the summit of Olivet. It was probably by it Jesus "led out" his disciples "as far as to Bethany"—the same place where he was often wont to retire—and there "he lifted up his hands and blessed them. And while he blessed them he was parted from them, and received up into heaven" (Luke xxiv, 50, 51). By the same path the disciples returned to Jerusalem (Acts i, 12). It is a singular fact, and one calculated to show the value that ought to be attached to Eastern traditions, that a tradition as old as the beginning of the 4th century fixes the scene of the ascension on the summit of the Mount of Olives, and there, in honor of it, the empress Helena built a church (Eusebius, Vit. Const. iii, 43); yet Luke distinctly states that this event occurred at Bethany.

Bethany, as it now appears.

BETHANY BEYOND JORDAN (i. e. Bethabara). Con-der (Handbook of the Bible, p. 315) regards this as another form of Bataana or Bashan; but this identification is precarious, and the region indicated is too far north and east.

Betharabah is regarded by Tristram as "indicated by some ancient ruins on Tell el-Moghyfer, near the opening of the ravine Khaur el-Kataf" (Bible Places, p. 94). The Ordnance Map lays down the ruins of Kusa Hajlah in that position (three and a quarter miles south-east of er-Riha), and marks a site without ancient remains as Rujm el-Mogeifir, lying near the Kelt (one and a quarter miles south-east of er-Riha).

Beth-Aram. Tristram identifies this with what he calls Beit-Haran, "a conspicuous mound or tell, which might be artificial, very much like the great mounds of Jericho, and its top crowned with an old Moslem wely or tomb. . . . On the mound and alongside of it were a few traces of walls and foundations" (Land of Moab, p. 360). Elsewhere, however, he says, "Beth-Aram is marked by a deserted heap of ruins at that spot, called Beit-Haran according to some, but for which my guides had no name" (Bible Places, p. 336). Prof. Merrill, on the contrary, says, "Its identity with the modern Tell er-Rama cannot be reasonably disputed" (East of the Jordan, p. 383). This latter spot is a mound a short distance east of the other site.

Beth-baal-Meon. The ruins of this place, the present Main, are of vast extent. They occupy the crests and slopes of four adjacent hills—one having evidently been the central city, and connected with the next by a wide causeway. The remains are of the ordinary type—foundations, fragments of wall, lines of streets, old arches, many carved stones, caves, wells, and cisterns innumerable. Some curious cavernous dwellings, built up with arches and fragments of old columns, are still occasionally used by the Arabs as folds and sleeping-places. The position of Baal-meon, the name ("The habitations of Baal"), and the commanding views gained from the neighboring peaks, would seem to show that here are the very "high places of Baal" to which

Main (Beth-baal-Meon), as it now appears from the West. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

Balak king of Moab led Balaam, that "he might see the utmost part of the people," and curse them for him (Numb. xxii, 41). Balak met Balaam on the banks of the Arnon; he led him thence to Kirjath-huzoth ("the Town of Streets"), which may perhaps be identical with the ruin Kureiyât ("the Towns"), situated at the southern base of Jebel Attârs; and then on the next day Balak brought the prophet to "the high places of Baal," that he might obtain a full view of the Israelites. See Tristram, Land of Moab, p. 316 sq.

Beth-car is thought by Lieut. Conder (Tent-work, i, 25) to be the present Ain-Karim, noted as the reputed residence of John the Baptist (Thomson, Land and Book, ii, 536 sq.).

Beth-Chayim (Heb. בֵּית חַיִּים, house of the living), a name given by modern Jews to a burial-place—the dead being looked upon as living. The name was probably invented by the Pharisees as a protest against the infidel doctrine of the Sadducees that there is no resurrection, and as a standing declaration of their belief in the immortality of the soul and a general resurrection of the dead.

Bethdagon. The town in Judah (Josh. xv, 41) is identified by Conder (Tent-work, ii, 335) and Tristram (Bible Places, p. 41) with the present Beit-Dejan, between Jaffa and Lydda; a site, however, which could not have fallen within the limits of that tribe. The town of this name in Galilee (Josh. xix, 27) is thought by both of these writers (Tent-work, ii, 335; Bible Places, p. 292) to be the modern Tell Du'uk on the river Belus, near its mouth. The name corresponds tolerably well (see Quarterly Report of "the Palestine Exploration Fund," January, 1881, p. 50), and there are "said to be remains upon the mound" (Robinson, New Researches, p. 103). It is marked on the Ordnance Map as Khirbet Du'uk, a ruined mound about twenty-five feet high, four miles south-east of Akka, with a well adjoining, but no other marks of antiquity.

Beth-Din (Heb. בֵּית דִּין, house of justice), a tribunal in religious causes among the Jews. The Jewish Church is governed by a presiding rabbi in the city or town where they may be settled. He generally attaches to himself two other rabbins, and these combined form the Beth-Din. Their power was partly civil, partly ecclesiastical, and they received the name of Rulers of the Synagogue, because the chief government was vested in them. The Beth-Din had power to inflict corporal punishment, as scourging, but they could not condemn to death. See SYNAGOGUE.

Bethel (now Beitin). Of this locality we extract the following additional particulars from Porter's Hand-book, p. 238.

"The site is surrounded by higher ground on every side except the south, and yet it is so high that from the upper part of it the dome of the great mosque in Jerusalem can be seen. The ruins of the ancient city cover the whole surface of the ridge, and are three or four acres in extent. They consist of foundations, fragments of walls, and large heaps of stones. On the highest point are the remains of a square tower; and towards the south are the walls of a Greek church, standing within the foundations of a much older edifice. Amid the ruins are about a score of low huts, rudely formed out of ancient materials. In the western valley is a cistern 314 feet by 217, constructed of massive stones. The southern side is entire, but the others are more or less ruinous."

The following details are from Conder's Tent-work in Palestine, ii, 105 sq.

"Bethel at the present day is one of the most desolate-looking places in Palestine; not from lack of water, for it has four good springs, but from the absence of soft soil on its rocky hills. All the neighborhood is of gray, bare stone, or white chalk. The miserable fields are fenced in with stone walls; the hovels are rudely built of stone; the hill to the east is of hard rock, with only a few scattered fig-gardens; the ancient sepulchres are cut in a low cliff, and a great reservoir south of the village is excavated in rock. The place seems as it were turned to stone, and we can well imagine that the lonely patriarch found nothing softer than a stone for the pillow under his head, when on the bare hill-side he slept, and dreamed of angels."

"It is very remarkable that in this narrative the word 'place' occurs in a manner which suggests that it is used with a special significance. Jacob came not to any city, but to a 'certain place' (Gen. xxviii, 11), the stones of which formed his pillow. The word 'place' (Makom) occurs five times in the same chapter, and the place called Bethel is distinguished specially from the neighboring city of Luz (ver. 19). The same word (Makom) is used to denote the sacred places of the Canaanites (Deut. xii, 2), and in the Talmud to denote the shrines held to be lawful for Israel before the Temple was built. It is thus, perhaps, a sacred place that is intended as having been Jacob's refuge on his way; and we at once recall the altar which Abraham raised between Bethel and Ai—towns which, as now identified, were only two miles apart. Abraham's altar must have been close to the city of Luz, subsequently named from it Bethel, 'the House of God'; and it was perhaps from the stones of this ancestral shrine that Jacob's pillow was made."

Bethel, JOSHUA, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Nelson County, Va., about 1805. He experienced religion in 1825, began preaching in 1828, and in 1829 entered the Virginia Conference. In 1840, on account of ill-health, he became superannuated, but in 1850 resumed his place in the active ranks. In 1856, being unable to preach, he was appointed steward of Greensborough Female College, which office he held until the destruction of the institution by fire, and at which city he resided until his decease, Oct. 31, 1864. Mr. Bethel was an amiable companion, a good preacher, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1865, p. 562.

Bethell, CHRISTOPHER, D.D., a prelate of the Church of England, son of Rev. Richard Bethell, was born at Isleworth, England, in 1773. Dr. Bethell was educated at King's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1796, became a fellow of his college and second member's prizeman. In 1824 he was nominated to the bishopric of Gloucester, and was duly consecrated. In 1830 he was transferred to the more lucrative see of Exeter, and subsequently in the same year was further advanced to the see of Bangor, which he held at the time of his death, in Carnarvonshire, Wales, April 19, 1859. The bishop was the author of several theological works, the principal of which is his General View of the Doctrine of Regeneration in Baptism. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 359.

Bethel, as it now appears from the South-west. (From a Photograph by the Editor. The eminence towards the right is Tell Hajr.)

Bethesda, MIRACLE OF, in art. Of this there is an ancient representation on a sarcophagus from the Vatican cemetery. The subject occupies the centre of the tomb. A wavy line, representing water, divides the composition horizontally into two compartments: on the lower, the impotent man is seen lying on his couch, which is covered by a coverlet; on the upper, he is seen healed and carrying his couch, while the Lord stretches forth his hand towards him; another figure raises his hand, the fingers arranged as in the Latin form of benediction. The background is formed by an arcade of three arches supported by columns, intended, no doubt, to represent one of the "five porches" (John v, 2) in which the impotent folk were laid. The same miracle is represented, in a very different style, in the great Laurentian MS.

Miracle of Bethesda. (From an ancient Sarcophagus.)

BETHESDA, to lie at the pool of, is a gross accommodation of a simple historical fact, in which some preachers indulge when urging sinners not to despair of salvation. There is reason to fear that multitudes have, by this abuse of Scripture, been deluded to their eternal ruin. In Germany the formula is used proverbially in speaking of theological candidates who are waiting for a living.

Beth-gamul. Prof. Merrill gives some reasons for thinking that Moab may have been popularly regarded as including the modern Um el-Jemal (East of the Jordan, p. 86). He gives a detailed description of the place (p. 82).

Beth-ham-Midrash (בֵּית הַמִּדְרָשׁ, house of exposition), is the name given by the Jews to those of their schools in which the oral law or rabbinical traditions were explained. See MIDRASH; RABBINISM.

Beth-ham-Mikra (בֵּית הַמִּקְרָא, house of reading), is the name given by the Jews to those of their schools in which the text only of the law was read.

Beth-horon. Of both the places thus designated in Scripture but insignificant clusters of huts now remain as the representatives. See Porter, Handbook, p. 215, 264.

1. Beit el-Foka (Beth-horon the Upper) is a small village, but it has an antiquated aspect, owing to the numbers of large stones built up in the walls of its houses, and also to its situation, perched like a castle on the summit of the tell. At the foot of the hill on the east side is an ancient reservoir. There is little cultivation round it, and indeed the rocky declivities afford little space for it.

2. Beit el-Tahta (Beth-horon the Nether) is likewise a small hamlet, but there are some foundations and heaps of large stones marking the ancient site. It stands upon a slight eminence along the ridge on the north side of a well-wooded ravine (Wady el-Melâb), which runs into the valley of Ajalon (Merj ibn-Omer), with another site bearing traces of ancient ruins along the Roman road a little to the south-east of it.

Béthisy de Mézières, HENRI BENEÔIT JULES DE, a French theologian, brother of count Eugène Eustace, was born in 1744. He embraced the ecclesiastical profession, was appointed in 1780 bishop of Uzès, and became in 1789 deputy of the clergy of the bailiwick of Nismes to the States-General, where he showed himself a zealous defender of the ancient privileges of his order. He emigrated in 1792, retired to England, and there distinguished himself by his opposition to the Concordat and all the measures held by the pope, in concert with Napoleon and Louis XVIII, relating to the Church of France. He died at London in 1817. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Upper Beth-horon, as it now appears from the South-east. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

Lower Beth-horon, as it now appears at a distance from the South-east. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

Bethlehem IN JUDÆA. Concerning this place, so memorable from the birth of our Lord, we gather a few additional particulars from one of the most recent and authoritative works on Palestine (Conder, Tent-work, i, 282 sq.). See NATIVITY, CHURCH OF THE.

"Bethlehem is a long town of solidly built stone houses, crowning the summit of two knolls, connected by a lower saddle, on a white chalk ridge with steep declivities to the north and south. The monastery and basilica are at the east end of the town, overlooking the northern valley.

The population, of 5000 souls, is almost entirely Christian, and the inhabitants are remarkable for their enterprise and energy in trade. . . . The Bethlehem women are famous for their beauty, for their delicate complexion and aquiline features. They are distinguished by their head-dress, a tall felt hat, in shape a truncated cone, over which a white veil is arranged, and from which heavy strings of coins are suspended. Their dresses are also remarkable from the square patches of red and yellow, which are introduced into the blue or striped fabric of which they are composed. See ATTIRE.

"Bethlehem is supplied with water by cisterns, and from the great aqueduct (from Solomon's Pools) which passes through the hill. The famous well for the waters of which David thirsted (2 Sam. xliii, 14-17) is supposed to be represented by an ancient and extensive cistern, with many mouths, on the north-east. It is not impossible that this may be the 'pit,' as Josephus calls it (Ant. vii, 12, 4), which was beside the city.

"East of Bethlehem is a narrow plain or open valley, bare and treeless, with white stony slopes and a few crumbling ruins. One of these ruins is a large building called Sû el-Ghanem ('the sheepfold'), apparently an ancient monastery; a second site is called 'the Church of the Flocks,' a subterranean Greek chapel, with mediæval ruins above, first mentioned in crusading chronicles. It is here that Migdal-Eder, 'the tower of the flock,' is supposed by Jerome to have stood, where, according to the Jews, Me-siah was first to appear; and it is on this plain, according to tradition, that the angelic messenger appeared to the shepherds, and that the Gloria in Excelsis was first sung."

Bethlehem AS AN ARCHITECTURAL TERM. In the Ethiopic churches, a small building is thrown out from the east end of the sanctuary, where the bread for use in the eucharist is prepared by the deacon alone, and baked in the oven with which the place is furnished. This building is called the Bethlehem, or "house of bread."

BETHLEHEM AS A SYMBOL. In an ancient mosaic of the Church of Sts. Cosmas and Damian, in the Via Sacra, at Rome, two flocks, each of six sheep, pass from cities labelled respectively Hierusalem and Beth-leem towards the figure of a Lamb, representing the Lord, which stands on a mound in the centre. Similar representations are found elsewhere. The abbé Martigny supposes Jerusalem and Bethlehem to symbolize respectively the Jewish and Gentile Churches; but this is not a probable opinion. Bethlehem could scarcely represent the Gentile Church, and the twelve sheep are generally supposed to represent the apostles, none of whom came forth from the Gentiles. The issuing forth of the flock of Christ from Jerusalem and Bethlehem probably symbolizes the fact that the Church is founded on the Nativity, the Passion, Bethsaida. If Capernaum be located at Khan Minyeh or Ain Tabighah, or anywhere in that immediate vicinity, Bethsaida may very well have been situated at Tell Hum; and this position will obviate the necessity for the supposition of two Bethsaidas, inasmuch as this was the last important town in that direction, and the entire shore of the lake beyond, even on the north-east side, may very well be designated as belonging to it (Luke ix, 10). See CAPERNAUM.

Exterior of Bethlehem from the North. (From a Photograph.)

Interior of Bethlehem from the North. (From a Photograph.)

Bethlehem and Jerusalem as Symbols.

and the Resurrection of the Lord. Bethlehem was the scene of the former, Jerusalem of the two latter.

Bethlehem, OUR LADY OF. A military order so called was instituted by Pius II, Jan. 18, 1459, on the occasion of the recovery of the island of Lemnos from the Turks by the cardinal of Aquileia. This order was founded for its preservation, the main duty of the knights being to reside there and oppose the progress of the Turks in the Archipelago and parts adjacent. However, shortly after the Turks recaptured Lemnos, and the whole scheme vanished; and the very institution of the order is only known from the bull to the effect preserved by Leibnitz in the Codex Gentium.

Beth-nimrah. This site, the present Nimrin, is thus described by Prof. Merrill (East of the Jordan, p. 384): "The ruins cover a considerable space, and the location is an excellent one for a city. The stream which flows past the place is perhaps the largest on that side of the Jordan south of the Zerka, and to it I refer the 'waters of Nimrin' mentioned by Isaiah (xv, 6) and Jeremiah (xlviii, 34)."

Beth-palet. Lieut. Conder suggests (Quarterly Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," January, 1875, p. 26) that from position it might very well correspond to el-Hora (drawing of water), a place remarkable for its number of cisterns and reservoirs, the buildings being of flint throughout.

Bethshean. We extract the following additional particulars from Porter's Handbook, p. 347:

"The ruins of Bethshean cover a space about three miles in circuit. No less than four streams flow through the site, so that the city must have consisted of several sections, separated by deep ravines and brawling torrents. Between the principal streams is a hill two hundred feet high, in form a truncated cone. From its southern base the ground ascends gradually for about half a mile, and on this slope the great body of the ancient city stood. Here also stands the modern village, grouped round a massive square tower, the style of whose masonry proclaims its Jewish or Phœnician origin. Scythopolis was a city of temples. It was a chief seat of the Philistine god Dagon. The remains of no less than four temples can be traced at the base of the tell, and several others are seen elsewhere. There are some thirty columns standing among the ruins, most of which appear to have lined the street which ran from the Gadara gate round the acropolis.

"The most perfect as well as the most interesting ruin of Bethshean is the Theatre, situated in the valley south-west of the tell. Though the outer walls are shattered and ruinous, the interior doors and passages are almost perfect. It is entirely built of basalt. In form it is semi-circular, and its diameter measures nearly two hundred feet. Here, we are told, a number of Christians were massacred during the reign of Julian the Apostate.

"The citadel stood on the summit of the hill, and must have been a place of very great strength. The hill is a natural fortress, for a deep glen, called Wady el-Jlâd, sweeps round its northern base, while another glen passes round the southern base, and the two meet on the east, thus almost surrounding it with an impassable moat. Its sides are steep, scarped, and in places almost perpendicular. A massive wall encircled the flat top, and its principal gateway was on the north-west. In its sides, which are of comparatively recent structure, may be seen fragments of Corinthian capitals and shafts of limestone. It was doubtless on the wall of this citadel that the Philistines hung up the bodies of Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam. xxxi, 10); and one can understand from the position of the city how the daring inhabitants of Jabesh were able to carry off the bodies. They crossed the Jordan during the night, crept up Wady el-Jalid to the northern base of the tell, then clambered up its steep side, scaled the wall of the fortress, took down the bodies, and escaped.

"On the east and north of the tell there are extensive ruins, but now so overgrown with thorns, thistles, and rank grass that it is difficult to see them. On the north bank of the ravine, opposite the citadel, are a number of rock tombs and sarcophagi.

"The village is poor but populous, containing a colony of Egyptians brought hither by Ibrahim Pasha. They have a bad name, and deserve it: for they are given to pilfering, and open robbery when they can safely venture upon it. They are themselves frequently plundered by the wandering Bedawin."

ascetic writer, was born in Paris in 1657. She was educated at the abbey of Royal Dieu, then of Compiègne, where she acquired a taste for monastic life, which she entered upon at the age of sixteen years. The abbess of Notre Dame du Vol de Gis, who perceived the merit of Leonore d'Orval, designated her to Louis XIV for her successor. At the age of twenty-nine, she was nominated for the position, and entered upon it at the commencement of the year 1687. Her virtue and talent made her a model for the society. She died Nov. 28, 1733. She left some works, as Réflexions sur l'Evangile: — Île de la Perfection Chrétienne et Religieuse (Paris,

Bethshean, as it now appears from the South. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

The following is the latest account (Conder, Tent-work, ii, 69):

"Beisan is a miserable hamlet of mud hovels, amid the ruins of the important town of Scythopolis, which was a bishopric from the 5th century until the change of the see to Nazareth, in the 12th century. The remains of a theatre, hippodrome, and temple, of fine structural tombs, and baths, with a crusading fortress and bridge, are among the best-preserved antiquities of western Palestine. Christian martyrs, in the 4th century, here fought wild beasts in the theatre; and the cages with the sockets of the iron bars, and the narrow passages from the outside, are still intact in the ruined theatre of black basalt."

Bethshemesh of ISSACHAR (Josh. xix, 22) is suggested by Lieut. Conder (Quarterly Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," January, 1881, p. 50; Tent-work, ii, 335) as being possibly the ruined site Ain esh-Sheimeiyeh in the Jordan valley.

Bethulia is regarded by Lieut. Conder (Tent-work, ii, 335; Quarterly Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," 1881, p. 45) and Tristram (Bible Places, p. 204) as the modern village Mithlia, which is laid down on the Ordnance Map as Meithalun, one and a half miles south-east of Sanur and four and a quarter miles east of south from Tell Dothan.

Béthune, Hyppolyte de, a French prelate, younger son of Philippe, was born in 1647. He was raised to the bishopric of Verdun at the age of thirty-four years. He there established a seminary, to which he called superior professors, composed a catechism, a ritual, a Méthode pour Administrer le Sacrement de Pénitence (1691), a Nouveau Bréviaire (1693), and a Missal (1699). He built a hospital in his diocese, to which he bequeathed all his goods. He was the patron of several men of literary fame, and in particular of Martin Rethelois, who dedicated to him the second volume of the translation of the Chroniques de Saint Benoît, par D. Jépres, Bénédictin Espagnol. Hyppolyte de Béthune lodged an appeal against the bull Unigenitus, and made himself highly esteemed by his conduct and his administration. He died Aug. 24, 1720. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bethune, James. See BEATON; BEUTON.

Béthune d'Orval, ANNE LÉONORE DE, a French

Nully, 1718):—Règlement de l'Abbaye de Gis, avec des Réflexions:—Vie de Madame de Clermont-Monglat. All these works are published anonymously. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Betogabra. See ELEUTHEROPOLIS.

Bettelheim, J. B., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Presburg, the capital of Hungary, in 1811. His parents were devout Jews and were anxious that he should become a rabbi. At nine years of age he could read and write Hebrew, German, and French. He attended medical lectures at Padua, and received the degree of doctor of medicine. He then travelled through various parts of Italy and Greece, practicing his profession, after which he went to Egypt and entered the navy of Mehemet Ali, having received the appointment of chief surgeon. While stationed at Smyrna an Italian Bible was placed in his hands by the English Episcopal missionary, and also the New Testament in German; these he began to study, and he became so deeply interested that after five months he was impressed that it was his duty to preach the Gospel to his brethren the Jews. With this view he went to London, and in an interview with the bishop he was informed that he must study theology at least three years at Oxford or Cambridge University. Feeling the burden upon him that he must preach, he commenced as an Independent, and preached to the Jews in London with great success. In 1845 he was sent by a society of naval officers to the Loo Choo islands, where he remained seven years, acquiring the language and translating the Gospels into Japanese and Chinese. In 1850 commodore Perry found him there, and he rendered important service to that officer by acting as his interpreter. He went with the commodore to Hong Kong, China, and after remaining some time came to New York, where he spent two years in missionary work, and then removed with his family to Illinois. In 1868 he settled at Brookfield, Mo., where he died, Sept. 9, 1869. See The Presbyterian, March 12, 1870. (W. P. S.)

Bettellini, PIETRO, an eminent Italian engraver, was born at Lugano in 1763, and studied under Gandolfi and Bartolozzi. In 1848 he was employed on The Judgment of Solomon, after Raffaele. His masterpiece is the engraving of The Entombment, after Andrea del Sarto, in the Florentine gallery. The following are some of his best productions: St. John; Ascension of the Virgin; Magdalene; Madonna and Sleeping Infant; the Portraits of Poliziano, Machiavelli, and Galileo. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Betti was an English priest, and one of the four sent by Finan to the Middle Ages as missionaries, after the baptism of Paeda in 653.

Betti Biagio, an Italian painter, was born at Catigliano near Pistoja in 1545, and studied under Daniello da Volterra. His works are chiefly confined to the monasteries of Rome; among which is Christ Disputing with the Doctors, in the library of the Theatines. Baglioni says he was a monk for fifty years and died in 1615. He was also skilled in medicine, music, and botany. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bettinelli, GIUSEPPE MARIA (called also Xaviero), an Italian Jesuit and litterateur, was born at Mantua, July 18, 1718. He was educated by the Jesuits at Mantua and Bologna, and joined the society in 1736. From 1739 to 1744 he taught belles-lettres at Brescia, after which he went to Bologna to study divinity. In 1748 he became professor of rhetoric at Venice, and in 1751 the College of Nobles at Parma was intrusted to him. He remained in that office eight years, during which he visited the various cities of Italy in the interest of his order. After the suppression of the Jesuits in 1773 he retired to Mantua, where he spent the greater part of his remaining years. He died Sept. 13, 1808. His complete works were published at Venice in 24 vols. 12mo. (1799). See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.) s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bettini, Antonio, an Italian prelate and antiquarian, was born at Sienna in 1396, and joined the Jesuits. At the age of sixty-five he was elected bishop of Foligno, and died in 1487, leaving several works on mystic and religious art, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bettini, Pietro, an Italian engraver who flourished in 1681, etched a few plates, among which are the following: Christ appearing to Peter, after Domenico Campelli; The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian, after Domenichino.

Bettle, Samuel (1), a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Philadelphia in 1810. In early manhood he embarked in mercantile pursuits. After his conversion he consecrated himself to the service of his Lord, and was recognized as a minister of the Gospel. "His ministry was clear, eloquent, thoughtful, weighty, and, above all, accompanied with unction." In the discharge of his duties he visited many yearly meetings in the United States. He labored also among the Indians and freedmen, and his advice was sought and followed by the heads of government at Washington. Among the ministers of his denomination he took a deservedly high rank. He died at his home near Philadelphia, January 28, 1880. See Friends' Review, xxxiii, 616. (J. C. S.)

Bettle, Samuel (2), a minister of the Society of Friends, was converted in early life, and became one of the most eminent ministers in the denomination. His mind was remarkably well disciplined, and this, with his natural endowments, made him peculiarly well fitted for his work during a long course of years. Intrusted with considerable means, he exercised a true Christian benevolence, devoting a large portion of his wealth to that purpose. For more than half a century he filled various responsible stations in his society. He died in Philadelphia, Pa., April 12, 1861, aged eighty-six years. See Amer. Annual Monitor, 1862, p. 7.

Betts, Alfred H., M.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Norwalk, Conn., Sept. 2, 1786. About 1820 he was licensed by the Portage Presbytery, and thereafter devoted his time and talents fully to the work of his Master in Florence, Brownhelm, Vermilion, and Wake-man, O. He died Sept. 8, 1860. See Wilson, Hist. Presb. Abnanc, 1861, p. 156.

Betts, Barber, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Richmond, Va., July 1, 1850. He resided in Southwestern Virginia, where he pursued his theological studies. He was licensed to preach and ordained by the Transylvania Presbytery. His first charge was in Butler County, Ky., from which he afterwards removed to Mercer County, where he labored as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of New Providence. Here he spent the remainder of his days in the service of his Master. He died Nov. 14, 1881. See Central Presbyterian, Nov. 30, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Betts, Charles, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in North Carolina in 1800. He experienced conversion in 1816, became class-leader at once, and in 1818 entered the South Carolina Conference. By his deep piety, vigorous intellect, and great success, he soon attained a leading position among his brethren. He was honored by frequent elections to the General Conference, and appointed to the most important charges in the Conference. He continued effective until the close of 1871, when he became superannuated. He died about April 15, 1872. Mr. Betts was always a warm and earnest preacher. He had a well-knit and powerful physical frame, and often taxed it to its utmost. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 671.

Betts, Frederick G., a Presbyterian minister, was born Aug. 14, 1812. His parents were New Englanders. He pursued his classical studies at first in Meadville, Pa. In May, 1838, he commenced the study of theology in Boalsburg, under private instruction; the following October he was received as a candidate, and in April, 1840, was licensed to preach. In the autumn of the same year he was ordained to the full work of the ministry, and installed over several small churches in Clearfield County. He died in Cincinnati, Jan. 17, 1845. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Huntingdon, 1874.

Betts, George, an English Congregational minister, was born at Weathersfield, Essex, March 12, 1783. He joined the Church in early life, received his collegiate discipline at Hoxton College, and in 1812 was ordained at Alfriston, Sussex. Here he labored until 1832, when he removed to Foleshill, near Coventry. After a pastorate here for ten years, and in March for seven years, he consented to resume again his first charge at Alfriston. He died at March, Feb. 23, 1860. Mr. Betts was earnest and affectionate in his ministry, active and zealous in his pastoral duties. He edited the Lives of Flavel and Whitfield, and published, Bible Anecdotes (2 vols.):—The Young Convert's Apology:—A Funeral Discourse for Dr. Simpson; and other smaller works. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 202.

Betts, Henry, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1796 at a village near Mildenhall, Suffolk, and removed with his parents, when he was four years of age, to Norwich. In his religious preference, he was a strong Churchman in his younger days, and was accustomed to direct the shafts of his ridicule openly against the Baptists. On his conversion at thirty-three years of age, after protracted but private conviction, he joined the Baptists, and resolved to devote himself to evangelical labors in one of the worst neighborhoods of Norwich. Twice his preaching-room was enlarged. A church of forty-six members was formed, of which he was chosen the pastor. Here he continued until 1832, when he was called to Great Yarmouth, where his pastorate continued for nineteen years, receiving into the Church during this period 144 persons. He died April 25, 1851. See English Baptist Magazine, 1851, p. 374, 375; (Lond.) Bapt. Hand-book, 1852, p. 47. (J. C. S.)

Betts, R. Wye, an English Congregational minister, was born at Portsea, 1823. He was converted and joined the Church early in life, and was educated at Highbury and New Colleges. In 1853 he accepted a call of the Church at Hanover Chapel, Peckham, where he labored till his death, Dec. 1, 1868. The duties of his pastorate were onerous, yet Mr. Betts gave much time and thought to other work. The Collyer Memorial Schools rose under his energetic influence. He was secretary of the Surrey Congregational Union, and of the Local Fraternal Association. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1870, p. 276.

Betts, Thomas, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Nebraska, was born in Ireland in 1810. He was ordained deacon in 1867, and priest in the following year; in 1867 he was employed as a missionary in Rulo and Falls City, Neb.; he went to Weston, Mo., in 1873 as rector of St. John's Church; the following year he became rector of St. Paul's, in Wyandotte, Kansas; in 1877 he was rector of St. Thomas's Church, Falls City, and St. Peter's, Rulo, Neb. His death occurred July 3, 1878. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Betty, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born at Hull, Jan. 13, 1810. He became an orphan very early in life, and made many voyages to foreign lands as a sailor-boy; in his nineteenth year he quitted the sea, was converted, and joined the Wesleyan Methodists. In 1834 he joined the Independents, offered his services to the London Missionary Society, and was sent to Stanford, Berkshire, where he labored till 1851, and then removed to Stanningley, near Leeds. Thence he removed to Horncastle, Lincolnshire, where he labored six years, and then took a small charge at West Burton, Wensleydale. Failing health, which had caused his removal in nearly every instance, caused him to retire in 1864 to Knaresborough, where he died, March 26, 1865. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 234.

Betulée, Mathieu, a French theologian and chroniclist, a native of Colmar, lived at the commencement of the 17th century. His principal works are, Commentarius, upon the Epistle to the Galatians;—Tabulæ Chronologicæ Imperii et Imperatorum Romanorum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Betulius, Christian, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Wildenstein, in Bohemia, in 1619. For a time he acted as tutor at different schools, till in 1660 he was called as deacon to Blaubeuren. He died as pastor in Sindelfingen, Jan. 26, 1677. He is the author of a collection of hymns, published under the title Andächtige Gotteslieder (Nördlingen, 1658). See Will, Nürnberg. Gelehrten-Lexikon, 1755; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 485 sq. (B. P.)

Beuf, Le. See LEBEUF.

Bueghem, Charles Antoine François de Paule de, a Flemish theologian and scholar, was born at Brussels in 1744. He obtained in 1763 the degree of bachelor in theology at the University of Louvain, and in 1768 he entered upon the ecclesiastical profession. He was successively professor of poetry at Turnhout, director of the College of Courtray, principal of that of Gand, and secretary of the vacant see of the bishopric of Tournay. He demanded of one of the leaders that he should repress habitual begging, and give place to a memorial which the viscount of Vilaine (XIV) had published in 1775—Sur les Moyens de Corriger les Malfaiteurs et les Fainéants. In 1790, the cardinal of Frankenberg, archbishop of Mechlin, chose Bueghem for his secretary; but the invasion of the French army in Belgium forced the cardinal to flee, while his secretary, not being willing to take the oath of haïne à la royauté, was imprisoned seven months at Mechlin and afterwards at Versailles, from whence he was carried to the Isle of Oléron. At the fall of the empire he returned to his own country, where he sustained a violent controversy against the publicists, who proposed the union of Belgium and Holland. This dispute caused him to write several pamphlets, entitled, Le Bouclier, L'Unité, L'Antidote contre le Somnambulisme. He also took part in the disputes of the bishop of Gand with the government. He died at Brussels in 1820. His principal works are, Documenta e Variis Testamenti Historiis Petita (Mechlin, 1797); this is a collection of Latin, Flemish, and French verses, which is only ordinary;—Fructus Suppressæ Contraci Mendicitæ Exortii (Courtray, 1776); translated into Flemish by Wolf, échevin of Courtray;—Oratio in Funere Mariæ Theresiæ (Gand, 1781). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beulan, a British divine and historian of the 7th century, was the instructor of the celebrated Nennius, afterwards abbot of the monastery of Bangor. He is said to have written a work entitled De Genealogiis Gentium. See Alibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Beulan (Lat. Beulanus or Beulanus), SAMUEL, son of the preceding, was a learned English divine, who flourished about the middle of the 7th century. He was born in Northumberland, but lived almost from his infancy in the Isle of Wight. He wrote, in beautiful Latin, several historical treatises relating to his own times. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beuno, a Welsh saint, son of Hywgi (or Bugi), was a near relative and contemporary of St. Kentigern. He founded a religious society at Clynog Fawr, in Carnarvonshire, about 616, on land granted by Cadfan. In his old age Beuno was the instructor of St. Gwenfrewi (or Wenefred). Eleven churches are dedicated to him, and his festival is on April 21. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 268.

Beurlin, Jacob, a German theologian, was born in the year 1520, at Dornstetten. In 1543 he joined the Lutheran Church, was in 1546 pastor at Derendingen, and in 1551 doctor and professor of theology at Tübingen. In the same year he was sent by duke Christopher of Württemberg, together with Brenz and two others, to the Council of Trent, with the view of having the new creed approved. But, of course, this mission was without any result. After his return he had to use all his influence to harmonize those parties which participated in the Osiandrian controversy, especially in Prussia, Saxony, Worms, and Erfurt. In consideration of his many services, he was appointed in 1561 chancellor of the University and provost of the Stiftskirche at Tübingen. He died in the same year, Oct. 28, at Paris, where he had gone, together with Jacob Andreä and Bidembach, to attend the colloquy of Poissy. He wrote, Enarratio Epistolæ Canonice Joannis:—Liber contra Petrum a Soto:—Disputatio de Mediatore Christo:—De Clavibus Regni Cælorum. See Eisenbach, Geschichte des Universität und Stadt Tübingen, p. 108–112; Böck, Geschichte von Tübingen, p. 75 sq.; Hefele, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bureury (or Beurey), NICOLAS, of Châteauroux, a French theologian, was born at Fontenay-le-Comte, and lived in the latter half of the 18th century. He embraced the ecclesiastical profession, and distinguished himself by his knowledge. He wrote Question de l'Usure Éclaircie (Paris, 1786–87). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beurrier, Louis, a French Celestine, who died at Vichy, April 8, 1845, wrote, Histoire du Monastère des Célestins de Paris (Paris, 1634, 4to);—Sommaire des Vies des Fondateurs et Réformateurs des Ordres Religieux, avec Figures (ibid. 1634):—Les Analogies et Antithèses de l'Incarnation du Fils de Dieu et des Actions les Plus Notables de sa Vie, avec le Pêché d'Adam (1632):—Isaïe, seu Introductio ad Scientiam de Sacramentis. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beurrier, Paul, a French theologian, canon regular and abbot of St. Genevieve, was born in 1610, and died Jan. 25, 1696. He wrote, La Vie de Sainte Geneviève (Paris, 1642):—Homélies, Prônes, ou Méditations sur les Évangiles des Dimanches et Principales Fêtes (ibid. 1668):—Perpetuās Fides, ob Origine Mundi ad hæc usque Tempora, in Lege Naturali, Mosaica et Evangelica (ibid. 1672; in French, ibid. 1680):—Speculum Christianæ Religionis (ibid. 1666, 1672). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beurrier, Vincent Toussaint, a French preacher, was born at Vannes, Nov. 1, 1715. He held a distinguished place among the French missionaries of the 18th century. He died at Blois in 1782. He wrote, Conférences Ecclésiastiques, which were very successful in the epoch in which they appeared: nevertheless he was reproached with having combated, in this work, religious tolerance:—Sermons, ou Discours pour les Dimanches et Fêtes de l'Avent et du Carême, les Mystères de Notre-Seigneur, de la Vierge; quelques Panégyriques, et sur Plusieurs Points de Morale (Paris, 1784). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beussel, HERMAN, a German Reformed minister, was sent to America by the missionary association of Langenberg, Prussia. He was licensed to preach, Nov. 9, 1848, in the Church at Williamsburg, N. Y., where he was a dutiful and pious pastor until his death, Aug. 13, 1849. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 495.

Beuter, PEDRO ANTONIO, a Spanish theologian, a native of Valencia, lived in the 16th century. He wrote Annotationes Decem in Sacram Scripturam (Valencia, 1517). The titles of sections of this work have been given by some bibliographers as the titles of separate works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beuton (or Bethune), JAMES, a Scottish prelate, was born at Belfour, in the shire of Fife, and was provost of Bothwell in 1503; in 1504 he was abbot of Dunfermline, and treasurer of the kingdom in 1505. In 1508 he became bishop elect of the see of Galloway, and in the same year he was translated to the see of Glasgow. Here he remained until 1522, when he was translated to the primacy of St. Andrews, and continued also in the chancellor's office during the duke of Albany's administration. He founded the New Divinity College at St. Andrews. During his stay at Glasgow he enclosed the episcopal palace in that city with a magnificent stone wall of ashlar-work on the east, south, and west. He augmented the altarages in the choir of the cathedral, over which there is a coat of arms. He also built and repaired several bridges about the city of Glasgow. He died in 1539. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 35, 255, 257.

Beuvelet, MATHIEU, a French ascetic writer, was born at Marles, in the suburbs of Soissons, near the close of the 16th century. He embraced the ecclesiastical profession, went to Paris, and entered the congregation of the priests of St. Nicholas of Chardonnet, where he employed himself in teaching the young clerks of the holy ministry. He wrote, Méditations sur les Principales Vérités Chrétiennes et Ecclésiastiques (Paris, 1652; Besançon, 1819):—Le Vraie et Solide Devotion (Paris, 1658):—Instruction sur le Manuel (ibid. 1675):—Conduite pour les Principaux Exercices qui se font dans les Séminaires (ibid. 1663); a work translated into Latin by Ignatius of Batthyani, bishop of Weissenburg in Transylvania:—Le Symbole des Apôtres Expliqué et Divisé en Prônes (ibid. 1675); a posthumous work. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bevan, Barbara, a Welsh minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Treveryg in 1682. She was converted at the age of sixteen, and soon after joined the Church and received a call to the ministry. She now devoted herself most zealously to her work in West Jersey, and some parts of East Jersey, where her labors were well received. For a time she was her father's companion in Christian work in Wales, travelling in 1704 about six hundred miles in the performance of his ministerial duties. Her life, which was so useful, was a brief one, ending in great peace, Nov. 26, 1705. See Piety Promoted, ii, 25, 26. (J. C. S.)

Bevan, Evan, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Lantwit Yardre, Wales, about 1678. He pursued his collegiate studies at Oxford, where, it is said, he made considerable progress in various parts of literature. He next studied law, and subsequently practiced in his native county, Glamorganshire, where he received an appointment as deputy-sheriff. While thus engaged his mind became deeply interested in his own spiritual condition, and having been instructed and comforted by reading Barclay's Apology for the Quakers, he left the Established Church and united with the Friends. During the last twenty years of his life, he was much engaged with his ministerial duties, chiefly in the place and neighborhood of his residence in Pontymoill, Monmouthshire, Wales. After uniting with the Friends, he taught a school for thirty-five years. He died Feb. 17, 1746. See Friends' Library, xiii, 174-178. (J. C. S.)

Bevan, John (1), a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Wales in 1646. After his marriage, he became a member of the Church of England. Having read a book by George Fox the younger, he united with the Friends. In 1683 he and his wife removed to Pennsylvania, where they remained many years and brought up a family. They returned to England in 1704. While in America John Bevan "received a gift of the ministry," and itinerated in parts of the new country; and when he returned to his native land he continued to preach in different parts of Wales, closing his life not long after 1721. See Piety Promoted, iv, 353-359. (J. C. S.)

Bevan, John (2), a Welsh Congregational minister, was born Dec. 3, 1825. He was religiously trained from infancy; joined the Church at Cymmar-Clyn-Corrwg; received his theological training at Three Crosses, and was ordained Aug. 6, 1852, at Providence, Llangedock, and Carmel, Llansadwm. His health failing caused his removal to Mountain Ash, Glamorganshire, where he died, Dec. 21, 1860. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 223.

Bevan (née Plumsted), Mary, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London in 1751. Her father was an acknowledged minister among the Quakers. In her childhood she gave her heart to the Saviour. When thirty-three years of age she felt it her duty to "appear as a minister, in which service she was acceptably engaged while ability remained." In 1810 she had an apoplectic fit, and died May 23, 1813. See Piety Promoted, iv, 46, 48. (J. C. S.)

Bevan, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Islington, London, Sept. 3, 1812. His early training was in the Church of England, but he joined the Congregational Church when quite young, and entered Highbury College to prepare for its ministry. In 1835 he left college, and was ordained pastor at Salem Chapel, Wellingborough, and in 1837 undertook the pastorate at Newton Chapel, Liverpool, where he labored successfully ten years. At an urgent request, in 1847 he removed to London and became secretary of the Evangelical Alliance. He accepted the pastorate of Snow Hill, Wolverhampton, in 1849, which he retained until 1860. In 1862 he removed to Bow, where he preached till his death, June 4, 1874.

Mr. Bevan was a grave and earnest preacher; his sermons were solid in style, and rich in instruction and guidance. He had a remarkable gift of prayer. As a pastor, he was the ever accessible resort of the troubled and anxious. Whatever he undertook he did thoroughly. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1875, p. 312.

Bevel is a sloped or canted surface resembling a chamfer or splay, excepting that in strictness this latter term should be applied only to openings which have their sides sloped for the purpose of enlarging them, while a sloped surface in another situation would be a bevel; this distinction, however, is seldom regarded, and the two terms are commonly used synonymously. See CANT; SPPLAY.

Beverense, ANTONIO, an Italian painter, labored at Venice in the second half of the 17th century. Lanzi thinks this artist was a native of Bavaria, for which reason, and his early return to his own country, he is not known in Italy as his merits deserve; that he was a disciple of the Bolognese school, and that in the College of the Nunziata is a picture of the Marriage of the Virgin, which displays great accuracy of design, superiority of forms, and an admirable chiaro-scuro. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Beveridge, Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Eastside, parish of Fossoway and shire of Fife, Scotland, in 1749. After studying philosophy, he entered the divinity hall, under the inspection of the Rev. William Moncrief of Alloa. He was ordained to the Associate ministry at Edinburgh in September, 1783, and became assistant pastor there to Rev. Adam Gile. He came to America the ensuing year by appointment of the General Associate Synod, in answer to a call from the Associate Presbytery of Pennsylvania for help. Soon after his arrival in the spring of 1784, at the request of the latter body he drew up a Testimony for the Doctrine and Order of the Church of Christ, which was approved at Piquette, Aug. 25, 1784. In the spring of 1785 he went to New York and organized the Associate Congregation there. He became pastor of the people at Cambridge, Sept. 10, 1789. He engaged in various public labors, and died July 22, 1798. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 31; Miller, Sketches and Sermons (1839).

Beveridge, Thomas George, an English Congregational minister, was born at Chatham, July 9, 1839, of pious parents. He early evinced a devout spirit. In 1856 he became a member of the Church, and at once took part in home-mission work with that active missionary spirit which so characterized his after-life. In 1862 he entered Hackney College, and at the close of his course was called to the pastorate of the Congregational Church on the Isle of Portland, where he was ordained and remained three years. In 1868 he removed to Fareham, where his labors were greatly blessed. In 1872 he and his devoted wife offered themselves to the London Missionary Society, and, being accepted, set sail for Tamatave, Madagascar. Mr. Beveridge immediately devoted himself to the acquiring of a better knowledge of the people and their language; but because of exposure and poor medical assistance he was obliged to embark, in June, 1877, for his native land. All went well until the fifth day, when, near Cape Guardafui, the vessel ran into the breakers, and the entire family was lost except his little son Sidney. Mr. Beveridge was very conscientious and gentle in disposition. With a temperament of nervous excitability he united a wondrous stability of character. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 307.

Beverley, Thomas (1), an English clergyman of the 17th century, was rector of Lilley, Hertfordshire, and published Discourses on the Principles of Protestant Truth and Peace (Lond. 1683). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Beverley, Thomas (2), an English Nonconformist divine of the 17th century, was minister to a Congregation at Cutler's Hall, London, and published a number of works on prophecies and other subjects. Among them we note, The Prophetic History of the Reformation to be Performed in the Year 1697 (Lond. 1689).—The late Revolution to be applied to the Spirit now moving in Fulfilling of all Prophecy (eod.).—The Kingdom of Jesus Christ entering its Succession in 1697 according to a Callendar of Time (eod.). See Watt, Bibliotheca Britannica; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bevilacqua, AMBROGIO, a Milanese painter, flourished in the latter part of the 15th century. Lomazzo says that there are several of his works in the churches at Milan. In the Church of San Stefano is a fine picture by him representing St. Ambrose, with Sts. Gervasius and Protasius standing by his side. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beville, WILLIAM, an English divine, was born in the city of Lincoln. Here he received the first rudiments of a classical education, and at an early age was admitted a pensioner of Peter House. In this place his assiduity and talents commanded general esteem, and when he took his first degree his name appeared high in the list of wranglers. Shortly after graduation he was elected fellow of his college, and, receiving holy orders, settled in London, where he excited public attention as a preacher, first at the chapel in Great Queen Street, Lincoln's-inn Fields, and afterwards at that in Spring Gardens. He was also the author of several successful literary efforts. Besides other productions of equal merit, the public is indebted to his pen for an able vindication of Hammond from the strictures of Dr. Johnson, and for a very elegant translation of Numa Pompilius, from the original French of Monsieur de Florian. Mr. Beville, in private circles, was no less popular than as a preacher and scholar. He was an agreeable companion, a firm friend, and ever ready to assist with advice and means those who might need his aid. He died suddenly in 1822.

Bew, ELIJAH, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Newbury, July 29, 1847. In September, 1871, he went to the Richmond Theological Institution, in 1873 was received by the Conference, and in 1874 was sent to Freetown, West Africa, where he labored two years. Returning to England for his health, he was sent East in 1878 to the diamond-fields of South Africa. His year there was trying and difficult; still he labored on till his death, March 29, 1879. See Minutes of British Conference, 1879, p. 53.

Bewglass, JAMES, LL.D., M.R.I.A., an English Congregational minister, was born at Killyman, Moy, county Tyrone, Ireland, Dec. 4, 1809. His father was a small farmer, and it was only by strenuous efforts and much self-denial that Mr. Bewglass obtained his education. He was first sent to a small neighborhood school near his home, and then, after some years' work on the farm, he went to Belfast College. Here he took honors in fourteen classes, and mostly first-class; and here, in 1832, he avowed himself a Christian, joined the Church, and was chosen deacon. In 1842, he was ordained to the ministry in connection with the Irish Evangelical Society, and about this time obtained his A.M. at the University of Aberdeen. Soon after he was chosen to a professorship in the Dublin Independent College. During the four months' vacations he went to the universities of Halle and Berlin, was made a member of the German Oriental Society, and was pressed to accept a professorship at Halle, but he declined. At the close of his Dublin career, in 1848, Dr. Bewglass became principal over the West-of-England Dissenters' Proprietary School, at Taunton, and six years later removed to Silcoates, where for twenty-two years he presided over the Northern Congregational School, dying at his post, April 3, 1876. In politics, Dr. Bewglass was an advanced Liberal; in religion, he had a marked Puritan strain of thought and feeling, and was a strong Nonconformist. He was a ripe scholar, being especially strong in the linguistic and literary department. He was a born ruler of boys, and won the affection and regard of all under his sceptre. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 544.

Bewlay, EDWARD, an English Congregational minister, was born at Birmingham, Jan. 20, 1811. He was carefully trained by religious parents, joined the Wesleyans, and, becoming a local preacher, he preached for several years in the Dudley, Lincoln, and Huddersfield circuits. Then, joining the Congregationalists, he entered Highbury College, London, and in 1839 received as his first charge the Church at March, Isle of Ely. Mr. Bewlay subsequently preached successively at Cirencester, Sunderland, and at Walworth, London, where he resigned pastoral work in 1869, and then removing to Angell Park, Brixton, S.W., he opened a private college. Here he died, Sept. 23, 1878. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 299.

Bewley, George Washington, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Fairfax County, Va., May 2, 1810. He joined the Church in his sixteenth year, received license to preach a few months later, and was employed in the Tennessee Conference. In 1826 he entered the travelling connection of that Conference, and in 1829 was transferred to the Missouri Conference. In 1841 failure of health obliged him to take a superannuated relation, which, with two years' exception of active work, he sustained until his death, at Hannibal, Mo., Nov. 5, 1846. Mr. Bewley was eminent for his sincere self-devotion and abundant labors. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1847, p. 106.

Bewley, Nelson R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1818. For six years he was a faithful minister in the Missouri Conference. He died Jan. 25, 1836. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1837, p. 485.

Bewley, Thomas Henry, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted at the age of seventeen, entered the ministry in 1823, travelled the Whitehaven, Edinburgh, and Manchester circuits, and in 1829, on account of affliction, retired from the work. In 1836 he was most cordially received by the Conference again, and appointed to the general superintendency of the mission-schools in Jamaica, W. I. He died at Stewartstown, Jamaica, July 14, 1838, aged thirty-eight. See Minutes of Brit. Conference, 1839, p. 429; Bleby, Romance without Fiction, chap. xxx.

Bexerano, PIETRO. See BENGARANO.

Bexerins are pagan priests among the Mandingoes, on the west coast of Africa. They are much addicted to the study and practice of jugglery. The grand Bexerin is, as it were, the sovereign pontiff. He presides over all the other priests who profess to teach magical arts to the people. A common practice with them is to inscribe letters or other marks on small pieces of paper, which they carefully wrap up and give to their pupils and others as effectual preservatives against diseases and calamities of every kind.

Beyer, Andreas, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Waldkirchen, near Chemnitz, in 1636, and died as pastor of St. Nicolaus, at Freiberg, Nov. 18, 1716. He wrote, Addimenta ad Seldenum de Diis Syris:—Fasciculum Dictionum Biblicorum Selectiorum Theo-philologicorum, Homiletice Tractatorum cum Appendice Emblematum 142 Variorum et Novorum. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 13. (B. P.)

Beyer, Johann Rudolph Gottlieb, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Erfurt, Jan. 20, 1756.

XI.—16

He studied at Jena, and in 1780 was appointed rector of the school at St. Thomas and afternoon preacher. In 1782 he was called to the pastorate at Schwerborn, and in 1790 he went to Sümmerda, where he died, Dec. 8, 1813. He published, Predigten zur Aufklärung der Volksreligion (Leipsic, 1782-94, 3 vols.):—Ueber die Strafen der Verdammten und deren Dauer (ibid. 1782-84):—Allgemeines Magazin für Prediger nach den Bedürfnissen unserer Zeit (ibid. 1789-96, 12 vols.):—Die Geschichte der Urwelt in Predigten (ibid. 1795-1800, 4 vols.):—Museum für Prediger (ibid. 1797-1800, 4 vols.), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 104 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 478; ii, 36, 48, 90, 116, 197 sq., 211, 216. (B. P.)

Beyerlinck. See BEIERLENK.

Beygtach, Haji (i. e. saint), a Turkish dervish, founder of religious orders. This pious Mussulman, who, from his virtuous reputation, was called Vely, instituted an order of dervishes, which was called, from the name of the founder, Beygtachis. The reputation which his prophecies and miracles had gained for him determined Amurath I to employ him to consecrate the standard of the new militia. He consented, and, approaching the army, ordered them to conquer in all their undertakings, and gave them the name of Yeni Chery. The tomb of this monk, who died at Querc Chehr in 1367 or 1368, is found at the village of Beyzektach upon the European shore of the Bosphorus, not far from Galata. This is a place of pilgrimage which is highly respected by Mussulmans. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Beyla, in Norse mythology, was the servant of Freyr, the wife of Beiggwirs, and friend of Lanfaia, the mother of Loke, which moved her to beg the evil Asa Loke, when he insulted all the deities at Ægi's feast, to spare Lanfaia, his mother.

Beynon, D. J., a Welsh Congregational minister, was born at Caermarthen in 1792. When very young he removed to Merthyr-Tydvil, and there joined the Congregationalists. Mr. Beynon was ordained at Llanerch-y-medd, Anglesea, in 1814. After a few years of incessant labor he resigned his charge, and returned to South Wales. Thence he went to Prussia, stayed a few years, and then returning, spent the remainder of his life at Groeswen, where he died, June 26, 1872. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 316.

Beynon, John Jones, a Welsh Congregational minister, was born at Fronhaul, Parish of Cilrhedine, Caermarthen County, South Wales, in 1787. At fourteen years of age he joined the Church at Trelech. He commenced his studies for the ministry in the Academy at Wrexham about 1808, and was invited to take charge of the infant cause at Bishopscastle, under the auspices of the Salop Association. He was ordained at Bishopscastle in 1813. At the end of 1816 he was settled as pastor over the churches at Dorrington and Lyth Hill, near Shrewsbury, and remained there until the close of life, Dec. 8, 1853. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1855, p. 207, 208.

Beys, HENRICUS, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born about 1680. He was ordained by the Classis of Amsterdam, Holland, May 4, 1705, and came to America in the same year. He served the Church at Kingston, Ulster Co., N. Y., from 1705 to 1708, when he returned to Holland. He came back to America in 1710 and took orders in the Episcopal Church, and became pastor of Harlem and Fordham Episcopal churches in 1710. He was suspended by the Classis of Amsterdam in 1712, because he had joined the Episcopal Church without making any complaints or giving any reasons for the step which he had taken. Thereupon he went again to Holland in 1713, and was restored to the ministry of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, and became pastor of the Church at Curaçoa from 1714 to 1717. The time of his death is not known. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church of America (3d ed.), p. 182.

Beyschlag, JOHANN BALTHASAR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 4, 1669, at Halle. He studied at Wittenberg, and was in 1692 appointed adjunct to the philosophical faculty. In 1694 he was called to the pastorate of his native place, where he died Sept. 14, 1717. He is the author of many hymns, which were published at Nuremberg (1709), under the title of Centifolia Melica. See Wezel, Hymnos, iv, 34-43; Pregizer, Gottgeheiligte Poesie (Tübingen, 1723), p. 370-373; Koch, Gesch. der deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 402 sq. (B. P.)

Beza, Saint. See BEGA.

Bezék. 1. (Judg. i, 5.) This is thought by Lieut. Conder (Tent-work, ii, 335; Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," 1881, p. 50) to be the ruined site Bezka, "south of Lydda," but the Ordnance Map contains no such name in that immediate vicinity. 2. (1 Sam. xi, 8.) This has been fully recovered by Lieut. Conder (ibid.) in the ruined site, with graves and cisterns, laid down on the Ordnance Map as Khîrbet Izbi, nine miles west of the Jordan and eleven miles southwest of Beisan.

Bezer. "The ruins of this place have recently been discovered by Mr. Palmer, a little more than two miles southwest of Dihon, now called Kasur el-Besheir. They are on a knoll, and are of some extent."

Bezeth (1 Macc. vii, 19) is considered by Lieut. Conder (Tent-work, ii, 335) as the modern Beit Zâta; but he gives no further details.

Bezetha. Tristram thinks that "beyond a shadow of doubt" this hill "forms the greater part of the Mohammedan quarter of modern Jerusalem—a broad, irregular ridge, separated from Moriah by the fosse and great Pool of Bethesda, from Akra by the Harmonæan valley, and with a rugged, precipitous descent on the east to the valley of Jehoshaphat or Kedron. The northern part, now a Moslem cemetery, is outside the walls" (Bible Places, p. 140).

Bezla, in Slavonic mythology, was the goddess of twilight among the Wends, in the train of the god of the sun, Perun.

Bezons, ARMAND BAZIN DE, a French prelate, son of Claude Bazin, became in 1685 bishop of Aire; in 1698 archbishop of Bordeaux, and in 1719 of Rouen. He was deputy of the province of Bordeaux at the assemblies of the clergy in 1705, 1707, 1710, 1711, and 1715. His great knowledge of ecclesiastical affairs caused him to be made a member of the Council of Conscience, which was established Sept. 1715, after the death of Louis XIV. He was admitted to the Council of Regency, and charged with the direction of the stewardships. Severe reproach is due this prelate for having permitted the infamous Dubois to be ordained in his diocese. He died Oct. 8, 1721, leaving, Ordonnances Synodales du Diocèse de Bordeaux (Bordeaux, 1704):—Procès-verbal de l'Assemblée du Clergé tenue en 1685 à Saint-Germain-en-Laye (Paris, 1690). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bezpofotschins, one of the two classes of Russian sectaries distinguished by the peculiarity that they have either no priests at all, or priests of their own ordination in no way connected with the national church. The principal sects of Bezpofotschins are the Duchoborts, the Pomoryans, the Theodosians, the Philipofschins, the Netovtschins, the Pastershkoe Soglasia, the Novojentzi, the Samokretschentsi, the Tschuvstviniks, the Mulakanes, the Ikoberts, and the Seleznevtshini (q. v., under their appropriate heads). See RUSSIAN CHURCH.

Bezzicaluva, ERCOLE, an Italian painter, who flourished about 1640, was a native of Pisa, where his works were highly esteemed. Lanzi mentions a picture in the choir of the Church of San Stefano, at Pisa, representing several saints, as a fine performance. His works are not mentioned. See Spooner, Biog. Dict. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bhadrakoli. See WADRAKALI.

Bhagavadi, in the mythology of India, was the surname of Daksha or Tekshen, one of the ten created beings sprung from Brahma's great toe. Bhagavadi was also the surname of Bhawani, the wife of Siva, when she is worshipped as Wadrakali (q. v.).

Bhagavat (the blessed), in Hindû mythology, is a surname of the supreme deity Vishnu, when he is worshipped in the incarnation of Krishna. The book Purâna, teaching about him, bears the name of Bhagavat-Purâna. See PURÂNA.

Bhagavat-Gita, a philosophical episode of the Mahabharata (q. v.), is regarded as exhibiting the most complete view of ancient Oriental mysticism. It consists of a dialogue between the god Krishna and the hero Arjun. This poem is attributed to the 7th or 8th century of our era, while the Mahabharata, to which this pretends to be an episode, must have been written at least eight hundred years before. The highest state of felicity to which the Bhagavat-Gita points is eternal absorption into Brahma—such a state that when the man dies he will never be born again into any form on earth. See BAGAMA.

Bhairav (the Lord of Terror), in Hindû mythology, is one of the incarnations of Siva (q. v.).

Bhairava is a festival of Bhairav, celebrated among the Hindûs, when, according to promise, his votaries suspend themselves in the air by hooks passed through the muscles of the back, and allow themselves thus to be whirled in his honor round a circle of fifty or sixty feet in circumference. See DURGA PUJAB.

Bhasha, in the mythology of India, was the "goddess of speech," the surname of Sarahswadi, the wife of the Ganges.

Bhasma, in the religious doctrine of India, is a mixture of the dust of sandal-wood and dry cow-dung. With it a certain mark (Terunama) is made on the forehead, by which the various religious sects distinguish themselves.

Bhava, in the mythology of India, was a surname of Siva; it signifies, "he who produces," and therefore applies much rather to the all-producing power of Brahma than to the destroyer Siva.

Bhavan is the exercise of meditation enjoined upon the Buddhist priests. At the close of the day, or at the dawn, they must seek a place where they will be free from interruption, and, with the body in a suitable posture, they must meditate on the glory of Buddha, the excellence of the bana (q. v.), and the virtues of the priesthood.

Bhavâna (the All-bearing), in the mythology of India, is one of the most honorable names given to the wife of Siva. She is identical with the mighty goddess Maja, the all-awakening love, the first mother. The myths of India affirm that she is both mother and wife of the great trinity Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva. This trinity had a conference with her as to the further creations, and her creative word (Om—Be-it, or "Let there be") was both confirmation and creation. Joyfully she clapped her hands, and thereupon three eggs fell from her lap, out of which the gods were formed. The fable which is most generally accepted is that she only bore Vishnu, from whose navel a lotus-flower grew, and in its centre Brahma rested, from whose blood Siva sprang. Bhavâna is the dispenser of all happiness, and she is therefore highly honored in a number of festivals—as, for example, in the festival Egadashi. This goddess also has her dark side, as most of the Hindû deities, according to which she becomes the frightful Kali. As her husband, Siva, is the creator and also destroyer, so she as Kali, or Wadrakali, is the dreadful revenger, whose fiery glances no deed escapes. See TRIMURTI; WADRAKALI.

Bhikshû, in the religion of India, is the highest of the four grades of the castes of Brahmins, into which every Brahmin enters in his seventy-second year, if he can meet the ascetic requirements necessary for admission to this honor. He is then looked upon as a perfect saint, whom nothing separates from entering Paradise save death, and whose departure from this world is not mourned, as the gate of everlasting bliss has opened for him. In order to become a Bhikshû, the Brahmin renounces all his property, has his hair cut off as a sign that he is no more a priest, wears a linen cloth and the skin of a tiger in honor of Siva, and performs the sacrifice Homa; whereupon he is instructed in the duties of the new grade. As a Bhikshû he must wash his linen himself, and continually hold a brass vessel in his hand, in order to cleanse the food that he has begged; he is further compelled to carry the staff Dandam, which protects him against all influences of evil genii. He is obliged to battle against all evil lusts, bathe three times a day, mark his forehead and breast three times a day with the ashes of sacred cow-dung, and wander about the country begging by stretching forth his hand, not with words. There are thousands of such Brahmins, living on the kindness of the people, who worship them as gods and look upon them as perfected beings. They are buried in graves filled with salt, in a standing posture. Their head is broken by a coconut, and parts of the skull are distributed to those standing around.

Bhima (the frightful), in the mythology of India, is a surname of Siva. The same name is also carried by two other mythological characters, one a scholar of Siva, and the other a son of Pandu, also of supernatural strength. During the war between the Kurus and Pandus he saved his brothers from death by fire. He also distinguished himself for his fearlessness and bravery in besieging Duryodan, and slaying the mighty elephant Asmathama. He eventually threw himself into an abyss, because he trusted more in his own strength than in God.

Bhogavati, in the mythology of India, is a city of the infernal region, inhabited only by snakes, in which the despisers of laws are tortured by bites of snakes.

Bhom (Bhum, or Bhumi), in the mythology of India, is the name of Tuesday. The god Mongult (Mangalen), a son of the earth, rules the same, as also the earth, therefrom the name Bhom (earth-day).

Bhoverlok, in the mythology of India, is the heaven of the moon, the second of the surgs (regions of heaven). In this the moon travels every month through the twenty-seven houses of its great dwelling. This is probably a picture of the astronomical relation the moon bears to the earth, as the former completes her sidereal course in twenty-seven days.

Bhrigu, in the mythology of India, was one of the ten Maharishis or great philosophers, the sons of Brahma, the compiler of a number of books. He proved which was the most loving of the three great gods, in order to worship him supremely. Brahma was engrossed in the study of the sacred books, and did not allow the philosopher near him. Siva, as the incarnate Mahadeva, received him gladly; but was so provoked by a few insulting words of Bhrigu, that the latter was only saved from death by sudden flight. Therefore only Vishnu, the preserver, remained. To prove him, Bhrigu woke the sleeping god with his foot; but the god was so calm and kind that he not only did not grow angry, but also asked Bhrigu if he had not hurt his foot, as his (Vishnu's) body was hard. Bhrigu fell on his face before the god, told the reason of the deed, and begged forgiveness, which he received.

Bhudas (Budhas, or Bhudon), in Hindû mythology, is a servant of Siva, when he appears as judge and punisher.

Bhuis. See BURI.

Bhulok (or Bhurlok), in the mythology of India, is the lowest of the seven surgs or heavens, the nearest to us, the region of the earth. The sun (Surya) is its ruler, as the moon is of the second, Bhoverlok.

Bhumasser, in the mythology of India, is a powerful giant, a proud dæmon, who desired to rule all heaven, overflowing the seven surgs with his armies, and subjecting their king Indra. Sixteen thousand beautiful princesses were captured by him and imprisoned in his palace. Suthama, Krishna's wife, desired to see the ravishing princely daughters, but Bhumasser refused her. This insult resulted in a frightful war, in which numberless dæmons fought on both sides, until Krishna, obtaining the victory, battled with Bhumasser himself, and killed him. Thereupon the young god entered the palace. The beautiful princesses had only changed masters, for Krishna kept them as his wives, and led them to his residence Dwarka, where he built them sixteen thousand palaces, and lived a happy life.

Bhûr, in the mythology of India, is one of the mysterious works which was milked by Brahma from the Vedas (the sacred books, represented under the symbol of milk-producing cows). It denotes the earth, whose mystical picture it is. The earth has five attributes, known through the senses—smell, taste, color, feeling or touch, and sound; and the other elements, going downwards, have each one attribute less. Water lacks smell; fire, besides smell, lacks taste; the air lacks smell, taste, and touch; and ether has only sound left.

Bhût, in the mythology of India, is a general expression for the ten elements out of which the human body is composed. They are divided into fine and uncouth; the former are æther, fire, air, water, earth; the latter are the same, only in another form.

Bhut-Akash, in the mythology of India, is the personification of the highest and purest element, that which we call Æther. He holds all; all is embodied in him: stars, sun, earth, moon—the whole universe.

Bhuta (or Butta), in Hindû mythology, is an evil spirit, who guards the doors of the temple of Manar—a deity whose cultus is quite extended among the Tamul tribe. He is represented in a colossal statue as a sitting warrior, treading a human being under him. The whole is built up with bricks and covered with lime. The god Manar signifies in the Sanscrit language "great master" (Swami), and is thought by some to be Mahadeva, by others to be Vishnu himself. A third opinion is still more general, that he is an incarnation of Sabramanya, a son of Siva. The Brahmins despise Manar, and do not recognise him as classed among the gods of India, and never sacrifice in his temple; however, he has many worshippers, and his priests belong to the numerous tribe of Pâlis, but they are equally as much disregarded as their god. The small temples of this god may be found on the plains of India. Before these temples stand these giant statues of Bhuta as guard.

Figure of Bhuta.

Bhut-atma, in the mythology of India, is the human body, so called because of its composition out of the five elements (Bhut) and the spirit (Atma).

Bhuvay, in the mythology of India, is one of the four mysterious words which Brahma milked out of the three Vedas—namely, Air; the others are called Bhur (earth), Swer (heaven), and Om (the unity of the three divine forms or manifestations—namely, Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva).

Bia (strength), in Greek mythology, was the daughter of the Titan Pallas and Styx. Her brothers were Zelos (fame in war) and Kratos (power), and her sister Nike (victory).

Biag-Oimai, in the mythology of the Lapps, is the god of storm and ruler of the entire space. It is he whom the sorcerers pray to for favorable changes in the weather.

Bialban, in Oriental mythology. According to the myths of the Persians and Arabians, there were creatures (called Bialbans) before Adam, differing from human beings in form, language, and character. Every generation was ruled by a ruler, Soliman, seventy of which followed each other, and the people changed their forms and languages and character with every generation.

Bialloblotzky, CHRISTIAN HERMANN FRIEDRICH, a German theologian, was born of Jewish parents, April 9, 1799, at Pattensen, near Hanover. When he joined the Church we are at a loss to say. He studied theology and philosophy, and was made a doctor of philosophy on presenting his De Legis Mosaicæ Abrogatione (Göttingen, 1824). He died March 28, 1868, at Ahlden-an-der-Aller. He published, Proben brüttischer Beredsamkeit, als Beitrag zu einer vergleichenden Homiletik, übersetzt aus dem Englischen mit Anmerkungen (Göttingen, 1826-27, 2 pts.):—Proben schottischer Beredsamkeit, etc. (first part containing Discourses of Th. Chalmers, Ed. Irving, etc., Hanover, 1828). In connection with F. Sander, he published Pusey's Historical Inquiry into the Theology of Germany (Lond. 1828, 2 vols.), under the title, Das Aufkommen u. Sinken des Rationalismus in Deutschland (Elberfeld, 1829; Barmen, 1831). From the Hebrew he translated into English the work of Meir-Joseph (q. v.), under the title, The Chronicles of R. Joseph ben-Joshua Meir, the Sephardi (Lond. 1834-36, 2 vols.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 115; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 449, 595; ii, 109; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 1021. (B. P.)

Bian, in the mythology of India, is one of the five genii who inhabit the human body, and who set its powers of life in motion. He has his seat in the heart and sends the blood through the arteries.

Bianchetti (or Blanchetti), CESARE, an Italian nobleman of the 16th century, was the founder of the congregation of St. Gabriel. See GABRIEL, ST., CONGREGATION OF.

Bianchi (Ital. for White men), a name given to a section of the Flagellants (q. v.), in the 14th century, which came down from the Alps into Italy, scourging themselves as they went.

Bianchi (Lat. Blancus), Andreas, an Italian Jesuit, was born in Genoa in 1587, and died there, March 29, 1657. He is the author of, Pistomachia sive Pugna Fidei:—Conciones de Festis Christi et S. S. Sacramento:—De Passione Christi Sermones XII:—De Passione Christi Figurata et Historica Sermones XXX:—Paraphrasis in Psalium Miserere:—Epigrammatum Libri VI, or De Singulari Sapientia Caroli Borromæi:—Tractatus de Cambio:—Pii Mores et Sancti Amores Epigrammatis Expressi. Finally, under the name of Candule Philateli, he published a volume of Philosophical and Academic Questions, in Italian. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bianchi, Bonaventura, an Italian preacher of the order of Minorites, was a native of Cottignola, and lived in the early half of the 15th century. His principal works are, Quaresimale (Bologna, 1534):—De Viris Illustribus Novi et Veteris Testamenti (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bianchi, Federigo, a Milanese painter, born near the close of the 16th century, was a relative and scholar of Giulio Cesare Procaccini. When seventy years old, Orlandi says, he painted three frescos in the cloister of the monastery of Zoccolanti, at Milan; also several other works in that city. He was honored with a gold medal and chain by the duke of Savoy. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bianchi, Pietro, a Roman painter, was born in 1694, and first studied under Bacciccio and then under Benedetto Luti. A few of his pictures are found in the churches at Rome. At Gubbio is his picture of St. Clara, with the Angel. He painted a picture for the Church of St. Peter's that was so excellent that it was copied in mosaic in the altar of the choir. He died in 1740. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bianchi, Vicento, an Italian theologian, a native of Venice, taught philosophy at Paris at the age of twenty-one years. He rendered himself ridiculous by his self-sufficiency and his leaning towards the marvellous. He died in 1585. His principal works are, Oratio ad Gallos, ante quam Parisiis de Vetere Hebræorum Theologia Publica Inciperet Legere (Paris, 1606):—Littera a Fortunio Colonna (ibid. eod.):—Delf Italiano Professore Regio (ibid. eod.):—Parere Intorno alli Carrotteri che Sono sopra il Monico del Collo del S. Pietro, nella Chiesa Ducale di S. Marco in Venezia (Venice, 1630). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bianchini, a family of eminent artists, who wrought mosaic pictures at Venice in the 16th century. The most eminent of these were VINCENTIO, who flourished from 1517 till his death in 1552; DOMENICO, his brother; and GIOVANNI ANTONIO, his son. They were employed in the churches of Venice. The art of mosaic-work had at this time been brought to such perfection at Venice that Vasari declared "that it would not be possible to effect more with colors." There are a number of mosaic pictures in the churches, galleries, and public edifices of Italy, especially at Florence, Milan, Rome, and Venice, and some of the greatest artists were employed to furnish designs for them. It will be sufficient to mention the chapel of the Mascoli, at Venice, which contains the famous series of pictures of the Life of the Virgin, executed by Michele Zambono, after designs in the best taste of the Vivarini. The Ducal Gallery at Florence is also rich in specimens of this art.

Bianchini, Francesco, a famous Italian antiquarian, was born Dec. 13, 1662, in Verona. He studied at the Jesuitical College in Bononia and at Padua, and was made doctor of theology at the latter place. In 1684 he went to Rome, where he died, March 2, 1729. Bianchini was a very learned and highly esteemed theologian, and served under three popes—Alexander VIII., Clement XI, and Innocent XIII. He wrote in Latin and Italian. See Nicéron, Mémoires; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 680; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bianchini (Lat. Blanchinus), Giuseppe, a learned Italian priest of the Oratory, was born in Verona, Sept. 9, 1704. He studied at Rome, and was in 1725 canon at his native place. He resigned his position in 1732 and went to Rome, where he joined the Congregation of the Oratory. In 1740 he was appointed secretary to the Academy of Church History, and died after 1760. He is the author of, Enarratio Pseudo-Athanasiana in Symbolum antehac Inedita et Vigilii Tapsitani de Trinitate Liber VI nunc Primum Genuinus Prolatum, etc. (Verona, 1732):—Anastasio Bibliothecarii de Vitis Romanorum Pontificum cum Notis Variorum, tomus IV (Rome, 1735, fol.):—Vindiciæ Canonicarum Scripturarum Vulgatæ Latine Editionis, sive Vetera S. Bibliorum Fragmenta juxta Græcam Vulgatam et Hæzapplorem Antiquam Italiam, Duplicemque S. Eusebii et Hieronymi Translationem (ibid. 1740), against which J. Chr. Mitzenzwey wrote his Disputatio Anti-Blanchiniana (Leipzig, 1760):—Evangeliarum Quadruplex Latine Versionis Antiquæ, seu Veteris Italica, nunc Primum in Lucem

Editum (Rome, 1749).—Demonstratio Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ Quadrupartitæ Comprobata Monumentis ad Fidem Temporum et Gestorum (ibid. 1752). See Mazzuchelli, Scrittori d' Italia (Brescia, 1753), s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 48, 59, 884; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bianchiotti, BONAVENTURA. See BIANCHIOTTI.

Bianco, Bartolomeo, an eminent Italian architect, was born at Como about 1600. He built the Strada Balbi, at Genoa, the college for the Jesuits, and a palace for Giovanni Agostonio, at Balbi. He died at Genoa in 1656. Soprani says that the republic of Genoa consulted this artist as to the most convenient manner of enclosing the city with a new wall. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bianco da Siena, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Ancinola, in the Val d' Arno. In 1367 he entered the order of Jesuits, and died at Venice in 1434. He is the author of Laudi Spirituali (published at Lucca in 1851), a work containing ninety-two pieces, some of which are of great beauty, and have spiritual elements like those we value in St. Bernard. Some of Bianco's hymns have also been translated into English, as, Gesu Christi amoroso, "O Jesus Christ the loving" (in the People's Hymnal, No. 400); Discendi, Amor Sante, "Come down, O Love divine" (ibid. No. 473); Vergine Santa, sposa dell' Agnello, "O Virgin, spouse of Christ the Lamb" (ibid. No. 226). (B. P.)

Biancucci, PAOLO, an Italian painter, was born at Lucca in 1583, and was a distinguished scholar of Guido. His execution of the picture of Purgatory in the Church of the Suffragio, and an altar-piece of several saints in the Church of San Francesco, are considered very fine. He died about 1653. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Biard (or Biart), PIERRE, a French missionary, was born at Grenoble in 1565. He entered the Jesuit order in 1580, and taught theology at Lyons for nine years. In 1608 he was deputed to preach the Gospel to the savages in Canada, and came thither in June, 1611. The following year he ascended the Kennebec River in Maine, and performed missionary labor among the Indians of that section. Subsequently he went up the Penobscot River, where he also ingratiated himself in the favor of the natives. In an attack made by the English he was taken prisoner, and carried finally to England. He died at Avignon, Nov. 19, 1622, leaving an account of his labors. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Maine Historical Coll. i, 325.

Biarki, in Norse mythology, was a famous Berserker (q. v.), the son of Arngrim. King Rolf Kraki, in Hledra, employed him and his eleven brothers in many wars.

Biarowsky, WILHELM EDUARD IMMANUEL VON, D.D., a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 8, 1814, at Munich, and studied at Erlangen. After completing his studies, he served for some time a congregation of the French Swiss, then at Waizenbach in Lower Franconia. In 1858 he was called to Erlangen as pastor of the Neustädterkirche. In 1860 he was made dean, and retained this position till his death, June 2, 1882, having resigned his pastorate on account of broken health in 1874. Biarowsky was the last member of a noble family, which had emigrated from Moravia on account of religious persecution. He published, Das Vaterunser in Christenlehren (Nördlingen, 1850); Gedichte (1854); Senfkörner, oder Erkanntes u. Erlebtes in kurzen Aufzeichnungen (1861); Glockenklänge (1869). (B. P.)

Biasi, VALENTIN VON, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1813 at Trientino, and died Jan. 28, 1867, at Olmütz. He wrote, Grammatica Hebraica ad usum Theologorum (Vienna, 1854);—Archæ-

ologica Biblica (Regensburg, 1865). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 130; Reusch, Theol. Literatur-Blatt, 1865, No. 1. (B. P.)

Bibago, ABRAHAM BEN-SHEM-TOB, of Arragon, a rabbi who flourished about 1489, is the author of דבר ירחמיאל הגדול, or philosophy of Jewish religion, which was printed at Constantinople in 1522, and דבר ירחמיאל, religious-philosophical discourses. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 115; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 58 sq.; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, viii, 226 sq.; Ben-Jacob, Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum, i, No. 395. (B. P.)

Bibauc (or Bibault; Lat. Bibaucius), GUILLAUME, a Flemish preacher, thirty-fifth general of the Carthusians, was born at Tiel in the Low Countries, and lived early in the 16th century. He was educated at Louvain, and was induced, by the impression made upon him by a thunder-storm, to join the Carthusians, which he did in 1500, at Vallis Regina, near Ghent. In 1521 he was made general of his order. He died July 24, 1535. He wrote, Orationes et Conciones Capitulares (edited by Jesse Hess in 1539, and reprinted in 1610 and 1634). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bibbiena, Angelo Devizio, a learned Italian theologian, nephew of the cardinal, lived in the second half of the 16th century. He was apostolical protonotary, and secretary of Como, duke of Florence. He wrote a few religious works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bibbiena, Bernardo (also called de Tarlati, and Diuzio or Douizio), an Italian prelate, was born at Bibbiena, Aug. 4, 1470. He was active in diplomatic service, and in 1513 was made cardinal. He died suddenly, Nov. 9, 1520. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bibbins, ELISHA, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Warsaw, N. Y., June 9, 1823. He united with the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and was licensed to preach in 1845. After laboring with the Wesleys with marked success until 1867, he, with several of his brethren, entered the Detroit Conference, in which he continued his successful labors until 1875, when failing health necessitated his superannuations. A little over two months later, Nov. 22, 1875, he died. Mr. Bibbins possessed an overflowing sympathy, an earnest manner, and deep piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 100.

Biberach, NICOLAUS VON, a German theologian, who lived in the 13th century, is quoted by Flacius as a witness to the truth, who in his epistles De Avertendo Malo and Occultus (excerpts of which are given by Flacius), speaks of the rottenness of the Romish Church and her bishops. (B. P.)

Bibères is a term used principally among the Benedictines, to signify the cup of drink given to the monks assembled in the refectory, during the summer, after nones, if it were not a fast; but after vespers, if it were. It was commonly of cold water; if wine was added, it was taken from the usual allowance. There were, however, special foundations, for the purpose of giving the monks, in some houses, wine instead of water for their biberes.

Bibiāna, Saint, Virgin, and Martyr, is said to have been the daughter of Flavianus, a Roman præfect, exiled for the faith, and of Dafrosa, also a martyr. Aproianus, governor of Rome in 363, before whom Bibiana and her sister Demetria were brought, prepared to put them to the torture, but before it could be inflicted the latter fell dead, after having made confession of the faith. Bibiana was placed in the keeping of an infamous woman named Rufina, who in vain endeavored to corrupt her virtue, and at length she was beaten to death with scourges loaded with lead. She is commemorated with her mother and sister on Dec. 2. The Christians built a chapel over her tomb, which pope Simplicius changed into a church in 465. This church was called Olympia, from the name of a pious lady who had contributed largely towards its erection. Repaired by Honorius III, it was rebuilt in 1628 by Urban VIII, who placed in it the remains of the saints Bibiana, Demetria, and Dafrosa. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. a. v.

Bibighaus, HENRY, a German Reformed minister, was born at Bedminster, Pa., Aug. 29, 1777. He was elected pastor of the German Reformed Church, St. John's Street, Philadelphia, in 1824, and was ordained Oct. 21 of the same year. He died Aug. 20, 1851. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iii, 333.

Bible Christians, commonly styled BRYANITES, are a branch of the great Methodist body in England.

I. Origin and History.—This section of the Methodist family originated in the summer of the year 1815, through the labors of William O'Bryan. He was born at Gunwen, in the parish of Luxillian, Cornwall, in February, 1778. Soundly converted in 1795, he immediately became anxious about the souls of his neighbors, and began to exhort publicly. These humble efforts were blessed, so that in a short time about seventy persons were converted and joined the Methodist society in Cornwall. The first text he took was Luke xix, 10, and his first sermon was preached on Christmas-day. He longed to be called into the Wesleyan ministry, but several disappointing circumstances prevented. God had other purposes in reserve, which were in due course revealed. In 1804 he was again impressed with the conviction that he must preach, but the way to do so did not open, and he was sorely tried. The trial was followed by a dangerous illness, during which he resolved to preach the Gospel when he recovered; but, on consulting with the Wesleyan preacher, he was again discouraged in his projects.

In 1809, while the Rev. William Womersley was absent from Cornwall, on a visit to Yorkshire, Mr. O'Bryan took his appointments. God abundantly blessed him in his preaching, and he visited some places where the Gospel had not before been preached—his labors being owned by the conversion of sinners. This greatly encouraged him to visit other places destitute of religious services, and, on inquiry, he found that in East Cornwall and West Devon there were about twenty parishes in which the people were without the privileges of the Gospel. He visited those in Devon County, preaching almost daily, with many converts as the result; but meeting constant opposition and persecution. In 1810, because he would not give up his itinerant labors outside of his own Methodist circuit, the resident preacher in November formally excluded him from the Wesleyan society.

Being assured of the good-will and affection of the poor neglected people, in the spirit of an earnest missionary he went from place to place, receiving abundant encouragement, and besought sinners to come to Christ. This course he continued for five years, being content with such support as the people were willing to give to secure his continued services. Among his converts were Mrs. Rattenbury, Mrs. Thorne, and her sons, then of Shebbear, a place which has since become famous in the history of their Connection.

In January, 1815, the Rev. Francis Collier, Wesleyan preacher at Bodmin, secured the services of Mr. O'Bryan in carrying on the work of God in his circuit; but, in addition, he was out at many special services, and preaching in places where no religious societies existed. He witnessed conversions at nearly every service, and some places being quite beyond Methodist circuits, he was urged to repeat his visits. For doing so, at the June quarterly visitation, the preacher who met the class for tickets in which he was a member left Mr. O'Bryan no ticket, because he was not present to give account of himself. Consulting with his friends on this matter, they promised him subscriptions, and some gave money freely to keep him in the work. The preacher having been admonished for countenancing his irregular itinerant labors, he saw there was no hope left him of being called into the ministry of Methodism; so he continued his journeys, content with hard work, hard fare, and sometimes no pay, excepting the testimony of a good conscience and the prayers of the people. At the Conference, in August, Rev. George Banwell was placed in charge of the Stratton Circuit, and, refusing to co-operate with or to recognize Mr. O'Bryan unless he gave up his independent action, the appeals of his many converts in destitute places determined his future action to look after the poor sheep in the wilderness, and he at once drew up a plan for the regular visitation of seventeen places, in Cornwall and Devon, the first of which was Cooksbury, and the seventh Lake and Shebbear. At Lake, where was the home of Mr. Thorne, many people gathered an hour before the time of service, so that the house was crowded, and a present salvation was earnestly preached by Mr. O'Bryan. At its close he explained the nature of the class-meeting, and asked any who wished to belong to such a company of believers to remain. On that evening, Monday, Oct. 9, 1815, the first society was formed; twenty-two gave their names, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Thorne, and their sons John, James, and Samuel. In doctrine and discipline they were Methodists, but they were slow to consider themselves a separate organization. At their second meeting, the clergyman of the parish was present and encouraged them.

When the Wesleyan preacher, George Banwell, next visited Week St. Mary, and heard what action the people had taken at Shebbear, he inquired the names of those members who had attended Mr. O'Bryan's preaching, and, finding that all the members of the Week St. Mary society had done so, he tore up the class-paper, and left the meeting without the usual concluding prayer. The indiscretion thus shown determined all the members to unite with Mr. O'Bryan, whose labors were incessant, Mrs. O'Bryan maintaining herself by the proceeds of a small business. Applications for the services of this earnest missionary multiplied so rapidly, in answer to his prayers, that, at the end of the year 1815, James Thorne, aged twenty, a young convert, began to preach in his father's house, and soon afterwards assisted in filling other preaching appointments. The first quarterly meeting of the new society was held at Holsworthy, Jan. 1, 1816, in Mr. O'Bryan's house, when two stewards were appointed, and the members in society were reported at 237. At the close of the meeting a sermon was preached, followed by a love-feast, which was a time of much good to many. Converts increased, so also did persecution; and among those converted were some women, who were constrained to publicly relate their Christian experience, and several of them shortly afterwards began to preach. The families which were first to encourage the new movement were those of Thorne, Rattenbury, Reed, Courtice, and Cottle. The first local preachers' meeting was held in February, 1816; and on March 15 James Thorne commenced his itinerant work, without any certain prospect of support, but trusting in God and the people. At the second quarterly meeting, held in April, the number of members had risen to 412, and by July they were 496; preaching having been introduced into ten new parishes, with new converts, and a new society in each. The preachers were men of faith and prayer. After one of Mr. Thorne's sermons at Lake, Shebbear, twelve persons prayed without the congregation rising from their knees. The fourth quarterly meeting reported 567 members in the society in Devonshire.

The most cheering results followed the labors of the evangelists everywhere. At the fifth quarterly meeting, January, 1817, the members were reported at 920. About that time a love-feast was held, at which the Spirit of God was so abundantly poured out that the meeting became one of incessant prayer; it was continued all night, and about fifty persons found peace. All this good work had been done in barns and private houses. In August, 1817, Mr. John Thorne resolved on having a chapel erected at Shebbear, and his son James preached a sermon on the corner-stone. It was finished and opened for divine worship, May 29, 1818. No other chapel then existed for many miles round. By the end of the year 1817 three circuits were formed, in which were six itinerant preachers, with 1522 members in the society.

It was resolved in 1818 to extend the work into Cornwall, and, although various forms of opposition and petty persecutions were tried to hinder the work, the hand of God was in it, and prosperity attended their efforts. During that year twelve godly women were employed as itinerant or local preachers, and much good was done by them, while the men were opening new stations. In July a tract society was formed, and the first Sunday-school for their children commenced at Shebbear, with 42 children. In September the rules of their society were first published, in which Mr. O'Bryan gave an account of his separation from the Wesleyan society.

The first Conference was held at Baddash, Launceston, from Aug. 17 to 26, 1819, Mr. O'Bryan presiding, and James Thorne was secretary. Twelve circuits were reported, with twenty-seven preachers, thirteen males and fourteen females. The chief business done was to justify the employment of women preachers.

In February, 1820, a mission was commenced in Kent; great discouragement at first disheartened the preachers, but in six months they counted 140 members in the Chatham society. The second Conference was held in August, 1820, when the payments for the preachers were fixed at £3 per quarter; the wife £4, children £6, per annum each; women preachers £6 per annum, with house-rent, coals, and candles found.

At the Conference of 1821, there were eighteen circuits and forty-five preachers reported, including eighteen female preachers, one of whom was stationed in nearly every circuit. The Preachers' Annuitant Society was established by six members subscribing £1 each. In five years the fund had scarcely reached £54, and in forty years it had only reached £3853. A missionary society was also established at that Conference. During the year, a society was formed in the Scilly Isles by Mary Ann Werrey, and in less than a year 141 members were there united in Church fellowship.

In January, 1822, a monthly magazine was commenced, which has now reached its sixtieth annual volume, and in the interesting pages of which the history of the Connection is carefully written. Mr. O'Bryan was the recognized editor, and James Thorne the assistant editor. Mr. Thorne left the impress of his ever-active mind on the pages of that work for half a century—not always as its editor, but as its patron and best friend. The Conference of 1822 was held at Stoke Damarel. Three new circuits were reported, and the Conference published in the Minutes their first Address to the Societies of the Arminian Bible Christians, which was marked by good, plain, practical counsel and encouragement. The members in society were 4918. The death of Margaret Adams, a female preacher, was reported as the first which had taken place.

During the year 1823, Mr. O'Bryan and James Thorne had a roving commission to visit all the societies and encourage them and their various agencies. At the Conference, twenty-seven circuits were reported, and these were, for the first time, divided into six districts. Samuel Thorne was appointed first book-steward, Stoke Damarel being the book-depot. A mission to the metropolis was commenced in the autumn of 1822, and in 1823 preaching-places had been secured in the north, south, east, and west of London; but the preachers' salaries had reached only £8, the expenses being £30 for the quarter and the receipts £17—a discouragement truly; but they persevered, and succeeded in securing a permanent position in the capital of England. James Thorne was sent to London with three assistants in 1824, during which year annual district-meetings were first held. Henry Freeman, the first male preacher of the body in London, was sent to the Horsemonger-lane prison for preaching in the street. He refused to pay a fine; that imprisonment was greatly for the furtherance of the Gospel. Members in 1823 were 5050. In 1824, two of the preachers, not content with such small means, joined the Society of Friends, for which they had a preference; but the work advanced, and 6200 members were reported at the sixth Conference. The smallness of the income reported to the next Conference led to a reduction of ten shillings per quarter on the wife's salary. At the same time (1825), a chapel fund was established, and a form of chapel deed was read which secured the property to the Connection. The members reported that year were 6369. Lay-representatives were first admitted to the Conference in 1825; they have continued ever since to be an integral part of the Conference.

In the Minutes of 1826, the first official return of members is made, the number being 6433, with eighty-three preachers. The Chapel Fund was £55, all spent as soon as received. During the next year, although the members increased to 8054, the finances were so small that supernumerary preachers who married were thereby disqualified to be claimants for support. Still the work advanced, but trials were in store.

During nine years, Mr. O'Bryan had been at the head of the movement. The official record of their yearly proceedings had been entitled Minutes of the Annual Conference between William O'Bryan and the Preachers in connection with him. The tenth Conference, held at Lake, Shebbear, changed all that, and their proceedings were entitled Minutes of the Tenth Annual Conference of the Ministers and Representatives of the People denominated Bible Christians, formerly termed Arminian Bible Christians. The word "Arminian" was discontinued. The Conference ordered that house-rent for the preachers should be £6 a year in towns, £4 in the country. William Mason was the first elected president. At the previous Conference, much dissatisfaction was expressed at the authority claimed by Mr. O'Bryan, and a series of six hastily drawn resolutions was passed intended to limit that authority and to place Mr. O'Bryan more at the disposal of the Conference. A painful agitation was the consequence, which was continued through the year, Mr. O'Bryan increasing it by issuing a pamphlet in defence of what he considered his rights. Disaffection brought loss; a decrease of 209 had to be reported. This was further increased by the loss of 1302 in 1829. At the Conference held that year, Mr. O'Bryan tried to dissolve it by declaring, "I will do no more business with you; I adjourn this Conference to Liskeard next Monday." The preachers present prayerfully considered the matter, and refused to adjourn, continuing the business under the presidency of Andrew Cory. Mr. O'Bryan severed his connection with them, and took more than a thousand members with him.

Relieved from what had been a burden to many, the disruption turned out to be for the furtherance of the Gospel. Only one station was given up, and the members joined the Primitive Methodists, and not more than two preachers adhered to Mr. O'Bryan. At the following Conference, many who had left through excitement asked to be taken back, and they were heartily welcomed. All the funds were in debt, and to remove this burden the preachers agreed to a further reduction of their very small salaries; and this voluntary self-denial was again repeated next year, so that the people, who were mostly poor, might not be hindered in their desire to unite with them by being taxed financially. Revivals set in, new chapels were built and opened, the preachers were united, and a new departure was made by commencing to hold public missionary meetings in the circuits, conducted chiefly by the energetic and devoted James Thorne; and, to make the missionary work more real, two preachers were sent to America in 1831—John Glass to Canada and Francis Metherall to Prince Edward Island—although the debt against the Missionary Society was £66; but they had faith in God, so America has since had a place on their Minutes. Emigration to that country had, even at that early period, caused losses to the home societies which were felt to be such. Both the mission stations flourished, and most encouraging reports of their prosperity were sent home soon after they were established.

Seeing how feebly he was supported after the disruption in 1829, Mr. O'Bryan witnessed his few adherents gradually leaving him, so that in 1835 he had only about six hundred followers, while the Conference had 8000. At the Conference of 1835, the seceders sought reunion with their brethren, and Mr. O'Bryan came back with them, but in no official capacity. The Conference undertook Mr. O'Bryan's obligations of a financial character as a trustee of chapels and as the founder of the Book-room. They gave him £85, and promised him an annuity of £20 a year for life. He lived more than thirty years afterwards. At the Conference of 1836, when the reunion formally took place, an increase of over 2000 members was reported, in addition to 545 old members returned. The total of members then reported was 10,786. As an illustration of the evils of disruption, the membership in 1827 was greater than it was in 1835, so that the labors of all their agencies for eight years were not sufficient to balance the losses sustained by the indiscretion of the separation. In addition to all this, chapel debts to about £300 had to be met by taking Mr. O'Bryan's societies, and the preachers generously taxed themselves to the uttermost to meet the emergency. And it was met. It was followed by a committee of inquiry as to the best way to raise the salaries of the itinerant preachers. At the Conference of 1837, the new scale was received and adopted. Its provisions were—single men, £10 a year; ministers in full connection, £12 12s.; after travelling twelve years, to be £14; female preachers, £7 a year; a married preacher and his wife, £30 a year. For their children, this rate of payment was adopted: first child, until sixteen years old, £6 per annum; second child, £5 10s.; third, £5; fourth, £4 10s.; but no allowance to be continued after the age of sixteen. House-rent was to be allowed, £6 a year in towns, £4 in the country. At death, for a preacher's funeral, £4 was allowed, £2 for a child's funeral. It was then resolved not to have their chapels licensed for marriages, but since that time half of their chapels have been licensed.

Having recovered lost ground, removed many obstructions, and being assured of the blessing of God, every effort was made to consolidate and extend the work. In 1838, the Conference took the temperance question in hand, and gave it every encouragement. New chapels were rising in various localities, although small; but the poverty of the people caused most of them to be heavily burdened with debt, and that, in after-years, became a serious responsibility and hindrance to the work; still there was a strong undercurrent of faith in God and reliance on his aid to deliver. The subject of holiness was made a prominent feature in the pulpit, and a higher state of Christian experience was urged upon the people. Prosperity was reported on both the home and foreign mission stations, and, although opposition, intolerance, and bigotry in turn were doing all they could to hinder the work of God, it extended.

The importance of education was recognized in 1840, and steps were taken to provide for the wants of the Connection in that department. At a meeting held at Shebbear, Devon, Jan. 20, 1841, it was resolved to establish at that place a Connectional school for the education of the boys of the more affluent members, and, as far as means would allow, of making it a school for educating the sons of their preachers. The school was opened on Lady-day, in 1841. The Rev. H. C. O'Donoghue, M.A., an Irish clergyman who had resigned his position in the Established Church, became the first head-master, and with only eight pupils the good work was favorably inaugurated. He lived but one year to carry on the work, dying of paralysis in 1842. It has been continued ever since, and during the forty years of its existence it has been a great blessing to hundreds of boys. After a while it enlarged its sphere of operation, and became also a school of the prophets, opening its doors for the reception of young men intended for the itinerant ministry, who here received much valuable information as a preparation for their life-work. Some remained only three or six months, others two years, just as the demand for ministers was pressing or otherwise. For over twenty years it was superintended by the venerable James Thorne. The Rev. Robert Blackmore, president of the Conference in 1869, was next appointed governor of the institution, and at his death the Rev. John Gammon, president of the Conference in 1859 and 1876, was chosen governor, which office he still holds. In 1880 there were nearly one hundred boys in the College, which name was given to the institution in 1876 by resolution of Conference. In addition to the high intellectual and scientific attainments of some of the pupils, it is gratifying to record that not a few had been converted to God during their residence in the college. The debt on the premises in 1880 was £4300.

Among the aids introduced at the period when thirty years of experience had been passed, we find at the Conferences of 1843 and 1844 that a committee to guard the privileges of the Connection was appointed, Sunday-schools were promoted and encouraged, the management of chapels and Connectional property was fully considered, mission-work in the destitute localities was extended, and a benefit society for the insurance of chapels was instituted. All these were contributory to the consolidation of the societies, which in the aggregate, in 1844, showed the following totals—namely, 50 circuits and mission stations, 107 itinerant preachers and 8 female preachers, 362 chapels, 1102 local preachers, 12,000 Sunday scholars, 3063 teachers, and 13,793 members in society. Although the period was near the middle of the 19th century, yet their progress was not equal to their expectations; but considering their varied trials and hindrances, with the small finances at their disposal, these results were of an encouraging and hopeful character, and the membership was considerably greater than was that of the New Connection at the end of thirty years, although it was not half that of Mr. Wesley's society at the end of the same period.

The year 1850 was a memorable one for the impulse then given to the foreign missionary cause. The society was then £400 in debt; but the work of revival had increased the membership, and it was resolved to send the two brethren, James Way and James Rowe, to South Australia, in compliance with the urgent request of members of the society who had emigrated to that country. Both those ministers were present at the Conference missionary anniversary, and the meeting was one of deep interest and profit to many. They sailed Aug. 12, and arrived in Australia Nov. 14, 1850. Then commenced a work in that distant locality which has been crowned with the abundant blessing of God, and has extended its operations to Adelaide, Victoria, and New Zealand. In 1890, as the result of thirty years' labors, there were reported as belonging to their Australian Conference 47 circuits, 58 preachers, 266 local preachers, 180 chapels, 83 preaching rooms, 1828 members, 600 Sunday-school teachers, and 3300 Sunday scholars. The family of Mr. Way has been a most welcome addition to the colony; and his son has, for some years, been the lord chief-justice at Adelaide, and in other ways he has been a large benefactor to that city and district. In 1876 their societies in Australia were made into a separate Conference, although not with quite independent action. The English Conference reserved to itself certain specified rights, which will no doubt have to be relinquished as the society advances.

The Conference of 1851 had to consider their mission-work under a different aspect. Two of their stations in America, in Ohio and Wisconsin, had been struggling with heavy discouragements, and the illness of one of the missionaries had obliged him to remove to Canada. Had it not been for two brethren—John Chapple and Joseph Hoidge—volunteering to carry on those stations, they would have been discontinued. They have not prospered as it was hoped and expected they would. The Wisconsin district is but feeble after more than thirty years' work.

Up to the year 1852, all the Conferences of the Bible Christians had been held in Devonshire or Cornwall. This year's Conference was held at Southsea, Hampshire, the Conference of 1856 at Newport, Isle of Wight, and that of 1859 in London, the capital of England. Two conferences have since been held in the city of Bristol. These four are the only places out of Devon and Cornwall where the societies are large enough to accommodate the Conference.

In 1855, the Canadian and American societies were made into a separate Conference—the English Conference to either send or select the president once in two years; delegates to be exchanged from time to time, the expense to be borne by the senders; missionaries to have the right of return, or be recalled in seven years; the Preachers' Fund to be common to both Conferences; the cost of sending out missionaries to be arranged mutually in England and Canada; the Canadian Conference to have entire control over local affairs, selecting their young ministers, and disposing of their own funds; the Prince Edward Island members to be part of the Canadian Conference.

The temperance question was early welcomed by the Bible Christians. James Thorne became a pledged teetotaler in 1837, and from that time was the acknowledged leader in the denomination on that and similar social and moral questions. The cause has been sheltered in all their chapels, and has been a blessing to the societies, and especially to the young. As a small acknowledgment of those services, the Bristol Temperance Society presented a handsome sacramental service to one of the new chapels of the Bible Christians.

Although the first society in London was commenced as early as the year 1824, the membership was not large enough to justify them in inviting the Conference till the year 1859, when they met in Waterloo-road Chapel. Their London friends generously met the entire expense. The Rev. John Gammon was president. The Rev. William Cooke, D.D., of the New Connection, paid a welcome fraternal visit to the Conference, the first of the kind. The Conference representatives, preachers, and laymen were under 120.

At the Conference of 1860, held in the city of Exeter, the first subscription was taken towards the Jubilee Fund, which amounted to £600. An appeal was made to the Sunday-schools throughout the denomination to contribute to that fund.

In 1861, the Preachers' Annuity Society, established in 1821, was found to be quite inadequate to the purpose designed—namely, to provide a maintenance to worn-out preachers. It was resolved, in 1861, to establish an Auxiliary and Beneficent Fund, to increase the annuities to superannuated preachers, to make grants to preachers in case of heavy affliction, to assist itinerants unable to do full work, to help to furnish houses for new supernumeraries, and to aid widows and orphans of preachers. This fund was to be raised by subscriptions from friends, and by a collection yearly, in August, in all circuits. At the same Conference an increase was made to the salaries of the preachers. Single preachers on trial were allowed £14 per annum; those in full connection, £16; married preachers, £36; those who have served four years in full connection, £42. These sums were exclusive of allowance for furniture, rent, board, etc., as given by circuits.

The year 1862 was marked by a large increase of members, 1653 being added to the total, with 1204 on trial. The year following was one which produced twenty-five young men for the ministry, a larger number than had ever before been realized. The increase of members in 1863 was only 614. A new district was made in Wales, with Newport as its centre and head. The Conference of 1863 was memorable for a fraternal letter sent to it by the Conference of the Methodist New Connection—the first of the kind—hoping that on special occasions they might unite more cordially in promoting the world's salvation, and looking towards a union of the several sections of liberal Methodism. The Rev. William Cooke, D.D., was the leading New Connection minister promoting union; the Rev. William Cocker, a man far inferior in position and acquirements, took the lead in opposing union. Dr. Cooke secured many hearty friends by the course which he so generously adopted. The Bible Christians cordially responded to the fraternal letter, and secured a true friend in Dr. Cooke.

In 1864, Prince Edward Island district was united to Canada for the more economical and efficient working of both. A good work had been carried on in the former place during several years. In the early part of that work, in 1860, a remarkably wicked man, aged ninety-nine years, a native of Nova Scotia, had given much anxiety to the ministers on the island. The ministers visited and prayed with him, and many prayers had been offered on his behalf. At length, amid sobs and tears, the aged man cried out, "Lord, have mercy upon my poor soul." Prayers for him increased. The next day he attended the sermon, and the love-feel, which followed, when the old man wept, and cried aloud, "I'm happy in my heart and soul! my sins be gone! my trouble be gone!" So God in his mercy converted the centenarian sinner, and the work prospered. The membership at the Union was as follows: Prince Edward Island, 630; Canada, 4222—total, 4852. By this union a yearly grant from the Missionary Society was saved.

The prosperity of the society in Australia had been of the most gratifying character. The veteran missionary, James Way, who as a fatherless youth had been brought to God under the preaching of Ann Arthur Guest thirty-seven years before in Devonshire, was, in 1860-64, travelling and laboring most successfully in Australia. When the Rev. Thomas Binney was in that country in 1860, he preached one of the opening sermons in one of their best chapels, and when he returned to England he wrote this testimony: "The Bible Christians are active and useful, penetrating and missionary in their character." The success of that mission was mainly due to the liberality of Mr. William Hicks, of Lostwithiel, who did not belong to the Bible Christians, but who, to start their cause in Australia, in 1850, gave them £100 towards sending out the first two missionaries, and he generously gave them the same amount yearly for twelve years to give the mission a fair start. He continued his financial aid longer than he promised. The efforts made to extend the mission in Australia led to considerable expenditure in excess of income. Appeals were made for increased subscriptions, and for loans without interest, but the societies were unable to respond thereto.

The celebration of the Jubilee of the denomination was observed by meetings in nearly all the societies. Great self-denial was exercised to raise a fund adequate to the occasion. The objects to be served by the Jubilee Fund were the erection of a chapel in London to hold one thousand people, to have a book-room and mission-rooms connected therewith, to remove debts on chapels and on the institution at Shebbear, to reduce the missionary debt, and to increase the annuities of the aged and worn-out preachers. Several years were given for contributions to be made to the fund. When the distribution took place in 1867, it was found that the total sum collected was £3300. For such an occasion, the sum was small indeed, but it indicated the limited extent and resources of the members identified with the society. The appropriations of the fund were as follows: London chapel, £500; Preachers' Fund, £650; the Missionary Society, £600; Chapel Loan Fund, £1200; for the Adelaide chapel, Australia, £200; Shebbear school, £150; preachers' salaries, £104. The total amount was in excess of the receipts, but the latter were afterwards increased by £200.

The year 1869 was memorable for the opening of the Jubilee Chapel, East Road, City Road, London, with rooms attached to be used for the Book-room and the Missionary Society. The venerable James Thorne was thanked by the Conference for nearly forty years' service as editor and book-steward, having, during that long period, conducted the printing and distribution of the Connectional literature at Shebbear and Plymouth. A new era was commenced when the Book-room was opened in London. The Rev. Frederick William Bourne was appointed as new editor and book-steward, with a permanent residence in the metropolis. Ten years later, in 1879, the new editor established his headquarters and publishing office at No. 26 Paternoster Row. A small testimonial fund was collected for Mr. Thorne, but he died before it could be of any service to him.

The Australian Conference of 1875 having expressed a strong desire for an annual conference to be held in that colony, the English Conference gave consent for such meeting to be held, on learning that no legal difficulty existed, and the first was convened in the summer of 1877. The conditions were to be as follows. It was to be constituted like the English Conference, excepting that they might have every year, instead of once in five years, an equal number of ministers and laymen. The ministers in the colony sent from England have the right to return to England after ten years' absence; the English Conference to have the right to recall such ministers. The funds of the Annuitant Society are available in both countries. Delegates may be exchanged. A General Conference may be held for the purpose of exchanging ministers between the Australian provinces. The English Conference has the right to appoint the president in Australia once in five years; to receive a copy of their minutes; and to disallow any act of the Australian Conference within one year, all such acts to be valid till disallowed.

The regulation in the Poll Deed which requires that the representatives at conference be an equal number of laymen and ministers only once in five years not having given satisfaction in many districts, the Conference of 1877 resolved that the number of representatives may be equal every year, but that official business and constitutional questions be decided by the legal Conference only, until the Poll Deed can be altered so as to admit of equal representation annually.

A proposal was considered in the English Conference of 1880 for the Bible Christians in Australia to unite with the other Wesleyan bodies in that country. It was resolved to defer action until after the Conference of 1881, when it was proposed to send a deputation from England to Australia to consider the question fully. The Rev. F. W. Bourne was nominated as the deputation to the Canadian, American, Australian, and New Zealand missions during the summer and autumn of 1881, his duties as connectional editor and general treasurer during his absence being undertaken by the Connectional, missionary, and book committees respectively.

II. Statistics.—The following figures represent the state of the denomination at the fiftieth conference, in 1868: Itinerant preachers, 253; local preachers, 1734; chapels, 784; preaching places, 267; members, 27,407; Sunday-school teachers, 8713; Sunday scholars, 42,458.

At the Conference of 1880 the totals of the denomination were as follows: Itinerant preachers, 307; local preachers, 1882; chapels, 937; preaching places, 192; members, 30,842; Sunday-school teachers, 9860; Sunday scholars, 53,450. (G. J. S.)

III. Doctrines, Usages, Institutions, etc.—The doctrines of the Bible Christians are the same as those of all other branches of the Methodist Church, and their interpretation of the Scriptures agrees with the principles adopted by the Wesleys.

In its Church government each society is governed by its own elder's meeting, consisting of the minister, the leader, the stewards, and all approved local preachers belonging to that society. The elders' meeting manages all the financial affairs of the society according to the rules of the Connection, and receives or dismisses members of the Church. A meeting of the itinerant and local preachers is held quarterly. Each circuit has a quarterly meeting of all the official persons belonging to the societies within the circuit. For the convenient working of the denomination the circuits are mostly grouped, so as to form districts, and the ministers, together with an equal number of laymen, hold an annual meeting preparatory to the conference. The annual conference is composed of an equal number of ministers and laymen appointed by the district meetings.

In 1821 the first missionary society of the Bible Christians was formed. In that year its evangelistic efforts extended to Canada West and to Prince Edward Island. In 1850 two missionaries were sent to South Australia. In 1855 missions were opened in Victoria, in 1866 in Queensland, in 1877 in New Zealand, and in 1885 in China. On the mission stations at home and abroad nearly two hundred agents are regularly employed; these are assisted by about one thousand local preachers, and they preach in nearly seven hundred chapels and preaching places. The annual income of the society amounts to $35,400.

Among the institutions of the Bible Christians is the Sunday-school department, book department, temperance, Chapel Fund, Preachers' Annuitant Society, and educational work.

See Jubilee Volume (1865); Luke, Origin, etc., of the Bible Christians (1878); Minutes of the 62d Conference (1880). (G. T. J.)

Bible-Reading. See READING OF THE SCRIPTURES.

Bible Societies. By way of supplement, we give the present status of existing Bible societies according to the latest returns:

1. The number of Bible societies connected with the British and Foreign Bible Society was in 1890—

In Great Britain and Ireland—auxiliaries, 1113; branches, 446; associations, 5417—total, 6976.

In Europe and the Colonies—auxiliaries, 110; branches, 1220—total, 1330.

The Societies' Foreign Agencies, with the amount of their issues, are chronologically arranged as follows:

Name of Agency.	Date of Formation.	Copies.
Depot in Paris.....	1820	7,963,629
Agency in St. Petersburg.....	1828	5,033,170
“ Frankfurt.....	1830
“ Cologne.....	1847	13,820,801
“ Berlin.....	1853
“ Stockholm.....	1852	2,943,899
Agencies in Norway.....	1832	781,926
Agency in Brussels.....	1835	500,571
“ Amsterdam.....	1843	1,363,296
“ Copenhagen.....	1855	840,751
“ Rome, Leghorn, etc.....	1860	1,575,694
“ Lisbon.....	1864	165,436
“ Madrid.....	1868	1,231,593
“ Venice.....	1890	3,491,949
Total.....		40,012,365

The Societies in British India directly connected with the British and Foreign Bible Society, with their issues, are as follows:

Name of Bible Society.	Date of Formation.	Copies.
Calcutta Bible Society.....	1811	2,321,390
Colombo " ".....	1812	145,630
Bombay " ".....	1813	650,316
Madras " ".....	1820	3,569,460
Jaffna " ".....	1835	181,029
North India Bible Society at Allahabad.....	1845	706,366
Punjab Bible Society at Lahore.....	?	339,729
Bangalore Bible Society.....	?	120,613
Serampore Mission.....	?	200,000
Total.....		8,534,533

2. The Foreign Societies engaged in distributing the Holy Scriptures are the following:

A. EUROPE.

Name of Bible Society.	Date of Formation.	Copies.
Basle Bible Society.....	1804	777,512
Prussian Bible Society at Berlin.....	1805	5,239,258
Swedish " ".....	1809	1,055,507
Finnish " " at Abo.....	1812	239,273
Württemberg Bible Society.....	1812	1,779,116
Zurich " ".....	1812	82,972
Russian Bible Soc. at St. Petersburg.....	1812	861,105
Berg Bible Society at Elberfeld.....	1813	847,359
St. Gall Bible Society.....	1813	77,680
Coire " ".....	1813	12,267
Schaffhausen Bible Society.....	1813	30,077
Geneva " ".....	1814	147,232
Lausanne " ".....	1814	226,667
Saxon " ".....	1814	745,066
Hanover " ".....	1814	137,008
Hamburg-Altona Bible Society.....	1814	184,287
Lübeck " ".....	1814	39,083
Danish " ".....	1814	376,950
Strasbourg " ".....	1815	119,214
Icelandic " ".....	1815	10,445
Netherlands " ".....	1815	1,728,227
Schleswig-Holstein " ".....	1815	183,911
Bremen " ".....	1815	80,637
Brunswick " ".....	1815	6,312
Aargovian " ".....	1815	48,229
Waldensian Bible Society at La Tour.....	1816	4,238
Neuchâtel " ".....	1816	37,043
Frankfort " ".....	1816	75,000
Lippe-Detmold Bible Society.....	1816	37,199
Lauenburg-Ratzeburg Bible Society.....	1816	29,319
Rostock Bible Society.....	1816	19,408
Norwegian " ".....	1816	457,188
Entin " ".....	1817	15,000
Waldeck and Pyrmont Bible Society.....	1817	2,500
Hesse-Darmstadt " ".....	1817	31,484
Eisenach B. C.....	1818	15,081
Hannau " ".....	1818	3,316
Hesse-Cassel.....	1818	30,000
Protestant Bible Society at Paris.....	1818	575,074
Glarus " ".....	1819	5,000
Ionian B. C.....	1819	7,377
Baden " ".....	1820	83,759
Bavarian Prot. Bib. Ins. at Nuremberg.....	1821	376,119
Anhalt-Bernburg Bible Society.....	1821	4,786
Weimar Bible Society.....	1821	7,236
Marburg " ".....	1825	23,544
Russian Protestant Bible Society.....	1826	865,823
Stavanger " ".....	1828	7,017
French and Foreign Bib. Soc. at Paris.....	1833	750,000
Belgian and Foreign Bible Society.....	1834	7,623
Antwerp Bible Society.....	1834	439
Ghent " ".....	1834	8,980
Anhalt-Desau Bible Society.....	1836	27,899
Belgian Bible Associations.....	1839	14,909
Leipzig Bible Society.....	1840	34,942
Bible Society of France.....	1864	217,459
Total.....		19,059,076

B. AMERICA.

Name of Bible Society.	Date of Formation.	Copies.
Pennsylvania Bible Society.....	1808	3,763,371
American Bible Society.....	1817	49,829,563
Bible Assoc. of Friends in America.....	1830	127,470
American and Foreign Bible Society.....	1837	786,696
American Bible Union.....	1850	603,184
Total.....		55,110,284

The British and Foreign Bible Society has promoted the translation, printing, or distribution of the whole or part of the Bible, directly in 225 languages or dialects, indirectly in 65 ditto—total, 290.

At present there exist about 364 versions of the Bible; more than four fifths of this number have been prepared since 1804. See, besides the annual reports of the different Bible societies, also the art. "Bible, Propagation de la," in Lichtenberger's Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses; Reed, The Bible Work of the World (Lond. 1879); Bible of Every Land (ibid. 1860). (B. P.)

Bible Text. See TEXT, BIBLICAL.

Bible Versions. See VERSIONS OF THE SCRIPTURES.

Bibles, Pictorial. See PICTORIAL BIBLES.

Bibliography, THEOLOGICAL. See under each department, especially DOGMATIC THEOLOGY; ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY; EXEGETICAL THEOLOGY; PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

Biblis, one of the forty-eight martyrs of Lyons, who at first denied the faith; afterwards, being put to the torture to force from her some grounds of accusation against the Christians, she returned to her duty, and continued firm in the confession of the true faith till her death. See Baillet, June 2.

Biblista (or Biblicus), a term formerly used to denote one who expounded the Bible to his hearers.

Biblists is a name given by some writers in more modern times to those who admit no other rule of faith than the bare text of Scripture, and reject the aid of tradition as an interpreter of Scripture.

Bicci, LORENZO DI, a Florentine painter, was born in 1400, and studied under Spinello. The private cloister of the Church of Santa Croce contains several pictures by him in fresco, representing the legends of St. Francis. Lanzi says his best frescos are in the Church of Santa Maria Nuova, built by Martha X. He died in 1460. See Spooner, Biographical History of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Biceps (or Bifrons), is a name of Janus in Virgil and Ovid, where he is described with two faces, because so great was his sagacity that he saw both the past and the future; or else because Janus was thought to represent the world, viewing with his two faces the east and the west.

Bickerdike, JOHN, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Oct. 2, 1775. He received his collegiate training at Trevecca and Cheshunt colleges. After completing his course, Mr. Bickerdike preached as supply to various chapels in the country under the direction of the college trustees. He preached at Derby one year, a short time at Faversham, and thirty years at Woolwich. In his seventy-fifth year he retired from public life, and spent the remainder of his days at Cheltenham. He died June 20, 1858. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1859, p. 192.

Bickers, William, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Scott County, Ky., Nov. 5, 1821. He joined the Church when a small boy, professed conversion in 1840, and in 1844 was licensed to preach and admitted into the Kentucky Conference. On the formation of the West Virginia Conference he became a member of it, and in it labored until the breaking-out of the civil war, when he returned to Kentucky, and re-entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1871, because of ill-health, he became superannuated, which relation he sustained until his decease Feb. 22, 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1875, p. 223.

Bickers, W. C., a Baptist minister, was born in Tennessee about 1816. He removed to Southern Illinois in 1852, united with the Church in 1854, and was ordained in 1856. The field of his labor was in that section of Illinois where he had taken up his residence. He was earnestly devoted to the propagation of the principles of his denomination. He died of pneumonia, near Bankston, March 21, 1880. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1880, p. 10. (J. C. S.)

Bickersteth, Edward, an African Wesleyan minister, was born in the Egba country, and was taken captive in a slave-hunting expedition; was sold to the Portuguese, retaken by a British cruiser, and brought to Sierra Leone, where he was converted and became a member of the Methodist Church. He was afterwards employed as a schoolmaster, and in 1854 was elevated to the ministry and became a powerful and eloquent preacher in his native tongue. Many pagans were won to Christ by his labors. He died at Abbeokuta, April 4, 1864. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1864, p. 29.

Bickerton, Joseph, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born at Macclesfield, England, Feb. 28, 1814. He became a local preacher in the Primitive Methodist Church, and after his arrival in America, in 1866, filled several appointments so successfully that he resolved to devote his whole life to the ministry. Uniting with the Philadelphia Annual Conference in 1870, he served successfully six charges within its bounds. He died with unshaken confidence in God, at Tobyhanna, Pa., Jan. 19, 1881. He was a faithful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 73.

Bickford, Edwards Gibbs, a Congregational minister, was born at Meridian, N. Y., July 27, 1844. He graduated from Genesee College in 1867, and after studying two years at Auburn he entered the Union Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1870. After three years of patient work at Chaumont, N. Y., he yielded to a long-cherished desire of being a missionary, and offered his services to the American Board in the Turkish field. With his wife and two children he arrived at Marash in October, 1874. He had been but three years in the field, showing rich promise of future usefulness, when he was attacked with malignant small-pox, which ended his life at Marash, Oct. 17, 1877. See Gen. Cat. Union Theol. Sem. (1876), p. 132. (W. P. S.)

Bickford, George H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Danville, Vt., Dec. 2, 1834. He was converted at the age of nineteen; studied for the ministry at Newbury Seminary; received license to preach in 1857, and in 1859 entered the Vermont Conference, with which he labored zealously until his decease, July 10, 1869. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 126.

Bickford, Martin Luther, a Baptist minister, was born in Sedgwick, Me., Aug. 18, 1814. He graduated at Waterville College in 1837. Having spent a year in teaching at Oldtown, Me., and two years at the Newton Theological Institution, from 1837 to 1840, he went to Hanover County, Va., and taught a private school till the close of 1844. For the next seven years he had charge of a young ladies' school in Richmond, Va., where he was ordained in 1852. He returned to New England the same year, and was pastor of a Church in Waltham, Mass., eleven years. He accepted a call to Chicopee, in May, 1863, remaining there until 1867, when he removed to Cleveland, O., supplying a Church in Delaware, O., for some time. His last settlement was in Elyria, O., where he died April 9, 1876. (J. C. S.)

Bicknell, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in London. He was converted at the age of fourteen, entered the ministry in 1812, retired to Chelsea, London, in 1844, and died July 7, 1878, aged ninety-two. Mr. Bicknell's judgment was sound, his diligence and punctuality unfailing. His sermons were clear, accurate, and orderly. He was "stiff, precise, clear, pointed, correct, rather prosy," says Everett, Wesl. Takings, i, 341. He published a Sermon on the Death of Rev. Henry Taft, M.D., with an account of his life (Birmingham, 1824). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 50.

Bicknell, J. C., an English Congregational minister, formerly of Welford, latterly of Crick, Northampton, died Nov. 23, 1848, in the eightieth year of his age. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1848, p. 213.

Bicknell, Simeon Smith, a Congregational minister, was born at Enfield, N. H., Nov. 6, 1794. He obtained his preliminary education at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1823. During the period from 1827 to 1832 he was teaching in Salem, Mass., and in Jericho, Vt.; and until 1838 at Malone, N. Y. He studied theology with Rev. Ashbel Parmelee, D.D., of Malone. He was ordained as pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Gouverneur, N. Y., in 1838, remaining until 1841. The following years, until 1845, he was acting-pastor at Jericho, Vt.; and in 1846 removed to Wisconsin, becoming acting-pastor until 1851 at Milton. He held the same relation in 1852 to the Church at Fort Atkinson; from 1853 to 1855 at Jefferson; from 1855 to 1858 at Johnstown; from 1858 to 1864 at Koshkonong. He removed to Fort Atkinson in 1864, where, without charge, he remained until the close of his life, June 23, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 409.

Bicknor, Alexander de, an Irish prelate, was elected archbishop of Dublin in 1314, and took a journey to Lyons with the king's letters, Jan. 29, 1314, recommending him to the pope. He was consecrated at Avignon, July 22, 1317, by Nicholas de Prato, cardinal of Ostium. In the first year of his appointment king Edward granted to him the liberty of acquiring lands, tenements, advowsons, etc., in Ireland to the value of £200 yearly, except such as were held in the fee of the crown, to hold to him and his successors forever. De Bicknor did not visit his see until Oct. 9, 1318, when he arrived as archbishop of Dublin and lord justice of Ireland. He was received by the clergy and people with great joy. In 1318 he was twice summoned to a parliament at Lincoln. In 1320 he founded a university in St. Patrick's Church, Dublin. In 1322 he constituted the Church of Inisboynne a prebend in St. Patrick's Cathedral. In 1323 he was sent as ambassador to France by the Parliament of England. In 1326 he appears among the prelates and barons of England, who met at Bristol on the occasion of the king's son being appointed guardian of the realm which his father had abandoned. In 1339 he received royal orders to repair his fortifications at Castle Kevin, and was required to appear before the king's council in England to report the state of affairs in Ireland. In 1349, having obtained a grant of the manor of Coolmine, in the parish of Saggard, from Geoffrey Crumpe, subject to rent and services to the chief lord, he settled it for the maintenance of certain chantries in the Cathedral of St. Patrick, adding for the same endowment several houses and gardens near the palace of St. Sepulchre, and in the parish of St. Kevin. De Bicknor died July 14, 1349. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 123.

Bicorniger (the double-horned), in pagan mythology, is the Latin translation of the Greek word dikeros, which is given to Bacchus when he appears horned.

Biddeliens, the followers of John Biddle (q. v.), the father of English Socinianism.

Biddle, J. G., a minister of the Lutheran Church, was born in Fayette County, Pa. He was licensed to preach in 1856, and became a member of the Synod of Northern Indiana, which was organized at the time he was licensed. For many years he was pastor of the Church in Elkhart, where he died, Jan. 10, 1879, aged fifty-five years. See Lutheran Observer, Jan. 24, 1879.

Biddle, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born at Staines, Middlesex, in 1795, and, when young, became a member of the Church in his native town. Subsequently he removed to Kingston, Surrey, and united with the Church at that place. He began to preach in the villages near his residence. About

1828 he became pastor of the Church at Brockham Green, near Dorking, Surrey, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died Feb. 8, 1858. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1858, p. 47. (J. C. S.)

Biddle, William, a Baptist minister, was born in Hertfordshire, England, June 27, 1824. He came with his father, a Baptist minister, to America in 1832, and subsequently believing himself called of God to the work of the ministry, he entered upon a course of study in Madison University, where he graduated in 1849. After preaching for a time without settlement, he was appointed missionary to Asia by the Board of the Missionary Union in July, 1851, and ordained Aug. 13. A few weeks after his ordination he was taken ill, and died Sept. 17, 1851. "He was a man of devoted piety and great promise." See Amer. Baptist Register, 1852, p. 415. (J. C. S.)

Biddle, William Phillips, a Baptist minister, was born near London Bridge, Princess Anne Co., Va., Jan. 17, 1788. He began to preach in 1808, and took a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the growth and prosperity of his denomination in North Carolina, where he took up his residence in 1810. Being a man of large wealth, he gave his services gratuitously to the churches to which he ministered, chiefly in the eastern parts of Virginia and South Carolina. He died at Newberne, N. C., Aug. 8, 1853. "He was eminent for a devout spirit, a godly walk, and a large measure of usefulness in his day." See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 559; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 99. (J. C. S.)

Biddulph, Thomas, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Snesdhill, Shropshire, July 7, 1843. Converted at the age of eleven, he became a Methodist Sunday-school teacher, then exhorter, and joined the United Methodist Free Church. He entered the ministry in 1865, and travelled in five circuits with acceptance, when his health failed; in 1875 he became a supernumerary, and closed a useful life at Wellington, Jan. 15, 1876. See Minutes of the 20th Annual Assembly.

Bidembach, a name common to a number of Protestant theologians, of whom we mention the following:

1. BALTHASAR, doctor of theology and provost at Stuttgart, was born at Grünberg in 1593. He studied at Tübingen; was at first pastor and superintendent at Blaubeuren, and in 1562 court-preacher and member of consistory at Stuttgart. In 1570 he succeeded Johann Brenz (q. v.), and died in 1578. He wrote Homilie in Libros Priores Regum, and published 122 sermons on Paul's epistle to the Romans. See Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, ii, 291 sq.; Fischlin, Memoria theol. Württemberg. (Ulm, 1709), i, 142-146.

2. EBERHARD, doctor of theology, was a brother of Balthasar and of Wilhelm. He was born at Grünberg, July 2, 1528, and studied at Stuttgart and Tübingen. In 1552 he was appointed deacon, in 1557 was made doctor of theology, and in 1558 pastor and superintendent at Vayingen. In 1560 he was appointed general superintendent of Württemberg and abbot of Bebenhausen. He died April 24, 1597, having the year before attended the colloquy at Ratisbon. See Fischlin, Memoria theol. Württemberg.

3. FELIX, son of Wilhelm, was born at Stuttgart, Sept. 8, 1564. He studied at Tübingen; in 1586 was deacon at Weiblingen, and in 1590 at Stuttgart. In 1592 he was made member of consistory and court-preacher there, in 1604 doctor of theology, and in 1608 abbot of Maulbrunn. He died in 1612. He wrote, Expositio on the Books of Samuel and Psalms:—Consiliorum Theologicorum Decades X, which he edited with the assistance of his brother,

4. JOHANN MORITZ, who prepared the ninth and tenth of the Decades.

5. WILHELM, brother of Balthasar and Eberhard, and father of Felix and Johann, was born Nov. 2, 1538, at Tübingen, where he also studied. In 1559 he became pastor of St. Leonhard at Stuttgart, and in 1563 was made doctor of theology. He died April 6, 1572. He wrote, Consensus Jesuitarum et Christianorum:—Responsio ad Jesuitas; Epistolæ Novem ad Joannem Marbachium, etc. See Fischlin, Memoria theol. Württemberg.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bidental (or Bidental), in pagan superstition, is a popular appellation given to any place stricken with a thunderbolt, and on that account held too sacred to be trodden on. The Romans, believing that an evidence that Jupiter claimed such a place for himself, surrounded it with a wall, rail, stakes, or even a rope, and expiated by the sacrifice of a bidens, or two-year-old sheep.

Bidermann, Jakob, a German theologian, was born at Tübingen, in Suabia. He entered the Jesuit order, and taught philosophy at Dillengen, and theology at Rome, where he died, Aug. 20, 1639. He wrote, Res a B. Ignatio, Societatis Jesu Parente, Gestæ (Munich, 1612):—Narrationes Selectæ ex Seneca, Gellio, Plinio (1622):—Herodiades, an epic poem upon the massacre of the innocents (Dillingen, 1622):—Prolesiones Theologicæ Tres (ibid. 1624):—Agnosticon Libri Tres pro Miraculis (ibid. 1626):—Delicia Sacræ (Lyons, 1636):—Alloysius, sive Dei Beneficia Meritis B. Alloysii Collata (Munich, 1640):—Comico-Tragediæ Sacræ X (ibid. 1666, 2 pts.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bidermann, Johann Gottlieb, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Naumburg, April 5, 1705. He studied at Wittenberg; in 1732 was appointed con-rector at the cathedral school in his native place, and in 1741 rector of the same. In 1747 he accepted a call to Freiberg, where he died, Aug. 3, 1772. Of his writings we mention the following: Dissertatio de Meræde Divinatoria ad Num. xxii, 2 (Wittenberg, 1727):—Disputationes in Genesios Loca Difficiliora (ibid. 1728):—Progr. de Natura et Indole Juvenum ex Salomonis Sententia Prov. xxx, 19 (ibid. 1743):—Progr. de Summo Bono ex Sententia Salomonis Cohel. v, 8 (Freiberg, 1749):—Progr. de Mendis Librorum et Nominatim Bibliorum Hebraicorum, Diligentius Cavendis (ibid. 1752):—Progr. Specimen Nominum Θεοφύρων ad Joh. ix, 2 (ibid. 1755):—Progr. de Characteribus Corpori Impressis ex Levit. xix, 28 (ibid. eod.):—Progr. super Q. Horatii Flacci Theologia (ibid. 1766). See Düring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 106 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bidi, in the mythology of India, is the deity of fate on the coast of Malabar. This deity is represented with three heads, signifying the past, the present, and the future.

Bidlake, John, an English clergyman, was born at Plymouth. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, became head-master of the grammar-school at Plymouth, and died in 1814. He published, Sermons on Various Subjects (1795, 3 vols. 8vo); and various single sermons, poems, etc. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bidun, Walter de, a Scottish bishop, chancellor of the kingdom, became elect of the see of Dunkeld in 1177, but died before his consecration. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 76.

Bidwell, Ira G., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Wilmington, Conn., Feb. 22, 1835. He was converted in childhood, graduated at Union College in 1858, and in the following year entered the Troy Conference. Subsequently he was transferred to the Providence Conference, preached one year, then taught one year in Auburndale, Mass., and was admitted into the New England Conference; in 1875 he was transferred to the Genesee Conference, and finally, in 1878, to the Central New York Conference, in all of which he did noble service. He died in the midst of his labors, Dec. 25, 1878. Dr. Bidwell was eminently popular, able, eloquent, and useful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 58.

Bidwell, Ira M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at East Hartford, Conn., in 1809. He united with the Church in 1820; was licensed in 1823; admitted to the New England Conference June 22, 1824; ordained deacon in 1826, and elder in 1828. Consecrating all his energies to the work of the ministry, he took rank among the leading preachers of his day. He served with success eleven charges. While yet young and full of promise, disease laid its hand upon him, and for ten years he was unable to take an appointment. Receiving an appointment after his protracted disability, on his way home from conference he was the victim of a railroad accident, from which he never recovered sufficiently to endure public labor; so that from 1841 until the close of his life he was a superannuated minister. He died of apoplexy at Norwich, Conn., July 28, 1880. His mind was quick and versatile; and, gifted by nature with a commanding form, strong but melodious voice, possessing a thorough knowledge of human nature, he had wonderful power over an audience. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 89.

Bidwell, Oliver B., a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1827. He was a graduate of Yale College and of the New Haven Seminary. His first charge was Hubbardstown. He was ten years engaged in executing sectional maps of all the missions of the American Board, and devoted considerable time in aiding the circulation of the National Preacher. He served a number of years as pastor of several churches. His last pastoral work was in connection with the Presbyterian Church, Jersey City Heights, where his labors were attended with marked success. He died there Aug. 5, 1881. See (N. Y.) Observer, Aug. 11, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Bidwell, Walter H., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Farmington, Conn., June 21, 1798. He graduated at Yale College, and subsequently at the Yale Theological Seminary. He was licensed to preach in 1833, and subsequently ordained. In 1841 he began to publish the National Preacher, which he conducted nineteen years. In 1843 he became the proprietor of the N. Y. Evangelist, to which he devoted twelve years of laborious service in connection with Dr. George B. Cheever. In 1846 he became proprietor and conductor of the American Biblical Repository, and at the same time editor of the Eclectic Magazine. In 1849 he went abroad for the purpose of recruiting his health, his travels extending through England, France, Switzerland, and Italy. In 1851 he again visited Europe, went to Holland, passed up the Rhine, visited Bohemia and Spain, and other places. After 1853 he was constantly engaged in editorial labors. In 1860 he became proprietor of the American Theological Review, which was united with the Presbyterian Quarterly Review. His health again declining, he took another trip abroad, visiting England, France, Germany, Northern Europe including Russia, and returned through Finland, Sweden, and Denmark. In 1867 he was appointed a commissioner of the United States to Western Asia, during which, in the discharge of his duties, he visited Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Greece, and France. From 1868 to 1880 he resided alternately in London and New York, continuing to discharge his numerous editorial duties. In connection with his younger brother, Oliver B., he published seven large maps of different parts of the missionary field. He died, after a short illness, at Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 11, 1881. See (N. Y.) Evangelist, Sept. 20, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Bie, ADRIEN DE, a Flemish painter, was born at Lierre, near Antwerp, in 1594; he painted under Wouter, an obscure artist. When eighteen years of age he visited Paris, and studied under his countryman, Rodolph Schoof, painter to Louis XIII. He afterwards visited Rome, where he remained eight years. In 1623 he returned to Flanders, and was much employed for the churches and in painting portraits. His best work was a picture of St. Ely, in the Collegiate Church of S. Gommer, at Lierre. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bieck (or Biek), Johann Erdmann, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born at Lodersleben, Sept. 14, 1679. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg, was in 1708 deacon of SS. Peter and Paul's at Eisleben, and in 1729 its pastor, and died in 1752. He wrote, Dissertatio qua ex Doctrina Morum abroxyapiav Subtilem Proposuit (Wittenberg, 1702):—Obsero. de Agendis Ecclesiasticis, vulgo Kirchenagenden, et in Specie de Agendis Eccles. Massfeldensibus (in Miscellaneis Lipsiensibus, part viii):—Obs. de Arbore non Eradicanda, ad Deuter. xx, 19 (part ix):—Der Drefache Interim, so in Regensburg, Augsburg und Leipzig zur Vereinigung der päpstlichen und lutherischen Lehre nach der Reformation zum Vorschein gekommen, etc. (Leipsic, 1721):—Dissertatio Moralis circa Questionem Occupatu, utrum Impuberes Perfecta Sponsalia Contrahere Possint (Wittenberg, 1703):—Dissertatio de Apostoli Pauli Philosophia (in the Actis Philosophiæ of Neumann). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 753; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bieck, Rudolph, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died at the age of seventy-three, June 5, 1881, at Erfurt, as member of consistory, is the author of Spruchbuch zu M. Luthers Kleinem Katechismus, etc. (Berlin, 1857, 3d ed.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 146. (B. P.)

Biederstedt, DIETRICH HERMANN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Stralsund, Nov. 1, 1762, and died March 10, 1824, at Griefswalde, as member of consistory and archdeacon of St. Nicolaus. He wrote, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kirchen und Prediger in Neuorpommern, etc. (Griefswalde, 1818):—Sammlung aller kirchlichen Verordnungen im Herzogthume Neuorpommern, etc. (Stralsund, 1816):—Geist des pommerrügenschen Predigtwesens, etc. (ibid. 1821):—Predigten über einige Gegenstände der christl. Religion und Sittenlehre (Berlin, 1792). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 807; ii, 15, 58, 93, 123, 163, 173, 180; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 146. (B. P.)

Biel, in German mythology, was an idol of the old Saxons and Thuringians, worshipped especially on the Biel's-height near the convent of Ilfeld, and honored by an altar. He is said to have been a protector of the woods and a propagator of fruitfulness. It seems that his worship was extended far over the northern provinces. The above-named Biel's-height contains a cliff from which Bonifacius preached the Gospel after hurling Biel from his altar. But Bonifacius had hardly gone, when the people again erected their idol. Even now ruins of an altar and of a priestly residence in Harz, near Blankenburg, may be found. The inhabitants relate many wonderful things about the idol, and show the place where it stood. As everywhere in Northern Europe, so also were bloody sacrifices brought to this god, and the idol was sprinkled with the blood of the victim.

Biel, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Braunschweig in 1687. He studied at Leipsic, Rostock, and Helmstädt, was in 1719 appointed adjunctus ministerii, and in 1723 pastor of St. Ulrich and St. John in his native place, where he died, Oct. 18, 1745. He wrote, Exercitatio de Lignis ex Libano ad Templum Hierosolymitanum ædificandum Petitis, etc. (Braunschweig, 1740):—De Purpura Lydia ad Illustr. Locum Actor. xvi, 14 (in Ugolini, Thesaurus, xiii):—Notæ in Hesychium (Leipsic, 1746, in J. Alberti's edition):—Novus Thesaurus Philologicus sive Lexicon in LXX et alios Interpretes et Scriptores Apocryphos V. T., etc., ex auctoritate M. S. editum et præfatus est E. H. Mutzenbecher (Hague, 1779 sq.), a posthumous work:—Dissertatio Historico Litteraria de Viris Mili- tia æque ac Scriptis Illustribus (Leipsic, 1708). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 50, 148; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 115; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bieler, BENJAMIN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 15, 1693, at Plankenstein near Dresden. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg, was in 1724 pastor at Bethau and Naundorf near Lichtenberg, in Saxony, and in 1734 pastor at Schweinitz, where he died in 1772. He wrote, De Theologia Emblematica (Leipsic, 1725):—Observationes de Crucifixione Messie ad Locum Vexatissimum כח"ר *Psalm*o xxii, 17 (ibid. 1733):—De Cathedra S. Petri Antiochia Romæque Corrupta ac deperdita brevis Commentatio, etc. (Helmstadt, 1738):—De Spiritu Sanctificationis Commentatio, qua Locum Quodammodo Vexatum Rom. i, 4, Exponere Studet (Wittenberg, 1740):—De Palatiis Eburneis Brevis ad Locum Difficilem Ps. xlv, 9, Adnotatio (Leipsic, 1745):—De Sapientia Salvatoris ad Esa. lii, 13 (ibid. 1740). See Rathlef, Jetztlebende Theologen, iv, 519 sq.; Moser u. Neubauer, Jetztlebende Theologen, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bienaymé, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, a learned and pious French ecclesiastic, who died Feb. 9, 1806, at Metz, of which he became bishop in 1802, successfully cultivated the study of natural history, on which he wrote several works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bienheureux, archbishop of Narbonne. See DALMATIUS.

Bienra, in Egyptian mythology, was the name of the deity of the soul of the sun, adored under the form of a kneeling ram.

Bierling, Conrad Friedrich Ernst, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 15, 1709, at Rinteln, where he also pursued his philosophical as well as theological studies. In 1729 he was made doctor of philosophy, and in 1731 appointed professor of logic and metaphysics. He was appointed professor of theology in 1749, and in 1751 was made doctor of divinity. He died Jan. 14, 1755. He published, Dissertatio de Libertate Actionum Humanarum (Rinteln, 1739):—Syllava Positionum Theologicarum (ibid. 1751):—Diss. Hist. Eccles. de Ferdinandi I Imperat. Lutherum Epistola (ibid. 1758):—Dissert. de Religione Caroli V Imperatoris (ibid. 1754). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 111 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bierling, Friedrich Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 22, 1676, at Magdeburg, and studied at Leipsic, where he also lectured for a number of years. In 1712 he was called to the pastorate at Rinteln, and was in 1714 superintendent and member of consistory; in 1716 was made professor of theology, and in 1720 doctor of divinity. He died July 25, 1728. He wrote, Epistola ad 2 Tim. iv de Officio Evangelistæ:—Dissertatio de Origine Mali:—Observationum in Genesis Specimina VI, etc. See Dolle, Life of Bierling (Hanover, 1749); Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Biermann, JOHANN, a Dutch theologian, who died in 1721 at Middelburg, is the author of, De Prophezie van Zacharias (Utrecht, 1699, 1716; Germ. transl. by E. Meier, Basle, 1710):—Moses et Christus ִתְּרֵחַת, 1700, 1705; Germ. transl. Frankfurt, 1706):—De Prophezie van Hosea (Utrecht, 1702):—Clavis Apocalypitico-prophetica, h. e. Septem Ecclesiarum ac Totidem Sigillorum, Tubicinorum et Phialarum Apocalypiticarum Explicatio (ibid. 1702):—Verklaaring des eersten en tweeden Briefs van Paul aan die van Corinthus (ibid. 1705, 1708). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Biet, ANTOINE, a French missionary, was born in the diocese of Senlis about 1620. He embarked for Cayenne in 1652, with six hundred colonists, sent out by a company who had obtained of the government the cession of that isle. The enterprise did not succeed; most of the colonists perished from famine and sickness, and Biet devoted himself to the alleviation of their sufferings with heroic devotion. On his return to France he published the Voyage de la France Équinoxiale, or, L'île de Cayenne, entrepris par les François en 1652 (Paris, 1664). This work is terminated by a Dictionnaire de la Langue Gahbi. His work concerning the West Indies is not considered trustworthy, as his stay there was very brief; this work has been refuted by P. Dutertre. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bifinde (the movable), in Norse mythology, was one of the twelve surnames of Alfadur.

Biformis, in Pagan mythology, is the Latin translation of the Greek word διμορφος (two-formed). It was the surname of various mythical beings, as, for instance, of Minotaurus, the Centaurs, Ianus; also of Bacchus, because he was represented sometimes as a youth, sometimes as an aged man.

Bifrons. See BICKERS.

Bifrost (or Bif-raust), in Norse mythology, is the bridge which joins heaven and earth, the rainbow. The Asas ride over it to their place of assembling by Urdar's well. Heimdall with his Gjaldernorn guards it, so that the Asas are not suddenly attacked. It is very skilfully built of air, water, and fire. The green is the water, blue is the air, and red is the fire. The first two elements would make it strong enough for the Asas; still fire has been added in order that the mountain-giants (Berg-riesen) cannot pass over.

Bifur (the trembling), in Norse mythology, is a dwarf made of earth and living on the earth.

Bigamy. Under this head we designate only, according to modern usage, the case of matrimonial union to two persons at the same time; premising that until the beginning of the 17th century, at least, the term was applied to all cases of second marriage, whether during the existence of a prior union or after its dissolution; the word "polygamy" being applied to the former case; the distinction being thus made entirely to turn on the simultaneous or successive nature of the marriage relations. See DIGAMY.

The first Church legislation we find on the subject is of doubtful genuineness—viz., those canons attributed to the Council of Nicea, A.D. 325, which are only to be found in the Arabic version. The 24th of these declares that "none ought to marry two wives at once, nor to bring in to his wife another woman for pleasure and fleshly desire." If a priest, such person was forbidden to officiate, and was excluded from communion until such time as he cast out the second, while he ought to retain the first; and so of a layman. Two other canons are to the same effect. The 5th chapter of the 1st book of Sanctions and Decrees says that "to no Christian is it lawful to have two or more wives at once, after the manner of the Gentiles, who marry three or four at once; but one is to be married after the other, that is, the contract is to be made with the second after the death of the first." The practice of the West seems to have been generally more strict than in the East, and we have thus to infer the spirit of the Western Church towards bigamy from enactments against concubinage (q. v.). A letter of Leo the Great, A.D. 440–61, addressed to the African bishops of the province of Mauritania Cæsariensis, speaking of an actual case of bigamy in the priesthood of that province, says, "Neither apostolic nor legal authority allows the husband of a second wife to be raised to the pastoral office, much less him who, as it has been related to us, is the husband of two wives at once." Another letter of Leo's (dated 458 or 459), to Rusticus, bishop of Narbonne, is probably the first authority for the lower modern view of the concubinate. "Not every woman united to a man is the man's wife, for neither is every son his father's heir. . . . Therefore a wife is one thing, a concubine another; as a handmaid is one thing, a freewoman another. . . . Wherefore if a clerk of any place give his daughter in marriage to a man having a concubine, it is not to be taken as if he gave her to a married man; unless haply the woman appear to have been made free, and lawfully jointured and restored to honor by a public marriage. Those who by their father's will are married to men, are not in fault if the women which such men had were not had in marriage. Since a wife is one thing, a concubine another, to cast from one's bed the bondmaid and to receive a wife of ascertained free birth is not a doubling of marriage, but a progress in honorable conduct."

Towards the same period, however (latter half of the 5th century), a Nestorian Synod held in Persia, under the presidency of Barsumas, archbishop of Nisibis, affords probably the first instance of what may be called the modern Protestant interpretation of the Pauline "husband of one wife." A priest, its canons declare, "should be one who has one wife, as it is said in the Apostle's Epistle to Timothy, 'Whoever marries, let him have one wife; if he transgresses, he is to be separated from the Church and the priestly order. But if a priest not knowing marriage, or whose wife is dead, should wish for lawful marriage, let him not be forbidden by the bishop, whether he have wished to marry before or after his priesthood.'" It is clear that the Nestorians in this case interpreted St. Paul as speaking not of successive but of simultaneous marriage. That this was not, however, the view of the Greek Church generally is evident.

A collection of Irish canons, supposed to belong to the close of the 7th century, shows that the Celtic kings of Ireland must, as in Britain in the days of Gildas, have had regular harems. The Synod is represented as enacting (if the term can be used) as follows: "According as is the dignity which the king receives, so great should be his fear; for many women deprave his soul, and his mind, divided by the multitude of his wives, falls greatly into sin."

To the 8th century belongs one of the most curious incidents in the treatment of this question by the Church. In a letter of pope Gregory II (A.D. 714-30) to Boniface, the apostle of Germany, we find the pope treating the case of a wife, who through bodily infirmity becomes incapable of fulfilling the conjugal duty. Can the husband in such an event take a second wife? The pope replies, that it is good for him to remain united to her. "But he who cannot contain" (referring evidently to 1 Cor. vii, 9), "let him marry rather;" but without withdrawing maintenance "from her whom infirmity hinders, but no detestable fault excludes" from his bed—a decision closely akin to that of Luther and the Protestant theologians in the case of the Landgrave of Hesse. Further on the pope condemns bigamy generally.

We find the question of the lawfulness of a second marriage in case of a wife's bodily infirmity recurring in a work not of much later date than pope Gregory's letter to Boniface, archbishop Egbert of York's Dialogue on Church Government. The archbishop is, however, more cautious than the pope. He puts the case only in the shape of a dissolution of the marriage tie by agreement of both parties, because of the infirmity of one of them; can the healthy one marry again, the infirm one consenting, and promising continence? The archbishop implies that he may: "By change of times necessity breaks the law . . . in doubtful cases one should not judge." See CONCUBINAGE.

Bigari, Vittorio, a Bolognese painter, who was born in 1692 and died in 1776, executed many pictures for his native city. In the Church of the Madonna del Soccorso is a fine picture by him, of the Virgin and Infant, with Saints. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bigelow, Asahel, a Congregational minister, was born at Boylston, Mass., May 14, 1797. He received his preparatory education at Phillips Academy, Andover, and graduated from Harvard College in 1823, and Andover Theological Seminary in 1826. He was ordained at Walpole, Mass., March 12, 1828, and dismissed Jan. 1, 1849. May 15, 1850, he was installed at Hancock, N. H., and died in office, Aug. 16, 1877, though he had been released for two years from active pastoral service. He represented Walpole in the legislature from 1849 to 1850. He published, A Sermon before the Norfolk County Education Society (Weymouth, 1833):—A Sermon at the Ordination of Rev. Andrew Bigelow, at South Dartmouth (Aug. 25, 1841):—A Sermon (Hancock, May 9, 1875) at the close of his ministry. (W. P. S.)

Bigelow, Jacob, a Congregational minister, was born at Waltham, Mass., March 2, 1743. He graduated from Harvard College in 1766, was ordained pastor in Sudbury, Nov. 11, 1772, and died in September, 1816. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 206.

Bigelow, Manson A., a Baptist minister, united with the Baptist Church at Antigonish, N. S., at sixteen; studied at Horton Academy; went to the United States, where he remained seven years, and studied there a part of that time; commenced to preach in Nova Scotia in 1857, was ordained at Guysborough in September, 1859, and from that time till near his death he preached around the eastern and southern portions of that province. He died at Antigonish Harbor, July 2, 1876, aged fifty-one. See Baptist Year-book of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, 1876, p. 37.

Bigelow, Warren, a Congregational minister, was born at Chester, Vt., June 29, 1822. At the age of twelve he was converted; he fitted for college at Black River Academy, in Ludlow, and graduated from Middlebury in 1851. Three years after, he graduated from Andover Theological Seminary. Having decided to go West, as a home missionary, he was ordained at Chester, Nov. 14, 1854, and within a month began preaching at Black River Falls, Wis. Here he remained for eight years, and then removed to Minnesota, where he closed his ministry at Mazeppa, Oct. 31, 1866. See Cong. Quarterly, 1867, p. 206.

Bigg, Susanna, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Tottenham, Eng., in 1767. Of her early life but little is known. She frequently enjoyed the company and religious labors of Thomas Scattergood, of Philadelphia, who resided for several years near London. She was a kind and sympathizing friend to the poor and afflicted, a great lover of the Holy Scriptures, and lived an exemplary life. She died July 7, 1852. See Annual Monitor, 1854, p. 11.

Biggel, Joseph Anton, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, who died as pastor at Zöbingen in 1838, is the author of, Leitfaden zum christkatholischen Religionsunterricht in geschichtlicher Darstellung (Tübingen, 1831):—Des Christen Wandel im Erdenthale und seine Sehnsucht nach der himmlischen Heimath (Stuttgart, 1837):—Predigten auf alle Sonn- und Festtage des katholischen Kirchenjahres (Nördlingen, 1840). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 242, 349; Supplement, p. 185. (B. P.)

Biggs, David, a Baptist minister, was born in Camden County, N. C., in 1763, and began to preach in 1793. For eighteen years he was pastor of the church in Portsmouth, Va. He moved to Kentucky in 1810, and for ten years had charge of several churches in that state. He went to Missouri in 1820, and took up his residence in Pike County. Besides supplying several churches he organized one, the Noix Creek Church. For fifty years he labored in that state, and to him the churches in north-east Missouri are greatly indebted. He died Aug. 1, 1845. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 99. (J. C. S.)

Biggs, Joseph, an English Wesleyan missionary, went to the West Indies in 1830, and from that time to his death, with the exception of two years spent in England, he labored with zeal to promote the spiritual interests of the inhabitants of the islands. He died at Kingstown, St. Vincent's, Sept. 27, 1859, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. He was unassuming, amiable, catholic. See Minutes of the Brit. Conference, 1860.

Biggs, Richard, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Columbia County, Pa., Nov. 12, 1806. He was converted in 1829; was licensed to preach in 1836; received into the North Ohio Conference in 1840, transferred to the Delaware Conference in 1856, took a superannuated relation after travelling seven charges in the latter Conference, and died at Rawson, O., July 18, 1880. He was a close student—mighty in the Word. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 269.

Biggs, Thomas Jacob, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Nov. 19, 1787. He was educated at Nassau Hall, Princeton, N. J., and was for a time tutor in Princeton College. He entered Princeton Theological Seminary in 1815, was licensed by the Philadelphia Presbytery in 1817, and in 1818 was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Frankford. In 1830 he was elected President of Washington College, Pa., but declined the position to accept a professorship in Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati. In August, 1839, he resigned this position, and accepted the Presidency of Cincinnati College, which position he held until the college was destroyed in 1845. He was elected President of Woodward College in 1845, where he continued until his death, Feb. 9, 1864. See Wilson, Hist. Presb. A'm nac, 1865, p. 77.

Biglia, Andrea, was a noble Milanese, who entered the order of Hermits of St. Augustine, and flourished about 1420. He was distinguished for his knowledge of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, and died at Sienna in 1435. He wrote, De Ordinib. Eremitarum S. Augustini Propagatione (Parma, 1601, 4to):—Historia Rerum Mediolanensium (printed in the Theat. Ant. Ital. of Burmannus, vol. ix, pt. vi, and in the Scriptores Rer. Ital. of Muratori, vol. ix). Many works by him yet remain in MS. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Signal, James, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in 1799, and was one of the early preachers of that faith. He was quite prominently connected with all the advanced movements of the denomination during his ministry, and was a determined opposer of slavery and its kindred evils. His great work in the ministry was that of an evangelist, and he was frequently associated with the leading men of his denomination in conducting protracted meetings. He died very suddenly at Lyon, Oakland Co., Mich., Aug. 3, 1869. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1871, p. 80. (J. C. S.)

Bigne, Marguerin de la, a French theologian, was born at Bernières-le-Patry in 1546, and first studied at Caen, then went to Paris, where he was made doctor in the Sorbonne. Seconded by his superiors, he gave a collection of the Fathers of the Church, an edition of which, commenced in 1575, was completed in 1578. He was appointed successively canon of Bayeux, theologian of that diocese, and dean of the Church of Mons. Being sent to the provincial Council of Rouen in 1581, he drew down upon himself the animadversion of his bishop by sustaining against him the prerogatives of his chapter, and he finally resigned his canonship. He died at Paris about 1590. He wrote, Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum et Antiquarum Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latine (Paris, 1575):—Appendix, sive Tomus Nonus (1579; 2d ed. Paris, 1589):—Statuta Synodalia Parisiensium Episcoporum Galonis, Adonis et Willielmi; Item, Decreta Petri et Galteri Senonensium Episcoporum (ibid. 1578):—S. Isidori Hispalensis Opera (ibid. 1580). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bignell, Henry, an English clergyman, was born in 1611, and educated at Brazenose College and St. Mary's Hall, Oxford. He died about 1660. He published, The Son's Portion (1640):—English Proverbs, etc. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bignoni, Mario de, an Italian theologian, a native of Venice, distinguished himself by his sermons. He belonged to the Capuchin order, and died in 1660. He wrote, Splendori Serafici degli Opachi delle Più Celebri Accademie Rilucenti tra l'Ombra di Naghi Gerolifici, Quaresima (Venice, 1649, 1651, 1654):—Elogii Sacri nelle Solemnità Principali di Nostro Signore, della Vergine et Altri Santi (ibid. 1652-55):—Prediche per le Dominiche dopo la Pentecoste e per l'Avento (ibid. 1656, 1661). These three works were published in Latin by Bruno Neusser, under the title, Encyclopædia seu Scientia Universalis Concionatorium (Cologne, 1663, 1676). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bignotti, Vicente, an Italian theologian, was born at Vercelli in 1764. After having completed his studies in Turin, at the royal college of the provinces, where he had obtained a fellowship, he was made doctor of theology, and afterwards appointed canon of the cathedral of Vercelli, where he died in 1831. He is the author of several sermons and poems, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bigot, Éméry, a French scholar, was born at Rouen in 1626. His father left him a library of six thousand volumes, among which were more than five hundred MSS. This rich collection he greatly augmented, until it was worth 40,000 francs. He discovered at Florence the Greek text of the Life of St. Chrysostom by Palladius, which he published (Paris, 1680, 4to) with some other unpublished Greek pieces, the whole being accompanied by the Latin version of Ambrogio Traversari of Camaldoli. This collection contained the famous letter of St. Chrysostom to Caesarius, so opposed to the modern doctrine of transubstantiation. Peter Allix procured a copy of this work of Bigot, and reprinted it (Lond. 1686). Bigot died at Rouen, Oct. 18, 1689. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bigotry consists in being obstinately and perversely attached to our own opinions, or, as some have defined it, "a tenacious adherence to a system adopted without investigation and defended without argument, accompanied with a malignant, intolerant spirit towards all who differ." It must be distinguished from love to truth, which influences a man to embrace it wherever he finds it, and from true zeal, which is an ardor of mind exciting its possessor to defend and propagate the principles he maintains. Bigotry is a kind of prejudice combined with a certain degree of malignity. Bigotry is mostly prevalent with those who are ignorant, who have taken up principles without due examination, and who are naturally of a morose and contracted disposition. It is often manifested more in unimportant sentiments or the circumstantialities of religion than in the essentials of it. Simple bigotry is the spirit of persecution without the power; persecution is bigotry armed with power, and carrying its will into act. As bigotry is the effect of ignorance, so it is the nurse of it, because it precludes free inquiry, and is an enemy to truth; it cuts also the very sinews of charity, and destroys moderation and mutual good-will. If we consider the different constitution of men's minds, our own ignorance, the liberty that all men have to think for themselves, the admirable example our Lord has set us of a contrary spirit, and the baneful effects of this disposition, we must at once be convinced of its impropriety. How contradictory is it to sound reason and new animal to the peaceful religion we profess! See CATHOLIC PERSECUTION.

Bigsech, an Irish poet and patron of Calligochie

(Kilbixy), in West Meath (celebrated June 28), was of the race of Fiachra, son of Eochaidh Muighmheadhoin.

Bikaneera. See HINDUWKE DIALECTS.

Bikh, in the mythology of India, is a preparation of the amrita (q. v.) from the sea of milk, by turning the mountain Mandar. There was produced in the preparation of the amrita a very fine but dangerous poison, which would have destroyed all things; therefore it was desirable to have it removed. Siva undertook to swallow it, but, fearing the effects of it, he did not allow it to enter his stomach, but left it in his neck. This it colored blue; wherefrom Siva has the name of Nilkunt (blue-neck).

Bikunis are a class of nuns in Japan, who wander about with their heads shaved, begging alms. They are in general very profligate in their manners.

Bil, in Norse mythology, was a maiden whom the moon stole, in company with her brother, when these children were sent to get water from the well Byrgir.

Bilal is the title of one of the four officiating priests attached to each mosque among the Malays in Malacca. The name was applied to the first muezzin in the time of Mohammed, and is used by the Malays instead of muezzin (q. v.). The duties of the Bilal are various—among them to call to public prayers, and to recite the Talkin, the service for the dead after the corpse has been lowered into the grave. When a goat or bullock is sacrificed, he receives two fingers' breadth of flesh from the victim's neck.

Bile, ERAR. See BILLY, ERAR.

Bilefeld, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died in 1695 at Delitsch, in Saxony, as doctor of theology, is the author of, Diss. Theol. de Conversione Hominis:—An Diversæ Religionis Homines Fœdus Ferire Possint et an etiam illud Frangere Licitum sit?—Diss. Inaug. de Fide Veterum et Imprimis Fidelium Mundi Antedeluviani in Christum Verum Deum et Hominem ejusque Passionem Meritoriam.

His son, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, was born at Wernigerode, Dec. 25, 1664. For a time he acted as assistant to his father at Delitsch. In 1690 he received his degree as doctor of theology at Kiel, was in 1693 appointed professor of theology and superintendent at Giessen, and died June 21, 1727. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Möller, Cimbria Litterata; Seelen, Athenæ Lubecenses. (B. P.)

Bilfinger, Carl Friedrich, a German theologian, who died Sept. 8, 1838, as doctor of philosophy and pastor at Weilheim, near Tübingen, is the author of Die Hauptlehren der christlichen Religion, in 2 Abtheilungen (Tübingen, 1833). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 231; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 149. (B. P.)

Bilfinger, Georg Bernhard, a Protestant divine of Germany, doctor and professor of theology, and president of the consistory at Tübingen, was born Jan. 23, 1693, at Canstadt. He studied at Tübingen and Halle, was in 1721 appointed professor of philosophy at Tübingen, but had no great success there. In 1725 he accepted a call to St. Petersburg, but in 1731 returned to Tübingen, having been appointed professor of theology and superintendent of Tübingen. He died Feb. 18, 1750. He wrote, De Harmonia Animæ et Corporis Humanæ Maxime Præstabilita (Tübingen, 1723):—Dilucidationes Philosophicæ de Deo, Anima Humana, Mundo et Generalibus Rerum Affectibus (ibid. 1725; 1768, 4to):—Diss. de Cultu Dei Rationali (ibid. 1731, 1739):—Notæ Breves in B. Spinozæ Methodum Explicandi Scripturas (ibid. 1732, 1739):—De Mysteriorum Christianæ Religionis Generatim Spectatis Sermo (ibid. 1732, 1738). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 282, 425; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 114 sq.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bilgenschneider, in German superstition, is a dæmon which is said to cut off the ears of corn and wheat of poor rustics in harvest times.

Bilhuber, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 5, 1702, at Urach. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1730 deacon at Winnenden, and in 1734 pastor there. In 1749 he was called to Urach, where he died, Jan. 2, 1762. He published, Moses und die Propheten in den Evangelien (Esslingen, 1744, 1751):—Evangelischer Liederschatz oder glossirtes grosses Württembergisches Gesangbuch (Tübingen, 1830–34, 3 pts., in connection with Moser). See Moser, Lexicon der Gottesgelehrten; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenbundes, v, 22 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bilit is the Assyrian feminine Sacti of the god Bel. She was called "the Mother of the Gods," and was Mylitta of Greek mythology. See BELTIS; BELAT.

Bilverti, GIOVANNI, a Florentine painter, was born in 1576, and studied under Cigoli, and blended the style of that master with that of Paolo Veronese and Titian. He finished some pictures which Cigoli left unfinished at his death, and executed a number of pictures in the churches of San Gaetano and San Marco. Of these The Elevation of the Cross is considered the masterpiece. He died in 1644. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Billard, PIERRE, a French priest of the Oratory, was born at Ernée in Maine (department of Mayenne), Feb. 13, 1653, and died in May, 1726, at Charento. He accompanied M. Picquet, who was nominated bishop over the missions in Persia and Syria. He wrote La Bête à Sept Têtes (1693), against the Jesuits, for which he was imprisoned until 1699, and afterwards Le Chrétien Philosophe (Lyon, 1701, 12mo). See Biog. Universelle, iv, 492.

Billecoq, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French Dominican of Moreuil, in Picardy, who died at Abbeville, Oct. 19, 1711, aged seventy-eight, wrote, Instructions Familiales sur les Pratiques de la Vraie Dévotion (Abbeville, 1673):—L'Usage du Saint Sacrement, tiré de l'Ecriture, des Conciles, et des Pères (Amiens, 1690); and some other works.

Billfrith, an anchorite and goldsmith, who bound the copy of the Gospel written by bishop Eadfrith, is made a contemporary of St. Balthere, and lived about 740.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Billi (or Billy), NICCOLÒ and ANTONIO, two Italian engravers, lived about the year 1734. The following are their principal works: The Infant Jesus Sleeping; St. Philip Neri Kneeling before the Virgin; The Holy Family; The Flight into Egypt; The Cardinal Pompeo; Fredericus Zuccharus; Hans Holbein.

Billiard, MARIE ROSE JULIA, the foundress of the Sisters of Notre Dame, was born at Cuvilly, Picardy, France, in 1751. On Feb. 2, 1804, she, with Frances Blin and Catharine Duchatel, made the necessary vows, and promised to devote themselves to the education of orphans and homeless children. Through her strength of character and patient endurance, even through sufferings and hard trials, she labored constantly, and at her death in 1816 saw her order widely established. Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati introduced the Sisters of Notre Dame into the United States in 1840. On Jan. 1, 1872, the order numbered in this country 20 houses, 13,242 free scholars, 6517 Sunday scholars, 859 night scholars, 10,727 sodalities. In Belgium, England, United States, and Central America, there were at the same date 88 houses, 9996 day scholars, 45,146 free scholars, 12,671 Sunday scholars, 19,404 sodalities, 564 orphans. See Life of Mother Julia (N. Y. 1872); (N. Y.) Cuth. Almanac, 1873, p. 93.

Billiet, ALEXIS, a French prelate, was born in 1783.

In 1825 he was made bishop of Maurienne; in 1840, archbishop of Chambéry. In 1861 he was appointed cardinal, and died April 30, 1873, being at the time of his death senior of the French clergy and the oldest member of the college of cardinals. He wrote, Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire de Diocèse de Chambéry (1865). (B. P.)

Billings, Edward, a Unitarian minister, was born at Sunderland, Mass., and graduated at Harvard College in 1731. He was ordained at Belchertown in 1737, and dismissed in 1751. He was installed at Greenfield, Mass., March 28, 1754. He died in 1760. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 10.

Billings, Oliver, a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about the year 1795, and was in early life converted in Fayette, Me. He was ordained as an evangelist in 1800, and was not long after called to the pastorate of the church in Fayette. Of this church he was the acting pastor for more than twenty years, and senior pastor until his death, which occurred July 31, 1842.

He had a son, JOHN, who was one of the early students at Waterville, was licensed in 1825, ordained pastor of the church in Addison in 1826, where he remained seventeen years (1826-43). Subsequently he was pastor of the church in North Livermore a short time. See Millett, History of the Baptists of Maine, p. 436; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 392. (J. C. S.)

Billings, Silas, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., Aug. 10, 1804. He graduated from Yale College in 1829, when he entered the Princeton Theological Seminary and graduated in 1833. His first field of labor was in Prince George County, Va., near Petersburg, where he remained but a short time and removed to the valley of Virginia, where for nine years he had charge of the churches of Woodstock, Strasburg, and Cedar Creek. He afterwards lived and labored successively at Morgantown, West Va., and also at Brooklyn, N. Y. After leaving this charge he went to West Bloomfield, N. J., and returned to Virginia, where he took charge of the church at Duffields. After 1869 he resided in Winchester, in charge of a seminary for young ladies. He was a great sufferer for many years, but his energetic spirit overcame all obstacles, and for a long time he was a successful pastor and popular preacher. He died in Winchester, Va., Jan. 8, 1881. See (N. Y.) Observer, Jan. 20, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Billings, William, a Congregational minister, was born at Preston, Conn., Feb. 15, 1697. He graduated from Yale College in 1720, and was ordained pastor of the church in Hampton in 1723—the same time as the formation of the church. Here he remained till his death, May 20, 1733. A Fast-day Sermon of his was published posthumously, with a preface by Hale. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 180.

Billingsly, John Ashcum, a Baptist minister, was born in St. Mary's County, Md., April 24, 1770. When about fourteen years of age he removed to Virginia. He was a very witty and agreeable young man, and uncommonly active; having a fine ear for music, and being an excellent performer on the violin. When about twenty years of age he was awakened from his vain life, made a public profession of his faith in October, 1794, and at once fully identified himself with the cause of Christ as an active and zealous member of the Church. He was ordained to the work of the ministry in October, 1810, and became pastor of the church at Zoar, Orange Co., Va. Subsequently he ministered to other churches in his native state. He died Aug. 1, 1837, on his plantation called Salem, in Spottsylvania, near Fredericksburg. He was a popular, successful, and indefatigable preacher. Although not educated in the schools, he was always a student and reader of good books. It is said that few men in modern times have been instrumental in the conversion of more sinners or baptized more believing subjects. See Taylor, Virginia Baptist Ministers; Haynes, Baptist Cyclopædia, i, 96-99.

Billot, Jean, a French preacher, was born at Dole in 1709, and died at Macherans, in the diocese of Besançon, in 1797. He wrote Proves Réduits en Pratique pour les Dimanches et les Fêtes Principales de l'Année (1771; Lyons, 1785). These lectures, often republished, were translated into German (Augsburg, 1774). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Billuart, Charles René, a French theologian and preacher, was born at Revin, Ardennes, Jan. 8, 1685. He completed his studies at Charleville, was appointed professor at the College of Douay, entered the Dominican order, and became, in 1728, provincial of his order. He died Jan. 20, 1757. His principal works are, De Mente Ecclesiæ Catholicæ circa Accidentia Eucharistia Dissertatio Unica, adversus Ant. Lengrand (Liege, 1715):—Le Thomisme Vengé de sa Prétendue Condamnation par la Constitution Unigenitus (Brussels, 1720):—Lettre aux Docteurs de la Faculté de Théologie de Douay, avec des Réflexions, etc. (1723):—Examen Critique des Réflexions sur le Bref de N. S. P. le Pape Benoît XIII (1724). Of his writings one has especially become well known, the Summa S. Thomæ Hodiernis Academicum Moribus Accommodata, sive Cursus Theologicus juxta Mentem D. Thomæ (Liege, 1746-51, 29 vols. 8vo). This manual, which has often been printed in Italy, France, and Germany, and of which the author published an abridged edition in 1754, in 6 vols., has contributed not a little to develop in the Catholic schools the ideas and especially the spirit of the Doctor Angelicus, who was the favorite and theological ideal of Billuart. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Billups, Humphry, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Mathews County, Va., Sept. 10, 1786. He experienced conversion at the age of nineteen; received license to preach in 1812; and in 1837 entered the Virginia Conference. Both in the local ministry and in the itinerant ranks he abounded with earnest labor and abundant success. Age and infirmity finally compelled him to retire from active service, and he spent several years as a supernummate prior to his death, which occurred May 20, 1871. Mr. Billups had only the advantages of a rudimentary education, yet by persistent personal application he attained considerable excellence as a well-read preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1871, p. 530.

Billy (or Bile), Erar (or Erard), a French theologian of Lorraine, was born Jan. 10, 1610. He taught theology and mathematics at Caen. In 1644 he ventured to issue upon the simony and power of the popes certain propositions which brought against him violent replies, so that he was at length obliged to retract. He resolved to go to America as missionary, and died by shipwreck in 1645. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Billy (or Billi, Lat. Billius), Jacques de, a French abbot, who was born at Guise in 1535, and died at Paris, Dec. 25, 1581, wrote Anthologie Sacra ex Probatissimis utriusque Lingua Patribus Collecta, atque Octastichis Comprehensæ libri II; he also wrote notes on Gregory Nazianzen's work, which F. Morellus edited (Paris, 1709-11); he also published Joannes Damascenus: Opera Gr. et Lat. ex editione J. B. (ibid. 1619):—Isidorus Pelusiota: de Interpret. Div. Scripturæ Epistol. libri V Gr. et Lat., quorum III priores ex Interpretatione Jac. Billii (ibid. 1585). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 893, 895 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Billy, Jean de, a French theologian, was born at Guise about 1530. He was elder brother of Jacques and of Godefroy, pursued the ecclesiastical profession, obtained some benefices, and was at first very worldly in his mode of living; but having been rescued from death by fire, he resigned the abbey in his possession, and entered the Carthusian order. He was prior of Mont-Dieu and of Bourbon-lez-Guillon, where he died, June 30, 1580. He wrote, Des Sectes et des Hérésies de nostre Temps, etc.; translated from the Latin of Stanislas Hosius, bishop of Varmie in Poland (Paris, 1561):—Dialogue de la Perfection de Charité; translated from the Latin of Denis of Rickel, named also Dyonisius Carthusianus (ibid. 1570):—Homélie de Saint Jean Chrysostome, entitled Que Personne n'est Offensé de de Soi-même; avec deux Sermons de Saint Augustin, translated into French (ibid. 1751):—Le Manuel du Chevalier Chrétien; translated from the Latin of John of Lansperge (ibid. 1573):—Echortation au Peuple François pour Exercer les Œuvres de Misericorde Envers les Pauvres, etc. (ibid. 1572; 1584). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bilnimiki (lord of mysteries) is a frequent occurring title of the Assyrian deity Hea, the god of the under-world.

Bilo (or Pilo), an Armenian historian, was born at Dirag, in Armenia, in 643. He studied successfully theology and history, and distinguished himself among the scholars of his country, and obtained the friendship of Nerseh, governor-general of Armenia, to whom he gave useful counsel in the administration of the affairs of state. He died in 711. He wrote a translation of the Ecclesiastical History of Socrates into Armenian, and a History of the Patriarchs of Armenia. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bilocation is a miraculous property, which some of the canonized saints of the Church of Rome are said to possess, of appearing in two places at once, or of passing with the velocity of spirits from one place to another. See MIRACLES; WONDERS.

Bilskirner, in Norse mythology, was the palace of the god Thor in his kingdom Thrudwanger, being the largest building in the world. It had five hundred and forty saloons, but was full of windings and hallways, so that he who entered without a guide could not find his way out again.

Bilstein, JAN, a Flemish theologian, was born in 1592 at Verviers, Belgium. He aided in reorganizing the academy of Osnabruck, and died March 6, 1663, leaving several historical and poetical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bimatrix, in pagan mythology, is the Latin translation of the Greek Dimeter. It was the designation of Bacchus, as he was born twice, first of Semele, then of Jupiter, who sowed him in his thigh.

Bimatahi-Dahri, in Mongolian mythology, was the greatest and mightiest of the Assuri. The second ray of the six shining lights inspired him.

Bimel, MICHAEL. See BUMEL.

Bin was the Assyrian god of the atmosphere, and the biblical Rimmon.

Binace, JOSIAH, a Methodist helper, was born in 1841, and was converted while at school at Graham's Town, South Africa. He served the Wesleyan Methodist Church in South Africa as teacher, local preacher, and evangelist, and was accepted as a regular minister in 1879, but died in his first and only appointment, at Queenstown, Sept. 13, 1879. He won souls. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1880, p. 45.

Binch, JOHANNES, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Herford, in Westphalia, in 1586. He studied at Helmstädt and Giessen, and died at Herford, Feb. 20, 1671, as senior minister, where he had occupied the pastorate for thirty-eight years. He wrote, Die göttliche Bussposaune in 250 Predigten:—Catechismus Psalmoticus:—Lapis Offensionis (Rom. ix) ex Via Fidelium Remotus (against which N. Warendorp wrote his Lapis Resurrectionis Immotus):—Remed- dium Impietatis. See Unschuldige Nachrichten; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Binck, JACOB, a German engraver, was born at Cologne in 1504, and studied under Duer, and afterwards visited Rome, where he became a scholar of Marc' Antonio. The following are some of his principal plates: Adam Holding the Branch of a Tree; Eve with a Branch with Two Apples; The Seven Planets, represented by Figures; The Seven Virtues, Faith, Hope, Charity, Justice, Patience, Fortitude, and Temperance; David with the Head of Goliath; The Descent from the Cross. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bindachul, a town near Mirzapur, to the north of Bengal, in Hindûstan, where there is a temple dedicated to the sanguinary goddess Kali (q. v.). At this place religious ceremonies are constantly performed, and thousands of animals are offered in sacrifice. It is chiefly frequented by the Thugs (q. v.), or leagued murderers, who, before setting out on their cruel expeditions, visit the temple of the goddess, implore her aid, and, in the event of success, promise her a portion of the booty.

Bindeman, F. W., a German Reformed minister, was, in 1824, a student of Rev. J. William Dechaut, and by him recommended for ordination to the fathers; but owing to his rude and passionate conduct he was not deemed worthy to be a member, hence was excluded from all connection with the Church. It is not known when he died. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the German Ref. Church, iv, 475.

Binder, CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Göttingen in 1519, and studied at Tübingen. In 1543 he was pastor at Denkendorf, in 1545 at Stuttgart, in 1557 at Nürtingen, in 1563 general superintendent and abbot at Adelberg, where he also signed the Formula of Concord, and died Oct. 31, 1596.

His grandson, also named CHRISTOPH, was born at Rosswalden in 1575, and studied at Tübingen. In 1601 he was deacon at Caustadt, in 1608 superintendent and preacher at Stuttgart, and in 1610 member of consistory and court-preacher. Two years after he had received the degree of doctor of theology, in 1614, he was made general superintendent and abbot of Maulbrunn, and died June 3, 1616. He wrote, Theologia Scholastica:—Tractatus de Usuris:—De Jesuitarum Sophistica et Malis Artibus, quibus in Congressibus uti Solent. See Freheri, Theatrum Eruditorum; Fischlin, Memoria theolog. Württemberg.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bindrim, JOHANN GEORG, a German theologian, who died at Rostock in 1705 as professor of theology, is the author of, De Voce Hosianna:—De Sione Evangelica:—De Gradibus Excommunicationis Judæis olim Receptis:—De Characteribus Messie:—De Prophetis Illorumque Ordine. See Mecklenburgisches Gelehrten-Lexikon; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 143. (B. P.)

Binebtat was an Egyptian deity adored under the figure of a kneeling ram. His title was the spirit-lord of Teattu.

Biner, JOSEPH, a Jesuit of Germany, who died about 1778, left Apparatus Eruditionis ad Jurisprudentiam Præsertim Ecclesiasticam, partes XIII (5th ed. Augsburg, 1766-67, 7 vols. 4to).

Binet, Étienne, a French Jesuit, was born at Dijon in 1569, and died at Paris, as rector of the College of Clermont, July 4, 1639. He was a prolific writer, and his works are found in the Bibliothèque des Écrivains de la Compagnie de Jésus (edited by Augustin and Alois de Backer, Liege, 1853). Sotwell, in his Bibliotheca Scriptorum S. J., praises him highly; but Binet appears to have had more zeal and piety than talent, and few of his numerous works, enumerated by Papillon in the Bibl. des Auteurs de Bourgogne, call for any special notice. We must, however, except his Essai sur les Merveilles de la Nature (Rouen, 1621), which soon passed through two editions, and Abrégé des Vies des Principaux Fondateurs des Religions de l'Eglise, Représentés dans le Chœur de l'Abbaye de S. Lambert de Liesse en Huynauld (Antwerp, 1634, 4to), which was translated into Latin. We give the titles of some others of his works: Quel est le Meilleur Gouvernement, le Rigoureux ou le Doux, pour les Supérieurs de Religion?—De l'Etat Heureux et Malheureux des Ames Souffrantes de Purgatoire, et des Moyens Souverains pour n'y aller pas, etc.:—Méditations Affectives sur la Vie de la très-Sainte Vierge, Mère de Dieu (Antw. 1632):—Les Saintes Faveurs de Petit Jésus au Cœur qu'il Ayme et qui l'Ayme (Paris, 1626):—Le Chef-d'Œuvre de Dieu, ou les Souveraines Perfections de la Sainte Vierge sa Mère (edited by Jennesseaux, Paris, 1855). See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, iv, 499; Landou, Eccles. Dict. s. v. (B. P.)

Binet, François Isidore, a French theologian, was born at Niort in 1720. He was professor at the house of the Capuchins, where he was first provincial of the province of Touraine, and then guardian of the convent of Poitiers. He frequently preached in Poitou and the surrounding provinces, where his oratorical ability gained for him a desirable reputation. He died at the close of the 17th century. He wrote, Le Missionnaire Controversiste, or Cours Entier de Controverses (Poitiers, 1686).

His nephew, ISIDORE BINET, born at Niort in 1693, also entered the Capuchin order, of which he was twice provincial. A commendable orator, he went to Rome as preacher of the chapter-general of his order. He wrote a history of his voyage to Italy, in order to refute the erroneous reports of Misson, but before his death he demanded that his MS. should be burned. He died at Poitiers in 1779. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Binet, William, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Albany, was the officiating minister in the parish of New Castle, Pa., in 1857, and continued in that position until 1859, when he removed to Fort Smith, Ark., being employed in what was then known as the "Mission of the South-west." The following year, in the same missionary diocese, he served at Van Buren, Ark., and remained there until 1865. In 1866 he became rector of Grace Church, Canton, N. Y., and, after serving there about two years, resided in Canton without charge. Soon after, he removed to Benicia, Cal. A year after this, in 1871, he became principal of St. John's Institute, Sacramento, retaining that position until 1873, at which time he removed to New York city, without charge. In 1874 he officiated in Stockbridge, Mass., and in the following year was rector of Edward's-place School, in the same town. A short time previous to his death he was connected with the diocese of Albany. He died in the island of Jersey, Channel Isles, Feb. 1, 1877. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Bingham, Abel, a Baptist missionary among the Seneca and Ojibwa Indians, was born at Enfield, N. H., May 9, 1786. He was ordained at Wheatland, N. Y., in 1838, and was sent among the Ojibwas. In 1855 he resigned his connection with the mission and removed to Michigan. He died at Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 26, 1865. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1865, p. 658; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 100.

Bingham, George, an English clergyman, was born at Melcombe Bingham, in Dorsetshire, in 1715, and educated at Westminster School and at Christ Church, Oxford. He afterwards became fellow of All-Souls' College, and was some time proctor in the university. A few years later he was presented to the rectory of Pimperm, Dorset, and afterwards to that of More Crit-chil. He died at Pimperm, Oct. 11, 1800. His principal works are, A Vindication of the Doctrine and Liturgy of the Church of England (Oxford, 1774):—An Essay on the Millennium, etc. (Lond., 1804, 2 vols. 8vo):—and Essays, Disputations, and Sermons, with Memoirs of the Author's Life, by Peregrine Bingham (1804, 2 vols. 8vo). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bingham, Henry, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a native of Virginia. No particulars are recorded concerning his birth or life other than that he spent four years in the ministry, and was serious, faithful, zealous, humble, and successful. He died in 1789. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1789, p. 33.

Bingham, Hiram, a Congregational minister, was a native of Bennington, Vt. At the age of twenty-one he was converted, and began preparation for college with the Rev. Elisha Yale, D.D., of Kingsbury, N. Y., and graduated from Middlebury College in 1816. Three years afterwards he graduated from Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained at Goshen, Conn., Sept. 29, 1819, as a foreign missionary—the first ordination of a foreign missionary in Connecticut. In company with other missionaries, he sailed from Boston, Oct. 23, for the Sandwich Islands, the voyage occupying one hundred and sixty days. After an exploration of the islands, Mr. Bingham, in September, 1823, established himself at Honolulu on the island of Oahu; and thus began the first mission to the islands of the Pacific. He translated hymns, school-books, and large portions of Scripture into the language of Polynesia. On account of the failing health of his wife, he returned to the United States in 1840, and began to act as stated supply to various churches, particularly the church in Chester, Mass., and the Temple-street Church, New Haven, Conn. He died at New Haven, Nov. 11, 1869, aged eighty years. Mr. Bingham made a valuable contribution to missionary literature in a work entitled, A Residence of Twenty-one Years on the Sandwich Islands (Hartford, 1847). He also printed a little work, Burtimeus of the Sandwich Islands, published by the American Tract Society. See Cong. Quarterly, 1871, p. 593.

Bingham, Luther, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was graduated from Middlebury College in 1821. He was licensed by the Essex Association, Mass., in 1825, and served as pastor from 1825 to 1837 at Marietta, O. He was pastor in Cincinnati from 1837 to 1843, and at Williston, Vt., 1843 to 1851; and a journalist, from 1851 to 1877. In 1855 he joined the Reformed Dutch Church, and was colporteur as well as connected with the Board of Publication. He died in 1877. He wrote much, both in the newspapers and in books. For eighteen years he was the author of the reports of the Fulton-street prayer-meeting in the N. Y. Observer and Christian Intelligencer. He wrote "certain chapters" in Prime's Power of Prayer. He published, Army Life:—Hospital Life:—Living Words from Living Men:—The High Mountain Apart:—The Young Quartermaster:—The Little Syracuse Boy:—The Little Drummer Boy:—Out of Darkness into Light, etc. "These practical and simple books did an immense amount of good." See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church of America (3d ed.), p. 183.

Bingley, Charles, an English Congregational minister, the son of a gentleman farmer, was born at Hemsworth Lodge, near Ackworth, Yorkshire, in 1813. In early life he gave himself to God, joined the Church at Queen-street chapel, Leeds, and in 1837 entered Aire-dale College. His first settlement was at Middlesborough, Yorkshire, where he was ordained April 28, 1842. Thence he removed to Creve, thence to Tockholes, Lancashire, and thence to Droydsden, where he died, May 30, 1862. Though naturally retiring, Mr. Bingley possessed a moral courage that was equal to every demand made upon it. His conduct, spirit, and teachings were in harmony. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 208.

Bingley, William, an English clergyman, was a native of Yorkshire, and was educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1799, and took holy orders. He died in 1823. Among his published works are, North Wales; including its Scenery, Antiquities, Customs, etc. (Lond. 1804, 2 vols. 8vo.):—Memoirs of British Quadrupeds, etc. (1809):—Animated Nature (1815):—Useful Knowledge (1816). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Binna. See BEONNA.

Binney, Amos, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Hull, Mass., Oct. 30, 1802. He experienced conversion at the age of sixteen; received a common-school education, and studied one year at New Market Academy; was licensed to preach, and entered upon mercantile business; and in 1826 joined the New England Conference. In its active work he did noble consecrated service until 1854, when he located. In 1857 he became supernumerary, and remained such until his decease in New Haven, Conn., March 29, 1878. Mr. Binney was characterized by great fidelity to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and by tireless industry in every department of pastoral labor. He had a peculiar insight into the religious wants and difficulties of the common people, hence the publishing of his Theological Compend, which has been translated into the Arabic, Chinese, German, Swedish, Bulgarian, Spanish, Italian, and Japanese languages. His last eighteen years were spent in publishing his People's Commentary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 47.

Binney, Joseph Getchell, D.D., a distinguished Baptist missionary, was born in Boston, Dec. 1, 1807. At an early age he became a Christian, and united with a Congregational Church. He pursued his preparatory studies in his native city, and entered Yale College, where he remained but a short time, on account of ill-health. Soon after he became a Baptist, and was received into the Baptist Church in East Cambridge, Mass., which gave him a license to preach, Oct. 15, 1830. His ordination to the work of the ministry and the pastorate of the Church in West Boylston took place May 16, 1832, in which place, and for a brief period in Southbridge, Mass., he was pastor for several years, and then removed to Savannah, Ga., to assume the pastorate of the Baptist Church in that city. Here his ministry was a happy and successful one. He was called in 1843 to lay the foundations of a theological school for the Karens in Maulmain, Burmah. He reached Burmah in the month of April, 1844, and, after a year devoted to the study of the Karen language, he opened the theological school at a place near Maulmain. Here, for five years, he labored with great zeal and success in training a native ministry for the Karen churches, when the ill-health of Mrs. Binney compelled him to return to the United States, where he remained not far from eight years, acting during most of this period as pastor of two churches, one in Elmira, N. Y., and the other at Augusta, Ga., and, for a time, as president of Columbian College at Washington, D. C. He was reappointed as a missionary in the summer of 1858, and resumed his labors as the president of the Karen Theological Seminary, which soon afterwards was removed to Rangoon. Here Dr. Binney performed the duties of his office from May, 1859, till November, 1875, with rare fidelity, and left the impress of a character of great energy and devotion to the cause of his Master upon the young men who came under his charge. He established a college for the Karens on the 28th of May, 1872, with three native teachers and seventeen students. An attack of paralysis in 1864, and another in the fall of 1875 compelled him to pass the winter of 1875-76 in Italy, and the following summer he returned to his native land. He sailed from New York, Oct. 6, 1877, by the overland route to the East, but died on board the steamship "Amarapoor," Nov. 26, 1877, and his remains were committed to the deep.

Among American missionaries of all denominations, Dr. Binney took a high rank. His personal appearance was such as to arrest attention at once. Seriousness, earnestness, thorough consecration to his work were written in every line of a face which, once seen, would not soon be forgotten. He published, in the Karen language, a work on Systematic Theology, and another on Preaching. He left also several works in manuscript, which were nearly or quite ready to be placed in the printer's hands. He was a hard, diligent worker, and doubtless shortened his life by his severe application to the tasks he had undertaken to accomplish. He guarded well his lips, and was sober and dignified in his demeanor, and his presence commanded respect. See Baptist Missionary Magazine, lviii, 65-69. (J. C. S.)

Binney, Thomas, D.D., LL.D., an eminent English Congregational minister, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, April 30, 1798. In early life he was engaged in secular employment, but found time for reading and composition, and, by the help of a Presbyterian clergyman, acquired a good knowledge of Latin and Greek. He was brought to Christ when he was young, and he early sought admission to the Christian ministry. His student-life was spent at Wymondley, Herts, and his first settlement was at Bedford, where he continued but twelve months. Mr. Binney was ordained in 1824 to the pastoral office at Newport, Isle of Wight. Here he preached five years, and here began his career as an author, by publishing a memoir of Rev. Stephen Morell, an intimate and beloved friend. In 1829 Mr. Binney accepted a call to the pastorate at the Weigh House, London, and then entered upon a course of usefulness and popularity, which for forty years he sustained with almost undiminished vigor. During the last two years of his life he occupied, with acceptance, the chair of homiletics at New College. He died of heart disease, at Clapton, Feb. 24, 1874. Dr. Binney was endowed both by nature and grace with many noble qualities. His presence was commanding—a lofty stature, a speaking countenance, and an intellectual brow. His mind matched his body; it was of great force, of iron grasp, keen and logical. He published, Closet and the Church:—Four Discourses on the Christian Ministry:—Illustrations of the Practical Power of Faith:—Sermons Preached at Weigh House Chapel:—Service of Song in the House of the Lord:—Ultimate Design of the Ministry; besides hymns, tracts, and various articles. Many of his Sermons were edited by Allen (Lond. 1875). See Memorial by Stoughton (Lond. 1874); (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1875, p. 313; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Lights of the Mod. Pulpit (Lond. 1852), p. 49 sq.

Binning, Hugh, a Scotch theologian, was born in the County of Ayr, in 1627. He was educated in the University of Glasgow, and distinguished himself by his talent for oratory, and by the power of his logic. It was this that rendered him celebrated as a preacher and controversialist. In a conference which was held in the presence of Cromwell, between the Presbyterians and Independents, Binning so victoriously refuted the latter as greatly to please the future Protector, who demanded his name. Binning died in 1654, while minister of Govan, near Glasgow, after having been regent and professor of moral philosophy in the University of Glasgow. He wrote a Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans (Edinb. 1735). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Binning, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at or near Hornsea, Yorkshire. He was converted at the age of fifteen, entered the ministry in 1817, labored in Jamaica, W. I., until 1826, when he returned to England, and died Dec. 7, 1857, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. His preaching, like his character, was simple, faithful, earnest. See Minutes of the Brit. Conference, 1858.

Binns, Charles, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Waterford, Ireland, in 1831. He inherited the Irish characteristic of warmth, both in affection and disposition. Being left an orphan when a small child, he was brought up by his uncle William Binns, of Poole. He was converted and became a member of the Society of Friends, but afterwards resigned his membership, assigning as his reason that they did not realize the blessing and efficacy of the atonement of Christ. In the year 1863 he sought readmission into the Society of Friends. The meridian years of his life were devoted to the education of the young, for which he had a peculiar gift, and in which he was very successful. He died Nov. 2, 1875. See Annual Monitor, 1877, p. 24.

Binns, Henry, an English Quaker minister, was born at Sunderland, Jan. 19, 1810. He began his ministerial labors when about fifty-five years of age. In 1865 he removed to Croydon, where a wider field of usefulness was opened up to him. "He often felt attracted in Gospel love to pay pastoral visits in various parts of Great Britain; and in 1869 he united with William Robinson in a visit of this character to some parts of the United States, embracing Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, and to Canada." He died at Croydon, Jan. 17, 1880. See Annual Monitor, 1881, p. 22.

Binns, Joseph, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London in 1774. In early life he was exposed to many temptations, and yielded at times to their influence. During the greater part of his life humility and love were conspicuous in his demeanor. While he had many peculiarities, and some faults, there is good reason to believe that he sought to "adorn the doctrine of our Saviour in all things." He died Feb. 19, 1836. See Annual Monitor, 1837, p. 6.

Binns, Mary, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Poole, England, in 1775. Through a long course of years she was an earnest and devoted follower of her Saviour, and was very successful in inducing others to accept the offers of the Gospel. For many years she was an invalid, consequently her opportunities for doing good were much limited. She died in 1851. See Annual Monitor, 1852, p. 8.

Binsfeld, Petrus, a Flemish theologian, was originally from Luxembourg. At Rome he received the degree of doctor of theology, became canon of Trèves, grand-vicar of the archbishop, and was consecrated bishop in partibus. He died of the plague, Nov. 24, 1598. He wrote, Enchiridion Theologiæ Pastoralis (Douay, 1630 and 1636);—Commentarium in Lat. Decret. de Injuriis et Damno;—Comment. ad Tit. de Simonia;—Commentaria in Tit. Cod. de Maleficiis et Mathematicis, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bion, Jean-de-Dieu-René, a French theologian, was born at Niort in 1704. He entered the ecclesiastical profession, became rector of Notre Dame of Niort, and died May 7, 1774. He bequeathed his large library to his native city, the beginning of which was established there, and which the municipal body was eager to open to the public. Bion united with the talent for composing excellent discourses, that of reading well what he had written. Many of his sermons are preserved in the Journal Chrétien. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bion, Jean François, a Huguenot theologian, was born at Dijon in 1668. He was a member of the Catholic clergy and rector of the village of Ursy, and was appointed chaplain of La Superbe, a galley where Protestant prisoners were detained. Bion, touched by their patience, embraced their doctrines, went to Geneva in 1704, then to England, where he was placed in charge of a school. He left this position in order to become chaplain of an English church in Holland. The date of his death is not known. He wrote, Relation des Tourments que l'on fait Souffrir aux Protestants qui sont sur les Galères de France (Lond. 1708; Amsterdam, 1709);—Essais sur la Providence et sur la Possibilité de la Résurrection (Hague, 1719); this work, given as a translation, is really the work of Bion:—Relation Exacte et Sincère du Sujet qui a Excité la Funeeste Tumulte de la Ville de Thorn (Amsterdam);—Traité des Morts et des Ressuscitans; translated from the Latin of Thomas Burnet (Rotterdam, 1731);—Histoire des Quékistes de Bourgogne (1709). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smiles, Huguenots, p. 400.

Biondo, Flavio. See FLAVIUS BLONDUS.

Biozuni, in Slavonic mythology, was an idol of the Moscovites, which they worshipped even in the 9th century. It is represented with a two-horned head of a cow, and long, projecting tongue, sitting with naked body and large breasts of a woman.

Figure of Biozuni.

Bippus, John, a minister of the German Reformed Church, was born at Boll, Württemberg, June 2, 1815. He came to America in 1837, and settled in Tuscarawas County, O. Subsequently he removed to Crawford County. He was licensed in 1864, and ordained and installed pastor of the church at Galion, where he labored four years. Receiving no call elsewhere, he lived privately at Leesville, O., until his death, May 21, 1872. He was a zealous, faithful minister. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 40.

Birch, Andreas, a Danish Protestant theologian, was born at Copenhagen, Nov. 6, 1758, and died as doctor of theology and bishop of Aarhus, Oct. 25, 1829. He published, Varie Lectiones ad Textum Ach. App. Epp. Catholicarum et Pauli e Codd. Græcis MSS. Bibliotheca Vaticana, Barberina, Augustin. Eremitar. Romæ, Borgiana Velutina, Neapolitana Regia, Laurent., S. Marci Venetorum, Vindob. Cæsareæ et Iluuniensis Regiæ Collectæ et Editæ (Hafniæ, 1798);—Quatuor Evangelia Græce, cum Variantibus a Textu Lectionibus Codd. MSS. etc. (ibid. 1788);—Varie Lectiones ad Textum Apocalypses ex Codd. Gr. MSS. etc. (ibid. 1800);—Kritisk Beskrivelse over græske Haandskrifter af det Nye Testamente (ibid. 1785);—Dissertatio de Censu Quirino (ibid. 1790);—Ætvarium Cod. Apocryphi N. T. Fabriciani, Cent. Plura Inedita Alia ad Fidem Codd. Emendatius Expressa, Fasc. i (ibid. 1804). See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 44, 100, 247, 275; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 152; Davidson, Biblical Criticism, ii, 130, 276, 441. (B. P.)

Birch, Henry (1), an English Congregational minister, was born at Sheffield in 1800. He was converted in early life; was very useful in Sunday-school teaching, village preaching, and in holding cottage services. He was recommended to the college at Blackburn, where he studied five years, and passed through his course with great credit. Mr. Birch was ordained at Keighley in 1825. His ministry having terminated in that place, he settled successively at Fordingbridge, Paisley, and Ledbury. His last years were spent at Wadsley, where he died in 1874. Mr. Birch was a man of clear and sound theological opinions, and an author of considerable ability. Among other valuable works he published a volume entitled Positive Theology. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 317.

Birch, Henry (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Birmingham, July 29, 1812. Through the efforts of a female servant and his mother's death, he early in life became a Christian, and joined the Church in Carr's Lane in 1832 or 1833. He greatly desired to go as a missionary to India, but the delicate state of his health hardly made it advisable. He commenced his studies for the ministry under the Rev. S. Barber of Bridgenorth. In September, 1837, he entered Rotherham College. He was ordained March 30, 1842, over the Church at Providence Chapel, Driffild, Yorkshire, and remained pastor there till his death, Oct. 21, 1856. Many souls were converted as the result of his labors. His preaching was scriptural, clear, and greatly calculated for instruction and edification. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1857, p. 168.

Birch, Peter, an English clergyman, was born in 1652, and became prebendary of Westminster in 1689. He died about 1700. He published a Sermon before the House of Commons (1689); and another (1694). See Le Neve, Fasti, iii, 362; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bircherodius, Jacob, a Danish Protestant theologian, who died at Copenhagen as doctor of theology and member of consistory, June 13, 1688, is the author of Jonæ Proph. Liber Illustratus (Hafnia, 1686):—Obadias Exegetice Expositus (ibid.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 119. (B. P.)

Bircherodius, Janus, a Danish Protestant theologian, was born at Birkerød, in Zealand, in 1623. He studied at Copenhagen and Leyden, and was appointed professor of philosophy at Copenhagen in 1658. In 1660 he was made professor of Greek, and in 1668 he was appointed to the theological chair. He took his degree as doctor of theology in 1675, and died in 1686. He wrote, Diatrise de Legis Mosaicæ Divina Origine et Auctoritate:—Fides Evæ de Messie Divina Natura:—Exercitationes contra Atheos. See Pipping, Memoriæ Theologorum; Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Birchett, HENRY, a Methodist Episcopal minister, of whose birth or early life no information remains, was in the ministry between five and six years in Virginia. He died in February, 1794. He was a courageous, consecrated minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1794, p. 54.

Birchington (Brychington, or Bryckington), STEPHEN, a Benedictine monk of the church of Canterbury, died about 1407. He wrote a History of the Archbishops of Canterbury to the Year 1368, published in Wharton's Anglia Sacra; and is believed to have written histories of the Kings of England to 1367, of the Roman Pontiffs to 1378, and of the Roman Emperors to 1378. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Birckbeck, SIMON, an English divine, was born in 1584, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. In 1607 he took holy orders, and became distinguished for his patristic and scholastic knowledge. In 1617 he became vicar of Gilling and of Forcet, in Yorkshire, and died in September, 1656. His principal work was The Protestant's Evidence, taken out of Good Records (Lond. 1634). He was also the author of a work on the Four Last Things (1655). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bird (as a Christian symbol). The birds represented in the earliest Christian art are generally distinguished by their species. See DOVE; EAGLE; PHENIX, etc. This is not only the case in the early sarcophagi and frescos of the catacombs, but it is specially remarkable in the first Gothic works of the Lombard churches in the north of Italy. But in the very earliest tombs birds assignable to no particular species are introduced, apparently with symbolic purpose. They occur so often on tombs, with or without the palm-branch, that they may clearly be taken as images of the released soul seeking its home in heaven. Aringhi take the lightness and aerial nature of the bird as a symbol of the aspiration of faithful spirits (see also Psa. cxxiii, 6, of the released soul). Bede looks on the bird also as a sign of the resurrection. Caged birds are occasionally found in paintings or other representations. They are supposed to represent the human soul in the prison of the flesh, or they may be emblems of the imprisonment of a martyr. Martigny describes a mosaic in the tribune of Sta. Maria in Transtevere, in Rome, where one of these cages is placed near the prophet Jeremiah, with inscription "Christ the Lord was taken in our sins;" and another by Isaiah, with the words "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bring forth a son"—referring thus to the passion and incarnation of our Lord.

The symbolism of the cross by a bird's outspread wings is Tertullian's. Herzog conjectures that the pictures or carvings of birds with flowers and fruits combined are symbolic of Paradise. In early Gallic Christian MSS. nondescript birds are found almost everywhere, generally in pairs on each side of the monogram of Christ, and almost always with the letters A ω, which appear more frequently in the ancient documents of Christian France. Pairs of drinking birds, peacocks, and also of conventional shape, are still to be seen among the most ancient fragments of Byzantine domestic sculpture in Venice. They may be carried back to the 11th or 12th century, perhaps; at all events, they are clearly decorative repetitions of the bird-symbols in the catacombs and earlier monuments.

Bird, Caleb, an English Congregational minister, was born in 1806. He labored thirty-five years in the Christian ministry—ten at Warrington, Lancashire, and twenty-five at Margate, Kent, where he died, Dec. 10, 1866. As a preacher, Mr. Bird was earnest and faithful; as a man, he had an unstained character. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 251.

Bird, Charles Smith, an English divine, was born at Liverpool, May 28, 1795. He studied law in his youth, and after his conversion entered Cambridge, in 1817, where he graduated in 1820. In 1821 he was offered the principalship of the New Royal College at Halifax, Nova Scotia; but, declining, took a party of young students, one of whom was Lord Macaulay, into Wales. In 1838 he took clerical duty at Mapledurham, and while there wrote Tracts for the Times and A Plea for the Reformation; placing him at once before the public as a controversialist of the first order. In 1843 he accepted the vicarage of Gainsborough, and in 1859 was collated to the chancellorship of Lincoln Cathedral, where he served the Church until his decease, Nov. 9, 1862. He also published Lectures on the Church Catechism (Lond. 1841). See Christian Observer, December, 1862, p. 960; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bird, Edward, an eminent English painter, was born at Wolverhampton, April 12, 1772. His father, a clothier by trade, was a man of sense and information, and gave him a fair education. A family tradition declares that he began to sketch at the age of four, and that his passion for drawing called him up at early dawn, and made the figured furniture and walls of his home subjects of continual washing and scrubbing. He was privately encouraged by his eldest sister, and produced his first composition worthy of notice in his fourteenth year—an imaginary interview between the earl of Leicester and the daughters whom Miss Lee conferred on Mary queen of Scots, in her novel, The Recess. When his father saw that his love of drawing was incurable he became anxious to turn it to some account, but could think of nothing better than apprenticing him to a maker of tea-trays in Birmingham; these accordingly it became the boy's business to embellish, at which he soon became famous. Thus self-instructed, at the age of about thirty he removed to Bristol and opened a drawing-school, employing his intervals in producing all kinds of sketches, both serious and comic, such as The Interior of a Volunteer's Cottage, and Clowns dancing in an Ale-house. Later, on visiting London and studying the historical pictures of the great painters, he dedicated his pencil to the illustration of sublime passages in the Bible, and scenes of religious tragedy which the Reformation furnished; such as The Fortitude of Job, The Death of Sapphira, The Crucifixion, and The Burning of Ridley and Latimer. As premature old age crept on he was neglected, and finally died Nov. 2, 1819, and was buried in a cloister of Bristol Cathedral. Mr. Bird was in stature below the middle size, and had a mild, expressive, winning countenance. Towards the close of his life he lost his bright geniality, and grew dark and melancholy. His earlier works have an original and unborrowed air, but his later compositions were but little above failures. See Harper's Family Library, "Lives of Painters and Sculptors," ii, 208.

Bird, Francis (1), an English sculptor, was born in 1667. He executed, among other works, the statue of queen Anne, in the front of St. Paul's; the Conversion of St. Paul, on the pediment; and the bass-reliefs under the portico. His most important work, however, was the fine monument of Dr. Bushy, in Westminster Abbey. He died in 1721.

Bird, Francis (2), a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in 1785. He entered the South Carolina Conference in 1804, located in 1808, re-entered in 1849, and, after laboring one or two years, was put on the supernumerated list, which relation he sustained until his decease, Nov. 17, 1861. Mr. Bird was conspicuous for his devout Christian life, and faithfulness and usefulness in the ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1861, p. 341.

Bird, Isaac, a Congregational minister and missionary, was born at Salisbury, Conn., June 19, 1793. His preliminary education was acquired at the Castle-ton Academy, Vt. In 1816 he graduated at Yale College, and, after having taught one year at West Nottingham, Md., he graduated at Andover Theological Seminary in 1820. During the following two years, he was agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. His ordination occurred at North Bridgewater, Mass., Oct. 31, 1821; and he sailed for Malta, Dec. 9, 1822. From 1822 to 1836 he was a missionary in Syria, and in October of the latter year returned to America, resuming his agency for the American Board of Commissioners till 1838. He was acting professor of sacred literature in the Gilmanton Theological Seminary for six years from 1838, and was elected to the full professorship in 1844. From 1846 to 1869 he was teacher in a family school at Hartford, Conn., when he removed to Great Barrington, Mass., without charge. He died June 13, 1876. His published works are, Thirteen Letters to the Maronite Bishop of Beirut:—The Jewish Prisoner (Boston, 1860):—The Martyr of Lebanon (ibid. 1864):—Bible Work in Bible Lands (Presbyterian Board, 1872). See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 410.

Bird, John, an English prelate of the 17th century, was born at Coventry, Warwickshire. He was educated a Carmelite at Oxford; became the thirty-first and last provincial of his order; preached some sermons before Henry VIII against the primacy of the pope, for which he was preferred to be successively bishop of Ossory, Ireland, Bangor, in Wales, and Chester, England (see Godwin [bp.], Lives of the Bishops). John Bale, however, contemporary with Bird, and also bishop of Ossory, names him not as bishop of Ossory, but "Episcopum Pennecensem in Hibernia" (De Scripturis Britannicis). Bale also says that in the reign of Mary "he returned to the vomit of popery;" but in the first year of her reign he was ousted from his bishopric for being married, and all that we know after is that, at the examination of Thomas Hawkes, martyr, Bird brought Bonner wine and apples, probably a present for a ne noceat. He was apparently complacent to the regnant faith, enough to save his head, but there seems to be no evidence that he was a thorough-paced Romanist. He was a little man, lived to a great age, died in 1655, and was buried in Chester. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 279.

Bird, John Cox, an English Congregational minister, was born at Thame, Oxfordshire, in 1845. He was educated at Howard House, Oxford County School, and afterwards held a position in the London post-office. He began his ministerial labors as a home missionary, and was stationed as pastor at Hatfield soon after, where he remained until the close of his life, being about six years. His death occurred in 1879. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 308.

Bird, Mark B., a minister of the English Wesleyan connection, was born in London in 1807. He was converted early in life, and called into the ministry. In 1833 he was appointed to the Evesham Circuit. The year following he offered himself for missionary service, and was sent to Jamaica, where he labored four years, impaired health causing his return to England. A year's work on Ipswich Circuit so improved his health that he felt ready to return. Accordingly, in 1839 he was sent to Hayti, where he labored nearly forty years. He returned in 1879, spent some months in Alderney, and in July of 1880, being in very feeble health, removed to Jersey, where he died very suddenly, Aug. 23 of the same year. "In prosperity and adversity he clung to his post of duty with a moral heroism worthy of the highest commendation." "He was a plain, practical, faithful, and thoroughly evangelical preacher, and specially solicitous for the spiritual welfare of the young. During the whole course of his ministry, his labors were greatly owned of God." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 13.

Bird, P. Gould, a Scotch Congregational minister, was born in the village of Blantyre Works, near Glasgow, Jan. 20, 1838. He was a member of the Underston United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow, and became a missionary to Samoa, where he died, Aug. 22, 1864. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 236.

Bird, Thomas Fairfoot, an English Congregational minister, was born at Blyth, Northumberland, in 1843. He emigrated to Australia with his parents at the age of fourteen. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1865. In 1870 he went to Tasmania and officiated on the New Norfolk Circuit, but while there left the Wesleyans and joined the Congregationalists. In 1872 he accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Collingwood, and was inducted in February, 1873. Here he remained pastor until his death, April 24, 1876. Mr. Bird had great originality and breadth of mental view, and was a valuable contributor to the secular and religious press. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 346.

Bird, William (1). See BYRD.

Bird, William (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Stourport, April 11, 1781. He was converted at eighteen, entered the ministry in 1806, and exercised a successful ministry for forty-five years; retired in 1851, and died at Oldham, Sept. 7, 1869. Mr. Bird's intellectual powers were acute, masculine, and discriminating. He was an extensive reader, a vigorous thinker, a sound theologian, and a fluent speaker. His racy and epigrammatic sayings often became household words, or were admired as gems of wisdom. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1871, p. 673.

Bird, William Harrison, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Fayette County, near Lexington, Ky., May 31, 1814. He prosecuted his studies at Mission Institute, near Quincy, and applied to the Salt River Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and was licensed by them April 6, 1844. He was ordained by the Rushville Presbytery, Sept. 30, 1845, and labored in that Church a year and seven months, part of the time at Bernadotte and part at Table Grove; at the latter place he organized a Church in 1845. Later he had a circuit including Rushville, Schuyler Co. He was not satisfied, and took his dismission from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; attended a meeting of the Schuyler Presbytery at Quincy, and was received into that body in 1846. In the fall of that year he united with Alton Presbytery, was installed pastor of the Vergennes Church in 1847, and in 1853 of the Old Ducoign Church. His subsequent fields of labor were Mt. Vernon, Vandalia, Bethel, Sandoval, and Bethel again. In these latter places he served as supply pastor. He died at Woodburn, Ill., April 15, 1877. His preaching was uniformly profitable, and was often attended with great unction and power. See Norton, Hist. of Presb. Church in Illinois.

Birde, JOHN. See BYRDE.

Birdsall, RUTH, wife of William Birdsall, was an elder in the Society of Friends (Orthodox). She died at Macedon, near Farmington, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1834, aged sixty-three years. See The Friend, viii, 68.

Biretta (Ital., from πύρρος, red) is a cap so called from the color of the fur, its original material. The cappa was also called a birrus, and worn with a fur hood to cover the head. In 1281 copes were ordered by archbishop Peckham not to be worn biretted behind and before, that is, without folds (another meaning of birrus), and not slit down the back or the centre in front. The earlier birrus, a cloak, as Sozomen explains it, loose and of woollen material, was usually red in color, and common to all the clergy. St. Cyprian wore a beros, together with his tunic, and the habit is alluded to under the same name by the Council of Gangra. St. Austin speaks of a precious birrus, probably made of rich silk. At the coronation of William and Mary some of the clergy wore square caps, resembling flat-topped birettas. The biretta, a skull-cap, is mentioned in 1298 as the instrument of investiture of a rector by the archbishop of Canterbury. Birrus was also a tippet worn on the tunic, and sometimes buttoned over the chest, or else flowing over the shoulders: it was used by the clergy, of a ruddy black or brown, or more usually fire-red color, as its name, purros, as an adjective, implies; but as a substantive, indicating a dress, it was spelled beros. It had sometimes a hood attached to it, and is represented by the modern moz-zetta.

A covering, similar in many respects to that represented in the illustration, was universally used by clerics about the 16th century, but afterwards was changed and modified in different countries, though retaining all its main and marked features. The ordinary Roman biretta is a square, stiff-sided cap, with curved ridges, and a tassel at the top, commonly made of black cloth or stuff, and of the same material as the cleric's cassock. Hence it is usually of black for priests, violet for bishops, and scarlet for cardinals. Birettas with four ridges are sometimes assumed by professors of theology; and those worn by doctors of canon law in some parts of Spain and Germany are made of black velvet. See BIRRUS.

Biretta.

Birge, CHESTER, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bolton, Conn., Sept. 20, 1796. He graduated at Yale College in 1825, at the New Theological Seminary in 1828, and was ordained by the New Haven Congregational Association as pastor of the Congregational Church at North Greenwich. In 1830 he removed to New Philadelphia, O., and joined the Trumbull Presbytery. He died May 4, 1861. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 177.

Birid, in Mongolian mythology, is the general name of monsters. Their kingdom, Biridian Orron, lies five hundred miles under our world, and their ruler, Obtorgoin-Sang (elephant of the air), is one of the Assuri, on whom the fifth ray of the six lights of Boddissaddo-Chutuktu, the saviour of mankind, fell. Herli Khan, the ruler of the infernal region, lives there in a palace surrounded by sixteen iron walls, and this lies in the capital city, which is in the centre of the kingdom.

Birinus, Saint, the first bishop of the West Saxons, is said by Bede (Hist. Eccl. iii, 7) to have undertaken, by the advice of pope Honorius, the conversion of the interior of England, and for this work was consecrated by Asterius, bishop of Genoa. He landed in Wessex in 634, and, finding the people to be heathen, decided to stay and preach among them. The king, Cynegils, was one of his first converts, and under his protection and that of Oswald of Northumbria he fixed his see at Dorchester, Oxfordshire, on the border of Wessex and Mercia. The latter kingdom, then under Penda, afforded a field for his missionary labors. He died in or about 650; and was buried at Dorchester. His remains were translated by bishop Haedde to Winchester about 686, and he is commemorated Dec. 3. The Winchester historians add that he was a Benedictine monk of the monastery of St. Andrew at Rome, that he dedicated the Church of the Holy Trinity, Winchester, in the twelfth year of his pontificate, and died in the fourteenth. The canons of Dorchester claimed his relics, asserting that Birinus had never been translated. The parish of Kilbirnie, Scotland, is named from St. Birinus, but no fair marks his day. There is a Kilbirnie Loch at the west end of the parish of Beith; and the parish Dumbarny probably takes its name from this saint. See Forbes, Kal. Scott. Saints, p. 279 sq.

Birkbeck, MARY, a minister for many years of the Society of Friends, was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1753. Little is known of her life, but enough to show that she was pre-eminently pious and useful. She died in peace April 7, 1830. See Annual Monitor, 1831, p. 8.

Birkby, JOHN, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1792. He graduated at Rotherham College, and was ordained by the Congregationalists. He served in England, Earl Shelton, Leicester, Tockholes, Lancaster; in America, Hanover, N. H., 1835-40; Gansevoort, Saratoga Co., N. Y., 1840-45. He died in 1861. He was rather timid and reserved, not covetous of prominence or notoriety. He seldom took part in discussion, but, when he was drawn out by the strength of his convictions, he spoke with point, propriety, and power, revealing a clear head, logical intellect, and a hoard of wealth and resources which proved him to be a man of vigorous and independent mind. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 183.

Birkett, EDWARD, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Kendall, Westmoreland, England, Jan. 4, 1812. He gave himself to Christ at the age of fourteen; was soon licensed to exhort, and four years later to preach; emigrated to America in 1835, and immediately began his ministerial labors in connection with the Pittsburgh Conference. On the formation of the Erie Conference in 1836, he became a member of it, and two years later was transferred to the Pittsburgh Conference, wherein he labored faithfully, with three years' exception as superannuate, until 1872, when he took for a third and last time a superannuate relation, which he sustained until his death at Mount Union, O., Aug. 13, 1878. Mr. Birkett was not strong physically, but attained a superior mental power. He was sound in faith, and steady in purpose. His sermons were full of thought, chaste and elegant. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 47.

Birkey, ABNER, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in 1806. He was pastor of the German Reformed Church in Detroit, Mich., 1849-52. He then served the Second German Reformed (Dutch) Church in New York city, 1852-65. He died in 1867. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 183.

Birkowsky, a noted Polish preacher, was born at Leopold in 1566, and died at Cracow in 1636, leaving sermons, etc., which were published in several volumes (Cracow, 1620-32), and mark the golden age of Polish literature. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Birley, GEORGE, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Bradwell, Derbyshire, Nov. 22, 1788. He united with the Church in his twenty-first year, was received into the itinerancy in 1812, retired in 1857, and died at Market-Rasen, May 18, 1867. Mr. Birley's sermons were plain, faithful expositions, indicating vigor of thought and careful preparation. In labors, he was more abundant; in piety, practical; and in reading, indefatigable. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 26.

Birnbaum, CHRISTIAN GOTTHELF, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Dresden, May 28, 1651. He studied at different universities; in 1683 was deacon at Zwickau, and accompanied Prince Johann George IV as chaplain through Germany, the Netherlands, France, and England. In 1687 he was made superintendent of Colditz, and in 1694 of Grimma. In 1699 he received the degree of doctor of theology at Leipsic; in 1703 was pastor at Prenzlau, and in 1709 at New Ruppin, where he died in 1722. He wrote, De Liberatione a Lege per Christum Facta:—De Impotentia Virium Humanarum in Spiritualibus. See Dietmann, Chursächsische Priestersch. ii, 1081; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Biroet (or Biroat), JACQUES, a French theologian, a native of Bordeaux, was prior of Beussan, of the order of Clugny, counsellor and preacher to the king. He died about 1666. He wrote a large number of sermons, which have been printed in several volumes. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Birrell, CHARLES MITCHELL, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1810. He commenced his ministry in Liverpool in 1836, and remained there thirty-six years (from 1836 to 1872). He was very prominent and influential in his denomination, and his counsels were highly respected. He died at Blackheath, Dec. 16, 1880. (J. C. S.)

Birrus (or Byrrhus, βίρρος, βύρρος) was an old Latin word equivalent to "rufus" or red, and identical probably with the Greek πυρρός. No traces of the word, as the name of a garment, are to be found before the Christian era. The earliest known instance of such a use is early in the 2d century. Speaking of the significance of various articles of dress, when seen in dreams, Artemidorus (Oneirocrit. ii, 3) says that the chlamys (a short military cloak), "which some call mandyas, others ephestris, others berion, portends trouble and difficulty, and to prisoners under trial portends condemnation, by reason that it compasses about and confines the body." Other writers identify it with the "amphibalus" (q. v.). A fresco in the cemetery of Pontianus, in which are represented three laymen, Sts. Milix, Abdon, and Sennes, and one ecclesiastic, St. Vicentius, will probably give a good idea of the difference between the chlamys, the birrus, and the casula (or planeta). St. Milix is represented wearing a chlamys; Abdon and Sennes a heavy cloak reaching from the shoulders to the back of the knee, and in form differing but little from the chlamys. See ABDON. But the birrus (if such be the garment intended) is provided with a hood, or cowl, for wearing over the head, as were most such outer garments when intended, as was the birrus, for out-door use, and represented as worn on the head. Such a rough birrus as this was allowed to be worn by slaves under the provisions of the Theodosian code. Hence some have inferred, though wrongly, that the birrus was at that time regarded as a garment suitable only for persons of the lowest class. This was not so. There were "cheap cloaks," such as those here allowed as a privilege to slaves; there were "costly cloaks," such as those of which St. Augustine says that they might perhaps be fitting for a bishop, but not fitting for Augustine, "a poor man, as his parents had been poor before him" (De Diversis, v, 1579). From the 4th century onward the mention of the birrus is not unfrequent as of an out-door dress used alike by laymen and by ecclesiastics. In these later notices it is almost always referred to as being either a somewhat expensive dress or as having a certain secular character attaching to it as compared with the dress worn by monks. Thus Cassianus (cir. 418 A.D.), describing the dress of monks, says that they avoid the costliness and the pretence to dignity implied in the planeta and the birrus (De Habitu Monach. i, 7). St. Isidore, in like manner, couples together the planeta and the birrus as garments which are not allowable to monks (Regula, xiii). This will account for the peculiar language of the Council of Gangra (319), warning men against attributing too much importance to the monastic dress for its own sake, and despising those who wore "birri." Towards the close of the 6th century we find St. Gregory the Great using the term "birrus albus," in speaking of the white "christening-cloak" worn by the newly baptized (Epist. 5). See BIRETTA.

Birt, Caleb Evans, an English Baptist minister, was born at Devonport, March 11, 1795. He entered Cambridge University when he was seventeen years of age, intending to study for the bar. Not long after he became a Christian, and decided to study for the ministry. After preaching for a time as a licentiate, and studying in the Bristol College, in the fall of 1814 he became a student in the University of Edinburgh, and in 1816 took the degree of master of arts. His ordination took place in 1817 as pastor of the Baptist Church in Derby, where he remained until 1827. He then removed to Portsea, and was pastor until 1837, and afterwards went to Broadmead, Bristol, where he remained until 1844. His last pastorate, which was at Wantage, continued ten years, and closed with his death, Dec. 13, 1854. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1855, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Birt, Isaiah, an English Baptist minister, was born at Coleford, Sept. 6, 1758, his father being a Baptist minister. Converted early in life, he decided to enter the ministry. He entered Bristol College in 1779, and had among his teachers Rev. Dr. C. Evans and Robert Hall. In 1784 he became co-pastor with the Rev. Philip Gibbs at Plymouth, and subsequently of a Church at what was afterwards known as Devonport, this Church being a colony from the one of which he was the colleague pastor. Here he remained until the close of 1813, when he removed to Birmingham, where he was for twelve years pastor of the Church which had had for its minister the saintly Samuel Pearce. Finally he removed to London, where he died, Nov. 1, 1837. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1838, p. 23, 24. (J. C. S.)

Birt, John, an English Baptist minister, eldest son of the foregoing, was born at Devonport, Jan. 7, 1787. He united with the Church at the age of seventeen, and commenced village preaching near Coleford. For two years he studied theology with a minister in London. His first pastoral settlement was in Hull in 1812, where he remained ten years. In 1822 he became pastor of the York-street Church in Manchester, and continued in that relation twenty years. His last settlement was in Oldham. At the end of fourteen years he had a paralytic stroke, which nearly disabled him. He died Oct. 30, 1863. Among his published writings are, The Conversations of Erastus and Trophimus, a vindication of the views held by the moderate Calvinists:—A Summary of the Principles and History of Popery:—and Patristic Evenings, a work which is said to bear witness to the extent and variety of his theological reading. Besides the foregoing, a considerable number of smaller productions issued from his pen. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1864, p. 117, 118. (J. C. S.)

Birt, John B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ohio about 1806. He joined the Indiana Conference in 1837; faithfully preached, generally on large circuits in the middle of the state; twice was presiding elder, once a delegate to the General Conference, and only lost about six years as superannuate from the active ranks up to the time of his death, April 24, 1870. Mr. Birt possessed a pathos and moving tenderness which gave him wonderful access to the hearts of the people. He was exemplary in life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 114.

Birt, Owen Johnson, an English Baptist minister, son of Rev. Caleb Birt, was born at Derby, May 30, 1821. He was converted when about seventeen years of age, and joined the Church at Broadmead, Bristol, in March, 1838. In 1839 he entered the Baptist College, in Bristol, where he remained from 1839 to 1842. In October of the latter year he was accepted by the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society for service in Ceylon. He was so feeble that he died at sea, March 14, 1844. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1844, p. 21, 22. (J. C. S.)

Birthwald, an early English prelate, was born in the middle of the 7th century, but where is unknown. He was probably educated at Glastonbury, and was deeply read in Scripture. He was elected July 1, 692, the eighth archbishop of Canterbury, but was not consecrated until June 29 of the following year. There seems to have been nothing in the conduct of Birthwald more praiseworthy than the zeal which he displayed in the missionary cause. But although the long episcopate of Birthwald was one of peace and internal prosperity, he was not without his troubles. At the close of his life, his Church contrasted favorably with the condition of the Church in other parts of the world. His death occurred in 729. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 178 sq.

Birzuli, in Slavonic mythology, is an idol of the Wends and Poles, only known from the name. It is believed he was simply a household deity.

Bisacramentarians was a term invented by Gabriel du Preaux (Prateolus), in his Elenchus Hæreticorum, to signify those who receive only the two sacraments of baptism and the eucharist.

Bisarion. See BESSARION.

Bisbee, Benjamin, a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about 1765. His early life was spent in agricultural pursuits, and he was ordained in Belgrade, Me., in December, 1809. For two years he was occupied as an evangelist in the destitute sections of Maine. In 1812 he became the pastor of a small church in the town of Harmony, where he remained until 1825. His love for missionary work was not abated during these thirteen years, and he frequently left his home to carry the Gospel into the regions round about. From 1830 to 1832 he was pastor of the Church in St. Albans. He continued to perform his ministerial and evangelistic labors until he was laid aside by the infirmities of age. His last years were spent in Waterville, Me., where he died in 1847. See Millett, History of the Baptists of Maine, p. 436. (J. C. S.)

Bisbie, Nathaniel, D.D., an English divine, was rector of Long Melford, near Sudbury, Suffolk, and died in 1695. He published several single Sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bis-cantârè means the chanting or celebrating of two masses in the same day by the same priest. This was forbidden by the canon law, except on Christmas-day and some other occasions. The bishop was able to grant a dispensation to do so.

Bischoff, Melchior, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Pönsneck, May 20, 1547. In 1570 he was deacon in his native city, but in 1574 he was deposed of his office because he would not subscribe to the articles of the Wittenberg theologians. He then acted for some time as pastor at Jekenheim and Thundorf, and after the fall of the Philippists (q. v.), in 1585, he was again permitted to return to his native place. In 1590, duke Johann Casimir appointed him court-preacher at Coburg, where he died, Dec. 19, 1614. Besides sermons and ascetic works, he wrote some hymns, which are still found in German hymn-books. See Freher, Theatrum Virorum Eruditiorum Clarorum (Norib. 1688); Wezel, Hymnopoëgraphia (Hermstadt, 1719), vol. i; id. Anal. Hymnol. i, iii, 7; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, i, 266 sq. (B. P.)

Bischofsberger, Barthelemi, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born in 1632. He took holy orders, became minister at Trojen, and died in 1678, leaving a History of the Canton of Appenzell (St. Gall, 1682). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bischof (or Biskop), JOHANN VAN, a Dutch designer and engraver, was born at the Hague in 1646. He excelled in copying the pictures of the best masters, in small colored drawings. His principal work was a set of prints for a book, of which the first edition, published by Bischof, contains 102 plates; the second, published by Nic. Visscher, contains 113 plates. It is entitled, Paradigmata Graphices Variorum Artificum, Tabulis Aeneis, pars i, et ii (Hague, 167 fol.). The following are some of his principal prints: Christ and the Samaritan Woman; Joseph distributing Corn to the Egyptians; The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bisciano, Bartolomeo, a Genoese painter, was born in 1632, and studied under his father, Gio. Andrea Bisciano, and afterwards under Valerio Castelli. At twenty-five years of age he had executed many fine works, but his career was cut short by the plague which visited Genoa in the year 1651. The following are some of his principal works: Moses in the Bulrushes; Susanna and the Elders; The Nativity; The Circumcision; The Wise Men's Offering; The Virgin Adoring the Infant Jesus; St. Joseph with the Infant Jesus.

Bisciola, Giovanni Gabriele, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Modena in 1538, and died at Ferrara, Feb. 8, 1613, leaving an Abridgment of the Annals of Baronius, and an Italian translation of the Martyrologium Romanum.

Bisciola, Lælius, a learned Italian Jesuit, was born at Modena about 1545. In several of the colleges he taught Greek, theology, eloquence, and philosophy. He died at Milan, Nov. 10, 1629. He wrote, Horarum Subsecivarum; hoc est, Rerum in Omni Philologiae Genere Excellentium (two volumes, of which the first was published at Ingolstadt, 1611; the second at Cologne, 1618):—Observationum Sacrarum, lib. xii:—Digestionum in Evangelia Matthæi et Joannis:—In Epistolas Pauli ad Romanos, Galatas et Hebræos. He also published in Italian, under the name of his brother, PAUL BISCIOLO, two volumes of Christian and Moral Dissertations:—a Treatise on Comparisons and Similitudes, with some dissertations. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Biscoe, Richard, an English divine, was the son of a Dissenter, educated at a Dissenting academy at Shrewsbury, and was ordained a Dissenting minister, Dec. 19, 1716. In 1726 he conformed, and received orders in the Church of England. In 1727 he was presented to the rectory of St. Martin Outwich, London, which he retained until his death, July, 1748. He held also a prebend of St. Paul's, and was chaplain in ordinary to the king. He was the author of an elaborate work entitled The History of the Acts of the Holy Apostles Confirmed from other Authors, etc. (1742); being the substance of his sermons preached at the Boyle lecture in 1736, 1737, and 1738. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bisenti, ANTONIO, an English Congregational minister, was born near Setubal, Portugal, in 1800. He was brought up by his uncle, and escaped from the monastery where he was placed for education for the ministry, and was captured by a band of robbers, who treated him kindly, however, and conducted him to the British camp. He was there recognized by an English officer as the son of an old acquaintance, and was adopted by him and taken to America. His benefactor being killed at the battle of New Orleans, the lad, with a sum of money for his education and support, was left in the charge of a brother officer. This officer afterwards returning to his estates in Ireland, took the boy with him, and sent him to Bath to be educated and put into business. While at Bath he was converted, joined the Church, and began preaching in the surrounding villages. In June, 1830, Mr. Bisenti was ordained pastor of the Independent Chapel, Herringham, where he labored three years, and then became rector of the Congregational Church at Stalbridge. Here his triumphant death took place, Jan. 16, 1872. Many souls were converted through the ministry of Mr. Bisenti. His pastoral visitation was his principal forte; many a Christian's sunset has been irradiated with the ruddy glow of hope at the words of comfort which fell from his lips. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 316.

Bishop. In addition to information already given, the following will doubtless be of interest.

I. The special conditions of eligibility for a bishopric were, (1) that the candidate should be (Apost. Constit. ii, 1) fifty years of age; but, according to Conc. Neocaes., A.D. 314, and later similar canons, the age of thirty only was insisted on. Photius, in one place, says thirty-five, which is likewise Justinian's rule in another place. Special merits, however, and the precedent of Timothy (1 Tim. iv. 12) repeatedly set aside the rule in practice, as in the well-known case of St. Athanasius, apparently not much more than twenty-three when consecrated bishop. (2) That he should be of the clergy of the Church to which he was to be consecrated (a rule enacted from pope Julius to Gregory the Great); a regulation repeatedly broken under the pressure of circumstances, special merit in the candidate, the condition of the diocese, etc. (3) That he should be a presbyter, or a deacon at the least, and not become a bishop per saltum, but go through all the several stages; also at first an ecclesiastical custom, grounded on the fitness of the thing (by a number of fathers and popes), but turned into a canon by Conc. Sardic., A.D. 347 (naming reader, deacon, priest; the object being to exclude neophytes), and by some later provincial councils: and so Leo the Great (admitting deacons, however, on the same level with priests); broken likewise, perpetually, under special circumstances. Instances of deacons, indeed, advanced at once to the episcopate, are numerous, and scarcely regarded as irregular, beginning with St. Athanasius. But the case of a reader also is mentioned in St. Augustine, and of a subdeacon in Liberatus. Although expressly forbidden by Justinian and by Conc. Arelat. IV, A.D. 455, yet the well-known cases of St. Cyprian, St. Ambrose, St. Martin of Tours, St. Germanus of Auxerre, and others, prove the admissibility of even a layman, if under the circumstances—as, e. g. by reason of the sudden acclamation of the people—such a choice was held to be “by the will” or “choice of God.” Instances may also be found in the Alexandrian Church. But then (4) such a candidate was not to be a neophyte (1 Tim. iii. 6) or a heathen recently baptized, who had not yet been tried, but one converted at least a year before, or who had been a reader or a subdeacon or a deacon for a year. Yet here, too, special circumstances were held to justify exceptions; as in the case of St. Cyprian himself; of St. Ambrose, and of Eusebius of Cæsarea in Pontus, not yet baptized. All these are cases of immediate consecration; the later practice of ordaining to each step on successive days, in order to keep the letter while breaking the spirit of the rule, dating no earlier than the case of Photius above mentioned. (5) Apost. Can. xxi permits the consecration of one made a eunuch by cruelty, or born so; and of one maimed or diseased in eye or leg; but forbids it in the case of a deaf or dumb person. (6) Lastly, the bishop who was appointed interventor to a see during the vacancy was, on that account, ineligible to that see. See INTERCESSORES. It remains to add (7) that the candidate's own consent was not at first held to be requisite, but that in many cases consecration was forced upon him (as in the case of Eusebius of Cæsarea in Pontus, A.D. 362). Apost. Can. xxxvi orders the excommunication of a bishop who refuses the charge of the people assigned to him. But first St. Basil exempts those who in such a case had “sworn not to receive ordination.” Afterwards the emperors Leo and Majorian forbade forced ordinations altogether.

II. Euthronization, which is mentioned in the Apost. Constit., and in Greek pontificals, as the concluding act of ordination, followed upon ordination, either (as at first) immediately or (in course of time) after an interval; a regular service being then provided for it. A sermon was thereupon preached, at least in the East, by the newly consecrated bishop. Litteræ communicæ, or synodice, or euthronistice, were written to other bishops, to give account of the sender's faith, and to receive letters of communion in return. The term was also applied to payments which came to be made by bishops on occasion of their enthronization. The Arabic version of the Nicene canons has a rule that the bishop be enthroned at once by a delegate of the archbishop, and that the archbishop visit him personally after three months, and confirm him in the see.

III. A profession of obedience to the metropolitan, and (in the Carolingian empire) an oath of allegiance to the emperor or king, began to be required, prior to confirmation; the former from the 6th century onwards, the latter from the time either of Charlemagne or of his immediate successors—but far earlier in Spain. (a) The earliest written profession of obedience is one made by the metropolitan of Epirus to the archbishop of Thessalonica, and is condemned by Leo I in 450. Nevertheless, professions to the metropolitan by the bishop to be consecrated became the regular practice. (b) A general oath of allegiance to the king, from all subjects, occurs repeatedly in the Spanish councils. A promise of fidelity from bishops is mentioned in Gaul as early as the time of Leodegarius of Autun and St. Eligius, c. A.D. 640.

IV. Removal.—The next point to be considered is the various methods by which a bishop ceased to occupy a see.

1. Translation, which, as a rule, was forbidden, but only as likely to proceed from selfish motives. Before the period of the apostolic canons this prohibition would have been hardly needed. Apost. Can. xiv forbids it, unless there be a prospect of more spiritual “gain” in saving souls; and guards the right practical application of the rule by the proviso, that neither the bishop himself, nor the diocese (“parochia”) desiring him, but “many bishops,” shall decide the point. The Council of Nice, Conc. Antioch. A.D. 341, Conc. Sardic. A.D. 347, Conc. Carth. III, A.D. 397, and Conc. Carth. IV, A.D. 398, forbid it likewise: the first two without qualification; and the second, whether the suggestion proceed from the bishop, the people, or other bishops; but the third, if “from a small city to a different one;” and the fourth, also in case it be “from an unimportant to an important place;" while allowing it if it be for the good of the Church, so that it be done "by the sentence of a synod," and at the request of the clergy and laity. The Council of Nice itself showed that exceptional cases were not excluded, by actually itself translating a bishop. St. Athanasius, indeed, gives us the obiter dictum of an Egyptian council, condemning translation as parallel with divorce, and therefore with the sin of adultery. Similarly St. Jerome. But pope Julius condemns it on the assumption throughout that its motive is self-aggrandizement. Pope Damasus also condemns it, but it is when done "through ambition;" and pope Gelasius, but only "no causes existing." Leo the Great deposes a bishop who seeks to be translated, but it is "to a greater people," and "despising the mediocrity of his own city." Pope Hilary, A.D. 465, condemns a proposed Spanish translation, among other things, as contrary to the Nicene canon. Conc. Chalced., A.D. 451, re-enacts the canons against "transmigration." At the same time, translations, as a matter of fact, were repeatedly sanctioned, beginning with the noted case of Alexander and Narcissus of Jerusalem. In the Alexandrian Church the rule appears to have been exceptionally strict, so that originally it was forbidden to translate a bishop, already such, to the patriarchate, although in later and Mohammedan times this rule after great contentions became relaxed; and among the Nestorians, as one result of such relaxation of a like rule, it came to pass that patriarchs were often actually reconsecrated.

2. Resignation.—(a) Of resignation simply; respecting which there is no express canon, absolutely speaking; but Can. Apostol., can. xxxvi, Conc. Ancy. can. xviii, Conc. Antioch., A.D. 341, cans. xvii, xviii, assume or enact that a bishop once consecrated cannot refuse to go to a see, even if the people will not receive him; and the two latter refer the decision to the synod, which may allow him to withdraw or not as it judges best. Instances accordingly occur of resignations allowed because circumstances rendered it expedient for the good of the Church, as where the people obstinately refused to submit to the bishop: e.g. St. Gregory Nazianzen, when archbishop of Constantinople, with the consent of the Council of Constantinople. Instances occur also of resignations offered (and approved, though not accepted) for peace' sake; as St. Chrysostom, Flavian of Antioch under Theodosius, the Catholic African bishops under Aurelius, and St. Augustine at the time of the Donatist schism. Eustathius of Perga was permitted to resign on account of old age, "retaining the name, dignity, and fellowship of the episcopate," but without authority to act as a bishop without a fellow-bishop's request. The canonical grounds for a resignation, as summed up, are in substance—1, guilt; 2, sickness; 3, ignorance; 4, perverse rebelliousness of the people; 5, the healing of a schism; 6, irregularity, such as, e.g. bigamy. (b) Resignation in favor of a successor, however, was distinctly prohibited, but, as the rest of the canon shows, only in order to secure canonical and free election when the see became actually vacant. The object was, not to prohibit, but to prevent the abuse of, the recommendations very commonly made by aged bishops of their successors; a practice strongly praised by Origen, comparing Moses and Joshua, but which naturally had often a decisive influence in the actual election. Such recommendations slipped naturally into a practice of consecrating the successor, sometimes elected solely by the bishop himself, before the recommending bishop's death, thus interfering with the canonical rights of the com-provincial bishops and of the diocese itself. But then we must distinguish (c) that qualified resignation which extended only to the appointment of a coadjutor—not a coadjutor with right of succession, which was distinctly uncanonical, but simply an assistant during the actual bishop's life, and no further. The earliest instance, indeed, of a simple coadjutor, that of Alexander, coadjutor to Narcissus of Jerusalem, was supposed to require a vision to justify it.

3. The deposition of bishops. A. The grounds upon which bishops as such were deposed were as follows: (a) Certain irregularities which vitiated an episcopal consecration ab initio; and these were for the most part, although not wholly, irregularities such as disqualified for consecration at all. (b) The general causes affecting all clergy; as well as causes relating to their own special office. (c) Bishops were liable to excommunication as well as deposition, if (1) they received as clergy such as were suspended for leaving their own diocese; or (2) if they "made use of worldly rulers to obtain preferment;" or (3) if, being rejected by a diocese to which they have been appointed, they move sedition in another diocese, etc. (d) Lastly, bishops were liable to suspension or other less censure, (1) if they refused to attend the synod when summoned; and if, when summoned to meet an accusation, they failed to appear even to a third summons, they were deposed; or (2) if they unjustly oppressed any part of their diocese, in which case the African Church deprived them of the part so oppressed.

B. The authority to inflict deposition was the provincial synod; and for the gradual growth and the differing rules of appeal from that tribunal, see APPEAL. Conc. Chalced., A.D. 451, forbids degradation of a bishop to the rank of a priest; he must be degraded altogether or not at all. Conc. Antioch., A.D. 341, forbids recourse to the emperor to reverse a sentence of deposition passed by a synod.

V. From the office, we pass to the honorary privileges and rank of a bishop. But no doubt many of such privileges belong to Byzantine times, and date no earlier than the 3d or 4th century.

1. Of the modes of salutation practiced towards him from the 4th century onwards. Such were (1) bowing the head to receive his blessing, mentioned by St. Chrysostom, St. Ambrose, and others, and referred to in a law of Honorius and Valentinian. (2) Kissing his hand. (3) Kissing the feet, also, appears by St. Jerome to have been at one time a mark of respect common to all bishops; being borrowed, indeed, from a like custom practiced towards the Eastern emperors. The deacon is to kiss the bishop's feet before reading the Gospel, according to the Ordo Romanus. It was restricted to the pope as regards kings, by Gregory VII. (4) The forms of address, and the titles and epithets, applied to bishops, have been mentioned already.

2. Singing hosannas before a bishop on his arrival anywhere, is mentioned only to be condemned by St. Jerome.

3. The form of addressing a bishop by the phrase corona tua or vestra, and of adjuring him per coronam, frequent in early writers, has been explained as referring to the mitre, to the tonsure, or to the corona or "assembly" of the bishop's presbyters. The personal nature of the appellation appears to exclude the last of these. Its being peculiar to bishops is against the second.

4. The bishop's throne. See THRONE.

5. If we are to take the pretended letter of pope Lucius to be worth anything as evidence in relation to later times, the bishop of Rome was habitually attended by two presbyters or three deacons, in order to avoid scandal.

VI. Rank.—1. The relation of bishops to each other was as of an essentially equal office, however differenced individuals might be in point of influence, etc., by personal qualifications or by the relative importance of their sees. St. Cyprian's view of the "one episcopate"—the one corporation of which all bishops are equal members—is much the same with St. Jerome's well-known declaration, "Wherever there may be a bishop, whether of Rome or of Eugubium . . . he is of the same merit, of the same priesthood also." A like principle is implied in the litteræ communicatoræ or synodicæ—sometimes called litteræ enthronisationæ—by which each bishop communicated his own consecration to his see to foreign bishops as to his equals. The order of precedence among them was determined by the date of consecration (so many councils and Justinian).

2. This equality was gradually undermined by the institution of metropolitans, archbishops, primates, exarchs, patriarchs, pope: for each of whom see the several articles.

3. However, apart from this, there came to be special distinctions in particular churches; as, e. g. in Mauritania and Numidia the senior bishop was "primus;" but in Africa proper, the bishop of Carthage; and in Alexandria the bishop had special powers in the ordinations of the suffragan sees: for which see ALEXANDRIA (Patriarchate of); METROPOLITAN.

4. The successive setting-up of metropolitans and of patriarchs gave rise to exceptional cases ("autocephali"); all bishops whatever having been really independent (save subjection to the synod) before the setting up of metropolitans, and all metropolitans before the establishment of patriarchs. See AUTOCEPHALI; METROPOLITANS; PATRIARCHS.

5. For chorepiscopi, in contradistinction from whom we find in Frank times episcopi cathedrales, 6. for suffragans, 7. for coadjutors, 8. for intercessores and interventores, and, 9. for commendatarii, see under the several titles.

VII. Subordinate Titles.—There remain some anomalous cases; as, 1, Episcopi vacantes, viz. bishops who by no fault were without a see, but who degenerated sometimes into episcopi vagi or ambulantes, vacantiri; and among whom in Carolingian times, and in northern France, "Scoti" enjoyed a bad pre-eminence. Bishops, indeed, without sees, either for missionary purposes to the heathen, or merely "honorary," existed from the time of the Council of Antioch, A.D. 341. Wandering bishops, who have no diocese, are condemned by many councils.

2. The bishop-abbots, or bishop-monks, were principally of Celtic monasteries, but also in some continental ones; the former having no see except their monastery [see ABBOT], the latter being simply members of the fraternity in episcopal orders, but (anomalously) under the jurisdiction of their abbot, and performing episcopal offices for the monastery and its dependent district.

3. Episcopus, or antistes palatii, was an episcopal counsellor residing in the palace in the time of the Carolingians, by special leave.

4. For episcopus cardinalis, which in St. Gregory the Great means simply "proprius," i. e. the duly installed (and "incardinated") bishop of the place, see under CARDINALIS.

5. Episcopus regionarius, i. e. without a special diocesan city. See REGIONARIUS.

6. Titular bishops, and bishops in partibus infidelium, belong under these names to later times.

7. Episcopus ordinum, in Frank times, was an occasional name for a coadjutor bishop to assist in conferring orders.

8. For the special and singular name of libra, applied to the suffragans of the see of Rome, see LIBRA.

Bishop, Abraham John, a Wesleyan missionary, was born in the Island of Jersey. In 1792 he was sent as missionary to the province of New Brunswick. Making St. John's the basis and centre of his work, he pushed into the interior, visiting Sheffield, Fredericton, and Nashwaak. His labors were greatly blessed, and it was to the great grief of his friends that he departed, at the end of the year, for Grenada, W. I., at the appointment of Dr. Coke, in January, 1793, and, as was predicted, in Grenada he died, June 16 of the same year. "He was one of the holiest young men on earth. A useful preacher all the day long." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1794; Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Smith [T. W.], Hist. of Methodism in Eastern British America, p. 219 sq., 257.

Bishop, Alexander Hamilton, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at New Haven, Conn., in 1810. He graduated at Yale College in 1830, and at Princeton Seminary in 1835. He was licensed by the Connecticut Association in that year, and was pastor of the Church in Astoria, N. Y., from 1840 to 1853. He died in 1854. "He was a remarkable man." "To natural powers of a high order he added years of unceasing culture." See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 183.

Bishop, Alfred (1), an English Congregational minister, was born, probably at Lewes, Aug. 29, 1788, and was early led to devote himself to the service of Christ. He studied four years at Homerton Academy, and was ordained pastor at Ringwood in September, 1808, where he labored twenty-one years, and then removed to Bedminster. He relinquished his charge in 1856, and retired to Tunbridge Wells, where he died, Jan. 15, 1875. Mr. Bishop was a good scholar, and in the prime of life a vigorous preacher. He was a devoted Christian and a resolute Nonconformist. He published, Christian Memorials of the 19th Century:—The Beloved Disciple; and some separate sermons. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 318.

Bishop, Alfred (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Deposit, Delaware Co., N. Y., date unrecorded. He embraced religion when about fourteen, received license to preach in 1840, was employed as a preacher in north-west Illinois in 1849, and in 1851 entered the Iowa Conference. For two years he braved the storms and hardships of the extreme northern frontier. He died in 1855. Mr. Bishop was a good, plain, practical preacher, and won many souls for Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1855, p. 646.

Bishop, Benjamin H., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Christian County, Ky., Dec. 6, 1832, of pious parents, who gave him a careful religious training. He experienced conversion in early life, received license to preach in 1853, and in the same year entered the Memphis Conference. The country was overrun with armies in 1862, and at his own request he was granted a supernumerary relation, which he sustained five years, residing at Brownsville. In 1868 he resumed his place in the effective ranks, and continued faithful to the close of his life, April 25, 1874. Mr. Bishop was a man of medium stature and frail constitution, but of sound mind and cheerful disposition. His domestic and religious life was exemplary and above reproach. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 62.

Bishop, George, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a native of South Carolina. He embraced religion in 1829, and in 1831 entered the Georgia Conference, in which he continued to labor with vigor and success until the close of his life, in 1834. Mr. Bishop was a young man of strong mind, studious habits, and manliness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 346.

Bishop, George Brown, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Fayette County, Ky., March 30, 1810. He went to Paris, Ky., at the age of twelve, and studied Latin under Dr. William H. McGuffey. His father, Rev. R. H. Bishop, D.D., having removed to Oxford, O., and taken the presidency of Miami University, he entered the Freshman class of that college, and graduated in 1828. The following year he entered Princeton Theological Seminary, and in due time completed the course. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, April 28, 1832. He spent some time after in preaching to various churches in the vicinity of Oxford, and in 1833 became a stated supply for that place. In November he was ordained and installed pastor. In 1834 he was elected to the professorship of Biblical criticism and Oriental literature in the Indiana Theological Seminary at Hanover, now the North-western of Chicago, and died in that position, Dec. 14, 1837. Few men have given greater promise of usefulness to the Church. He daily read from the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and German versions of the Scriptures, and his piety was equal to his scholarship. See Index of the Princeton Review. (W. P. S.)

Bishop, Hiram N., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Illinois, was rector in Kenosha, Wis., in 1853. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, and became rector of St. John's Church, continuing to serve this charge until his death, which occurred Aug. 31, 1868, at the age of forty-five. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1869, p. 109.

Bishop, James L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Leeds, Me., in 1797. He experienced religion in his youth, and in 1820 entered the New England Conference, in which he labored for some time with diligence and fidelity. His latter years were spent as a superannuate. He died in October, 1847. Mr. Bishop was a man of deep piety, and ardent in his attachment to the Bible. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1848, p. 260.

Bishop, John, an English Congregational minister, was born in London in 1794. He was converted when eleven years old, joined the Church at the age of eighteen, and from that time was continually in requisition as village, workhouse, and prison preacher. Subsequently he was set apart for the home-missionary work at Wisbro' Green, Sussex; ordained pastor at Lewes; preached a short time at Newport, Isle of Wight; labored at Chard and Bridgewater, and finally settled at Axminster, Devonshire, in 1854, where he died, March 9, 1862. As a preacher, Mr. Bishop was faithful, instructive, and impressive; as a scholar, he possessed a vast fund of literary and scientific information. He was a man of large experience and agreeable manners. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 209.

Bishop, Nathan, LL.D., a distinguished Baptist layman, was born in Oneida County, N. Y., Aug. 12, 1808, and graduated from Brown University in 1837. From 1838 to 1848 he was superintendent of schools in Providence, R. I., and for five years thereafter in Boston. Subsequently he removed to New York, where he occupied many positions of eminence. He died at Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1880. In denominational affairs he took a great interest, especially in the work of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and for two years served gratuitously as one of its secretaries. He was also a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and of the Board of the American Bible Society. Other religious, educational, and philanthropic societies and organizations received the benefit of his wise counsels and his pecuniary aid. He was a man of fine, commanding presence, and, although the possessor of a large fortune, he was simple and unostentatious in his habits and style of living, freely giving in many directions to objects of benevolence with which he sympathized, especially to the Freedmen's cause as represented by the Home Mission Society. See (N. Y.) Evening Post and Examiner; Cathart, Bapt. Encyclop. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Bishop, Nelson, a Congregational minister, was born in East Hartford (now Manchester), Conn., Nov. 20, 1802. Immediately after his conversion, in 1820, his attention was turned to the ministry. He graduated at Bangor Seminary in 1827, having been licensed to preach in the previous year. On Nov. 19, 1828, he was ordained as pastor of the Church in Clinton, Me.; but, his health failing from overwork, he was dismissed in 1834, and went to Andover, Mass., becoming a resident member of the Theological Seminary. In 1839 he was installed as pastor of the Congregational Church in Weathersfield, Vt., and in 1842 was dismissed from the charge to become associate editor of the Vermont Chronicle. In this office he labored with success until Jan. 1, 1866, when he became associate editor of the Boston Recorder, retaining this position until the sale of the Recorder to the Congregationalist in 1869. From that time he was variously engaged, preaching occasionally, distributing Bibles, etc., until his death, at East St. Johnsbury, Vt., Jan. 10, 1871. See Cong. Quarterly, 1871, p. 438.

Bishop, Noah, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 12, 1806. After graduating, he taught for two years in Brooklyn, Conn., and studied theology for the next two years at East Windsor Theological School. He also taught for two years in Keene, N. H. He was ordained, June 29, 1842, pastor of the Muddy Run Presbyterian Church in Enon, O., from which he was dismissed in October, 1849. In 1850 he became principal of an academy in Monroe, O., at the same time supplying the Presbyterian Church there, and so remained three years. His health having failed, he then settled near Springfield, Ill., and engaged in farming for more than two years, removing to Chatham, Ill., in 1855. In 1858 he was sent as a home missionary to Murraysville, Ill., where he preached to the two churches of East and West Union till 1869, and removed, on April 1, to Ironton, Mo. He died there, Sept. 22 of that year. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1870.

Bishop, Pierpont E., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Amherst County, Va., in 1803. He graduated at Hampden Sidney College, Va., in 1829, and at Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., in 1833. He was licensed by Bethel Presbytery, and began preaching in North Carolina in 1834. He labored successively at Ebenezer, Unity, Yorkville, Bethesda, S. C., and other places in the vicinity. He died at Bennettsville, S. C., March 5, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 66.

Bishop, William, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Worcester County, Md., about 1764. Forty-three years he was in the ministry. He died June 22, 1834. He was an excellent man, zealous and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 348.

Bishop, William Sherwood, a Baptist minister, was born near New Lebanon, Conn., Oct. 23, 1805. He was converted at a Methodist camp-meeting in Ohio, and for ten years was a preacher in that denomination. Having joined the Baptists, he was ordained in Wooster, Wayne Co., and for years labored successfully as a home missionary in Ohio, some of the churches to which he then ministered having become the strong churches of that region. He removed to Illinois in 1842, and became pastor of the Church in Bridgeport, Dec. 3 of that year, and after three years returned to Ohio, and remained until 1853. Afterwards he was a second time pastor at Bridgeport. From 1864 to 1875 he labored as a colporteur of the American Baptist Publication Society. His last pastorate was with his former Church in Bridgeport, where he died, Sept. 7, 1879. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1879, p. 12. (J. C. S.)

Bishoping is the vulgar name for confirmation (q. v.).

Bisi, the fourth bishop of the East Angles at Dunwich, was consecrated by Theodore, as successor to Boniface, in 669 (or 670). He was present at the Council of Hertford in 678, but was soon after obliged to retire by reason of ill-health. His diocese was immediately divided between the sees of Dunwich and Elmham.

Bisi, Bonaventura, an Italian painter, was born at Bologna in 1612. He studied under Lucio Massari, and gained considerable reputation by his copies in miniature after Correggio, Titian, Guido, etc., many of which were in the cabinet of the duke of Modena. He etched a few plates after his own designs, the best of which is the Holy Family, with St. John and St. Elizabeth, marked F. B. B. F., 1631. He died at Modena in 1662. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bisi, Michael, a celebrated Milanese engraver of the present century, first distinguished himself by the publication of the Pinacoteca del Palazzo Reale, della Scienze dell'Arte, etc. He engraved the Virgin and Infant Enthroned with Saints. It is not known whether he is living or not. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Vapereau, Dict. des Contemporains, s. v.

Bismillah (in the name of God) is a solemn form of words prefixed to every chapter of the Koran except the ninth. Mohammedan doctors are not agreed as to the inspiration of this phrase, some declaring it to be of divine origin, while others hold it to be the invention of men.

Bisnow, in Hinduism, is a religious sect in East India which lives mainly on plants and milk. The majority of the Banians belong to it. The Bisnowans never kill an animal; all sick animals, even insects, are nursed in hospitals specially erected for this purpose. In order to feed fleas, bed-bugs, etc., they hire beggars, who, bound hand and foot, are given to these animals for a number of hours for food. Their god, Ram-Ram, they worship with dancing and music, without sacrifices.

Bisômus is a sepulchre capable of containing two bodies. The word is found in inscriptions in Christian cemeteries at Rome and elsewhere.

Bisquert, ANTONIO, a reputable Spanish historical painter, was born at Valencia, studied under Ribalta, and established himself at Teruel in 1620. He copied Sebastian del Piombo's picture of a dead Christ in the arms of the Virgin, attended by the Marys and John. He died in 1646. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Biss, PHILIP, an English prelate of the early part of the 17th century, came from "a worshipful family" of Spargrave, Somersetshire. He was trained at Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he became fellow and doctor of divinity, and was preferred archdeacon of Taunton. He was a learned man and at his death bequeathed his library to Wadham College, Oxford, then newly founded. He died about 1614. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 107.

Bisse, Philip (1), an English clergyman, became archdeacon of Taunton in 1584, and subdean of Wells the same year. See Le Neve, Fasti, i, 157, 168.

Bisse, Philip (2), an English prelate, was consecrated bishop of St. David's Nov. 19, 1710, and was translated to Hereford, Feb. 16, 1712. He died Sept. 6, 1721. See Le Neve, Fasti, i, 304, 473.

Bisset, WILLIAM, an English clergyman, was rector of Whiston, Northamptonshire, and died about 1727. He published, Sermons on the Reformation of Manners (1704);—and The Modern Fanatick, being an Account of Dr. Sacheverell (1710-11). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bissett, George, a missionary of the Church of England, came from that country to Newport, R. I., in 1767, as assistant to the Rev. Arthur Browne, rector of Trinity Church. When Mr. Browne went to England in 1769, Mr. Bissett supplied his place as minister. It was part of his regular duty to teach the school connected with the parish. The "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts" declined sending a missionary to this point, whereupon the congregation made him rector, and he remained with them until Newport was evacuated by the British, Oct. 25, 1779, when he went to New York, leaving his wife and child in destitute circumstances. His flight, of course, was in consequence of his royalist sentiments. Afterwards his family were permitted to rejoin him in New York. About 1786 he was appointed missionary to St. John's Church, and died in New York city in 1788. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 80.

Bissett, John, a clergyman of the Protestant

Episcopal Church, a native of Scotland, was born about 1762. After graduating from the University of Aberdeen, he came to America, and was ordained in 1786 by bishop Seabury. He was rector of Shrewsbury Parish, Md., in 1789, and the same year was a deputy in the General Convention. In the session of the same body in 1792 he was elected secretary. During that session he was chosen third assistant minister of Trinity Church, New York city, a call which he accepted. He was a member also of the General Convention of 1795. As a preacher he was remarkable for his eloquence. Besides this, he was a ripe scholar and a sound theologian. While connected with Trinity Church, he held for several years the professorship of rhetoric and belles-lettres in Columbia College. In consequence of intoxication he was compelled to resign. He returned to Scotland, and died in obscurity about 1810. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 443.

Bissey, JONAS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Bucks County, Pa., Sept. 24, 1809. He was religiously inclined from childhood, professed religion in 1826, began immediately to prepare himself for the ministry, received license to exhort in 1831, to preach in 1832, and in 1833 entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he labored with fidelity and zeal, with but one year's quiet as supernumerary, until Aug. 17, 1851, when he was killed by lightning in the pulpit at New London Cross-roads. Mr. Bissey was a faithful friend, an humble, devoted Christian, and a plain, zealous, successful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 21.

Bissill, JOHN, an English Baptist minister, was born about 1778. He was converted in early life, and in 1798 was a member of the General Baptist Church at Knipton, by which he was called to the ministry. After spending about a year in the Academy under the care of Rev. Dan Taylor, he became pastor of the Church at Leake and Wimeshold in 1800. In 1803 he removed to Sutterton, where a commodious chapel was soon erected and his congregation increased. His ordination took place Oct. 24, 1805, as pastor of the Church at Gosberton, in the neighborhood of Sutterton, a part of its members residing in the latter place. Subsequently a Church was formed at Sutterton, of which he was chosen pastor in 1808, and held the office for thirty years, resigning in 1838. He now took up his residence in Boston, where he died, Jan. 23, 1844. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1845, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Bisson, LOUIS CHARLES, a French theologian and historian, was born Oct. 10, 1742, at Geffosses. During the Revolution he was first vicar of the bishop of that city. After taking the oath required by the constituent assembly, he refused to deliver his letters of the priesthood at the time of the suppression of the religion. For this he suffered ten months' detention. On Oct. 20, 1799, he took possession of the bishopric of Bayeux, on which occasion he published his first pastoral letter. In 1801 he took part in the national council, and resigned his bishopric to cardinal Caprara, legate a latere. Returning to Bayeux, he died there, Feb. 28, 1820. He wrote, among other works, Méditations sur les Vérités Fondamentales de la Religion Chrétienne (1807):—Pensées Chrésiennes pour Chaque Jour de l'Année:—Histoire Ecclésiastique du Diocèse de Bayeux pendant la Révolution. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bissoni, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian painter, was born at Padua in 1576, and studied under Francesco Apollodoro, and subsequently under Dario Varotari. He died in 1636. Several pictures in the churches and convents of Padua and Ravenna were painted by him.

Biteus, abbot of Inis-cumsaigh (now Inch, County Down), commemorated July 22, was one of the 350 disciples of St. Patrick. It is said that when St. Patrick built a church at Elphin, he left there Assicus.

Biteus the son of Assicus, and Cipia the mother of bishop Biteus (Petrie, Round Towers of Ireland, p. 202), Colgan (Tr. Thaum. p. 176, nn.) says that he was the son of Assicus only by spiritual birth or education, being really his brother's son. Working with his uncle, Assicus, he made altars, square covers for the service-books, and square patens. One of these little shields was kept at Armagh, another at Elphin, and a third at St. Felart's Church, Domnachmor. He is often classed among the bishops assisting St. Patrick, and is said to have been buried at Rath-cunga. See also Lanigan, Eccles. History of Ireland, i, 341, 343.

Bitino, a Bolognese painter, flourished at Rimini in the first part of the 15th century. In the Church of San Giuliano, at Rimini, is an altar-piece, much praised, of the titular saint, by this artist, dated 1407. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bit-nur, in Accadian mythology, was the general of Adar, the champion of the gods, and the favorite of Bel. He was chiefly invoked for the protection of pregnant women and for the maturity of the embryo.

Bitra, in Hindû mythology, are the fine tender spirits which are an emanation from a Brahma. They are so light that they never come to rest, and they do not need any nourishment.

Bittle, Daniel Howard, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born near Middletown, Frederick County, Md., June 6, 1819. His desire for a liberal education was stimulated by the advice and example of his older brother, Dr. D. F. Bittle. In 1837 he entered the preparatory department of Pennsylvania College, and graduated in 1843. He spent three years in teaching at Boonesboro', and in 1846 he entered the Lane Theological Seminary at Cincinnati. For a time he was agent for the Wittenberg College, and afterwards for the English Lutheran Church in Cincinnati. He also, for a while, was employed as a home missionary in Louisville, Ky. In 1849 he was ordained, and accepted a call to supply the Canton charge in Ohio; in 1850 he was employed by the Miami Synod as travelling missionary in Indiana. In November of the same year he was appointed agent for the establishment of the Hagerstown Female Seminary. In June, 1853, he became pastor at Smithsburg, Md.; in 1853, at Selinsburg, Pa., and in 1855 assisted his brother, Dr. D. F. Bittle, in building up Roanoke College, one year collecting funds for it, and then as its professor of ancient languages. The latter part of 1858 he became the first president of North Carolina College, in which office he remained three years, but the institution was compelled to close on account of the civil war. Removing to Texas, he took charge of a female seminary at Austin, where he taught and preached until the close of the war. Again he was called to the agency of Roanoke College, in behalf of which he labored two years. At the close of 1867 he accepted a call to Shepherdstown, W. Va., where he served nearly four years. In October, 1871, he assumed charge of the Church in Savannah, Ga., of which he was pastor when he died, Jan. 14, 1874. Dr. Bittle was regarded as an able preacher, a thorough scholar, and was very attractive socially. See Pennsylvania College Book, 1882, p. 216; Lutheran Observer, Jan. 30, 1874.

Bittle, David F., D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born near Myersville, Frederick County, Md., in November, 1811, and was a brother of the above. His early years were spent in work upon his father's farm. Under the ministry of Rev. Abraham Reck, of Middletown Valley, he was converted, and immediately set about preparing himself for the ministry. At eighteen years of age he entered Gettysburg Gymnasium, afterwards Pennsylvania College, and graduated in 1835. In October of the same year he entered the Theological Seminary. Two years after he accepted a call from St. John's Lutheran Church, in Augusta County, Va., where he was very successful, especially in the Mount Tabor Church, which was organized by him. He also organized the congregation at Churchville. Soon after settling in Augusta County, he conceived the project of establishing an academy there, which he subsequently carried into effect. On Aug. 12, 1845, he accepted a call to Middletown, Md., and frequently preached in the neighborhood as well, in German and English. At the end of six and a half years he removed to Hagerstown, where he resided about eighteen months, devoting his time to the collection of funds for home missions in Maryland and Pennsylvania, and to the establishment of the Hagerstown Female Seminary, of which institution he is justly regarded as the founder. He is also entitled to be considered as one of the founders of the General Synod's Publication Society, in Philadelphia. In September, 1853, he removed to Salem, Va., to assume the presidency of Roanoke College, the establishment of which had been a prominent part of his life-work. In 1842, when this institution was an Academy in Augusta County, he had served it in connection with his pastorate as teacher of mathematics. Mr. Bittle was not only president, but also professor of moral and mental science. Under his administration a debt of $8000 was liquidated and additional funds secured for other buildings. Roanoke was the only college in Virginia that did not suspend during the war, but suffered severely on account of military requisitions upon the students. At this time he supplied various churches in the vicinity. Financial embarrassments followed, incident to the war, but with the assistance of Rev. Daniel H. Bittle, D.D., his brother, large sums were raised and all debts paid. He died in Salem, Sept. 25, 1876. Several of his discourses have been published. His reputation as an educator was conspicuous. See Quarterly Rev. of the Evang. Luth. Church, vii, 541.

Bitzius, Albert, a Swiss theologian, was born in 1835 at Lützelflüt, in the Emmenthal. He was educated at Burgdorf, and afterwards studied theology at the University of Berne, and later at Berlin and other German universities. After serving as vicar in two or three parishes of his native canton, he accepted the pastorate of the German congregation at Courtelary. His literary activity was devoted chiefly to serial works. He obtained the first prize offered by a Dutch society for an essay on capital punishment. In 1878 he became a member of the government of Berne, after resigning the parochial charge at Twann, and the last years of his life were devoted almost exclusively to the reform and completion of the educational system of the canton. He died Sept. 20, 1882. (B. P.)

Biugwoer, in Norse mythology, is a maiden of hell, sitting at Hela's door on a creaking chair. The iron blood oozing from her nose causes hatred, strife, enmity, and war.

Bivar, Francisco, a Spanish theologian, was born in Madrid. He entered the order of Cistercians, and taught philosophy and theology. He was sent to Rome as procurator-general of his order, but a little time before his death, which occurred at Madrid in 1636, returned to his own country. He wrote, Vies de Saints:—Traité des Hommes Illustres de l'Ordre de Cîteaux:—Traité de l'Incarnation:—Commentaire sur la Philosophie d'Aristote:—Commentaire sur la Chronologie de Flavius Lucius Dexter. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Biver (or Bivero), PEDRO DE, a Spanish theologian, was born in Madrid in 1572. He entered the order of Jesuits, and was first professor of rhetoric, then of philosophy and theology. In 1616 he became teacher of the children Albert and Isabella, who governed the Netherlands, and resorted to Brussels with them. He died at Madrid, while rector of the college, April 26, 1656. He wrote, Emblemata in Psalmum Miserere :—Sacrum Sanctuarium Crucis, et Patientiæ Crucifixorum et Crucigerorum, Emblematis Imaginibus Ornatum, etc. (Antwerp, 1634):—Sacrum Oratorium Piarum Imaginum Immaculate Mariæ, etc. :—Ars Nova Bene Vivendi et Moriendi, Sacris Piarum Imaginum Emblematis Figurata et Illustrata (ibid. 1634). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bivero, Blanca de, a Spanish martyr, was a sister of Francisco de Bivero, and suffered martyrdom in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 454.

Bivero, Constanca de, a Spanish martyr, was condemned to be burned at Valladolid in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 454.

Bivero, Francisco de, priest of Valladolid, suffered martyrdom, because of his faith in Christ, in Spain in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 454.

Bivero, Juan de, a Spanish martyr, and sister to Blanche de Bivero, was judged a heretic and condemned to perpetual prison in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 454.

Bivero, Leonor de, a Spanish martyr, and the mother of five children, who all suffered martyrdom, was condemned and burned for a heretic in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 455.

Bizardière, MICHEL DAVID DE LA, a French historian of Normandy, died at an advanced age at Paris in 1730. He wrote, among other works, Historia Gestorum in Ecclesia Memorabilium, ab Anno 1517 ad Annum 1546 (Paris, 1700):—Histoire d'Erasmus, sa Vie, ses Mœurs, sa Religion (ibid. 1700). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bizet, Charles Jules, a French theologian, was born in Paris, Dec. 3, 1746. He entered the society of the canons-regular of St. Genevieve, was made prior of Beaugency, then of Chateaudun, and finally rector of Nantouillet. During the Revolution he refused to accept the civil constitution of the clergy. After becoming established in the Catholic faith, he was made vicar of the parish of St. Étienne-du-Mont. Afterwards he became rector, and bequeathed, at his death, ten thousand francs to the poor of his parish. His death occurred July 8, 1821, at Paris. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bizet, Martin Jean Baptiste, a French theologian, was born near Bolbec in 1746. He entered upon the ecclesiastical profession, and was made rector of Evreux. He died near the commencement of the 19th century. He wrote Discussion Epistolaire avec G. W., Protestant de l'Eglise Anglicane (Paris, 1801). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bizochi, another name for the BEGHARDS (q. v.).

Bizzell, JOSEPH W., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Nash County, N. C., about 1835. He was licensed to preach in 1858, and in 1860 admitted into the Arkansas Conference. He died in the midst of his labors, Aug. 25, 1865. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1865, p. 589.

Bjelbog. See BELBOG.

Blaan. See BLANE.

Blacader, ROBERT. See BLACKADER.

Blaceo, BERNARDINO, an Italian painter, born in the Friuli, lived about 1550. There are some of his works in the churches at Udine, in the Friuli; among which are the principal in S. Lucia, representing The Virgin and Infant, with Angels, St. Lucia and St. Agatha; in Porta Nuova, The Virgin and Infant, with St. Peter and St. John. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blache, ANTOINE, a French ecclesiastic, was born at Grenoble, Aug. 28, 1635. He embraced at first the profession of arms, then resigned that in order to enter upon the ecclesiastical profession. Having become rector of Rueil, he had several conferences with the minister Claude, and, in order to confirm the faith of the new converts, he prepared a Refutation de l'Hérésie de Calvin (published in Paris, 1787). He was in 1685 sent to the province of Vienna, to the general assembly of the clergy. He was appointed, in 1670, director of the devotees of Mt. Calvary, of Luxemburg, and two years later visitor of all this congregation. The abbé Blache had conceived a violent hatred for the Jesuits, and, on some of his writings on Christian doctrine becoming public, he was arrested in 1709 and sent to the Bastille, where he died, Jan. 29, 1714, having bequeathed all his goods to the Hôtel-Dieu. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blachure, LOUIS DE LA, a French Protestant theologian, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He was pastor of the Reformed Church of Niort, whence he retired to Rochelle, on account of the troubles in 1585. On his return to Niort he was placed in charge of the instruction of young Andrew Rivet, who afterwards became very celebrated. In 1595 he sustained, by writing, a religious controversy against a Jesuit of Loudun, named J.-C. Boulenger. Louis de la Blachure had charge also of the Protestant Church of Niort, in 1603. He wrote, Lettres Envoyées à l'Eglise de Niort et de Saint Gelaïs, etc. (1585):—Dispute Faite par Ecrit, etc. (Niort, 1595).

His son, JEAN DE LA BLACHURE, a Protestant theologian, pastor at Monyon, near Niort, died in 1601, and left a work entitled Vie de Jésus-Christ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Black, Andrew Watson, D.D., a Reformed Presbyterian minister, was born near Pittsburg, Pa., in 1808. He graduated at the Western University, Pittsburg, in 1826, and at the Presbyterian Seminary in Philadelphia in 1828; was licensed to preach by the Reformed Presbytery in that year, and ordained and installed pastor of the congregations of Shenango and Neshannock, Pa., March 18, 1832. In 1839 he accepted a call to the then newly organized Reformed Presbyterian Church in Allegheny City. While pastor of this Church he received the appointment of chaplain in the penitentiary of the western district of Pennsylvania. In 1855 he accepted for a year the agency of the American Bible Society for several of the northern counties of Pennsylvania and Ohio. In 1857 he received the appointment of delegate to the sister churches of Britain and Ireland, and also of representative of the Church to which he belonged. He was appointed professor of exegetical, historical, and evangelistic theology in the theological seminary under his care. He died Sept. 10, 1858. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 33; Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 170.

Black, Asbury Parks, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Cherokee County, Ga., Nov. 8, 1842. He was an example of early piety, joining the Church at the age of nine, but not experiencing conversion until his thirteenth year. At the age of nineteen he became a school-teacher. At the opening of the war in 1860 he enlisted as a soldier; in 1866 he was licensed to preach, and labored several years under the auspices of the North Georgia Conference. In 1869 he went to California, and in the year following united with the Pacific Conference, in which he labored with zeal and faithfulness until his decease, March 3, 1878. Mr. Black was highly esteemed for his exemplary life and deep piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 906.

Black, Daniel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in South Carolina, Nov. 27, 1795. He experienced conversion in 1821, received license to preach in 1823, and shortly afterwards entered the Kentucky Conference. He was exemplary in life, patient in affliction, and triumphant in his death, which occurred in 1828. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1828, p. 572.

Black, David, a minister of Lady Yester's Church, Edinburgh, was born in 1762, and died in 1806. He was a most amiable man, a most exemplary Christian, and a most useful and faithful laborer in his Master's vineyard. In 1808 were published his Sermons on Important Subjects. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, March, 1806, p. 198; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Black, James (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born at Millerstown, Pa., in 1779. He was educated at Belmont College, Tenn., and studied theology privately. He was licensed by Abingdon Presbytery, Oct. 7, 1809, and ordained shortly afterwards. His successive fields of labor were Romney, Va., for fifteen years; Elk Branch, Va.; then as a missionary in Ohio for several years. In 1839 he was in Wheeling Valley, and afterwards in Milton, Monroe, and Mt. Carmel, and in 1847 in Cincinnati. He was without charge for seventeen years previous to his death, which occurred at Shepherdstown, Va., Feb. 21, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 78.

Black, James (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Kentucky, Nov. 20, 1795. He never attended college or seminary. He was licensed in 1827, and labored in Arkansas until his death, Feb. 14, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 234.

Black, James (3), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Baltimore, Md., June 26, 1810. His parents removed to Cincinnati, O., in 1835. He entered the Miami University with a view to the medical profession, but, resolving to devote himself to the work of the ministry, he went to Hanover College, Ia., and subsequently graduated at the Indiana Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Madison in 1840, and ordained by the Presbytery of Cincinnati the following year. His several fields of labor were as follows: Monroe and Mt. Carmel, 1846; Fourth Church, Cincinnati, 1854; Dick's Creek, 1855; Ninth Church, Cincinnati, 1859; Feesburg and Felicity, 1861; Moscow in 1870, where he remained until 1879. From this period his declining health prevented him from stated labor, though he preached occasionally, as opportunity offered and his strength allowed. He died in Cincinnati, July 5, 1881. Mr. Black's ministry was everywhere successful, especially in his Moscow and Cincinnati charges. He was the oldest member of the Cincinnati Presbytery, and greatly beloved by his fellow-presbyters. See (Cincinnati) Presbyter and Herald, July 16, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Black, John (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born in South Carolina. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1771; was licensed to preach by the Donegal Presbytery, Oct. 14, 1773, and was installed pastor of the Congregation of Marsh Creek, York Co., Pa., where he remained until 1794. He died Aug. 16, 1802. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 556.

Black, John (2), a Reformed Presbyterian minister, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, Oct. 2, 1768. He completed his education at Glasgow College, Scotland. In 1797 he embarked for America, an exile for liberty. Having arrived in America in the fall of that year, he was employed for some time as teacher of the Classis in Philadelphia; was licensed to preach in 1799, and passed immediately to the west and began his work. Dr. Black remained forty-eight years, and until the close of his life, in the same pastoral charge in Pittsburgh. He died Oct. 25, 1849. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 28.

Black, John (3), a Scotch Congregational minister, was born at Ceres, Fifeshire, April 1, 1780. He attended Mr. James Haldane's class to prepare for the ministry. In 1809 he was ordained at Montrose, where he remained five years, and then went to Dunkeld, Western Highlands, remaining there forty-four years.

His death occurred July 27, 1857. He was a man of eminent piety, of catholic spirit, and breadth of benevolence in relation to all the public institutions of the day. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1858, p. 192.

Black, John Robert, a Reformed Presbyterian minister, was born at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1819. He graduated at the Western University in 1840, and studied theology partly under the direction of his father, and partly in the seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Philadelphia. He was licensed in 1843, and at the same time became pastor of the Third Reformed Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, where he was ordained and installed April 18, 1848, and remained until his death, Oct. 10, 1860. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 33; Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 248.

Black, Moses, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Charleston, S. C., in 1770, and died on Carter's Valley Circuit, Feb. 3, 1810. No further record of his life remains. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1810, p. 179.

Black, Samuel, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland. He was licensed by Newcastle Presbytery. In September, 1785, Donegal Presbytery gave the Congregation at the Forks of Brandywine leave to invite Mr. Black to preach as a candidate for settlement. He was called Oct. 7, and ordained Nov. 18, 1785. Charges were brought against him, for which he received the rebuke of the presbytery, and for a season they suspended him. Conewago, Adams Co., Pa., called him in 1741, and he was installed in May of that year. He began to visit Virginia as a missionary, and was sent to Potomac in 1743. North and South Mountain, Va., asked for him March 6, 1745, and he was dismissed from Conewago. In 1747 he, with two others, was directed to take charge of the vacancies in Virginia. He was at the synod in 1751, and was directed to supply Buffalo settlement and the adjacent places four Sabbaths. He took charge of the congregations of Rockfish and Mountain Plain before 1752. In 1759 he attended the synod, and vainly sought to have a presbytery formed west of the Blue Ridge. They dismissed him from his charge July 18 of that year. He died Aug. 9, 1770. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Black, Thomas, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1790. He united with the Church in 1809, and subsequently was set apart to the office of deacon of the Church at Ford Forge, and in 1813 to the office of elder. Some time after he became pastor of that Church, his ministry continuing till his death, Feb. 5, 1856. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1862, p. 106. (J. C. S.)

Black, Silas W., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Remington, Ind., July 26, 1848. He graduated from Hanover College in 1875; passed two years at the Danville Theological Seminary, Ky., and then entered the Union Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1878. He was almost immediately called to the churches of Edmonton and Murfordsville, Ky. He died at Remington, Ind., March 24, 1879. His brief ministry gave unusual promise of usefulness. (W. P. S.)

Blackader (or Blackadder), John, a minister famous in the religious history of Scotland, was descended from an ancient family of wealth and distinction, and was born—perhaps in Blairhall, Scotland—December, 1623. He studied at Glasgow under his uncle, principal Strang, son to Rev. Wm. Strang, minister at Irvine, and was called to the parish of Errol, Perthshire, in 1651, where he converted from the Roman faith the earl and his family. He seems to have taken his degree the preceding year. Although episcopacy was in its zenith when he studied divinity, it is not likely that he was ever tinctured with its sentiments. Long before he became a minister, prelacy was completely abolished in Scotland.

Blackader was called as pastor to Troqueer, in the presbytery of Dumfries, in 1652, where he exercised a most diligent and faithful ministry for nine years. He rigidly enforced discipline, and completely renovated the parish and the Church. In 1660 the Restoration came, and with that dark days for the Scottish Church. Royalty was made the fountain of ecclesiastical power; every sanction and safeguard of the Church of Scotland was one after the other torn away, and the hierarchy re-established in the plenitude of jurisdiction, and the bishops restored to all the temporal emoluments. Blackader, with many other ministers, refusing to receive their charges from the new bishops, was expelled from his living, and, in November, 1662, removed his family to Glencairn, and still preached in his own house. For this he was cited to appear in person at Edinburgh, a journey he declined, as he did not wish to surrender himself to illegal violence, which was crowding the jails with prisoners, driving his countrymen across the seas in perpetual banishment, selling others into slavery, and filling the country with outlaws. In 1666 he went to Edinburgh for concealment, and his family was forced to lead a homeless life. It was a terrible time; the laws proscribed the common duties of humanity; acts of piety and beneficence were pronounced criminal, and visited with heaviest chastisements. The inhuman cruelties of Turner, Ballenden, Bannatyne, and Dalzell overspread the country with terror, devastation, and despair. People were made "to groan and weary of their lives," immured in prisons, or hunted like beasts of prey. After the defeat at Pentland, persecution became even more severe, and innocent and godly people, including women, were put to extreme torture and torment. From 1667, under the milder administration of Tweedale and Murray, the rigor of the persecution was softened. Blackader was engaged in holding conventicles and preaching throughout Scotland. Itinerant field-preaching became a feature of the times. The conventicles continually increased, until they were universally suppressed in 1679. Through these weary years—still marked by bloodshed and cruelty, which saw the murder of archbishop Sharp and the battle of Bothwell Bridge—Blackader continued preaching and holding conventicles, until, April 5, 1681, he was seized in Edinburgh and lodged in the Bass, a high insulated rock at the mouth of the Forth, off the coast of East Lothian, at that time the most celebrated state-prison in Scotland, and, until the Revolution, crammed with the victims of prelatic cruelty, doomed to pine in solitary wretchedness, and often subjected to unnecessary privations. After an imprisonment of four years, this heroic and godly man died at the Bass, and was buried at North Berwick. See Crichton, Memoirs of Rev. John Blackader (2d ed. Edinb. 1826); Fasts Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 603.

Blackader (or Blacader), Robert, an early Scottish prelate, was bishop of Aberdeen in 1480, and was transferred to Glasgow in 1484. He was at first a prebendary of Glasgow and rector of Cardross. He studied at Rome, and received consecration from the hands of the pope. It was during his episcopate, and chiefly by his interest with pope Alexander VI, that the see of Glasgow was erected into an archbishopric—an honor which greatly exasperated his spiritual brother of St. Andrew's, who objected to acknowledge this real dignity, as St. Andrew's had been created by Sextus IV metropolitan of all Scotland. Jealous for the supremacy of his eastern capital, the archbishop of St. Andrew's commenced an ecclesiastical warfare, which divided both clergy and nobility into factions. The prelates were reconciled at length by granting the new dignity to Glasgow, but allowing St. Andrew's still to retain its ancient precedence. In Blackader's time, about 1494, the dawning light of the Revolution was spreading in the west, chiefly in the districts of Kyle and Cunningham. Thirty persons were summoned at his instance before the king and council, as holders of heretical opinions. Among these were Campbell of Cessnock, Reid of Baskimming, lady Stair, and other distinguished persons, who were nicknamed the Lollards of Kyle (Knox, Hist. ch. i). Archbishop Blackader went to England with the earl Bothwell, to negotiate the marriage of James IV with the princess Margaret, daughter to Henry VII, performed in Edinburgh, 1503 (Hollinshed, v, 465). Spottiswood calls him "a gentleman well descended, and of good knowledge, both in divine and human learning." He died about 1508, while on a pilgrimage to the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem. See Spottiswood, p. 58, 60, 105, 114; Crichton, Memoirs of Rev. John Blackader (2d ed.), p. 10 sq.; Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 115, 254.

Blackaller, Henry, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Ohio, was rector in Mansfield for several years, until 1856. Subsequently he was rector in Newark, and in 1858 was chosen rector of Zion Church, Dresden; in 1860 he became rector of Christ Church, Ironton, whence he removed, about 1864, to Gallipolis, where he died, June 21, 1867, aged sixty-nine years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1868, p. 104.

Blackbourne, John, a learned English divine, was born in 1683, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. After the Revolution he refused to take the oaths, thus excluding himself from Church preferment. He became corrector of the press to Bowyer, the celebrated printer, and edited several important works. For some years before his death he was a non-juring bishop, but lived a retired life in Little Britain. He died Nov. 17, 1741. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blackburn, Amos, an English Congregational minister, was born at Pinebury Hill, near Halifax, July 14, 1800, of poor, pious, and greatly respected parents, and joined the Independent Church in Halifax in 1818. He received his collegiate course at Idle, York. He records that within three months of his entrance he had preached between forty and fifty times, and had walked five hundred and sixty miles. His first and only charge was at Eastwood, where he was killed by a train of cars, Jan. 28, 1864. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 225.

Blackburn, John, an English Congregational minister, was born in London in 1792. Quite early he had a strong desire to become a Baptist minister, and for that purpose entered Stepney College; but, his views undergoing a change, he retired from that institution and became a student at Hoxton Academy. He entered the service of the Irish Evangelical Society, and for a time labored in Ireland to disseminate Protestant and evangelical truth. He then returned to England, and preached with acceptance at Finchfield, Essex; became chosen pastor of that Church, and settled there in 1815—where his labors were very successful. In 1823 he became pastor at Clarmont Chapel, London. He died June 16, 1855. One, speaking of his success, here remarks, "His efforts were crowned with remarkable success, both in the numbers, and devotedness, piety and liberality of his flock." He was a prominent man in the efforts to benefit his race. He was one of the projectors and secretaries of the Congregational Union of England and Wales; also editor of the Cong. Magazine and Cong. Calendar, afterwards the Cong. Year-book. He published, The Spiritual Claims of the Metropolis:—a volume of Lectures on Layard's Discoveries at Ninereh:—The Biblical Educator. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1856, p. 208-210.

Blackburn, Samuel, a Presbyterian minister, was educated at Danville, Ky., and went to Illinois in 1832. He labored in Carlinville and Spring Cove. He started to Kentucky on business, and died on the Ohio River in 1836. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois.

Blackburn, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Garstang, Lancashire, in 1797, of poor Roman Catholic parents. At an early age he was apprenticed in a large machine establishment in Preston, and, being invited, he attended a Protestant prayer-meeting, and soon after was converted. At the close of his four years' course at Rotherham College, Mr. Blackburn accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Silver-street Chapel, Whitby, where he was ordained in 1821, and labored until 1838, when he removed to Bamford, near Rochdale. After an eight years' pastorate at this place, he became secretary and general superintendent of the Manchester City Mission. Thence, after years of unremitting labor, he retired to Southport, where he died, Oct. 18, 1826. In Mr. Blackburn's character zeal, prudence, firmness, and kindness blended in a remarkable degree. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 211.

Blackburne, Launcelot, an English prelate, became prebendary of Exeter in 1691, subdean in 1695 and again in 1704, dean in 1705, archdeacon of Cornwall in 1715, and bishop of Exeter in 1717. He was confirmed archbishop of York, Nov. 28, 1724, and died March 23, 1743. He published various Sermons (1694-1716). See Le Neve, Fusti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blackburne, Wm. Theophilus, M.A., an English divine, was born in 1796, and educated at Christ College, Cambridge. He entered holy orders, but, owing to the infirm state of his health, was obliged, during many years, to refrain from the active duties of his profession. He was a man of eminent piety and extensive learning. His decease took place in 1838. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, Oct. 1838, p. 634.

Blackett, Cuthbert Robert, an English Congregational minister, was born at the Abbey Mill, near Durham, Nov. 10, 1806. He became a Christian at fifteen years of age, and subsequently devoted himself to the ministry. He studied first under Mr. Scott at Rowell in 1823; entered Hoxton Academy in 1825, and Highbury College or Academy in 1826. Having completed his studies, he preached at Burslem and at Stone, and was settled at Southminster, in Essex, in 1828. For five years he preached in a large room, but in 1833 a chapel was completed, and he was ordained to the pastorate. He removed to Burnham Market, Jan. 28, 1838, where he remained till Aug. 15, 1852, when he resigned, and sailed from Sunderland, Sept. 11, 1852, as a missionary to Australia, arriving at Melbourne Jan. 3, 1853. He died there, April 3, 1853. His mind and preaching were characterized by great solidity. As a man he was greatly beloved, and his consistency of character was a theme of praise among those who knew him best. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1854, p. 218, 219.

Blackett, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Woodhouse, near Leeds, in 1778. He was converted when twenty years of age. His first circuit was Dudley, 1803; he travelled thirty-six others. In 1841 he settled as a supernumerary in Leeds, where he died, Sept. 29, 1848. He was "a good Methodist, and minister." See Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1852, p. 105; Minutes of the British Conference, 1849.

Blackhouse, SARAH, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born about 1626, and in the twenty-seventh year of her age was converted under the preaching of George Fox. Some years after this she began to preach. Her labors are said to have been highly edifying. She died May 30, 1706. See Piety Promoted, i, 377, 378. (J. C. S.)

Blackhurst, JOHN, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Sheffield, England, in 1818. He joined the Wesleyan Methodists in his youth; received license to preach at the age of twenty-two, and as such was remarkably popular wherever he went. In 1847 he emigrated to America, and located at Dover, Wis. In 1856 he was received into the West Wisconsin Conference, in which he did efficient work until his decease, Oct. 6, 1859. Mr. Blackhurst was ardent in his attachments, a giant in intellect, and a clear, logical reasoner. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1859, p. 326.

Blackie, JAMES, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Wick, in the north of Scotland, in 1829. He was licensed by Toronto Presbytery in 1865, and stationed at West Church, Toronto, where he died in December, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 479.

Black-letter DAYS are (1) holy days recorded in the calendars of Episcopal service-books in "black-letter" type, instead of being printed in red ink; therefore holy days of an inferior character and dignity. (2) In the modern Church of England holy days ordered to be observed, but for which there are no special collects nor service.

Blacklidge, JOHN, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born and reared in South Carolina. In early manhood he joined the Church, served a short time as class-leader and exhorter, and twenty-five years as local preacher. In 1867 he entered the Mississippi Conference, and labored diligently for two years, when failing health obliged him to retire from active life. He died in the latter part of 1870. Mr. Blacklidge was characterized by consistent piety, fervent zeal, and fidelity. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1871, p. 573.

Blackloe, THOMAS, was professor of theology in the English College at Douay, and afterwards canon of the Romanist Chapter, formed by William Bishop, in London. He lived about the middle of the 17th century, and was a man of turbulent disposition; many of his writings were condemned by the inquisition, such as, Sonus Buccinæ:—Appendicula ad Sonum Buccinæ:—Tabulæ Suffragales:—Monumethes Ezecantatus. He also wrote De Medio Animarum Statu, which made much noise at the time. He was accused of teaching in it that the souls in purgatory would not be released until the day of judgment; that the damned feel no corporeal pains, and that in the state of damnation they are happier than people in this life; that the doctrine of the infallibility of the pope is the mother of all heresies. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blackman, Benjamin, a Congregational minister, was the son of Rev. Adam Blackman, first minister at Stratford, Conn. Benjamin graduated at Harvard College in 1663; was ordained at Malden in 1674; and resigned his charge in 1678. He left in consequence of dissatisfaction, and nine years afterward sued the town for arrears of his salary. After leaving Malden, he preached at Scarborough, Me.; and in 1683 was a representative of the town of Saco. It is supposed that he died in Boston. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 144.

Blackman, James F., a Baptist minister, was born in Louisiana in 1828. He was brought up to the business of a printer and publisher. He preached for several years most acceptably and with success in the Ouachita region, in his native state. His death took place Dec. 11, 1874. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 104. (J. C. S.)

Blackmer, JOEL, a Congregational minister, was born at Barnard, Vt., April 11, 1810. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1834, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1840. He was a licentiate at Weymouth, Mass., from 1840 to 1841; teacher at Ridgebury, N. Y., from 1843 to 1845; principal of the Clinton-place Institute, New York city; and afterwards clerk in the New York Custom-house. He died at Staten Island, Nov. 7, 1879. See Necrology of Andover Theol. Seminary, 1880-81.

Black Monks. See BENEDICTINES.

Blackmore, THOMAS W., an English Baptist minister, was born in Clayhidon, Devonshire, in 1799. After receiving the rudiments of an education, he was sent in his youth as an apprentice to a manufacturer in Bridgewater, Somersetshire. Here he was converted, and began to proclaim the message of salvation to others. He labored efficiently as an evangelist in various sections for some years, and subsequently settled as pastor at Hemycok, East Devon. He soon removed to Upottery, where he remained fourteen years. Failing health compelled him to retire for a time from the active work of the ministry, but he subsequently entered upon the pastoral service at Uffculm and other places. He died March 27, 1879, after fifty-six years in the ministry. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1880, p. 290.

Black Rubric is the declaration on kneeling at the end of the office for the holy communion.

Blackstock, Moses, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ireland, March 1, 1793. He experienced conversion at the age of eighteen, while attending college in Dublin; received license to preach in the following year, and returned to college to prepare for the ministry; and in 1818 left Ireland, with a colony of emigrants, as missionary to Canada, where he preached regularly for forty-two years, filling important appointments in connection with the Wesleyan Conference. In 1856 he removed to Lafayette, Ind., and identified himself with the North-west Indiana Conference, of which he was an honored member until his death, Aug. 31, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 90; Simpson, Cyclopædia of Methodism, s. v.

Blackstock, William, a minister of the Associate Church, was born, educated, and licensed to preach in Ireland. He emigrated to this country about 1794. The Presbytery of the Carolinas report that he was a probationer from the Presbytery of Down, in Ireland, and had been received and ordained by them, July 8, 1794, over the united congregations of Steele Creek, Ebenezer, and Neeley Creek, S. C. In 1804 he resigned, and became a stated supply to the churches of New Perth, New Sterling, and Rocky Spring. Here he remained until 1811, when he was settled at the Waxhaws, N. C. He subsequently accepted a call from Tirzah, S. C., and died in 1830. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 111.

Blackstone, WILLIAM, a clergyman of the Church of England, the date of whose birth is unknown, figures in the first list of the freemen of Massachusetts in 1630. Subsequently he sold the land upon which the city of Boston is built. He was one of the two or three earliest Episcopal clergymen residing in New England. As a student he had a considerable reputation, and his library was extensive. Six miles from Providence, R. I., he built a house upon an eminence, which he called "Study Hill," and to which, it seems, he removed in 1631. He preached only occasionally. His house and library were burned in king Philip's war. He died at Shawmut, near Boston, Mass., May 26, 1675. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 1.

Black-Sunday is the Sunday before Palm-Sunday, i. e. Passion-Sunday, so called because in England black, dark blue, or dark violet were the ecclesiastical colors used in the services for the day.

Blackwell, David, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Madison County, Ky., in April, 1805. He removed in 1829 to Illinois, where he was converted in the following year; received license to preach in 1833, began to preach in 1834, and at the close of the same year entered the Illinois Conference. In 1845, owing to failure of health, he retired from the effective ranks, and spent nearly all his remaining days confined to his house. He died July 7, 1848. Mr. Blackwell was an excellent man, an able preacher, and a devoted Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1848, p. 284.

Blackwell, Demarcus Cicero, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. No dates or places concerning his life are accessible other than his death, Dec. 7, 1871, and that he was a member of the Missouri Conference, a member of the Church South nearly twenty-two years, and an acceptable and successful minister twenty-one years. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 738.

Blackwell, Ezekiel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Madison County, Ky., Sept. 12, 1807. He emigrated to Illinois in 1829, experienced conversion in 1830, received license to preach in 1841, and in the same year entered the Illinois Conference, in which he labored diligently until he died, July 16, 1849. Mr. Blackwell was an excellent, zealous, faithful minister, modest, religious, and well received. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1849, p. 393.

Blackwell, George, an English divine of the Roman Church, was born in Middlesex in 1545, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and at the English College in Douay. He approved of the oath of allegiance to the crown of England, and advised the Romanists to take it. This led to a controversy with cardinal Bellarmine. He died in Rome, Jan. 13, 1612. His Letters to the Romish Priests, touching the lawfulness of taking the oath of allegiance, were published in 1597. He also published a Letter to Cardinal Cujatane (1596), and some other papers on the same subject. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blackwell, Henry C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in St. Genevieve, Mo., Dec. 21, 1824. In 1845 he engaged as compositor for the Illinois State Register, and in 1846 for like work for the Illinois Gazette, at Beardstown, where he was converted. In 1851 he entered M'Kendree College for better ministerial preparation, and the next year united with the Southern Illinois Conference. Failing health in 1854 necessitated his superannuation. In 1857 he was transferred to the Rock River Conference, labored one year, and again became superannuated, which relation he sustained till his death, by drowning, in the Kaskaskia River, July 19, 1860. Mr. Blackwell was a Christian gentleman, modest and retiring, and a self-sacrificing, efficient minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 330.

Blackwell, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Wadsley, near Sheffield, Nov. 21, 1812. He was converted in his seventeenth year, was called to the ministry in 1835, and went as a missionary to the West Indies in the following year, where he labored for eleven years. After that his ministry was exercised in England, with great blessing to the charges. His preaching was of a high order of excellence, chaste and elegant in style, beautiful in illustration, evangelical in matter, and attended with the unction of the Spirit. He died suddenly at Burslem, July 9, 1864. Mr. Blackwell was gentle and conciliatory, truly kind of heart, courteous, and with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1864, p. 25.

Blackwell, Michael Joseph, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born on Win-yaw Bay, S. C., Aug. 30, 1800. He joined the Church in 1826, received license to preach in 1840, and in 1841 entered the Memphis Conference, in which, with the exception of two years as supernumerary, he did effective work until 1867, when he became superannuated, and continued to sustain that relation to the close of his life, Dec. 22, 1869. In the Conference sessions Mr. Blackwell was considered one of the wisest of counselors. His knowledge was extensive, and his power of analysis very great. His style of delivery was pure, elegant, dignified, didactic, enrapturing. His zeal exceeded his physical strength. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1870, p. 455.

Blackwell, Richard, an early Methodist preacher, commenced his ministry in 1759, and preached in Ireland and Great Britain. His last years were in Scotland. He died in Aberdeen, Dec. 27, 1767. He is spoken of as a young man at the time of his death, wholly devoted to his work, and an example to the flock in conversation and godliness. See Atmore, Methodist Memorial, s. v.

Blackwell, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman, was minister of Paisley, in Renfrewshire, from whence he was removed in 1700 to be one of the ministers of Aberdeen. He was afterwards elected professor of divinity in Marischal College, Aberdeen, and in 1717 became principal of that college, in both of which offices he continued until his death, in 1728. He published, Ratio Sacra (Edinburgh, 1710):—Schema Sacrum (eod.):—Methodus Evangelica (Lond. 1712). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. v, 360; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blackwood, Christopher, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1686. He was a graduate of Cambridge University, and at the beginning of the Parliamentary war the rector of a parish in Kent. A change of views on the proper subjects of baptism led to his leaving the national Church, and for a time he was pastor of a Baptist Church near Staplehurst, and then, as a chaplain in the army, went to Ireland. Subsequently he was instrumental in forming a Baptist Church in Dublin, of which he was the pastor for several years. He was regarded as a fine scholar, especially in patristic literature, and was himself the author of several valuable works, which, in their day, were very popular. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 104. (J. C. S.)

Blackwood, James, a Reformed Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland. In 1811 he entered Glasgow College, where he remained three years, and completed his theological course, and was licensed in 1819. He emigrated to America in 1824, and took up his abode in Belmont County, O., within the bounds of the Reformed Presbytery of Pittsburg, and on May 8 was ordained by that body. He accepted a call the same year from the congregation of Brush Creek, Adams County, O. The climate did not agree with him, hence he obtained a dissolution of his pastoral relation in 1833. The next year he took charge of the united congregations in Western Pennsylvania and Ohio. In this extensive field he labored until his death, Oct. 8, 1851. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, v, 77.

Bladus, Saint, is said to have been a bishop in the Isle of Man. His day was July 3. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Blaecca, the "præfectus" or reeve of Lincoln, was converted, with all his family, by Paulinus in 627 (or 628).

Blagborne, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1754. He joined the Methodists at an early age, and was received by Wesley into the ministry in 1785, and travelled therein for twenty-five years. Owing to singular opinions on the uncertainty of things, arising from the French Revolution, he retired from the ministry, but still preached. He died suddenly at Chiselhurst, Kent, May 2, 1816. See Stevenson, City-road Chapel, p. 529.

Blaikling, Francis, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Winder, near Ledberg, Yorkshire, in the year 1631, and in 1652 was converted under the preaching of George Fox. "He gladly received the truth in the love of it, and faithfully walked in it, and cheerfully suffered for it, not only extreme spoiling his goods, but a long imprisonment in York Castle." He became an accredited minister among Friends some time after his conversion. "In a plain testimony, he hit the mark both in reproof to the wicked and the comfort of true mourners in Zion." Among Friends he was a man well beloved and esteemed, and lived a useful, exemplary life. He died Jan. 20, 1704. See Evans, Piety Promoted, i, 282-283. (J. C. S.)

Blaikling, John, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Yorkshire, England, in September, 1625. He was "convinced of the truth" in 1652, under the ministry of George Fox, and about the beginning of 1655 "received a dispensation of the Gospel to publish to the world." He exercised his ministry in the counties of Durham, Northumberland, and Yorkshire, and many parts of Scotland. "His ministry was attended with power." Late in life he wrote, in reply to William Rogers's book against Friends, a little volume entitled Antichristian Treachery Discovered and its Way Blocked Up. He died May 4, 1705. See Evans, Piety Promoted, i, 269-272. (J. C. S.)

Blain, Daniel, a Presbyterian minister, was born in South Carolina in 1773, of the Scotch-Irish race. When about twenty years of age, Mr. Blain entered Liberty Hall, near Lexington, to complete his education, and afterwards took a theological course in Washington College. He was licensed by the Lexington Presbytery about 1796. He taught in the New London Academy at Bedford, and preached regularly to the congregations of Old Oxford and Timber Ridge. He was appointed as one of a committee by the Synod in 1803 to consider the subject of establishing a religious periodical, and the first number of The Virginia Religious Magazine was issued in October, 1804. He died March 19, 1814. Some of his contributions to the magazine are as follows: "Christian Zeal," "Observations on the Sabbath," "Death of Voltaire and Mrs. Leech Contrasted," "Religious Curiosity," "The Scriptures Profitable," "Professor and Honestus," "Lines on the Dark Day in Lexington." See Foote, Sketches of Virginia (2d series).

Blain, George W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Albemarle County, Va., in 1815. He was converted at Salem when seventeen years of age, graduated at Randolph Macon College in 1837, and was admitted into the Virginia Conference in 1838. He was elected professor of mathematics in the Collegiate Institute of Buckingham County in 1840, received his master's degree in 1841, became superannuated in 1842, and died in Botetourt County, March 7, 1843. Blain's talents were superior, and they were freely consecrated to Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843-44, p. 460.

Blain, John, a Baptist minister, was born at Fishkill, Dutchess Co., N. Y., Feb. 14, 1795. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and at twenty-three united with the only Baptist Church then existing in Albany. When engaged as a travelling trader, he felt impressed that it was his duty to preach. After some preparatory study, he was licensed and ordained, commencing to preach in November, 1819. He was a pastor successively in Auburn (N. Y.), Stonington (Conn.), Pawtucket and Providence (R. I.), New York city, Syracuse, in two churches in Charlestown (Mass.), Central Falls and Providence (R. I.), and Mansfield (Mass.). Regarding his gifts as fitting him for evangelistic rather than pastoral work, he preached in many places in New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts. We are told that during his ministry he had charge of fourteen churches, baptized about three thousand persons, labored in about one hundred revivals, preached in more than one thousand places, delivered over nine thousand five hundred sermons, and married over two thousand couples. After having contributed liberally to various objects of benevolence, in his last will he bequeathed his property to mission causes. He received a small pension from the government for services rendered in the war of 1812. His death took place at Mansfield, Dec. 26, 1879. See Rhode Island Biographical Cyclopaedia, p. 259; Providence Journal, Dec. 30, 1879. (J. C. S.)

Blain, John D., a Methodist Episcopal minister,

was born at Kingston, N. J., Feb. 24, 1819. He experienced conversion in 1835, began preaching in 1841, and in 1842 entered the New Jersey Conference. In 1852 he was sent to California to assist in planting Methodism on the Pacific coast. In impaired health in 1865, he returned East, labored some time in New York as a pastor, and in 1872 entered the Newark Conference, served four years, and then took a superannuated relation, which he sustained till his death, in June, 1876. Mr. Blain was a Christian gentleman, remarkably affable, thoroughly conscientious, tender-hearted, and unusually successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 37; Simpson, Cyclopædia of Methodism, s. v.

Blain, Wilson, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ross County, O., March 2, 1813. He graduated at Miami University, Oxford, in 1831, attended the full course of study at the Associate Reformed Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa., and was licensed by the First Presbytery of Ohio in 1838. He was at first pastor at Hebron, Ia., but in May, 1847, he resigned to become a missionary to Oregon, where he spent the next two years as pastor, editor, and representative. In 1850 he organized a Church in California, but in 1853 he returned to Oregon, teaching part of the time for several years thereafter. He died in 1861. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 228.

Blair, Andrew, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born about 1748. In 1768 he first heard the Methodists, and in 1771 he was converted. He was received by the Conference in 1778, and for many years he preached in the British Isles. He died at Dublin, April 8, 1793. See Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism, ii, 277; Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Blair, James Gilman, D.D., LL.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Marcellus, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1816, of zealous Christian parents. He had an intense love for the study of books and nature from boyhood, and many anecdotes are related of his early abstraction of mind. He experienced religion in his youth, and was soon licensed to exhort. In 1835 he was associated in Cazenovia Seminary, and in 1841 graduated with honors at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn. He then became principal of Blenden Young Men's Seminary at Westerville, O., where he was eminently successful. Having become a member of the Ohio (now Cincinnati) Conference, in 1843, he entered upon active itinerant labors on White Oak Circuit, comprising twenty-two appointments. Through his teaching at Greenfield, a seminary was inaugurated in 1846, over which he presided six years. In 1852 he was elected to the chair of vice-president and professor of natural sciences in the Ohio State University, at Athens. Here he spent twelve years in profound study, lecturing and preaching. Most of his time between 1864 and 1870 was devoted to educational labors in Ohio and West Virginia. His latter years were spent in active service in the West Virginia Conference. He died Dec. 23, 1878. Mr. Blair was a great admirer of primitive Methodism. As a theologian he was profound, as a preacher highly interesting and instructive. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 56.

Blair, John (sometimes called Arnold), a monk of the order of St. Benedict, was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, in the reign of Alexander III, and educated with Sir William Wallace at the school of Dundee. He then went to Paris, studied in the university there, and joined the order of St. Benedict. He returned to Scotland and lived in retirement until Wallace became viceroy of the kingdom, when he became his chaplain. He wrote a history of Wallace's life, in Latin verse, about 1327. The precise date of his death is not known. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blair, John Durburrow, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Fagg's Manor, Pa., Oct. 15, 1759. He was licensed to preach by the Hanover Presbytery in 1785. Soon after this he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at Pale Green, Va. He retained his connection with this Church until within a few years of his death, which occurred in January, 1823. Mr. Blair published a few sermons during his life, and after his death a volume of his Sermons were published under the direction of Rev. J. B. Hodge. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 461.

Blair, Robert J., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in New Jersey in 1800. He graduated at the New Brunswick Seminary in 1823, and was licensed the same year. In 1824 he was appointed missionary to Princetown and Gunderland (Helderberg). In 1825 he was missionary to Salem (New Salem), Albany County, N. Y. Princetown and Helderberg were served by him as missionary from 1825 to 1827, and Helderberg alone from 1827 to 1830. He died at Bedminster, Somerset County, N. J., in 1867, without charge. As a Christian his life was eminently consistent, as a preacher he was evangelical and zealous. Few men have been more successful in preaching the Gospel by the wayside and from house to house than he. He was a patient endurer of suffering for many years. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 184.

Blair, S., a Baptist minister, was born in Indiana in 1827. He removed to Illinois in early life, was converted at sixteen, and a few years afterwards entered the ministry. In 1836 he went to Olney, where he found three Baptists. With untiring zeal and labor he built up a Church of 120 members. He continued to serve this Church until November, 1861, when he became chaplain of the Sixty-third (Ill.) Regiment, where he made himself most useful. At least two revivals were enjoyed in the army during his labors. He was so severely injured by a railroad accident near Memphis that he died, Jan. 19, 1863. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1863, p. 9, 10. (J. C. S.)

Blair, Samuel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Fagg's Manor, Chester County, Pa., in 1741. He graduated at New Jersey College in 1760, and afterwards served as tutor there for nearly three years. He was licensed to preach by the Newcastle Presbytery in 1764. In November, 1766, he was installed pastor of the Old South Church in Boston as a colleague of Rev. Dr. Sewall. He died in September, 1818. Dr. Blair was a man of polished manners, of amiable and generous disposition. "He was a good scholar, a well-read theologian, and an accomplished pulpit orator." See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 268; Index to the Princeton Review, s. v.

Blaise, Saint. See BLASIIUS, Saint.

Blake, A. J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Oct. 7, 1821. He joined the Church in 1838, and in 1847 entered the Pittsburgh Conference, wherein he served diligently until his death, Dec. 20, 1850. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1851, p. 601.

Blake, Alfred, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Ohio, was, for many years, rector of Harcourt-place Academy, Gambier, and a teacher in the same town. In 1859 he held, in addition to the rectorship of Harcourt-place Academy, that of St. Mark's parish at Mill Creek. In 1865, for St. Mark's was substituted the parish of St. Matthew, Perry Creek. In 1866 he was rector of Harcourt-place Academy only, where he remained the rest of his life. He died Jan. 30, 1877. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Blake, D. Hoyt, a Congregational minister, was a native of Sutton, Vt. After the death of his parents, he went, at the age of seventeen, to reside with a brother in Michigan. With the intention of preparing for a business life, he entered Knox College. His conversion led him to devote himself to the work of the ministry. In 1859 he graduated from the Union Theological Seminary of New York. His first charge was the Church in Mendota, Ill. For some months he served the Church in Waupun, Wis., and then became pastor of the Church in Princeton, Ill. Some time after he served as chaplain in the hospitals of the Army of the Potomac, and among the exchanged prisoners, contracting a disease which eventually proved fatal. He was installed, however, in the Church at Spencerport, N. Y., where he labored earnestly for a year or two, and was then compelled to resign. He died in Stamford, Conn., April 6, 1869, at the age of forty years. See Cong. Quarterly, 1869, p. 564.

Blake, Ebenezer, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Durham, Me., April 29, 1786. He began his itinerant life at the age of twenty-one, and preached four years in Maine, five in New Hampshire, eighteen in Connecticut, seventeen in Massachusetts, and two in Rhode Island. In 1854 he became superannuated, and located with his family at Mystic Bridge, Conn. He closed his life Jan. 2, 1868. Mr. Blake possessed an iron constitution, and obeyed the injunction, "Cry aloud and lift up thy voice like a trumpet." He was decided, studious, and spiritual. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 60.

Blake, Elias F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1816. He experienced religion and was received into the Maine Conference in 1843, became superannuated in 1852, and died Oct. 6, 1854. Mr. Blake was a man of unsullied reputation, deep and uniform piety, and ardent devotedness to his calling. His labors were greatly blessed in the building-up of the Church, and his death was triumphant. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1855, p. 555.

Blake, Henry Martin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1818. He experienced conversion in 1829, while a student at Kent's Hill Seminary, Me., and nine years later entered the Maine Conference. He remained steadfast, immovable, and always abounding in the work of the Lord, until his sudden death, Jan. 15, 1865. Few ministers can exhibit a more glorious record, or can point to such a cloud of witnesses for their pastoral fidelity as Mr. Blake. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 119.

Blake, Horace Thompson, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Worcester, Mass., in 1819. He graduated from Amherst College in 1838; pursued his theological studies at Union Theological Seminary for one year, and died at Worthington, Mass., June 2, 1841. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. p. 31.

Blake, James, an American minister, was a native of Dorchester, Mass., and graduated at Harvard College in 1769. He died in 1771, aged twenty-one. A volume of his sermons was published after his death. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blake, John M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Sanbornton, N. H., June 8, 1819. He experienced religion in 1837; received license to exhort in 1850; and in 1851 entered the New Hampshire Conference. In 1856, because of ill-health, he was compelled to superannuate, and continued in that relation until his sudden death, July 24, 1858. Mr. Blake was a superior man, always cheerful, and eminently honored and successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1859, p. 135.

Blake, Orville, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Cornwall, April 8, 1824. In 1826 he removed with his parents to Brimfield, O. He became a Christian in early life, and began to preach at about the age of twenty among the Calvinistic Baptists. He afterwards joined the Free-will Baptists, became a preacher among them, and was for many years pastor of several small churches of his denomination. His life was one of great activity. Besides his ministerial duties, he had the care of a farm for a time, was for two seasons a member of the Ohio legislature, was corresponding editor for a time of one journal and correspondent of others, and lectured on various topics. His death took place Aug. 12, 1877. See Morning Herald, Nov. 21, 1877. (J. C. S.)

Blake, Samuel Vinton, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Easton, Md., Jan. 15, 1814. He was converted in youth; received license to exhort in 1833, to preach in 1834; and in 1835 entered the Baltimore Conference, in which he labored diligently until his death, May 9, 1871. Mr. Blake was energetic, sincere, industrious, exemplary in life and triumphant in death. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 16; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Blake, Thomas, an English Puritan divine, was born in Staffordshire in 1597, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. He entered the Established Church, but in 1648 became a Puritan, and was made pastor of St. Almond's in Shrewsbury. He afterwards became pastor of Tamworth in Staffordshire, where he was also one of the committee for the ejection of "ignorant and scandalous ministers and schoolmasters." He died in June, 1657. He wrote, A Treatise of the Covenant of God with Mankind (1653):—The Covenant Sealed (1655):—Living Truths in Dying Times (1665):—and some controversial tracts on Infant Baptism. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blake, Thomas D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Farmington Falls, Me., Feb. 4, 1811. He was converted in early life, and became a local preacher when about seventeen; and in 1848 entered the Providence Conference, in which he did valiant service until failing health obliged his superannuation in 1856. He died Jan. 26, 1858. Mr. Blake was ardent in friendship, social in disposition, and symmetrical in his Christian character. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 38.

Blake, William (1), an English painter and designer, was born Nov. 28, 1757, studied under Bazire, Flaxman and Fuseli, and died Aug. 12, 1828. His genius was undoubted, but his mind was ill-balanced; and in his illustrations of Young's Night Thoughts, Jerusalem, Blair's Grave, and the Book of Job, we are sometimes surprised by the invention and sublimity displayed by the artist. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Blake, William (2), an English Baptist minister, was born at Chippenham, July 5, 1786. He was converted when young, and for a time was a book-keeper in a large factory at Bradford-on-Avon. He began to preach near his native place, and his only pastorate was at Broughton Gifford, where he remained forty-two years, and died Feb. 23, 1869. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1870, p. 188. (J. C. S.)

Blake, William (3), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Stark, N. H., Nov. 30, 1811. He was prayerful and thoughtful from childhood, but made no profession of religion until 1833; received an exhorter's license soon after, and in 1837 joined the New Hampshire conference. In 1847, in consequence of excessive labors during a revival service, his health failed, and he was compelled to retire from the effective ranks. He died March 24, 1851. Mr. Blake was energetic and faithful, and possessed fair preaching abilities. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1851, p. 596.

Blake, William (4), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Prince Edward County, Va., Feb. 9, 1819. He removed to Ohio in 1834, to Indiana in 1840, and was a student at Asbury University, Indiana, from 1846 to 1848; was received into the North Indiana Conference in 1850; became superannuated at Greencastle in 1867; was made effective in 1871, and was transferred to Northwest Indiana Conference in 1876; took a supernumerary relation in 1878, and died at Greencastle, Ind., May 3, 1880. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 208.

Blakeley, JACOB E., a Congregational minister, was born at Pawlet, Vt., June 9, 1820. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1844, and gave himself to teaching for four years. He then began the study of theology at Union Theological Seminary, and after one year went to Auburn Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1851. He was ordained a minister in the Congregational Church March 9, 1853, was pastor of a Church at East Poughkeepsie, N. Y., for one year, and died at that place May 6, 1854. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. p. 63.

Blakely, ABRAM, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Binghamton, N. Y., May 10, 1811. He was educated at Lane Seminary, Ohio. He was licensed by Ripley Presbytery, and ordained by Athens Presbytery in 1841, and labored as a home missionary in Gallia County, in Cincinnati (1851), in Dover (1855), in Austinburg and Ohio City; next in Sodus and Wolcott, N. Y. (1860), and for the last years of his ministry in Wayne County, N. Y. He died in New York city, Dec. 19, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 209.

Blakeman, PHINEAS, a Congregational minister, was born at Stratford, Conn., Feb. 14, 1813. He studied at Yale Theological Seminary for three years, and was licensed by the Hartford South Association in Aug. 1839. In 1841-42 he preached in New York state; then, 1843-44, in Jefferson, O.; then in Connecticut; then, 1847-49, in Orient, L. I. From Jan. 1853, to April, 1858, he was stated supply in North Madison, Conn. His next charge was the Congregational Church in Maquoketa, Ia., which he held three years. He next spent a year preaching in Marseilles, Ill., then ten months abroad, and in 1864 went to Leraysville, Pa. He died at Tonawanda, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1870, being at the time a member of the Buffalo Presbytery. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1870.

Blakeslee, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at New Hartford, N. Y., March 10, 1809. He experienced conversion in 1828; soon after received license to exhort; in 1836 to preach; and in 1844 entered the Oneida Conference. During the following twenty-one years he was consecrated, active, and useful. He spent the last thirteen years in retirement from active service, and died in Cazenovia, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1875. Mr. Blakeslee was a man of fine thought, gentle spirit, and devotedness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 120.

Blakeslee, Edward, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at North Haven, Conn., June 27, 1776. He was compelled to leave Yale College in his senior year on account of the death of his parents. He was ordained deacon Feb. 24, 1788, and priest June 5, 1798. For three years after his ordination he preached in North Haven and its neighborhood; and then was assistant minister to the Rev. Dr. Mansfield in the parish at Derby, Conn., where he died July 15, 1797. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 413.

Blakeslee, G. H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Springfield, Pa., Oct. 28, 1819. He received a careful religious training; was converted in 1834; licensed to preach in 1837; and in 1841 entered the Oneida Conference. In 1867 he became superannuated, and settled at Lima. During his fourteen years' residence at that place he did work under the presiding elder, and afterwards joined the Wyoming Conference. He died at Nichols, N. Y., July 26, 1876. Mr. Blakeslee's life was exemplary, and an honor to the Church. He brought many to Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 59.

Blakeslee, James, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Brattleboro, Vt., March 4, 1800. He was licensed in 1827, and preached at Curtisville, Conn., and various places in New York and Ohio. In 1836 he went to Jamaica as a missionary, but returned to the United States in 1838. He died April 4, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 294.

Blakeway, JOHN BRICKDALE, an English divine and antiquary, was born in 1765, and educated at Westminster School and Oriel College, Oxford. He died in 1826. He published, A Warning against Schism, a sermon (1799):—Thanksgiving Sermon (1805):—An Attempt to Ascertain the Author of Junius's Letters (1813). He also made some historical collections, a part of which were published before his death. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blakey, John, an English Baptist minister, was born at Moorhead, near Accrington, Oct. 18, 1784. By the kindness of a Baptist deacon he was taught to read, was led to Christ, and united with the Church May 12, 1805. After being licensed, he preached more or less for twelve or fifteen years, and in 1824 was invited to become minister of the Baptist Church at Inskip. For twelve years he labored most faithfully, preaching on week evenings in the adjacent villages, through a wide circuit. In the spring of 1836 he removed to Harlington, where he died, March 16, 1856. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1857, p. 44. (J. C. S.)

Blakey, Stephen A., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in 1832. In 1859 he joined the St. Louis Conference. He served in the war, and died March 29, 1871. His Christian character was unsullied. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1871, p. 603.

Blampin, THOMAS, a French theologian and learned Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Noyon in 1640. He entered the abbey of St. Remy at Rheims, where he taught philosophy and theology. His superiors having charge of a new edition of the works of St. Augustine, Blampin distinguished himself by accomplishing this work. He became prior of St. Nicaise at Rheims, from which he passed to that of St. Remy, in the same city, and still later to that of St. Ouen at Rouen. He was appointed in 1708 visitor of the province of Burgundy, and died at St. Benedict upon the Loire, Feb. 13, 1710. He published an edition of St. Augustine's works (Paris, 1679-1700). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blampoix, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French theologian, was born at Macon, Oct. 16, 1740. He entered the ecclesiastical profession, and after teaching philosophy in his native city was appointed rector of Vandœuvre, near Troyes. During the Revolution, Blampoix took the oath required of the ecclesiastics, and was elected constitutional bishop of Troyes, and attended the national council of 1801. Like all his colleagues, he resigned the episcopal functions, in accordance with the concordat. Having been for some time rector of Arnay, he retired to private life. He died at Macon in 1820. Some articles written by him are published in the Annales de la Religion. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanc, Anthony, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop, was born at Sury, near Lyons, France, Oct. 11, 1792. In 1816 he was admitted to the priesthood, and soon after, upon invitation of bishop Dubourg of New Orleans, he volunteered for the American mission. On his arrival, in 1817, he spent a short time at Annapolis, Md., and then proceeded south-west through Kentucky. His first mission was at Vincennes in 1818; in 1820 he was called to New Orleans by Dr. Dubourg, and appointed associate vicar-general. In 1830 he declined an appointment as coadjutor to bishop De Neckere, but in 1833, on the death of that prelate, he was elected administrator of the diocese, and in 1835 was appointed bishop, and consecrated in the cathedral of New Orleans, Nov. 22 of that year. The diocese of New Orleans then included Louisiana and Mississippi, and subsequently Texas. The Roman Catholic population was large, but careless and inert. Churches were few, small, and widely scattered; religious teaching was at the lowest ebb, while charitable institutions were almost unknown. The new bishop called to his aid the Lazarists, Jesuits, Redemptorists, and other orders, besides various communities of women, who opened schools and asylums. In 1838 a diocesan seminary was established in the parish of Assumption, and soon several colleges and schools. In 1843-44 the lay trustees of the Cathedral of St. Louis refused to recognize his episcopal authority, but after several months' litigation, and upon an appeal to the state legislature, he triumphed. On the recommendation of the seventh council of Baltimore, New Orleans was erected into an archdiocese July 19, 1850, Blanc being raised to the dignity of a metropolitan, with four suffragans. In 1854 he visited Rome, and assisted in the promulgation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception. The following year he summoned the first council of New Orleans, and initiated measures for its better government. Bishop Blanc died suddenly, after celebrating mass, June 20, 1860, admired by all for "his amiability of character, and unbounded charity to all men." See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1875, p. 44; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 607-609.

Blanc, Le. See LE BLANC.

Blanc, Ludwig Gottfried, a German writer, was born in Berlin, Sept. 19, 1781, of French refugee parents. He was a preacher in the Cathedral of Halle, and professor of the Roman languages in that city, and wrote, Handbuch des Wissenswürdigsten aus der Natur und Gesch. d. Erde und ihrer Bewohner (5th ed. 1846-49, 3 vols.):—Predigten (Halle, 1811). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blancas de San José, FRANCISCO, a Spanish missionary, was born at Tarragona about 1560. He was successively professor of belles-lettres at the convent of Piedrochita, preacher at Yepes, and missionary to the Philippine Islands. He died in the Indies in 1614, leaving some religious works in their language for the Indian converts, and a work upon the art of learning this language. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchard, Amos, a Congregational minister, was born at Peacham, Vt., Sept. 8, 1800. He began his academical studies at the age of twenty-one years, and graduated from the Andover Theological Seminary in 1828, in which year he was licensed to preach. The first year after graduation he spent in Western New York, in the employment of the American Tract Society. Then for three years he edited the Cincinnati Christian Journal. He was ordained to the ministry July 27, 1831, by the Presbytery of Cincinnati. In the following year he returned to New England, and was installed Dec. 9 as pastor of the Congregational Church in Lyndon, Vt., remaining until the winter of 1835. After spending a year and a half as acting pastor at Cabotsville, Mass., he was installed in Warner, N. H., in 1837. Meriden, Conn., was his next field of labor, where he was installed in 1840; from this charge he was dismissed more than twenty-five years afterward, removing to Barnet, Vt., where he died, Jan. 6, 1869. Among his literary remains are five published discourses. See Cong. Quarterly, 1869, p. 299.

Blanchard, Antoine, a French priest and prior of St. Marc lez-Vendôme, in the early part of the last century, wrote, Novel Essai d'Exhortations pour les Etats Différens des Malades (Paris, 1718, 2 vols.):—Discours Pathétiques sur les Matières les plus Importantes et les plus Touchantes de la Morale Chrétienne (ibid. 1730, 2 vols. 12mo).

Blanchard, C., a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about the year 1790. For several years after he was licensed he preached as an itinerant minister, and was ordained pastor of the Second Church in Shapleigh, Me., in 1823, where he remained five years, 1823 to 1828, and then took charge of the Second Church in Nobleborough. The labors of Mr. Blanchard were greatly blessed. In a revival which occurred in 1833, seventy-five were added to the Church by baptism. He remained with this Church until 1836, when he removed to Augusta, and was pastor there one year; he then went to Orono, and took charge of the infant Church in that place, which in 1845 had increased to some seventy members. Beyond this point the writer is unable to trace the history of Mr. Blanchard. He was a most useful and successful minister of his denomination in his native state. See Millett, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 436. (J. C. S.)

Blanchard, Charles Antoine, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Retheil in 1737, and died at Caen in 1797, leaving in manuscript a Histoire de l'Abbaye de Saint Etienne de Caen; which contains valuable information upon the origin and manners of the people of Britain. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchard, Ira H. T., a Congregational minister, was born at Weymouth, Mass., and graduated from Harvard College in 1817. After holding the office of tutor in the college, and completing his theological studies, he was ordained over the First Congregational Church in Harvard, where he remained till severe illness compelled him to resign the pastoral care. Subsequently, having partially recovered his health, he took charge of the congregation at South Natick, but was never again settled in the ministry. A few years previous to his death, which took place on April 9, 1845, he removed to Weymouth. Mr. Blanchard was a man of much more than ordinary abilities, and of unblemished moral character. See The Christian Examiner (Boston), 1845, p. 432.

Blanchard, Jacques, a distinguished French painter, was born in Paris in 1600, and studied under his uncle, Nicolas Botteri. He was the first to establish a true and natural style of coloring, in which the French artists were very deficient. His chief works are two pictures that he painted for the Church of Notre Dame—one representing the Descent of the Holy Ghost, and the other St. Andrew Kneeling before the Cross. The following are some of his principal works: The Holy Family; another Holy Family, with St. Catharine and St. John; The Birth of the Virgin; St. Agnes Adoring the Infant Jesus. Blanchard died in 1638. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchard, John F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Sturbridge, Mass., May 25, 1811. He experienced religion when about eighteen, began his course as a preacher a few years later, and in 1843 was admitted into the Providence Conference, wherein he labored with fidelity, acceptability, and success, until August, 1851, when, after a short illness, he died. The prominent features in Mr. Blanchard's character were moral integrity, unaffected humility, and a sound, practical, personal piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 33.

Blanchard, Jonathan, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1817. He experienced conversion in his youth; entered the Detroit Conference in 1838, and filled many of the best appointments. In 1862 he was appointed chaplain of the twenty-sixth regiment of Michigan Volunteer Infantry, in which office he was very useful and highly honored by the soldiers. He died March 22, 1864. Mr. Blanchard was estimable in his Christian character, sound in his experience, a faithful minister, and a true friend. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 170.

Blanchard, Richard A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Madison County, N. Y., Dec. 27, 1816. He was converted in his seventeenth year; received license to exhort in 1836, to preach in 1840, and in the same year entered the Rock River Conference, wherein he served the Church as health permitted with zeal and fidelity until his sudden death, Aug. 19, 1873. Mr. Blanchard was a true and faithful Christian, active and painstaking; a serious, reverent, and impressive preacher, and a much-beloved pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 101.

Blanchard, William H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Schuylcr, N. Y., in 1825. He experienced conversion at the age of eighteen, and, after spending some time at Cazenovia Seminary, entered the Black River Conference in 1851. He was diligent and faithful until his death, Jan. 23, 1857. Mr. Blanchard was firm and severe in rebuking sin, toilsome in labors, and plain, direct, vigorous, and original in preaching. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 365.

Blanchefort, GUY DE, fortieth grand-master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, was born at the chateau of Boulancy, near Bonnat (Creuse). After entering this order he had the commandery of Molteitols and of Maisonnès. In 1480 he distinguished himself at the siege of Rhodes. D'Aubusson, his uncle, thirty-eighth grand-master, charged him with conducting to France Zizim, brother of the emperor Bajazet. Blanchefort was, in 1494, grand-prior of Auvergne. Elected grand-master, Nov. 12, 1512, he departed immediately, and, although ill, embarked at Nice, and died during the voyage, Nov. 24, 1513. He was buried at Rhodes. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blancheri. See BLANSERI.

Blanchet, THOMAS, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1617. He went to Rome and studied under Andrea Sacchi. After some years he returned to Paris, and painted the Vision of St. Philip, and the Baptism of the Eunuch, for the Church of Notre Dame; also some works for the town-house at Lyons, which stamped him as one of the ablest French historical painters of the day. He died at Lyons in 1689. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchetti, Antonio, an Italian preacher of the Jesuit order, was born at Pozzuolo in 1602. He wrote Conciones Quadragesimales (Milan, 1669, 1670). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchetti, Cesare. See BIANCHETTI.

Blanchflower, GEORGE, a Wesleyan minister, was born at Rocklands, Norfolk, Jan. 19, 1817. He was converted at the age of twenty, under William Dawson; entered the ministry in 1843 (Banbury), spent eleven years (1844 sq.) in the West Indies, returned to his native land on account of failing health, and died during his second year at Warrington, Feb. 28, 1877. "A transparent simplicity of character was blended with great shrewdness and sagacity, and cheerfulness shone consistently with thoughtful piety." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1877, p. 29.

Blanchiotti (or Bianciotti), BONAVENTURA, an Italian theologian and preacher of the Carmelite order, was born at Perosa, in Piedmont, Dec. 30, 1713. He wrote, I Fratelli e Sorelle del Terz' Ordine delle Carmine, Informati del Proprio Stato e Guidati all'Amor di Dio (Vercelli, 1748):—Thomæ Waldensis Carmelitæ Anglici, Doctrinale Antiquitatum Fidei Ecclesiæ Catholicæ ad Vetera Exemplaria Recognitum, Notis Illustratum, etc. (Venice, 1757). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchis, PAOLO DA, an Italian theologian of the Dominican order, a native of Murano, who lived in the early half of the 17th century, wrote Disceptationes de Difficilioribus Materis Casuum et Dubiorum Occurrentium in Consuetudine, de Penitentia, de Negotiatione, de Bello Publico et Privato (Venice, 1622, 1650). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanchus, ANDREW. See BIANCHI.

Blanco, FRANCISCO, a Spanish theologian and prelate, was successively canon of Valencia, bishop of Orense, and archbishop of Compostella; he assisted at the Council of Trent. The Italians sought to make him pope. He died April 15, 1581, leaving Advertensius para que los Curas Exerciten mejor sus Officios, para evitar Algunos Jeros, etc.:—Summa de la Doctrina Christiana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blancus, CHRISTOPHERUS, a German engraver, lived about 1600, and is very little known. He executed a few plates in the style of John Muller, among which are, A Holy Family, Accompanied by Angels; The Portrait of Michael Angelo Buonarroti, dated 1612.

Bland, Ambrose, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Muskingum County, O., Jan. 5, 1834. He was converted in early life, but, refusing to obey his convictions to preach, became hardened, and many years remained an alien. In 1873 he was powerfully reclaimed, began immediately the work to which he had been called, and in 1874 was received into the Illinois Conference. He labored faithfully and had good success until his decease, Nov. 10, 1876. Mr. Bland was a man of good ability, fair education, and gentle spirit. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 134.

Bland, John, an English martyr, was a minister at Rulvenden; much of his time was devoted to the instructing of children in the Bible. He was cast into Canterbury prison for preaching the Gospel. He was examined, and a great number of articles were drawn up by the bishop, which, if Bland would sign, would set him free; but he refused, and lay in prison many months before his burning, which took place June 25, 1555. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 287.

Bland, Peter Randolph, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Nottoway County, Va., Dec. 9, 1800. He was educated at Hampden Sidney College; was licensed by the Western District Presbytery, April 2, 1831; and on the first of the following October he was ordained, and stationed at Mount Bethany Church. He also preached at Brownsville and other adjacent places, and from 1844 to 1855 was pastor at Emmaus; subsequently becoming stated supply in Bellemont, Tenn. He died July 24, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 78.

Bland, Robert, A.B., an English divine, was born about 1778, and graduated from Pembroke College, Cambridge, in 1802. At the time of his death, March 12, 1825, he was curate of Kenilworth. His published works are, Edwy and Elgiva, poems (1808, 8vo):—The Four Slaves of Cythera, a poetical romance (1809, 8vo):—A Collection of the Most Beautiful Poems of the Minor Poets of Greece, with Notes and Illustrations, and an admirable Preface (1813, 8vo):—A Translation of the Memoirs, etc., of Baron de Grimm and Diderot, in conjunction with Miss Plumtre (ed. 2 vols. 8vo). See The Annual Register (Lond.), 1825, p. 235.

Bland, Zane, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pendleton County, Va., Oct. 5, 1816. He experienced religion in 1836, entered the Baltimore Conference in 1840, and died amid his labors, at Cumberland, Md., Dec. 12, 1851. Mr. Bland was original and earnest, laborious and spiritual. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 13.

Blandinières, GABRIEL DE, a French preacher, a monk of the order of Merci, was a native of Toulouse. He was a good preacher and an able statesman, and was known in several courts of Europe; he had an important part in the testament of Charles II, king of Spain. Louis XIV made him his preacher. He died in 1720. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blane (or Blaan), Saint, was bishop of Caen-garadh in Galghaoidheln (i. e. Kingarth in Bute, Scotland), according to the Irish calendars. The son of Erca (or Ertha), through the violence of an unknown man, he, with his mother, was put into an oarless boat at sea, and was carried to the shore, where Sts. Comgall and Cainnech found them, and gave him his education for seven years. St. Blane was next under his uncle, St. Cathan, at Bute, and then was sent back to his former instructors for priests' orders. Raised to the episcopate, he went to Rome and received the pope's blessing. The true time of his life is, probably, at the end of the 6th or the beginning of the 7th century. He was buried at Dunblane, and is commemorated Aug. 10. See Camerarius, De Scot. Fort. p. 145, 164, 167; Fordun, Scotichr. xi, c. 21; Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Aug. ii, 10.

Blankenship, MARTIN C., a Baptist minister, was born in Vermillion County, Ill., about 1820. He was converted at fifteen, and removed to Texas; subsequently returned, and was settled in the bounds of the Louisville Association, where he was ordained in 1855. In 1856 he was employed as an itinerant missionary in the Bloomfield Association, and was instrumental in organizing and building up the churches at Onarga, Prospect City, and Blue Grass. He died in the summer of 1856. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1858, p. 8. (J. C. S.)

Blanspain, JEAN, a French ecclesiastic, was born at Vignot (Meuse) Oct. 21, 1704. He was a Premonstrant monk, and became prior and eventually curate and official at the abbey of Estival. He died about 1765, leaving several historical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanpied, JOHN, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in St. Peter Port, island of Guernsey, Dec. 25, 1798. He became a sailor at the age of fourteen, and for ten years followed the sea; experienced conversion in his twenty-first year; emigrated to Cambridge, O., in 1820; spent ten years in teaching; received license to preach in 1832, and in 1835 united with the Ohio Conference. In 1865 he took a superannuated relation, and so continued till his sudden death, June 20, 1875. Mr. Blanpied was a man of deep religious experience and cheerful disposition; an earnest, laborious minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 103.

Blanquart de Bailleul, LOUIS EDMOND MARIE, a French prelate, was born at Calais, in the diocese of Arras, Sept. 8, 1795. He was at first destined for the bar, but afterwards took up the ecclesiastical profession. Shortly after his exit from the Seminary of St. Sulpice, he became vicar-general to the bishop of Versailles, and after the death of the titular he was raised to the see, Jan. 27, 1833. On March 3, 1844, he passed from the diocese of Versailles to that of Rouen. He took part in the famous question of the classics, raised by a book of the abbot Gaume, and spoke against the reform proposed by this ecclesiastic. The date of his death we have been unable to ascertain. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blanseri (or Blancheri), VITTORIO, a Venetian painter, was born about 1735, and died in 1775. He studied under Beaumont, and succeeded him in the service of the court of Turin, in which city are his chief works. Three of his best pictures are in the Church of St. Pelagio.

Blanshard, Thomas, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1770. He entered the ministry in 1795, and labored on various circuits until 1808, when he was appointed to the office of book-steward. He discharged the duties of this office for fifteen years with diligence and inflexible integrity. He resumed the itinerancy in 1823, but a fatal disease kept him from its activities. He died after an illness of several months, Feb. 20, 1824. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1824.

Blanshard, Thomas W., an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Terrington, near Castle Howard, Yorkshire, Dec. 29, 1834. He was accepted for the ministry in 1859, and sent to the Richmond Theological Institution; was afterwards appointed to Sierra Leone, where for three years and a quarter he remained at his post amid trial and discouragement, and surrounded with disease and death. On his return to England, he labored with acceptance on several circuits. He died at Castleford, Nov. 23, 1877. His preaching was original, sometimes quaint. His disposition was most unselfish, and he often overtaxed himself by doing the work which rightly belonged to others. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 25.

Blanton, William C., a Baptist minister, was born in Franklin County, Ky., Feb. 3, 1803. He united with the Church in 1827, and was ordained in 1833. His only settlement was as pastor of the Lebanon and North Benson churches, but while holding this position he supplied, for longer or shorter periods, several churches in Kentucky. He died Aug. 21, 1845. "His great zeal, unaffected piety, and the sweet simplicity of his preaching won the hearts of the multitude, and by him many were led to the Saviour." See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 105. (J. C. S.)

Blanton, William L., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Cumberland County, Va., April 4, 1821. He was converted in 1832, and in 1844 entered the Virginia Conference. After a brief career, full of zeal, fervent piety, and intellectual promise, he died, Aug. 5, 1846. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1846, p. 72.

Blasche, Bernhard Heinrich, a German teacher, who died at Waltershausen, Nov. 26, 1832, is the author of, Das Böse im Einklange mit der Weltordnung dargestellt (Leipsic, 1827):—Philosophie der Offenbarung als Grundlage und Bedingung einer höhern Ausbildung der Theologie (Gotha, 1829):—Kritik des modernen Geisteslebens (ibid. 1830):—Philosophische Unsterblichkeitslehre (ibid. 1831):—Die göttlichen Eigenschaften in ihrer Einheit und als Principien der Weltregierung dargestellt (ibid. eod.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 411, 417, 428, 432, 471; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 154. (B. P.)

Blasche, Johann Christian, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Giessmannsdorf, near Jauer, May 25, 1718, and died as professor of theology at Jena, Jan. 21, 1792. He is the author of, Systematischer Commentar über den Brief an die Hebräer, etc. (Leipsic, 1782):—Neue Aufklärung über die mosaische Typologie (Jena, 1789). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 267, 390. (B. P.)

Blasco, CARLO, an Italian theologian who lived in the latter half of the 18th century, wrote Opuscoli Canonici Storici (Naples, 1758), a valuable work. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blasi, DOMENICO, an Italian theologian of the order of the Fathers of the Mission, was born at Forlì, May 17, 1670. He wrote, Catechista in Cattedra:—Tromba Evangelica, che Invita i Sacerdoti a Transferirsi nell' Indie Orientali (Rome, 1749). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blasio, FRANCESCO, an Italian theologian, a native of Nardo, who died at Padua in 1480, wrote Commentaria in Libros Metaphysicæ Aristotelis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blasius, Saint and Martyr, was bishop of Sebaste in Armenia. His flesh was scored with iron combs, and he was finally beheaded under Agricolaus, the prefect of Armenia Minor and Cappadocia, A.D. 316. He is the patron saint of the city of Ragusa. He is commemorated Feb. 11, Feb. 15, Jan. 15. He is probably the same person who in the Scotch calendars is called St. Blaise, patron of the island of Pladay, and having altars in the cathedral church, Glasgow, and St. Giles, Edinburgh.

BLASIUS, ORDER OF St., was a military order, established by the kings of Armenia, of the house of Lusignan, who held their court at Acre in honor of St. Blasius, as the patron of their kingdom. The dress of the knights was blue, and they wore a golden cross.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Blastus, a Quartodeciman Montanist at Rome about the reign of Commodus (180–192), whom Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. v, 15) names as having at that time drawn away many from the Church by his novelties. Irenæus wrote to him a letter On Schism (Euseb. v, 20, 21). The appendix to Tertullian's De Præscriptione adds to his article on the Montanists a statement that Blastus "wished secretly to introduce Judaism, saying that the Pasch must be kept only on the 14th of the month, according to the law of Moses." Pascianus, in the 4th century, speaks of him as a Greek, whom he believed to be one of the many authorities to whom the Cataphrygians (i. e. Montanists) appealed. See Gieseler, K. G. I. i, 292 sq.; Masuet, Dis. de Iren. ii, 59; Schwegler, Montanismus, p. 242, 252.

Blatchford, Henry, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Ford, Devonshire, England, in December, 1788. He graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1811, and studied theology at Princeton Theological Seminary, N. J. He was licensed by the New York Presbytery in 1815, and installed pastor of Orange Street Church, N. Y. He died Sept. 7, 1822. See Sprague, Annals of the American Pulpit, iv, 162.

Blatchford, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bridgeport, Conn., May 24, 1796. He entered Union College in 1817, and graduated in 1820. He studied theology at Princeton, N. J., was licensed by the Troy Presbytery, and installed over the Presbyterian Church in Pittstown, N. Y., in 1823, and in 1825 over that in Stillwater, N. Y. In 1829 he accepted a call to a Congregational Church in Bridgeport, where he labored with much acceptance until 1836. For several years after resigning the pastorate he was professor in Marion College. He died in April, 1855. Dr. Blatchford was a man of a ready mind, a genial spirit, frank and pleasant manners, zealously devoted to his work, and a very acceptable preacher. He published The Validity of Presbyterian Ordination and several Sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 163.

Blatchford, Samuel, a Baptist minister, was born in Plymouth, England, where he was educated and ordained as a Dissenter. He came to America in 1795, and after a residence of one year at Westchester, N. Y., he was called to Greenfield, Conn. He afterwards settled at Bridgeport, Conn., and in 1804 was called to Lansingburg, N. Y., where he died, Feb. 17, 1828. See Christian Watchman, March 28, 1828. (J. C. S.)

Blath (Irish, flower or grace). Martyrologies give several virgins of this name. Thus, on Jan. 18 is "Soth, Feammor, Blath, and Ana, four virgins of Cluain-greenach;" Jan. 29, another Blath appears in Mart. Doneg.; while Colgan (Tr. Thaum. app. v, c. 13) has "S. Blathnata seu Blatha, Latine Flora, coqua Sanctæ Brigide, de qua vita Hibern. S. Brig. c. 33, et Mor. Gorm. ad 29 Jan." She flourished about 523.

Blathmac (or Blaithmaic) is a common name in Ireland in the 8th and 9th centuries. The festival of Blathmac, son of Flann, is given in the Mart. Doneg. on July 14; but Colgan puts the "depositio" of St. Blathmac and his companions, in Iona, Jan. 19. Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 127–129) gives Hugo Menard's Life of St. Blathmac the Martyr in the Benedictine martyrology. Blathmac, the son of an Irish prince, became a monk in early life, and, after being made abbot of an Irish monastery, he fled to Scotland, and came to Iona. When the Danes attacked Iona, Blathmac was celebrating mass, and, refusing to show them the shrine of St. Columba, was slain. Menardus places his death at about 793, and on Jan. 19; and Camerarius (Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Jan. ii, 601) on Dec. 4.

Blau, Otto, a famous German Orientalist, was born April 11, 1828, at Nordhausen, being the son of a Protestant theologian. He studied at Halle and Leipsic for the medical profession, which he soon exchanged at the latter place for the study of Oriental languages, numismatics, and archaeology; where Fleischer and Rödiger were his teachers. The expectation of these teachers of and their confidence in their pupil were so great that at the age of twenty-four they intrusted to him the redaction of the Zeitschrift der deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft. In 1852 he was attached to the Prussian legation at Constantinople, and, in close communion with men like Mordmann, Schlottmann, Vogué, and others, he acquired a rare knowledge of the present linguistic, ethnographical, commercial, and political affairs of the Orient, and succeeded in bringing to light many a valuable treasure of the past of the East. From 1853 to 1858 he belonged to the officers of the German Evangelical Church at Constantinople, and contributed largely to the welfare of the German hospital and school connected with the church. In 1859 he was appointed consul at Trebizond, where he did good service to the poor oppressed Protestant Armenians. In 1861 he accompanied Omer Pasha as member of the pacification-commission into the Herzegovina, and in 1862 he was appointed consul at Serajewo in Bosnia. In 1870 he was made general consul of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in 1872 he was sent in the same capacity to Odessa, where he died, Feb. 26, 1879. The fruits of his researches may best be seen from the many contributions to the Zeitschrift der deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft since the year 1852. (B. P.)

Blaufuss, Jacob Wilhelm, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Jena in 1723, and died June 3, 1758. His principal works are, Disput. de Jure et Officiis Hominis Erga Brutos (Jena, 1740); — De Transmigratione Animarum Secundum Judæorum Explicationem (ibid. 1744, 1745); — Disput. de Conditura Sæculi per Primogenitum, etc. (ibid. 1758). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blauvelt, Cornelius J., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Secession Church, was licensed by the "Seceders" in 1828. He served the Church at Schraalenburgh, Bergen Co., N. J., 1828 to 1852; Hackensack and English Neighborhood, Bergen Co., 1852 to 1860. He died in 1861. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 184.

Blackney, James, a Baptist minister, was born in New Brunswick, and in 1833 was ordained to the ministry. The churches of which he was pastor were those at Norton, Upham, Little River, and Gondolow Point. More than one thousand persons were baptized by him during his ministry. Besides the pastoral work he performed, he was successful as a missionary in the northern counties and other parts of New Brunswick. His good influence he transmits through three sons now in the ministry. His death took place Dec. 14, 1861. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 105, 106. (J. C. S.)

Blackney, T., a Baptist minister, was ordained in Albert County, N. B., in 1861, and preached in that county. He was a devoted and energetic minister of the Gospel, and earnest advocate of temperance reform. He died while pastor at Woodstock, N. B., Feb. 21, 1872. See Bill, Hist. of Baptists of Maritime Provinces, p. 503.

Bleck (or Bleek), Peter van, a Flemish engraver, came to England about 1730, and executed some plates in mezzotinto of some merit, among which is,

The Virgin Mary and Infant, after Van der Werff. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blecker (or Bleker), JAN CASPAR, a Dutch designer, was born at Haerlem about 1600. The following are some of his principal plates: A Landscape, with Jacob and Rachel; A Landscape, with Rebecca and the Servant of Abraham; Jacob and Laban dividing their Flocks; The Crucifixion. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bleek, JOHANN, son of Friedrich (q. v.), died Aug. 3, 1869, as pastor at Winterburg, near Sobernheim, and is known as the editor of his father's Einleitung in das Alte Testament; which he published in connection with addenda by Kamphausen (Berlin, 1860). He likewise edited his father's Einleitung in das Neue Testament (ibid. 1862; 2d ed. 1866). He also assisted the late Dr. Bunsen (q. v.) in his preparation of the prophecy of Ezekiel for his Bibelwerk. (B. P.)

Bleeker, GARRATT NOEL, a prominent Baptist layman, was born in New York city in 1815, and from his childhood was consecrated to the service of his Master. Largely successful in his business, he devoted his possessions to objects of Christian benevolence. Besides giving liberally during life to the Hamilton Theological Seminary, he made a bequest to that institution of $12,000; this being the first large donation to its treasury. He left also $8000 to the Home Mission Society, and remembered other denominational organizations in his will. He died May 28, 1853. See Williams, Worship and Work; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 106. (J. C. S.)

Blemmydes (or Blemmida), a learned Greek of the 13th century, is especially known on account of his endeavors to unite the Greek and Romish Churches. He was a monk and priest in a Macedonian monastery, at a time when the emperor Ducas Vatatzes (1222-55) called a meeting to Nicæa, for the sake of bringing about such a union (1233). Blemmydes took part in the colloquy, and with great skill and learning he defended the Latin doctrine of the procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father and the Son (comp. Leo Allatius, Græciæ Orthodoxæ Scriptores, p. 1-60). The emperor's son, Theodore Lascaris, made him patriarch of Constantinople, but Blemmydes remained and died in his monastery. See Leo Allatius, De Ecclesiæ Occidentalis et Orientalis Perpetua Successione, lib. ii, c. 14, Tübinger Quartalschrift, 1847, pt. 1; Wetzler u. Welte, Kirchenlexikon, s. v.; Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Blemur, MARIE JACQUELINE BOUETTE DE, a French theologian, a nun of the Benedictine order of St. Sacrement, was born Jan. 8, 1618. Being placed, at the age of five years, in the abbey of St. Trinité of Caen, she took the vows at the age fixed by the ecclesiastical laws. She afterwards became prioress, and had charge of organizing a monastery of Benedictines, which the duchess of Mecklenburg had founded at Chatillon. She died March 24, 1696. Her principal works are, L'Année Bénédicte:—L'Éloge des Personnes Distinguées en Vertus qui ont vécu, au dernier Siècle, dans l'Ordre de Saint-Benoît. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blende, BARTHOLOMÉ, a Flemish Jesuit missionary, was born at Bruges, Aug. 24, 1675. He studied under the Jesuits at Malines, where he entered the order. Having been sent on a mission to Paraguay, he embarked at Cadiz with the archbishop of Lima. Arriving at Buenos Ayres, he applied himself to learning the language of the Guanarians, in which he succeeded admirably, and was sent on a mission to the Chiquites. He set out on this expedition Jan. 24, 1715, accompanied by D'Arée; their route lay through the Layaguas and other savage tribes, who, in the course of their voyage up a river, seized upon their boat and massacred Blende, about the close of 1715. His companion, who escaped at the time, was afterwards murdered. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blendinger, CONRAD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1808 at Königstein in Bavaria. He studied at Erlangen and Halle, and died April 21, 1879, as pastor at Mistelbach, near Bayreuth. Blendinger took a lively interest in the history of the people of Israel, because he believed that the completion of the kingdom of God on earth must be preceded by the conversion of the old-covenant people. After the year 1855 he published a number of pamphlets, with special reference to the points at issue between Judaism and Christianity; and, though his efforts were praised by the one and derided by the other, yet he lived, moved, and died in what he thought to be the object of his life. (B. P.)

Blesen (or Blesenis), PETER (called also Peter of Blois), an English clergyman of the 12th century, was prebendary of Hoxton, archdeacon of Bath in 1175, archdeacon of London, and also of Canterbury. He was a native of Blois, and a favorite with Henry II of England. He died about 1200. His works were published at Paris in 1519. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Blesilla, daughter of Paula and sister of Eustochium, in the 4th century, having lost her husband soon after marriage, was induced by Jerome to become an ascetic. He greatly extols her learning. She died in early youth, and her funeral caused a tumult against the monks, her death being attributed to her austerities. It was at her request that Jerome began his translation of Ecclesiastes.

Blessed is a title given by the Church alone, and to persons who die in holiness. No individual bishop can give this title, which is granted in the Church of Rome only after a kind of proof, real or supposed, of the virtues and miracles of the person to whom it is given.

Blessig, JOHANN LORENZ, a Protestant divine of Germany, was born April 13, 1747, at Strasburg, where he also studied. He made extensive journeys in Italy, Hungary, and Germany. After his return to Strasburg he was appointed deacon, until in 1778 he was made professor of philosophy, and, a few years later, professor of theology. In 1786 he was made doctor of philosophy, but the French Revolution interrupted his activity, and for eleven months he was imprisoned. After Robespierre's fall Blessig commenced preaching again, and took an active part in the management of church and school till his death, Feb. 17, 1816. He wrote, Diss. Origines Philosophiæ apud Romanos (Argent. 1770):—Præsidia Interpretationis Nov. Test. ex Auctoribus Græcis (ibid. 1778):—Progr. Cap. ævi Evang. Joh. Interpretatio cum Adnotatis (ibid. 1786):—Diss. Inaugur. de Censu Davidico pæstegue hunc Censum Secuta, in 2 Sam. xxiv et 1 Chron. xxi (ibid. 1788):—Was haben wir als Christen zu fürchten, zu hoffen, zu thun in den neuen, uns bevorstehenden Zeiten? (ibid. 1802-8):—Dissertatio de Evangelii Secundum Ebræos, Egyptios atque Justinum Martyris (ibid. 1807). Besides, he published a number of sermons and ascetical works. See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner des 18 und 19 Jahrhunderts, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 143, 156, 169, 180, 297; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 120; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Blessley, ROBERT, an English Congregational minister, was born at Portsea in 1798 of pious parents. He was converted at the age of seventeen, and admitted into Church-fellowship in his twenty-second year. He received his ministerial preparation at the Theological College of Gosport, and his first settlement was at Alresford, Hants. Mr. Blessley removed in 1830 to Highgate, where he labored ten years. Thence he went to Hull, Yorkshire, where many seals to his ministry were given him among the sailors and captains. His last labors were at Folkestone, where he was pastor six or seven years. He died Feb. 20, 1860. Mr. Blessley's great characteristics were conscientiousness and sincerity. He was of a contemplative and highly cultivated mind. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 202.

Bleton, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French ascetic writer and hagiographer, was born near Valencia, Oct. 15, 1791. Being appointed vicar of St. Vallier in 1816, he devoted all his leisure moments to the study of theology, of the Holy Scriptures, and of ecclesiastical history. His principal works are, Vie de Saint Augustin (Lyons, 1828):—Vie de Saint Louis, Roi de France (ibid. eod.):—Vie de Sainte Catherine de Siemie (ibid. 1829):—Traité des Saints Anges (ibid. eod.):—Abregé des Preuves de la Religion, Mises à la Porter de Tout le Monde (ibid. eod.):—Motifs de Consolations que la Religion procure à l'Homme dans toutes les Positions de la Vie (ibid. 1841). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bligh, JOHN, an English Congregational minister, was a native of Worcester, and was for many years engaged in the work of the Home Missionary Society. He was a student at Cotton End from 1842 until 1845, when he was appointed to the pastorate of Great Bourton in Oxfordshire. In 1852 he removed to Brandsburton in the East Riding of Yorkshire, where he remained but a short time, accepting a call to the Church at Hay, Brecknockshire, in September, 1854. He ceased to act as a home missionary in 1856, and accepted a pastorate at Ombersley in Worcestershire. In 1860 he removed to London, where he again took work as a missionary at the East End. He died Dec. 11, 1878. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 309.

Bliskandeböll, in Northern mythology, is the poisonous ceiling in the arched dwelling of the goddess of death, Hela.

Blind, HEALING OF (in Christian art). This is frequently represented on ancient monuments, perhaps as a symbolical representation of the opening of the eye of the soul wrought by the power of the Saviour (1 Pet. ii, 9).

In most cases only one blind man, probably the "man blind from his birth" of John ix, 1, is healed. He is generally represented as low in stature, to mark his inferiority to the Saviour and the apostles (when any of the latter are introduced), is shod with sandals, and bears a long staff to guide his steps. The Saviour, young and beardless, touches his eyes with the forefinger of the right hand. This representation is found on an antique vase, on an ivory casket of the 4th or 5th century, in a bass-relief of a tomb of the Sextian family, in the museum of Aix in Provence, of about the same epoch, and elsewhere.

In a few cases the blind man healed appears to be Bartimeus, from the circumstance that he has "cast away his garment" (Mark x, 50) before throwing himself at the feet of Jesus.

On a sarcophagus in the Vatican (Bottari, xxxix); is a representation of the healing of two blind men; probably the two who were healed by the Lord as he left the house of Jairus (Matt. ix, 27-31). Here, too, the figures of those upon whom the miracle is wrought are of small size; the blind appears to lead the blind, for one only has a staff, while the other places his hand upon his shoulder. The Lord lays his hand upon the head of the figure with the staff, while another, probably one of the apostles, raises his hand, the fingers arranged after the Latin manner in blessing. See BENEDICTION.

Ancient Representation of Christ Healing Two Blind Men.

Blind Story is a mediæval term used to distinguish the triforium of a cathedral, in which the arches and arcades, being frequently like windows, were without glass, and let in no light.

Blinman, RICHARD, first minister of New London, Conn., was a native of Great Britain, and arrived in America in 1642. He published A Rejoinder to Mr. Henry Danvers his Brief Friendly Reply to my Answer about Infant Baptism (Lond. 1675). See Allibone, Dictionary of British and American Authors, s. v.

Bloul, JEAN DU, a Flemish divine of the order of Cordeliers, was born in Hainault in the 16th century. After making a voyage to Jerusalem, he settled at Besançon, where he published an account of his journey under the title, Voyage de Hiérusalem et Pèlerinage des Saints Lieux de la Palestine (Cologne, 1600, 8vo; 1602, 16mo). Bloul wrote some other works, and filled the office of grand-penitentiary at Besançon. He did not live in the convent of his order, but in a chapel in which he voluntarily secluded himself. See Biog. Universelle, v, 584; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bliss, Asher, a Congregational minister, was born at West Fairlee, Vt., Feb. 20, 1801. In 1829 he graduated from Amherst College, and in 1832 from Andover Theological Seminary. In September of the latter year he was ordained at Post Mills, in Thetford, Vt., and proceeded immediately to the Cataraugus station as a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions among the New York Indians, and was so employed until Feb. 3, 1852. Then he became home missionary at Corydon, Pa., until 1854. The next year he was again employed as a missionary by the American Board. During 1856-57 he was acting pastor in Stockton, N. Y. The succeeding nine years he was without charge, and then, during 1866-67, was a home missionary in South Valley, where he afterwards resided. He died in South Valley, March 23, 1881. He published a tract of eight pages, entitled Encouragement to Early Piety. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 23.

Bliss, Franklin Samuel, a Universalist minister, was born at Cheshire, Mass., Sept. 30, 1828. He received a religious training; was liberally educated, and began preaching at the close of 1853. He was ordained in 1855 at Enfield, N. H., where he labored two years. Soon after, in 1857, he removed to Barre, Vt., where he continued with exemplary fidelity and abundant success for fifteen years. He died March 23, 1873, in Greensborough, N. C., whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. Mr. Bliss possessed a firm will, a kind and affectionate heart, and was conscientiously devoted to his work. In 1868 he published a volume of sermons to the young, entitled Steps in the Pathway from Youth to Heaven. See Universalist Register, 1874, p. 119.

Bliss, Philp, D.D., D.C.L., an English divine and author, was born in Gloucestershire in 1788; educated at and fellow of St. John's College, Oxford; and died in 1857. He edited a number of works, principally of antiquarian and bibliographical interest; the most important being Wood's Athena Oxoniensis (1813-20). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bliss, Seth, a Congregational minister, was born at Springfield, Mass., April 23, 1793. He studied theology one year with Rev. Dr. Osgood of Springfield, and then entered the Andover Theological Seminary; and subsequently finished his course in the Yale Theological Seminary, in 1825. He served as pastor in Jewett City, Conn., from June 15, 1825, until April 23, 1832. During the next twenty-six years he was general agent and secretary of the American Tract Society at Boston, Mass. From 1858 to 1870 he resided in New York city without charge, and thereafter in Berlin, Conn. He died April 8, 1879. He published Letters to the Members and Patrons of the American Tract Society (Boston, 1858). See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 12.

Bliss, Stephen, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Lebanon, N. H., March 27, 1787. He graduated at Middlebury College in 1812; was licensed by the Hopkinton Association in 1822; and ordained by the Presbytery of Salem, Aug. 4, 1825. He taught for several years in Eastern and Central New York. In April, 1819, he with a friend opened in a cabin the first Sabbath-school in the state of Illinois. In the fall of 1820 he returned to New Hampshire on foot, and in 1821 he returned to make Illinois his home. Soon after his reception into the Presbytery, he engaged to supply two vacant churches—Carlisle, forty miles, and Fort Harrison, sixty miles, from his home; giving them one Sabbath in each month. The remaining two he spent with Wabash Church. He was pastor of Wabash Church from 1823 to 1847. In the fall of 1824 Mr. Bliss was elected to the state Senate of Illinois, and spent the next winter, until Jan. 20, in Vandalia. He was a member of the Assembly which in 1845 met at Cincinnati, and which essentially modified the testimony of the Church given in 1818 against slavery. He died Dec. 6, 1847. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois.

Bliss, Zenas, a Congregational minister, was born in Randolph, Vt., Nov. 24, 1808. He fitted for college at the Orange County Grammar School in his native town, and graduated from the University of Vermont in 1831. In the fall of 1832 he entered Andover Theological Seminary and remained there two years, when he went to Fredonia, N. Y., and became associate-principal of the academy there. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Buffalo in 1834, and was ordained to the ministry in the following year. For about two years he preached alternately to two congregations in the vicinity of Fredonia, with little or no compensation. In the spring of 1837 a severe attack of spasmodic asthma, which became chronic, so disabled him that he never ventured again to assume the permanent charge of a parish. As stated supply, however, he ministered to various churches for nearly seventeen years. In the fall of 1837 he commenced preaching in Quechee Village, Vt., and there continued for two years. Thence he went to Virginia, and, returning in November, 1840, became stated supply at Jericho Centre, Vt.; but after two years he was compelled again to go South. In 1843 he became stated supply at Wyooski Falls. In the latter part of 1844 he went to Alabama, and was employed for nearly four years in teaching; and in 1848 became stated supply at Richmond, Vt., remaining until the spring of 1854. He then retired from the ministry, removed to Amherst, Mass., and busied himself upon a small farm. He died there, Dec. 9, 1865. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 44.

Blissem, Heinrich, a German Jesuit, who was born at Cologne in 1537, and died at Grätz in 1586, was provincial of his order in Austria. He wrote, De Communionis sub una Specie (Ingolstadt):—De Ecclesiâ Militante contra Heerbrandum Tubingensem (ibid.).

Blissin, M., a French canonist, who lived in the early half of the 18th century, wrote Traité des Droits des Evêques sur les Réguliers Exempts (Paris, 1715). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blitterswyck, Hans van, a Flemish ascetic theologian, possibly brother of Willem van Blitterswyck, of the order of Carthusians, a native of Brussels, died July 28, 1661. He wrote, Soupirs Spirituels vers Dieu (Bruges, 1629):—Tresor de Prières à la Vierge, avant et Après la Confession:—Oraison à l'Usage des Personnes qui Visitent les Saintes Images de la Vierge, Exposées à Bruxelles à la Veneration Publique (Brussels, 1623). He also left a great number of religious works in Flemish; and, in unpublished form, eighteen treatises and discourses. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bloccchius (or Blockius), CORNELIUS, prior of the regular canons of Utrecht, who died in 1553, left two works entitled, Tractatus de Simonia Religiosorum (Utrecht, 1553):—Sermo de Proprietatibus Religiosorum (ibid. 1565).

Blochmann, Heinrich Ferdinand, a famous German Orientalist, was born Jan. 8, 1838, at Dresden. He studied at Leipzig, where Prof. Fleischer was his teacher in Oriental languages. In 1857 he continued his studies at Paris, and in 1858 he went to England with a view of going to India and prosecuting his studies there. As about that time England was in need of soldiers for the suppression of the Indian rebellion, Blochmann entered the service as an English soldier. On the way, the attention of the officers was called to his linguistic ability, and one of the commanding colonels engaged him as teacher of the Persian language. When they arrived at Calcutta, through the kindness of his pupil, Blochmann soon found a position congenial to his tastes, and before the year was over he received his dismissal from the army. In 1860 he was appointed professor of Arabic and Persian at the Calcutta Madrasah. In 1861 he was promoted as magister artium and linguarum doctor; and in 1862 he was elected pro-rector of Doveton College in Calcutta. When in 1866 the rectorate of the Madrasah became vacant, Blochmann was appointed to fill it temporarily. In this position he developed his faculties as a teacher, and although his work was a difficult one—himself being the only Christian against thirty Mohammedan professors—yet they all acknowledged his scientific superiority and his beneficial influence upon the institution. The government appreciated his work by appointing him in 1874-75 principal of the institution. He died July 13, 1878. Blochmann, who acted for some time as secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal in Calcutta, was the first who deciphered the often overlooked and greatly unknown temple inscriptions of India. He also deciphered some ancient coins, and thus threw light upon the history and political geography of India. Of his publications we mention, The Prosody of the Persians (1872):—Contributions to the Geography and History of Bengal (1878):—The Hindu Rajahs under the Mughal Government. The Proceedings and Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal contain a great many articles from his pen, of lasting value. See Krone, in Zeitschrift der D. M. G., 1879, xxiii, 335 sq. (B. P.)

Blocking-course is the plain course of stone which surmounts the cornice at the top of a Greek or Roman building; also a course of stone or brick forming a projecting line without mouldings at the base of a building.

Blocklandt, Anthony de Montfort, a Dutch historical painter, was born at Montfort in 1532, and studied under Francis Floris, whose style he followed. He painted a number of works for the churches of Holland.

There are three in the great church at Utrecht, representing the Birth of the Virgin, the Annunciation, and the Assumption. At Gonda he painted the Decollation of St. John, and at Dort several pictures of the Passion of Christ. He died in 1588.

Blodgett, Constantine, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Randolph, Vt., Nov. 17, 1802. After attending the Randolph Academy he entered Dartmouth College, from which he graduated in 1826. During the succeeding seven years he studied theology in private, and taught school in South Carolina. Meantime he was ordained Oct. 19, 1831, in Marion District. From Dec. 2, 1834, until June 15, 1836, he was pastor in Newmarket, N. H. July 27, 1836, he was installed in Pawtucket, R. I., and became retired pastor June 1, 1871. From 1868 he was a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He died Dec. 29, 1879. He published only two Sermons. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 12.

A, Blocking-course. B, Cornice. C, Wall.

Blodgett, Harvey, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Brimfield, Mass., August, 1801. He graduated at Amherst College in 1829, and then spent some time in teaching, and at intervals afterwards. As a minister, he labored principally in the northern part of Ohio. He was pastor at Euclid for six years. For five years he was agent of the American Bible Society, mostly in Central Illinois. He died in Jacksonville, Illinois, in 1850. Mr. Blodgett possessed a vigorous mind, thought deeply, reasoned justly. His religion was that of action. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois.

Blodgett, James, a Congregational minister, was born about 1812, and graduated from Harvard University in 1841, and from the divinity school at Cambridge two years later. After a missionary tour in the West with a view to regaining his health, he was invited to preach in Deerfield, Mass., and was ordained pastor of the First Congregational Church there Jan. 17, 1844; but, after a ministry of little more than a year, he was compelled, through feeble health, to resign. He died July 16, 1845. Mr. Blodgett was a consistent Christian, fearless in the performance of what he conceived to be his duty, and plain and practical in his preaching. See The Christian Examiner (Boston), 1845, p. 431.

Blodgett, John, a Baptist minister, was born at Randolph, Vt., Nov. 20, 1792. He joined the Church at Denmark, N. Y., in 1817, and was licensed to preach in 1818. His pastorates in New York were at Champion, Lowville, and Broad Street, Utica. In Ohio he was pastor at Lebanon, Centerville, and Casstown. For two years he resided in Indiana, and then was settled at Franklin, O., where he died, July 24, 1876. So great was the esteem in which he was held in Ohio that he bore the title of "John the Beloved." See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 107. (J. C. S.)

Blodgett, Lorenzo D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Stewartstown, N. H., May 31, 1811. He was converted in 1831; received license to exhort in 1833; and in 1843 was licensed to preach and admitted into the New Hampshire Conference. In 1840 he located, but in the following year resumed his active duties; in 1846 and 1847 he was superannuated, and thereafter spent his time in active work as health permitted, to the close of his life, Sept. 21, 1852. As a Christian, Mr. Blodgett was devoted; as a preacher, practical, experimental, and successful; as a friend, beloved and lamented. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1853, p. 199.

Blodgett, Luther P., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cornwall, Vt., March 26, 1782. He was educated at Middlebury College; was licensed by Addison Association of the Congregational Church in 1808, and installed over the Church at Rochester. In 1833 he removed to the state of New York, and supplied churches within the Troy, Albany, Oneida, and Otsego presbyteries. He died at Cooperstown, Jan. 26, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 289.

Bloemaert, Abraham, a Dutch historical and landscape painter and engraver, was born at Gorcum in 1564 (or 1567), and studied under Francis Floris. He painted several pictures for the churches in Flanders, among which are, The Wise Men's Offering, in the Jesuit church at Brussels; The Virgin and Infant, with a Glory of Angels, in the cathedral at Mechlin; and The Nativity, at Leliendaal. He died in 1647. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bloemaert, Cornelius, an eminent Dutch engraver, son of Abraham, was born at Utrecht in 1603, and studied under Crispin de Passe. His prints are numerous and greatly admired. The following are some of the principal: The Virgin Mary, with the Infant Jesus sleeping; Christ at Table with his Disciples; St. Paul Preaching at Athens; St. Luke Painting the Virgin and Infant; The Holy Family. He died at Rome in 1680. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bloetgodar, in Norse mythology, was the title of the priests of northern heathendom, from the word At-Blota—"bloody sacrifices." They sacrificed man and beast. The prophecies were made by the women, but even they were not exempt from slaughtering the prisoners. The priests usually lived near the temples, the priestesses secluded in woods. It was difficult to stop this bloody service, and centuries elapsed before it was entirely extinguished.

Blogg, Salomon, a Jewish writer of Germany, who died Feb. 11, 1856, is the author of Abrégé de la Grammaire Hébraïque (Berlin, 1810);—Hebräische Grammatik für Anfänger (Hanover, 1825);—Geschichte der Hebr. Sprache u. Literatur (ibid. 1826);—Gesch. der Hebr. Sprache, des Talmuds, etc., with the Hebrew title בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל (ibid. 1832). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 122 sq.; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 23; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 157. (B. P.)

Blois (François), Louis de. See Blosius.

Blois, Peter of. See Blesen, Peter.

Blomevenna, Petrus, a Dutch theologian (sometimes called Leodensis, because he was born at Liege, in 1447), became a Carthusian, and died at Cologne, Sept. 30, 1516, much venerated for his piety. He left many works in Latin, as De Bonitate Divina (Cologne, 1538);—De Auctoritate Ecclesie;—Contra Anabaptistas;—Cundela Evangelica;—Enchiridion Sacerdotum;—De Invocatione Sanctorum;—Apertio Purgatorii, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v., Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blomfield, James, an English Congregational minister, was born at Norwich in 1786. Of his early history little is known except that he was addicted to close and earnest reading. In 1825 Mr. Blomfield became a student at Cheshunt College. At the expiration of his term he was ordained to the work of itinerancy. He also conducted the business of the Connectional Conference, and edited its magazine, the Evangelical Register. For twenty years he was devoted to the Church at Canterbury, and such was his affection for that ecclesiastical metropolis that he seemed to "take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof." He died Sept. 21, 1859. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1860, p. 176.

Blond, Le. See LeBlond.

Blondeau, Jacques, a French engraver, was born at Langres about the year 1639. He engraved several pictures after the style of P. da Cortona in the palace of Florence, besides some plates at Rome after other Italian masters. The following is a list of some of his works: The Martyrdom of St. Laurence; The Pulpit of St. Peter; The Circumcision; The Crucifixion.

Blondel, Laurent, a French ascetic writer and hagiographer, was born in Paris in 1671. He had a vast knowledge of books of all kinds. After devoting himself for several years to the education of the children of Chaillot, he had charge of the printing-office at Desprez. He died at Evreux, July 25, 1740. He wrote, Vies des Saints pour chaque Jour de l'Année Tirées des Auteurs Originaux (Paris, 1722);—Épîtres et Évangiles des Dimanches, des Fêtes, etc., avec des Courtes Explications et Pratiques (ibid. 1736);—Idées de la Perfection Chrétienne (ibid. 1727). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Blondel, Octovien, a French martyr, was a merchant of precious stones in Paris in 1548. He was arrested, and on his examination gave a full confession of the doctrine of Christ, for which he was committed to prison, where he did much good to the prisoners while awaiting his sentence. He was burned in May, 1560, at Lyons. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 404.

Blondus (or Biondo), FLAVIUS, an Italian writer, born at Forlì in 1388, was for some time secretary to pope Eugenius IV, and died at Rome, June 4, 1463. He is chiefly noted for his Historiarum Romanarum decades iii, from 410 to 1440, afterwards abridged by Æneas Sylvius (pope Pius II). He also wrote, Roma Triumphans (Brescia, 1503):—Roma Instaurata:—Italia Illustrata:—De Origine et Gestis Venetorum.

Blood, Caleb (1), a Baptist minister, was born at Charlton, Worcester County, Mass., Aug. 18, 1754. He was licensed to preach in 1776, and ordained in the autumn of 1777 at Marlow, N. H., probably as an evangelist. After two years he removed to Weston, Mass., thence to Newton, where he spent seven years. While serving as pastor at Shaftsbury, Vt., he was appointed one of the trustees of the University of Vermont. In the autumn of 1804 he performed a missionary tour of three months for the Shaftsbury Association in North-western New York and the adjacent part of Upper Canada. During his connection with this society, he wrote the Circular Letter of the association in 1789 and 1796. In April, 1807, he accepted a call to the Third Baptist Church of Boston. After three years he removed to Portland, Me., and there closed his labors, March 6, 1814. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 193.

Blood, Caleb (2), a Baptist minister, was born at Rodman, Jefferson County, N. Y., July 4, 1815. Having removed to Indiana with his parents in early life, he began, at the age of sixteen, to study law, but decided afterwards to prepare for the ministry, and graduated from Brown University in 1844. He spent the whole of his ministerial life in the West, being ordained in Chicago, Ill., and subsequently having charge of churches in Wisconsin, Indiana, Kansas, and Missouri. He taught for a time in the Indiana University at Bloomington. His death occurred at Independence, Mo., Nov. 21, 1881. See Necrology of Brown University, 1881-82. (J. C. S.)

Blood, Charles Emerson, a Congregational minister, was born at Mason, N. H., March 1, 1810. After he became of age, his apprenticeship having expired, he entered the New Ipswich Academy, and maintained himself there, as he subsequently did at Illinois College, where he graduated in 1837, and at the Lane Theological Seminary, completing his course at the latter in 1840. He was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Collinsville, Ill., from 1840 to 1847, taught school three five years, was pastor of the Congregational Church at Farmington from 1852 to 1854, pioneering as a preacher in Kansas from 1854 to 1862, and laboring at Wataga (Ill.) the last four years of his life. Here he died, March 25, 1866. Mr. Blood's life was one of great self-sacrifice, both in the college and seminary and in the ministry. See Cong. Quarterly, 1866, p. 302-304.

Blood, H. P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Bucksport, Me., Feb. 5, 1825. He was converted at the age of twelve, and joined the Maine Conference in 1855. In 1872 he was transferred to the California Conference, where, after serving two appointments, ill-health obliged him to retire from all stated work. During the last three years of his life he was very useful in the great revival work in Sacramento. He died in that city, Feb. 21, 1874. Mr. Blood was a faithful and greatly beloved pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 113.

Bloodgood, ABRAHAM LYNOTT, a Presbyterian and Congregational minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1813. He pursued his academic studies at Lansingburg and Flushing, and graduated from Union College in 1832, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1836. Soon after he became acting-pastor of the Presbyterian Church at West Galway, N. Y., then at Esperance, and at Rome. On Feb. 20, 1844, he was ordained pastor at Little Falls, and remained there until Nov. 20, 1855, having spent a year in Europe for his health and a year in Rochester (1854-55) as acting-pastor. From Dec. 5, 1855, until June 9, 1862, he was pastor at Enfield, Conn.; then resided without charge in Monroe, Mich., until his death, which occurred May 26, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 12; Princeton Necrological Report, 1880, p. 22.

Bloomer, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born in 1828. He left a clerkship in Dubuque, Ia., to study at Iowa College, which he did one year; then at Amherst College, Mass., where he graduated in 1856, and at Andover. In 1857 he returned to Iowa, and commenced preaching at M'Gregor, but his life was cut short by death, Feb. 24, 1858. His bereaved flock have borne strong testimony to the excellency of his spirit and the energy of his ministry. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 96.

Bloomer, Joshua, a missionary of the Church of England, received the degree of M.A. from King's College (afterwards Columbia), N. Y., in 1761; became a merchant in New York and an officer in the provincial service; turned his attention to theology, and was ordained in England in 1765; and in 1769 became rector of the Church at Jamaica, L. I. He died there, June 28, 1790. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 305.

Bloomer, Reuben H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Newburgh, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1806. He experienced conversion in his twenty-third year, became an active Christian layman, taught school several years, devoting much of his time to preparing himself for the ministry, received license to preach in 1834, and in 1835 entered the New York Conference. Ill-health kept him from much work, but he continued until 1856, when he retired from the ministry and became editor and proprietor of the Newburgh Times, a temperance paper, which profession he followed to the close of his life, June 1, 1866. Mr. Bloomer was a man of great energy of character, a warm friend, a devoted Christian, and a genial companion. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1867, p. 83.

Bloomer, William (1), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Sullivan County, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1808. He experienced religion in his fourteenth year, and in 1830 joined the Philadelphia Conference. He died, full of promise of usefulness, Nov. 18, 1834. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 348.

Bloomer, William (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, brother of Reuben H., was born in Newburgh, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1809. He was converted at the age of twenty-one, and in 1836 joined the New York Conference. In 1865 failure of health compelled him to retire from active service, and in the following year he became superannuated, and continued in that relation to the end of his life, May 19, 1872. Mr. Bloomer was a good preacher, a confidential friend, a superior pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 46.

Bloomfield, SAMUEL THOMAS, D.D., an English divine and eminent scholar and critic, was born in 1790, and educated at Sidney College, Cambridge. He took holy orders, and was presented to the vicarage of Bisbrook, Rutland, which he retained until his death, at Wandsworth Common, Sept. 28, 1869. He published, Recensio Synoptica Annotationis Sacrae, exegetical, critical, and doctrinal annotations on the New Testament (1826, 8 vols. 8vo):—A Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament, revised and enlarged from Dr. Robinson's (1829):—A Translation of Thucydides (ed. 3 vols.):—The Greek Testament, with English Notes, Critical, Philological, etc. (1832, 2 vols., often reprinted):—and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. Comp. COMMENTARY.

Blosius (or De Blois), FRANÇOIS LOUIS, a Flemish theologian, was born at the château of Doustienne, in the country of Liege, in 1506. He belonged to the illustrious family of Blois of Chatillon; was educated with prince Charles, later the emperor Charles V, and, at the age of fourteen years, assumed the habit of the Benedictine monks at the monastery of Liessies in Hainault. At the age of twenty-four years he succeeded abbot Giles Gippius, whose coadjutor he had been. Instead of accepting the archbishopric of Cambrai which Charles V offered him, he concentrated all his efforts in the reform of his monastery. He did not neglect the study of sacred literature. He died Jan. 7, 1563 or 1566. He wrote Speculum Religiosorum, published first under the title of Lacrymon, because the author there lamented the lukewarmness of the religious. This work was translated into French by Moubroux of Nause, a Jesuit, who entitled it Le Directeur des Ames Religieuses (Paris, 1726), and contained a sketch of the life of Blosius; another translation of this work was made by M. de Lancenais, under the title, Guide Spirituel, ou Miroir des Ames Religieuses (ibid. 1820). Blosius also wrote Entrétiens Spirituels (Valenciennes, 1741):—Pusculæ Admodum Pie (Toulouse, 1817). The works of Blosius have been collected and published together, by Frojus, his pupil (Cologne, 1571; Paris, 1606; Antwerp, 1633). This last edition is due to the monks of Liessies. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bloss, LUDWIG CHRISTOPH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1675 at Rudolstadt. He studied at Halle and Leipsic, was in 1704 sub-rector at his native place, and in 1709 rector at Naumburg, where he died Jan. 18, 1730. He wrote, Disp. de Transpositione Accentuum Hebraicorum (Leipsic, 1698):—Disp. de Anomaliâ Verborum (ibid. 1699):—De Rhetorica Hebr. Lingvæ Compositione (ibid. 1700):—An Licet in Bello Fructiferas Arbores Excindere, ad Deut. xx, 19 (ibid.):—De Sagane, Pontifice Secundario ab Hebræis ad Festum Expiationis Potissimum Constituto (Naumburg, 1711). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliographisches Handbuch, p. 23. (B. P.)

Blount (Lat. Blundus or Blondus), JOHN, a prominent English theologian of the 13th century, studied at Oxford and Paris, and after his return from France was appointed professor at Oxford, where for the first time he explained the works of Aristotle. He was also elected canon and chancellor of the cathedral church of York, and (in 1232), were it not for the differences then existing between the king of England and the Roman see, he would have been confirmed as archbishop of Canterbury. He died in 1248. He is the author of, Summarium Sacre Facultatis:—Disceptationes Scholasticæ, and of some commentaries. See Leland, Collectanea; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Blowers, THOMAS, a Congregational minister, was born at Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 1, 1677. He graduated from Harvard College in 1695; was ordained pastor of the First Church in Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1701, and died June 17, 1729. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 310.

Bloxham, JOHN, an English friar and writer who flourished in 1334, was born at Bloxham, Lincolnshire. He was bred a Carmelite at Chester, and, remaining there, was prefect of his order in the British Isles for two years and a half. He was employed under Edward II and III in several embassies into Scotland and Ireland. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 288.

Bludne Sweckzi, in Slavonic mythology, are mysterious lights among the Wends, thought to be wandering spirits.

Bludwick, ELIZABETH, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Warrington, in 1748. For thirty years she travelled extensively in the work of the ministry. She was generally accompanied and assisted in her missionary work by her husband, John Bludwick. About the sixty-fifth year of her age she was attacked with dropsy, and died Jan. 3, 1828. See Annual Monitor, 1829, p. 9.

Blue, ELIJAH S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Cincinnati, O., about 1819. He joined the Church in his youth; subsequently studied medicine, and became a successful practitioner in North Indiana; but feeling impelled to enter the ministry, in 1841 he entered the Indiana Conference, in which he labored faithfully until his decease, Dec. 19, 1845. Mr. Blue was a man of excellent spirit, fair preaching abilities, and a willing worker. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1846, p. 84.

Blumberg, CHRISTIAN GOTTHELF, a German Lutheran theologian, was born at Ophausen, in the principality of Querfurth, in 1664. He studied at Leipsic, then at Jena, and assisted at the see of Mentz, where he was chaplain of a regiment. He performed ecclesiastical functions in several cities of Saxony, and died at Zwickau, in 1735. Among other works he wrote, Ezeritium anti-Bossuetium de Mystero in Corona Papali:—Fundamenta Lingvæ Copticæ (1716):—Dictionarium Lingvæ Copticæ, in MS.:—La Bible Complète, with notes. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blumer, ABRAHAM, a German Reformed minister, was born Dec. 14, 1736, in Graps, in the province of Wendenberg, belonging to the canton of Glaris, being a son of the Rev. John Blumer of Switzerland. He took a course of study at Basle, and was ordained in 1756. In 1757 he received a call as chaplain to a Swiss regiment, which office he continued to fill until 1766. He came to this country in 1771, and soon after took charge of four congregations in Pennsylvania, where he labored thirty years. He died April 23, 1822. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 197; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed., p. 185.

Blumhardt, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 16, 1805, at Stuttgart. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1830 teacher at the missionary institution at Basle, and succeeded the Rev. G. Barth in 1838 as pastor at Möttlingen, near Calw, where he became known through his cures by means of prayer. From 1852 he was at the head of an asylum for people suffering from melancholy, which he founded at the watering-place of Boll, near Göppingen. He died Feb. 25, 1880. He published Psalmlieder (Reutlingen, 1848; 2d ed. 1864):—Prophetenlieder nach Jesaja (ibid. 1850):—Übersichtliche Auslegung der Herypredigt Jesu (Bad Boll, 1872). See Zündel, Pfarrer Joh. Christoph Blumhardt (Zurich, 1880). (B. P.)

Blunden, EDGAR B, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Morgan County, O., Sept. 24, 1836, of pious parents. He joined the Church at the age of ten; enlisted in the army in 1861, and rose to the rank of captain, then of major. At the close of the war he was licensed to preach, and in 1866 entered the West Virginia Conference. He died in 1873. Mr. Blunden was a good man, a good preacher, and much loved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 23.

Blundon, WILLIAM, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in 1656, in the parish of Kingsclear, Southampton Co. At twenty-eight years of age he left the Episcopal Church and attended a meeting of Presbyterians, but at length found spiritual comfort in a Quaker meeting. About 1710 he first began speaking "as the spirit gave him utterance," and for many years he was a faithful, earnest minister of the Gospel. He died Jan. 19, 1740. See Piety Promoted, ii, 340-344. (J. C. S.)

Bluntschli, JOHANN CASPAR, a famous German jurist, was born March 9, 1808, at Zurich. His studies were prosecuted at Berlin, Bonn, and Paris, and after his return to his native city he was appointed, in 1833, professor of law in the newly founded university, and shortly afterwards became the legal adviser of the city of Zurich. Dissatisfied with the result of the political struggles which divided his native country, he accepted, in 1848, the chair of general public law in the University of Munich, which he occupied down to 1861, when he was appointed to the chair of public law in the University of Heidelberg. While at Heidelberg he published his work on international law (Das Moderne Völkerrecht als Rechtsbuch mit Erläuterungen), which had the singular honor of being translated into Chinese, and is now a text-book for Chinese students of international law at the Imperial College of Tungwen at Peking. But aside from his career as a jurist, he founded, in connection with Dr. Baumgarten and other liberals, the so-called Protestant Union of Germany (q. v.), a union representing the left wing of Protestantism, and of which he was the permanent president. Three times he had presided at the general synod at Baden. It was shortly after he had vacated the chair on the third occasion of his so presiding, at the synod held at Karlsruhe on Oct. 21, 1881, and as he was on his way to the palace to have an audience of the grand-duke of Baden, that he was suddenly seized with paralysis of the heart, and expired, in his seventy-fourth year. Passing over his works on law, we mention, Der Sieg des Radikalismus über die Katholische Schweiz und die Kirche im Allgemeinen (Schaffhausen, 1850):—Die Nationale Bedeutung des Protestantent-Vereins für Deutschland (Berlin, 1868):—Aufgaben des Christenthums in der Gegenwart, lectures published in connection with Schenckel, Rothe and Holtzmann (Elberfeld, 1865). (B. P.)

Bluteau, RAPHAEL, a Theatine priest, was born in London of French parents, Dec. 4, 1688, and became celebrated for his acquirements both in sacred and profane learning. He visited Portugal and preached several times before the king and queen. He was also admitted into the Academy, and became an officer in the inquisition. He died at Lisbon, Feb. 13, 1734. His works include, A Vocabulary or Dictionary, Portuguese and Latin (Coimbra, 1712-28, 10 vols. fol.):—Oraculum utriusque Testamenti, Museum Bluteavianum:—A List of all Dictionaries, Portuguese, Castilian, Italian, French, and Latin, with dates, etc. (Lisbon, 1728):—and Præcæus Evangelicus, sermons and panegyrics (1685). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Blydenburgh, MOSES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Islip, N. Y., in 1817, of eminently devout parents. He experienced religion at the age of fourteen, and was ever afterwards an exemplary Christian. In 1840 he entered the New York Conference, and in each charge given him exhibited devotion to his work. He died in September, 1848. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1849, p. 336.

Blyth, SAMUEL, an English Baptist minister, was born at Birmingham, May 10, 1783, and received his early religious education in the Established Church. Having gone through a course of study, he was ordained by the bishop of York, Aug. 6, 1815. After preaching for a few years in Yorkshire and elsewhere, in 1823 he removed to Leake. Subsequently he joined the Independents, and, in 1832, the Baptists. For several years he was not regularly settled, but supplied vacant pulpits as he had opportunity. In the early part of 1849 he took up his residence in Reading, and, after preaching a few months, he was taken with a sudden illness, and died Aug. 28, 1849. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1850, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Blythe, JOHN O., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Salem, Mass., March 21, 1814. He was educated as a physician at the Pennsylvania University. He preached for some years at Rockville, Ind. He subsequently returned to Pennsylvania, and became a member of the Philadelphia Third Presbytery, and was stationed in Chester County. He died in Philadelphia, March 19, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 273.

Blythe, Joseph William, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 21, 1808. He graduated from Transylvania University in 1825, and afterwards pursued his studies as post-graduate at Harvard University, where he also studied medicine. He entered Princeton Seminary in 1827, and graduated after three years. He was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery, Feb. 2, 1831. In 1832 he was dismissed to West Lexington Presbytery, and was ordained as an evangelist. For two years he labored as a missionary in connection with the General Assembly's Board of Domestic Missions. In 1833 he was called to be pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa. He served for a time as agent of the Western Foreign Missionary Society. He then accepted a call to Monroe, Mich.; and in February, 1839, he was installed by the New Brunswick Presbytery over the Second Church of Cranbury, N. J., and there spent a useful period of over sixteen years. In 1856 he removed to Indiana, and became pastor of the Church at Vincennes, which he served for two years, when, on account of ill-health, he removed to Hanover, where he resided the thirteen years following. From 1858 to 1860 he acted as agent for Hanover College. In 1862 he was appointed by president Lincoln to be a post-chaplain in the United States army. After leaving the army, he served the churches of Graham and Smyrna for a year and a half, and then the churches of Pleasant, Jefferson, and New Philadelphia. In 1872 he became pastor of a Church at Charleston, Clarke Co., and here he continued till his death. He died April 25, 1875. Mr. Blythe was an intelligent and wise counsellor, and a devoted man of God. See Neurological Report of the Princeton Theological Seminary, 1876, p. 15.

Boa, in the mythology of the Tonquins, is the name of the supreme god, the ruler of heaven and earth. He seems to be identical with Buddha (q. v.).

Boachman, MACKENAW, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was a native Potawatamie. He was reared without the advantages of a Christian training, and was left, when very small, a poor orphan boy, with few kindred and scarcely any earthly comforts. The Shawnee Indians took him, taught him their language and mode of life, gave him one of their women for a wife, and he spent many years among them hunting and trapping. Finally a Methodist mission was established among the Shawnees, and Mr. Boachman heard the Gospel preached, and its thoughts followed him until he gave himself to Christ. He became first an interpreter, then a local preacher, and finally, in 1845, a regular itinerant minister in the Indian Mission Conference. He spent his remaining years trying to bring to Christ the people who had adopted him. He died May 18, 1848. Mr. Boachman was acquainted with most of the Indian languages. He learned to read the Bible in English, and was a very useful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1848, p. 170.

Boag, JOHN, an English Congregational minister, was born in Ayrshire, of a pious and long-lived ancestry. He completed an academical course at the University of Glasgow, with a view to the ministry in the Church of Scotland, but he united with the "Congregational Union of Scotland" in 1812. He was stationed at Blackburn, where he preached till 1856, when he retired to Uphall, North Britain, where he died in September, 1863. Mr. Boag compiled the Imperial Lexicon. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1864, p. 200.

Boardman, Benjamin, a Congregational ministter, was born at Middletown, Conn. He graduated from Yale College in 1758; was a tutor in the college in 1760 and 1761; was ordained at Middle Haddam, Conn., Jan. 5, 1762; was dismissed in September, 1768; was installed pastor of the South Church in Hartford, May 5, 1784; was dismissed about 1789; and died Feb. 12, 1802, aged seventy years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 513.

Boardman, Charles Adolphus, a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Milford, Conn., Nov. 19, 1788. He was licensed by the Litchfield South Association in 1818, and became pastor of the Congregational Church in New Preston. He remained pastor of that Church for twenty years, when he was called to the Third Church of New Haven. In 1838 he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Youngstown, O., where he remained for sixteen years. He died July 4, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 156.

Boardman, Daniel, a Congregational minister, was born at Wethersfield, Conn. He graduated from Yale College in 1709; went to preach as a candidate in New Milford in 1712; was ordained there, Nov. 21, 1716; and died Aug. 25, 1744, aged fifty-seven years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 468.

Boardman, Elderkin Jedediah, a Congregational minister, was born at Norwich, Vt., June 1, 1794. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1815, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1820; served as a home missionary in Vermont for a year and a half; then in the Congregational Church at Bakersfield, where he was ordained in 1823, next at Danville, 1827 to 1832, and at Randolph, 1834 to 1842. Troubles with some of the members embittered his ministry at the latter place. He removed to Iowa subsequently, and, besides supplying sundry vacant churches, worked at farming. He died at Marshalltown, Ia., March 19, 1864. See Cong. Quarterly, 1864, p. 299.

Boardman, George M., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Philips, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1820. He studied privately; was licensed and ordained by the Detroit Presbytery in 1853; labored as pastor and stated supply at Byron, Wing Lake, Canton, Raisinville, and Petersburg, Mich., and served in the civil war as captain. He died in the hospital at St. Louis, in May, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 290.

Boardman, George Smith, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., Dec. 28, 1796. He graduated from Union College, Schenectady, in 1816; entered Princeton Seminary in the same year, and graduated in 1819. After receiving license to preach, he spent about two years in travelling on horseback and preaching from place to place in Ohio and Kentucky, which were then the "Far West." Having accepted a call to Watertown, N. Y., he was ordained and installed July 26, 1821; here he had a successful pastorate of sixteen years. In 1837 he accepted a call to the Central Church of Rochester, where he remained six years, except that he labored for six months in 1842 at Columbus, O., and supplied for awhile the Third (or Pine Street) Church in Philadelphia. In 1843 he took charge of the Second Church at Rome, N. Y., which he left in 1847 to enter upon a short pastorate at Cherry Valley. Here he remained until 1850, when he accepted a call to the Church of Cazenovia, and labored a term of fifteen years. For longer or shorter periods he filled the pulpits of the First Church of Rome, of Ogdensburg, and of Little Falls. He died Feb. 7, 1877. Dr. Boardman was a member of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church which met in Brooklyn, May, 1876. In December before his death he preached a sermon which was published, on the occasion of his reaching fourscore years. He was a man of positive convictions, always commending the Gospel by his holy example. See Neurological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1877, p. 11.

Boardman, Henry Augustus, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Troy, N. Y., Jan. 9, 1808. He received his preparatory education at the academies of Kinderhook and Troy, and graduated at Yale College in 1829, being the class valedictorian. On leaving college he engaged in the study of law, but having been converted and become a member of the Second Presbyterian Church in Troy, he entered Princeton Theological Seminary and graduated in 1833. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New York, and ordained by the Third Presbytery of Philadelphia the same year. He was installed as pastor of the Tenth Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. This was not only his first but his only charge, where he performed his great life-work of forty-six years with distinguished ability, learning, and fidelity, and from which eminent position of usefulness he could not be drawn away. He was in 1853 elected by the General Assembly professor of pastoral theology in Princeton Seminary, but he declined to accept. In 1835 he had been elected a director of the seminary, and retained the office until his death. In 1854 he was moderator of the General Assembly. In May, 1876, he was released from the pastorate and elected "pastor emeritus," which relation he held to the end of his life. He was appointed chairman of the committee to make arrangements for the Ecumenical Council of the Presbyterian Church, to be held in Philadelphia in September, 1880; but he died June 15 of that year. As a preacher, Dr. Boardman was evangelical and elevated in his thoughts, and pure, simple, and direct in his style. His published works have been useful to the Church and honorable to his scholarship. They are as follows: The Scripture Doctrine of Original Sin (1839); Letters to Bishop Doane on the Oxford Tracts (1841); The Prelatical Doctrine of Apostolical Succession Examined (1844); The Importance of Religion to the Legal Profession (1849); The Bible in the Family (1851); The Bible in the Counting-house, a Course of Lectures to Merchants (1853); A Discourse on the Low Value set upon Human Life in the United States (ed.): A Discourse on the American Union; Eulogium on Daniel Webster; A Pastor's Counsels; The Great Question; The Christian Ministry not a Priesthood. Dr. Boardman has also furnished many articles for religious periodicals. See the N. Y. Observer, June 24, 1880; Neurological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1881, p. 40; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (W. P. S.)

Boardman, Sylvanus, a Baptist minister, was born at Chilmark, Mass., Sept. 15, 1757. He was licensed to preach in 1795; was ordained pastor of the Church in Livermore, Me., Feb. 2, 1802, and continued in that relation till 1810, when he took charge of a Church in North Yarmouth, where he remained six years. Subsequently he took charge of a Church at New Sharon until his death, March 16, 1845. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 733; Willett, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 436.

Boardman, William, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Williamstown, Mass., in 1782. He graduated at Williams College in 1799; was licensed to preach in 1803; was settled in the ministry successively at Duanesburg and Sandy Hill, N. Y.; and was installed pastor of the Church at Newtown, L. I., October, 1811, where he died, March, 1818. "He was a man of ardent and active piety, and died deeply regretted." See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 657.

Boards, SACRED, were small pieces of board struck together, for the purpose of assembling the people to worship, before the invention of bells. To the present day, the Catholics use such boards in Passion-week and Lent, because the noise of bells they consider to be unsuitable to the solemnity of the season. On the first day of Easter, the bells ring again, to betoken cheerfulness and joy.

Boast. To boast or block out a piece of stone or wood is to shape it into the simple form which approaches nearest to its ultimate figure, leaving the smaller details to be worked out afterwards. Sometimes capitals, corbels, etc., especially of the 13th century, are found in this state, never having been finished. A good example occurs in the crypt at Canterbury.

Unfinished Capital in the Crypt, Canterbury.

Boat would be the more appropriate rendering for πλοῖον ("little ship," Mark iii, 9; iv, 30; John xxi, 8), such as were in our Lord's time and still are used on the Lake Tiberias (see Ridgaway, The Lord's Land, p. 632). See SHIP.

Fishing-boat on the Sea of Galilee. (From a Photograph.)

BOAT, FUNERAL. The ancient Egyptians were accustomed to convey the mummy of the deceased across the sacred lake on a barge, or baris, which is frequently depicted on the monuments, with votive offerings and festive accompaniments (Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt, abridgm. ii, 368 sq.).

Funeral-boat of the Egyptians.

BOAT FOR INCENSE. See NAVICULA.

Boatwright, JAMES M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was for several years a member of the Virginia Conference, then of the North Carolina Conference, and finally, in 1838, of the Alabama Conference. He died at Gainesville, Ala., July 5, 1841. Mr. Boatwright possessed suavity of manners, sweetness of temper, devout piety, and a burning zeal. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1842, p. 301.

Boaz, THOMAS, LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Scarborough in August, 1806. His parents were members of the Society of Friends; they were of the middle rank in society, and were pious. At the age of fifteen, Mr. Boaz left his home and went to London, where he soon entered upon a gay and frivolous life; but the memories of his early training would often rush upon his soul with an overpowering force, and he was eventually brought to give his life to the service of God. He joined the Church at Mile-end, and in a short time began to preach in the surrounding villages. In 1829 he entered the theological seminary at Newport Pagnel. On leaving, in 1833, he settled for a few months at Elstead; and then, offering his services to the London Missionary Society, he was sent a short time to Hertford, for better preparation, and in June, 1834, was ordained at Manchester as an evangelist to the heathen in India. On his arrival in Calcutta he accepted an invitation to occupy the vacant pulpit in Union Chapel, and after preaching a few Sabbaths he received a unanimous call from the Church and congregation to become their pastor. He returned to England in 1847, chiefly to raise funds for the erection of a Christian college at Bhowanipore, a suburb of Calcutta, which now stands as a monument of his zeal and perseverance. In 1850 he again went to Calcutta, and labored until ill-health compelled his final return to England. He spent the last years of his life travelling as deputy for the London Missionary Society in the country districts of his native land. He died at his home in Brompton, Oct. 13, 1861. Dr. Boaz was noted for liberality and gentleness. He was sole editor and proprietor of the Calcutta Christian Advocate for fourteen years, and also for several years one of the editors of the Calcutta Christian Observer. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 223.

Bobo, Saint. See BOVUS.

Bobolenus was a German monk, who wrote the Life of St. German, the abbot of Grandval, diocese of Basle, who suffered martyrdom at the hands of duke Boniface, in A.D. 666 (given by Bollandus, Feb. 21, iii, 263, and by Mabillon, Acta Bened. i, 511).

Bobuns, in Hindû mythology, are the separate regions of the universe, of which there are fifteen—seven under and seven above the surface of the earth—the earth being the fifteenth region. In the former the fallen spirits are punished; in the latter, those above the surface of the earth, they are purified and made perfect.

Bocanegra, DON PEDRO ATANASIO, a Spanish painter, was born at Granada in 1638, and studied under Alonso Cano and Pedro de Moya and Vandyck. There is a picture by him of the Conception, in the cloister of Nuestra Señora de Gracia, at Granada, considered very fine, and one of his best works in the Jesuit College, representing the Conversion of Paul.

Boccaccino, Boccaccio, an Italian painter, was born at Cremona in 1460, and studied under P. Perugino, also some time at Rome. One of his best pictures is a frieze in the dome at Cremona, representing the Birth of the Virgin, and several subjects from her life. He died in 1518. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boccaccino, Camillo, an Italian painter, was born in 1511 at Cremona, and was the son of Boccaccio, and studied under him. In 1537 he painted the Four Evangelists in the niches of the cupola of St. Sigismondo. The other works of this artist are at Cremona, and are highly esteemed, especially the Raising of Lazarus and the Adulteress before Christ. He died in 1546. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bocciardo, Clemente (called Clementone, "the great Clement," from his physical size), an Italian painter, was born at Genoa in 1620. He studied under Bernardo Strozzi, and accompanied Benedetto Castiglione to Rome, where he studied some time, and afterwards went to Florence, where he met with great encouragement. His principal works are at Pisa, of which his Martyrdom of St. Sebastian, in the Church of the Carthusians, is considered the best. He died at Pisa in 1658. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bocciardo, Domenico, an Italian painter, was born at Finale, near Genoa, about 1686, and was a follower of Gio. Maria Morandi. In San Paolo, at Genoa, is a composition of several figures, representing St. John Baptizing.

Boehinger, JOHANN JAKOB, a Protestant theologian, was born Nov. 28, 1802, at Strasburg, where he died as doctor of theology, Aug. 12, 1831. He wrote, Sur la Connexion de la Vie Contemplative, Ascétique, et Monastique chez les Indous et les Peuples Boudhistes, avec les Phénomènes Semblables que Présente l'Histoire de l'Islamisme et du Christianisme (Strasburg, 1831):—Anleitung zum Lesen der heiligen Schrift (Tübingen, 1830). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 519; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 160. (B. P.)

Bocholt (or Bocholtz), FRANZ VAN, a German engraver of the 15th century, lived soon after the time of Martin Schwen and Israel van Mecheln. The following are some of his principal works: St. Anthony Carried into the Air by Demons; St. James Reading; The Judgment of Solomon; The Annunciation; The Twelve Apostles. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bochuta, in Slavonic mythology, was an idol, whose signification has become lost. The accompanying figure represents him according to a statue found not far from Liegnitz at the digging of a well. The face has a goat beard and goat horns, and his right hand holds a large ring; from this expositors conclude that he was an idol of marriage—the goat hair and horns signifying fruitfulness, and the ring being a sign of vows.

Figure of Bochuta.

Bock, Friedrich Samuel, a Protestant theologian, doctor and professor of theology at Königsberg, was born there May 20, 1716, and died there in September, 1786. He published, Diss. Specimen Theologiae Naturalis. Deum Gratiosissimum Erincens (Königsberg, 1743):—Historia Socinianismi Prussici, Maximum Partem ex Documentis Manuscriptis (ibid. 1753):—Progr. Rationes Exponeus quibus Stabilitur, Luc. iii, 38 non Adamum sed Christum Adpellari Dei Filium (ibid. 1754):—Progr. III, quibus Erincitur quod Salutis Nostrae Vindex, Jesus Christus, Convenientissimo Tempore hunc Orbem Salutaerit (ibid. 1756, 1761, 1762):—Progr. de Jesu Christo, a Mortuis Excitato et in Spiritu Justificato, 1 Tim. iii, 16 (ibid. 1759):—Progr. de Spiritu S. Perpetuum Orbi Christiano Jubileum Promulgante (ibid. 1760):—Progr. VI de Resurrectione Jesu Christi, Hostium Testimoniis

Confirmata (ibid. 1764–69):—Historia Antitrinitariorum Maxime Socinianismi et Socinianorum ex Fontibus et Documentis Insepiis (Regiom. et Lips. 1774–84, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 769, 770; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 120 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bock, Moritz Herman, of MAGDEBURG, a Jewish preacher, who died April 10, 1816, is the author of Katechismus der Israelischen Religion (Berlin, 1814). He also edited, in connection with D. Fränkel, a German translation of the Pentateuch and Joshua (ibid. 1815). His Predigten zur kirchlichen u. häuslichen Erbauung, were edited by his brother, A. Bock (ibid. 1824). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 123 sq.; Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, i, 411. (B. P.)

Böckel, ERNST GUSTAV ADOLF, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Dantzig, April 1, 1783. In 1805 he was tutor at the college in Königsberg, and from 1808 to 1820 occupied several ministerial positions, when he was called as professor of theology and pastor of St. Jacobi to Greifswald. In 1826 he was appointed pastor primarius of St. Jacobi at Hamburg, and in 1833 he was called as pastor of St. Ansgar to Bremen, where he died, Jan. 5, 1854. Besides Sermons, which are enumerated in Zuchold's Bibl. Theol. i, 160 sq., he published, Novæ Clavis in Græcos Interpretes V. T. Scriptoresque Apocryphos . . . Specimina (Leipsic, 1820):—Das Neue Testament übersetzt und mit kurzen Erläuterungen u. einem historischen Register (Altona, 1832):—Das Buch Hiob übersetzt (Hamburg, 1821, 1830):—Die Denksprüche Salomo's übersetzt (ibid. 1829):—Hoseas übersetzt (Königsberg, 1807):—Adumbratio Questionis de Controversia inter Paulum et Petrum Antiochie Oborta, etc. (Leipsic, 1818). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 124; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 50, 172, 206, 212, 225, 261, 360; Zuchold, loc. cit. (B. P.)

Bockelsohn. See BOCCOLI.

Böckh, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH VON, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born April 1, 1795, at Pülisingen. In 1824 he was appointed pastor of St. James at Munich, and in 1830 dean and first preacher. From 1837 to 1843 he was a member of the Bavarian diet, and in 1849 he was elected member of consistory. He retired from public life in 1865, and died Sept. 27, 1875. Of his publications we mention, Sammlung von Predigten und Reden gehalten in den Jahren 1824–30 (Nuremberg, 1850):—Predigten in Nürnberg und München gehalten (Munich, 1835):—Erklärung des kleiner Katechismus Luthers (Kempten, 1857):—Evangelisch-lutherische Agenda (Nuremberg, 1870):—Fragen u. Antworten mit untergesetzten Bibelsprüchen (Kempten, 1871):—Vierzehn agendarische Passions-Andachten (Nuremberg, 1873). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 161 sq. (B. P.)

Bockhold, JOHANN. See BOCCOLD.

Bocking, RALPH OF (Radulphus Bockingus), an English writer of Chichester, in Sussex, was a monk of the order of St. Dominic, and flourished about 1270. So greatly was he esteemed for probity and learning that Richard de la Wich, bishop of Chichester, made him his confessor. Richard, who died about 1255, was afterwards enrolled among the saints by Urban IV, and his life was written by Ralph, who dedicated it to Isabella, countess of Arundel. It is printed entire in the Acta Sanctorum (April 3) and in an abridged form by Surius (April 3). Pits and Bale ascribe also some sermons to this writer. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 317; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bockshammer, GUSTAV FERDINAND, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, and pastor at Buttenhausen, in Württemberg, was born Jan. 13, 1784, and died Oct. 9, 1822. He is the author of, Offenbarung und Theologie, ein wissenschaftlicher Versuch (Stuttgart, 1822):—Die Freiheit des menschlichen Willens (ibid. 1821). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 370, 482. (B. P.)

Bockswaihe, in Lithuanian religion, was a festival of atonement, which was celebrated long after the introduction of Christianity. The inhabitants of a village would assemble in the most spacious barn of the same; during the kneading of the dough of the cake for the festival by the women, the priest held a black goat by the horns, and the men laid their right hands on his back and confessed their sins aloud, whereupon each of the penitents was hit by the priest, pulled by the hair, or punished in one or another way. Then the priest would slay the goat, sprinkle the blood over the men to atone for them, and take the meat home to sacrifice it to the deities, as he said. Then beer and wine were drunk, and the priest related heroic deeds of the forefathers until from drunkenness he could speak no more.

Böckler, JOHANN WOLFGANG, a German theologian, originating from Livonia, was a Lutheran, and, after having filled several ecclesiastical offices, went to Cologne, where he abjured Protestantism in order to enter the ranks of the Catholic clergy. He died at Cologne in 1717. He wrote, Der einfältigen Esthen abergläubische Gebräuche (Cologne, 1691), and some works in favor of Catholicism. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bocock, JOHN H., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Virginia in 1812. He was a graduate of Amherst College, and of Union Seminary, Virginia. He was for some years pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Georgetown, D. C., and died in Lexington, Va., July 17, 1872. He was a man of mark in the councils of the Church. See Presbyterian, August 3, 1872.

Bocquet, Nicholas, a French engraver, lived about 1600, and executed a number of indifferent prints, among which are, Adam and Eve; St. Bruno kneeling before a Crucifix.

Bocquet, Victor, a reputable Flemish historical and portrait painter, was born at Furnes in 1619. His works are in the different churches of the towns of Flanders. In the great church at Nieuport are two altar-pieces by him, one of which, representing the Death of St. Francis, is highly esteemed. He also painted the principal altar-piece in the Church at Ostend, representing the Deposition from the Cross. He died in 1677.

Bocquillot, LAZARE ANDRÉ, a French theologian, was born at Avallon, April 1, 1649. He hesitated some time between the profession of arms and the ecclesiastical calling, and decided to accompany M. de Nointel, ambassador of France, to Constantinople. After two years' sojourn in that city he left, and finally returned to Avallon. He here acted as advocate, but, in spite of his success, he abandoned himself to dissipation. By the advice of his brother he retired to the house of the Carthusians, when he resolved to enter upon the ecclesiastical profession. He realized this project June 8, 1675; was appointed rector of Chasteleux, and held the position until 1683. He finally quitted it in order to return to France, remained three years at Port Royal, was appointed canon of the College of Montreal, and later of the Church of Avallon. He died Sept. 22, 1728, leaving *Homélie*s, etc. (1688-1702):—Traité Historique de la Liturgie Sacrée (Paris, 1701):—Courtes Instructions pour l'Administration des Sacraments, etc. (ibid. 1697), and some writings to prove that les auteurs ne doivent tirer aucun profit des ouvrages qu'ils composent sur la théologie ou la morale. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bod, PETER, a Hungarian theologian and historian, was born Feb. 22, 1712, at Felső-Esernaton, in Transylvania. He studied at Nagy-Enyed, where he also was appointed librarian and professor of Hebrew. In 1740 he went to Leyden to complete his theological studies. After his return, in 1743, he was appointed chaplain to the countess Teleki, and in 1749 he was called to Magyar-Igen as pastor of the Reformed Church, and died there in 1768. In his native language he wrote, History of the Reformed Bishops of Transylvania (Nagy-Enyed, 1766); in Latin he published, Hungarorum quorundam Principum ex Epitaphiis Renovata Memoria (2 vols. 1764-1766):—Historia Unitariorum in Transylvania (posthumous, Leyden, 1781). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 770; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v. (B. P.)

Bode, CHRISTOPH AUGUST, a German Orientalist, was born Dec. 28, 1722, at Wernigerode. He studied philosophy, philology, and theology at Halle and Leipsic, and was in 1754 appointed professor at Helmstädt, where he died March 7, 1796. He published, Diss. in Auralis de Primæva Lingvæ Hebrææ Antiquitate (Halle, 1747):—Evangelium Secundum Matthæum ex Versione Æthiopica, etc. (ibid. 1749):—Evangel. Secundum Matthæum ex Versione Persica, etc. (Helmstädt, 1750):—Evangel. Secundum Marcum, Lucam et Johannem ex Versione Persica, etc. (ibid. 1751):—Evangel. Secundum Marcum ex Versione Arabica, etc. (Brunswick, 1752):—Novum N. J. Chr. Testamentum ex Versione Æthiopica, etc. (ibid. 1752-55):—De Primaria Radicum Hebræorum Significatione ex Dialectis Orientalibus (Helmstädt, 1754):—Fragmenta V. T. ex Versione Æthiopica, etc. (ibid. 1755):—De Spiritu Sancto, Dei Dignio (ibid. 1758). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 124; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 126 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 64, 65, 102; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bödecker, HERMAN WILHELM, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 15, 1779, at Osnabrück, and died at Hanover as pastor of St. James and George, Aug. 27, 1826. He published, Ueber Confirmation und Confirmanden-Unterricht (Erlangen, 1810):—Christliche Predigten (Hanover, 1826):—Die christliche sittliche Bildung des Menschen für das Leben (ibid. 1838):—Andachtsbuch für christliche Badegäste (ibid. 1830):—Sechzig Confirmations-Gedenkblätter mit Vignetten (ibid. 1839). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 73, 101, 171, 371, 387, 393; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 163. (B. P.)

Boden, George, an English Congregational minister, was born at Lea, Derbyshire, Jan. 27, 1793. He became an orphan early in life, and joined the Church in 1817. His only curriculum was a three years' course at Derby. At its close he settled at Green Bank, Nov. 1822. After laboring zealously and successfully here for twenty years, he removed to Middleton, near Youlgreave, where he preached another twenty years, and then retired to Matlock Bath, where he died Feb. 4, 1870. Mr. Boden's Christian character and fidelity were greatly esteemed. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 805.

Boden, James, an English Congregational minister, was born in Chester in 1757. At the age of sixteen he professed faith in Christ. He pursued his theological studies at Homerton College, and settled in Sheffield in 1796, where he preached until 1839, when he resigned. His death occurred in 1841. See Belcher, Historical Sketches of Hymns, p. 92, 93. (J. C. S.)

Bodenheimer, LEVI, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born Dec. 13, 1807, at Carlsruhe. He studied at Würzburg, was received in 1830 by the Baden government as candidate for the rabbiship, and in 1831 was appointed rabbi of Hildesheim. In 1844 he was appointed for the Crefeld diocese, and died Aug. 25, 1867. Besides some sermons, he published, Das Lied Moses, etc. (Crefeld, 1856):—Der Legen Moses, etc. (ibid. 1860). See Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, ii, 247 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 124; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 165. (B. P.)

Bodenschatz, JOHANN CHRISTOPH GEORG, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 25,

1717, at Hof. He studied at Jena, not only theology, but also Orientalia and natural sciences. In 1750 he received a call as professor of Oriental languages to the university at Erlangen, but declined it on account of the small income connected with the position. He died in 1797 as superintendent and court-preacher at Baiersdorf. Bodenschatz is the author of, Kirchliche Verfassung der heutigen, sonderlich der deutschen Juden (Erlangen, 1748), a very learned and still valuable work; Aufrichtiger deutschredender Hebräer, über den Ursprung, Schicksal, Kirchenwesen, etc., des jüdischen Volkes, besonders der heutigen deutschen Juden (Frankfort, 1756). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 124; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 181 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bodhi (Singalese, wisdom), is one of the three principles which influence a Buddhist priest. When under its power he is kind and tractable; he eats his food slowly, and is thoughtful; he avoids much sleep, and does not procrastinate; and he reflects on such subjects as impermanency and death.

Bodhisat is a candidate for the Buddhship. See BUDDHISM.

Bodhisatwa is the incipient state of a Buddha, in the countless phases of being through which he passes previous to receiving the Buddhship.

Bodin, JEAN, a French Roman Catholic writer, was born at Angers about 1580. He studied at Toulouse, and died at Laon in 1596. He is the author of a work, Colloquium Heptaplorum, published by Subrauer (Berlin, 1841). This work contains a colloquy between a Jew, a Mohammedan, a heathen, a Catholic, a Lutheran, a Reformed Protestant, and a naturalist, in which Christianity is ranked below all the other religions. Another work of his, also a dialogue, and entitled, Universæ Naturæ Theatrum, was suppressed. See Baudilart, Jean Bodin et son Temps (Paris, 1853); Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Gieseler, Ecclesiastical History, v, 140; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bodington, JOHN, an English Congregational minister, was born at Spitalfields, Jan. 6, 1794, of Arian parents. He was converted when about thirteen, and joined the Congregational Church. His father, enraged at this step, drove him from home. The youth soon found generous Christian friends, however, who encouraged and helped him; and at the age of sixteen he began to preach in workhouses and to other small congregations. He received an academical training at Hoxton, and in 1813 became co-pastor at Back street, Horselydown. He immediately became very popular, and in 1815 was constituted sole pastor of his charge, which position he held till the close of 1858, when he resigned. He died Oct. 21, 1859. Mr. Bodington was neither eloquent nor learned—hence, after the ardor of youth had passed, his popularity ceased. He seldom left his own pulpit, and scarcely ever attended any meeting outside of his own circle. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1860, p. 177.

Bodley, THOMAS, a Baptist minister, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 5, 1792. In his youth he followed the seas for several years, and was in the War of 1812. He joined a Reformed Dutch Church in 1816, and subsequently united with a Baptist Church; was licensed and afterwards ordained in Auburn, N. Y., in September, 1830; preached for a time at Saline, Mich., also at Adrian and Tecumseh. After preaching in one or two other places, he removed to Chillicothe, Ill., in 1850, where he preached for a year, then went to Lacon, and in January, 1872, moved to Princeton, and thence to Bradford, Stark Co., where he died, April 30, 1879. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1879, p. 10, 11. (J. C. S.)

Bodn, in Norse mythology, was one of the three vessels in which the dwarfs Fialar and Galar gathered the blood of the murdered sage Quaser. They mixed it with honey, and thus prepared the drink of wisdom, or nectar of the gods.

Bodwell, JOSEPH CONNER, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Abraham Bodwell, was born at Sanbornston, N. H., June 11, 1812. Having received his preliminary education at Woodman Academy in his native town, he entered Dartmouth College, from which he graduated in 1833. For two years he was a teacher in the Haverhill Academy, and taught also in Sanbornston for one year. He studied theology in Highbury College, London, England, graduating in 1838. His ordination occurred in the following year in the Church at Weymouth, Dorsetshire, over which he was pastor until 1845. In 1847 he was installed pastor at Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk, from which he was dismissed in 1850, and returned to America. From 1852 to 1862 he was pastor of the Church at Framingham, Mass.; from 1862 to 1866 at Woburn; from 1866 to 1873 was professor of preaching and the pastoral charge in Hartford Theological Seminary, Conn., after which he resided in Hartford without charge until the close of his life. From 1861 to 1868 he was one of the editors of the Boston Review. He died at Southwest Harbor, Mt. Desert, Me., July 17, 1876. Dr. Bodwell published a number of sermons and addresses. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 410.

Body OF THE CHURCH is the nave, of which the transept forms the arms, and the choir the head.

Body, MUTILATION OF THE, a frequent practice, which we here consider only under certain aspects in reference to ecclesiastical affairs. See CUTTING IN THE FLESH.

